Rama Chandra Misra—Petitioner v. President, District Board, Ganjam—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 42 of 1949, D/- 21-8-1950.

†(a) Madras Local Boards Act (XIV [14] of 1920), S. 166 — Provisions are not repealed by implication by S. 42, Motor Vehicles Act (1939) — Government of India Act (1935), S. 107.

Section 166, Madras Local Boards Act, is concerned with safeguarding the public roads whereas the Transport Authorities in S. 42, Motor Vehicles Acts, are concerned with the regulation of traffic in the interests of public safety and convenience. Thus when the objects of S. 42 of the Central Act and S. 166 of the Madras Act are entirely different though there is overlapping of the functions of the two bodies to some extent, the question of the provision of a later statute repealing by implication the provision in an earlier statute does not arise. Moreover, when the Central Legislature passed the Central Act in 1939 they were fully aware of the existence of S. 166 of the Madras Act and if their intention was really to repeal the same they would have surely expressly said so in S. 134 which deals with 'Repeal'. [Paras 9, 10]

It is therefore possible for an owner of a motor vehicle plying for hire to comply with both the provisions. [Para 15]

Das J.—The "authorisation" which a permit holder has under S. 42 (1), Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, is not in the nature of a "right," as vesting in the permit holder a "right" in or over the road. To so construe, it would interfere with the statutory ownership of road vested in the District Board under S. 60, Madras Local Boards Act, from which is implicit the Board's duty to keep the road in repair and the right to impose such restrictions as may be necessary in the interests of proper maintenance of roads. If S. 42 was not couched in negative term but gave a positive right, it would have been a matter for consideration whether the right so given would to that extent override the right of the Local Board to the road. [Para 21]

Anno. Motor Veh. Act, S. 42 N. 1.

(b) Interpretation of Statutes—Repeal by implication.

Repeal by implication should not be inferred unless there is no other way out. One of the tests to be applied in deciding whether an earlier statute is repealed by a later statute is whether both of them can stand together and their provisions obeyed to the full extent. There is no inconsistency when it is possible to obey each without disobeying the other. [Para 11]

(c) Motor Vehicles Act (1939), S. 134 (4) — Section 166, Madras Local Boards Act (XIV [14] of 1920) deals with fees and not with taxation of Motor vehicles.

Section 166 of the Madras Act is a provision dealing with 'fees' and not with 'taxes' and consequently no necessary implication can be drawn about its invalidity from the provisions of sub-s. (4) of S. 134, Motor Vehicles Act.

[Distinction between tax and fees pointed out.] [Para 13]

Moreover the subject "Taxes on vehicles suitable for use on roads, whether mechanically propelled or not including tramcars" was made an exclusively provincial subject by an amendment made to Sch. 7, Government of India Act, 1935, by Parliament in the India and Burma (Miscellaneous Amendments) Act, 1940 (3 & 4 Geo. VI Ch. 5) and a new item 48-A was inserted in List II of that schedule which by S. 17 (1) of that Act was given retrospective effect, in consequence of which all statutes dealing with taxation of motor vehicles that were in force prior to the commencement of the Government of India Act, 1935, would continue in force after its commencement until repealed or amended by a competent Legislature. (See S. 292, Govt. of India Act).

Moreover sub-s. (4) of S. 134, Motor Vehicles Act, was omitted by S. 22, Motor Vehicles (Amendment) Act 1942 (Act XX [20] of 1942) and it is no longer in S. 134. [Para 13]

(d) Government of India Act (1935), S. 107 (1) — Repugnancy between Madras Local Boards Act (XIV [14] of 1920) and Motor Vehicles Act (1939)— S. 107 (1) has no application.

By virtue of the definition in S. 311 (2), Government of India Act, only those laws that were made by the Provincial Legislatures constituted under the Government of India Act, 1935, would come within the definition of 'Provincial law' within the meaning of S. 107 (1). The Madras Local Boards Act (1920) being an Act of 1920 passed long before the commencement of the Government of India Act, 1935, would be an existing 'Indian Law' and not a 'Provincial law.' The Central Act of 1939 (Motor Vehicles Act) would be a 'Federal Law'. Hence the repugnancy, between these two Acts, if any, is between a provision of an existing 'Indian Law' on the one hand and a provision of a 'Federal law' on the other and not between a provision of a 'Provincial law' and a provision of either a 'Federal law' or an existing 'Indian law'. Section 107, Government of India Act, 1935, has absolutely no application. If there is such a repugnancy between an existing 'Indian law' and a Federal law such repugnancy should be resolved in accordance with the general principles relating to the construction of statutes and not by any provision of the Government of India Act, 1935. [Para 14]

(e) Madras Local Boards Act (XIV [14] of 1920) as amended by Act (XI [11] of 1930) S. 166 (1) (a)—Scope—Plying for hire.

Section 166 as amended by Act XI [11] of 1930 is comprehensive of every kind of purpose to which the District Board road is put. Therefore even the running of a motor vehicle which is engaged on hire over the District Board road would amount to 'use' of the road within the meaning of that section. [Para 16]

(f) Madras Local Boards Act (XIV [14] of 1920), Ss. 166 and 223—Offence of not obtaining licence for plying Motor Vehicle on hire during quarter January-March 1944, is continuing offence—Offence can be committed even on last day of the quarter. [Para 17]

(g) Madras Local Boards Act (XIV [14] of 1920), S. 166—Order sanctioning prosecution, not referring accused by name, but as "Secretary of Cuttack Motor Association" — Accused admitting ownership of vehicle in question and that he plied it without licence — Non-mention of his name in sanction, held immaterial and had not prejudiced accused. [Para 17]

R. K. Das — for Petitioner; D. Sahu — for Opposite Party.

Narasimham J. — This petition is against the judgment of Sri Priyanath Sarkar, Magistrate, 1st class, Berhampur, convicting the petitioner under S. 207, Madras Local Boards Act, 1920, for contravention of S. 166 of that Act and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 50 in default to undergo simple imprisonment for one week. The learned Magistrate also passed an order under S. 212 of that Act directing the petitioner to deposit the full licence fee of Rs. 285 plus cost to the District Board of Ganjam.

[2] The petitioner is the owner of two motor buses Nos. O. R. C. 107 and O. R. C. 115 which were plying for hire between Cuttack and Berhampur in January-March 1944. He had obtained a permit from the Regional Transport Authority for plying the vehicles on the road from Cuttack to Berhampur during the said period but he did not obtain any licence from the Ganjam District Board as required by S. 166 (1) (a), Madras Local Boards Act, 1920, (hereinafter referred to as the Madras Act). The President of the District Board, therefore, sanctioned his prosecution for contravention of the said section which was punishable under S. 207 of that Act.

[3] The prosecution examined only one witness, namely, Parsuram Behera (P. W. 1), a clerk of the office of the Ganjam District Board, at Chhatrapur who was in charge of issuing of licences to motor vehicles. His evidence was that buses Nos. O R. C. 107 and O. R. C. 115 were plying from Berhampur to Cuttack on hire on the District Board road during the quarter from January to March 1944; that the petitioner was the owner of the vehicles and that he did not obtain a licence from the District Board for plying the said vehicles on hire for the quarter in question. During the examination of the petitioner under S. 342, Criminial P. C., he frankly admitted that he plied his buses for hire for the period in question without obtaining a licence from the District Board, Ganjam.

[4] The Motor Vehicles Act, 1939 (hereinafter referred to as the Central Act) was passed by the Central Legislature sometime in 1939 and it contains exhaustive provisions relating to the control of motor vehicles. Chapter IV of the Act deals specifically with the control of those motor vehicles which carry passengers or goods for hire or reward. Section 42 prohibits the owner of a transport vehicle from using it except in accordance with the conditions of a permit granted by the appropriate transport authority. It is not denied that the petitioner had obtained a permit under that section from the competent authority for the period in question. On behalf of the petitioner, it is contended that the aforesaid Central Act overrides the provisions of S. 166(1) of the Madras Act and that a person who has obtained a permit under S. 42 of the Central Act need not obtain a licence from the District Board under S. 166 (1) of the Madras Act.

[5] Material extracts from the two sections are quoted below.

Section 42 (1) of the Central Act — "No owner of a transport vehicle shall use or permit the use of the vehicle in any public place, save in accordance with the conditions of a permit granted or countersigned by a Regional or Provincial Transport Authority authorising the use of the vehicle in that place in the manner in which the vehicle is being used."

Section 166 (1) of the Madras Act—"No person shall use : (a) any motor vehicle for hire, or (b) any motor lorry, on any public road in a district, except on a licence obtained from the President of the District Board."

[6] The Madras Act with its several subsequent amendments continued to remain as the law in force in Ganjam District in the year 1944. In 1931 the Madras Legislature passed another Act known as the Madras Motor Vehicles Taxation Act, 1931, abolishing the levy of tolls in the Presidency of Madras and also the levy of taxes on motor vehicles by local bodies and providing for taxation of motor vehicles by the Provincial Government at certain stipulated rates. In Sch. I to that Act there were several provisions dealing with consequential amendments made to the Madras Act so as to bring it in conformity with the Madras Motor Vehicles Taxation Act. But so far as S. 166 of the Madras Act was concerned, there were no consequential amendments, apparently because the Madras Legislature thought that the section dealt with the issue of licences on payment of fees and not with levy of taxes on motor vehicles. Consequently, S. 166 of the Madras Act, and the provisions of the Madras Motor Vehicles Taxation Act continued to exist side by side in Ganjam District.

[7] Prior to the passing of the Central Act in 1939, the Motor Vehicles Act, 1914 (Act VIII [8] of 1914) and the rules framed by the Madras Government under that Act known as the Madras Motor Vehicles Rules, 1923, remained in force in Ganjam District. Under those Rules motor vehicles plying for hire were required to take permits from certain specified authorities. But in R. 30 (a) (i) (ii) of those Rules it was expressly provided that no permit should be granted unless the applicant produced satisfactory evidence that he obtained the licence under S. 166 of the Madras Act. Therefore by virtue of this express provision an owner of a motor vehicle plying for hire was made aware of the necessity of obtaining a licence from the District Board under S. 166 of the Madras Act in addition to the permit from the appropriate authority under the said Rules and no doubt about the necessity of complying with both the statutory provisions could ever arise. But, soon after the passing of the Central Act in 1939, the Government of Orissa framed a new set of rules known as the Orissa Motor Vehicles Rules, 1940, which replaced the Madras Motor Vehicles Rules, 1923, in Ganjam District. In the Orissa Motor Vehicles Rules, 1940, however, there was no provision corresponding to R. 30 (a) (i) (ii) of the Madras Rules requiring compliance with S. 166 of the Madras Act also before granting a permit under the Central Act. Whether this omission was due to oversight or to some other reason it is difficult for us to say at present. But Mr. Das on behalf of the petitioner, urged that the Orissa Government deliberately omitted any reference to a licence under S. 166 of the Madras Act in their Rules of 1940, because they knew that that section was repealed by implication with the passing of the Central Act. But in considering the purely legal question regarding the implied repeal of an earlier enactment by a later enactment the action of the Provincial Government in omitting any reference to the earlier enactment in the Rules framed by them under the later enactment is not a decisive guide and the whole question has to be considered in accordance with the well known principles dealing with interpretation of statutes. But the petitioner can reasonably urge that because of this omission he was under the mistaken impression that no licence need be obtained under the Madras Act. This may be a point in his favour at the time of considering the sentence.

[8] Mr. Das's argument may be summed up thus :

(1) The provisions of the Central Act which is a later self-contained statute dealing with motor vehicles must by necessary implication repeal the provisions of S. 166 of the Madras Act.

(2) Section 166 of the Madras Act is, in substance, a statutory provision relating to taxations of motor vehicles even though it purports to deal with the levying of fees. Therefore, it would become inoperative after the expiry of nine months from the commencement of the Central Act by virtue of the necessary implication arising out of sub-s. (4) of S. 134 of the Central Act.

(3) Section 166 of the Madras Act is, in any case, void under S. 107 (1), Government of India Act, 1935.

[9] The subject "mechanically propelled vehicles" was included in the Concurrent Legislative List (Item 20 of List III) in the Government of India Act, 1935. From a perusal of the various provisions of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, it will be clear that the Act was passed with the main object of controlling motor traffic, controlling drivers, providing for compulsory insurance and for securing the safety and convenience of the public and developing a co-ordinated system of transport. Chapter IV of that Act deals with control of transport vehicles, that is to say, vehicles plying for hire or reward. Section 42 (already quoted) requires that the owner of such vehicles should obtain permits from the Regional or Provincial Transport Authority as the case may be. Such authorities are statutory bodies constituted by the Provincial Governments and under cls. (a) to (f) of sub-s. (1) of S 47, a transport authority is required to consider the interests of the public, the necessity of preventing unhealthy competition among transport services, the condition of the roads and other factors. The repair or maintenance of the roads was not a matter within the scope of the Central Act and there is no provision in it dealing with that subject. But if the provisions of S. 166 of the Madras Act, are carefully scrutinised, it will be noticed that the main object of S. 166 of the Madras Act was to regulate the use of public roads by motor vehicles plying for hire, by issue of licences, so as to safeguard against excessive wear and tear of the roads and also to provide for repairs to such roads. Licence fees were added to the District Fund under R. 5B (3) of Sch. V to that Act and one of the main purposes for which the District Fund may be utilised was the repair and maintenance of public roads vesting in the District Board (see S. 112 (1) (i)). The regulation of traffic with a view to provide for the convenience of passengers or for preventing unhealthy competition amongst rival transport services was not the function of the District Board. It is true that there is overlapping of the functions of the two bodies to some extent, but in essence, the District Board was concerned with safeguarding the public roads whereas the Transport Authorities were concerned with the regulation of traffic in the interests of public safety and convenience. Thus when the objects of S. 42 of the Central Act and S. 166, Madras Act, are entirely different and these statutory provisions are meant for different purposes the question of the provision of a later statute repealing by implication a provision in an earlier statute does not arise.

[10] Moreover, when the Central Legislature passed the Central Act in 1939 they were fully aware of the existence of S. 166 of the Madras Act and if their intention was really to repeal the same they would have surely expressly said so in S. 134 which deals with 'Repeal' :

'Repeal by implication is not favoured .... It is a reasonable presumption that the Legislature did not intend to keep really contradictory enactments on the Statute book, or, on the other hand, to effect so important a measure as the repeal of a law without expressing an intention to do so. Such an interpretation, therefore is not to be adopted, unless it be inevitable. Any reasonable construction which offers an escape from it is more likely to be in consonance with the real intention."

(Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, 9th Edn. p. 173). In Hill v. Hall, (1876) 1 Ex. D. 411 : (45 L. J. M. C. 153), it was pointed out :

"It is common learning that one statute may be impliedly repealed by a subsequent statute necessarily inconsistent with it : but then the inconsistency must be so great that they cannot both be to their full extent obeyed."

This decision lays down that one of the tests to be applied is whether the two provisions could be obeyed to their full extent. Similarly in Kutner v. Phillips, (1891) 2 Q. B. 267 : (60 L. J. Q. B. 505), it was observed that :

"a repeal by implication is only effected when the provisions of a later enactment are so inconsistent with or repugnant to the provisions of an earlier one, that the two cannot stand together."

Lord Halsbury while discussing whether there was inconsistency between an earlier and a later statute observed : "Where is the inconsistency if both may stand together and both operate without either interfering with the other ?" Tabernacle Permanent Building Society v. John Knight, (1892) A. C. 298 : (62 L. J. Q. B. 56). To a similar effect are the observations of Scrutton L. J., in Flannagan v. Shaw, (1920) 3 K. B. 96 at p. 105 : (89 L. J. K. B. 168) :

"Unless two Acts are so plainly repugnant to each other, that effect cannot be given to both at the same time, a repeal will not be implied."

In Lewis v. Berrey, (1936) 1 Ch. D. 274 : (105 L. J. Ch. 38), also it was pointed out that :

"a Court does not construe a later Act as repealing an earlier Act unless it is impossible to make the two Acts or the two sections of the Act stand together . . ."

[11] Thus there seems to be abundant authority for the view that repeal by implication should not be inferred unless there is no other way out and that one of the tests to be applied in deciding whether an earlier statute is repealed by a later statute is whether both of them can stand together and their provisions obeyed to the full extent. This 'obedience test' has doubtless come in for some criticism from the majority of Judges in an Australian Case Clyde Engineering Co. Ltd. v. Cowburn, (1926) 37 C. L. R. 466. But the point has been further explained by Higgins J., in that judgment at pp. 503 and 504 where he points out that "there is no inconsistency when it is possible to obey each without disobeying the other." In the present case as already pointed out the two statutory provisions have been made for entirely different purposes and the different statutory authorities who have been given powers to enforce those provisions have quite different functions to perform. Doubtless there may be some overlapping on minor matters, but on essentials their duties are quite different. Consequently repeal by implication should not be inferred especially when the Central Legislature while expressly providing for repeal of some other statutory provisions in S. 134 of the Central Act deliberately refrained from making any mention of the Madras Act.

[12] In Corporation of Madras v. Madras Electric Tramways Ltd., A. I. R. (18) 1931 Mad. 152 : (54 Mad. 364) there is an interesting discussion on the subject of repeal by implication. Though on facts that case may be slightly different from the present one, some of the English decisions cited therein especially Uckfield Rural District Council v. Croborough District Water Co., (1899) 2 Q. B. 664 : (68 L. J. Q. B. 1009), Morin & Son, Ltd. v. Marsland, (1909) 1 K. B. 744 : (78 L. J. K. B. 346) and London County Council v. District Surveyors' Association, (1909) 2 K. B. 138 : (78 L. J. K. B. 729), are instructive. The last case is of special interest in the present discussion. In that case the question for decision was whether there was an inconsistency between the Education Acts, 1870 to 1902, on the one hand and the London

Building Act, 1894, on the other. The local education authority for London after obtaining the approval of the Board of Education under the said Education Acts began the construction of a building for use as a public Elementary School. But it omitted to give notice of such construction to the district surveyor as required by the London Building Act, 18 4. It was pointed out that the building regulations made by the Board of Education were designed in the interests solely of the children attending the school whereas the requirement of notice to the district surveyor under the London Building Act, 1894, was designed mainly in the interests of the outside public and not in those of the persons using the building itself. This argument seems to have found favour with Lord Alverstone C. J. who while rejecting the contention that inconvenience would arise if two public authorities had concurrent jurisdiction over the erection of a building observed :

"This argument as to the conflict of jurisdiction of different public authorities has been addressed to us in other cases, where it was sought to exclude from the supervision of the district surveyor certain structures which were required to comply with the regulations of the Postmaster-General, the Board of Trade, and other public bodies; but there is no valid reason why a building should not comply with both." In the present case also it was contended by Mr. Das that if the District Board and the Transport Authorities had both control over the plying of motor vehicles for hire on certain routes there may be conflicting orders and inconvenience to the public. But as such control is exercised for different purposes and there is no reason why an owner of a motor vehicle plying for hire should not comply with the orders issued by both there seems to be no justification for inferring implied repeal of the impugned provision of the Madras Act.

[13] I now take up the argument of Mr. Das based on S. 134 (4) of the Central Act. Sub-s. (4) runs thus :

"Nothing contained in this Act shall until the expiry of a period of nine months from the commencement of this Act, operate to invalidate any provisions relating to the taxation of motor vehicles contained in any Provincial enactment or rules made thereunder in force at the commencement of this Act."

Mr. Das argued that by necessary implication from this sub-section it follows that but for the saving clause provided therein all statutes relating to taxation of motor vehicles would have become invalid after the passing of the Central Act and that the said sub-section extended their life for a period of nine months only from the commencement of that Act. The obvious answer to this argument is that S. 166 of the Madras Act is a provision dealing with 'fees' and not with 'taxes' and consequently no necessary implication can be drawn about its invalidity from the provisions of sub-s. (4) of S. 134 of the Central Act. The broad distinction between a 'tax' and a 'fee' is well known. I have already shown that S. 166 of the Madras Act is intended for the limited administrative purpose of enabling the District Board to regulate the use of public roads by certain classes of motor vehicles. The fees collected by the issue of licences are not meant to be a regular source of revenue to the District Board, though they are credited to the District Fund. A maximum is fixed in sub-s. 3 (a) so that the fees may not become a source of profit to the District Board. But it is unnecessary to discuss this question further because I cannot accept Mr. Das's contention that by necessary implication from sub-s. (4) of S. 134 of the Central Act all statutes dealing with taxation of motor vehicles would become invalid. The Madras Motor Vehicles Taxation Act, 1931, continued in force in Orissa long after 1944. In 1940 the Orissa Legislature passed an Act known as the Motor Vehicles Taxation (Orissa Amendment) Act, 1940 (Orissa Act III [3] of 1940) amending that Act in its application to the ex-Madras area. Moreover, the subject "taxes on vehicles suitable for use on roads, whether mechanically propelled or not, including tramcars" was made an exclusively provincial subject by an amendment made to the Sch. 7, Government of India Act, 1935, by Parliament in The India and Burma (Miscellaneous Amendments) Act, 1940 (3 & 4 Geo. VI Ch 6) and a new item 48-A was inserted in List II of that Schedule. By S. 17 (1) of that Act retrospective effect was given to that amendment in consequence of which all statutes dealing with taxation of motor vehicles that were in force prior to the commencement of the Government of India Act, 1935, would continue in force after its commencement until repealed or amended by a competent Legislature (see S. 292). It is not necessary to surmise (at ?) present as to why the Central Legislature thought it necessary to enact sub-s. (4) of S. 134 of the Central Act. But it is sufficient to note that, that sub-section was omitted by S. 22, Motor Vehicles (Amendment) Act, 1942 (Act XX [20] of 1942) and it is no longer in S. 134. Therefore reliance on that sub-section seems futile.

[14] The third argument of Mr. Das based on S. 107 (1), Government of India Act, 1935, seems equally groundless. That section merely says that if a Provincial law is repugnant to a Federal law or to an existing Indian law with respect to one of the matters enumerated in the Concurrent Legislative List then the Provincial law to the extent of that repugnancy shall be void. The definition of the expression 'Provincial law' as given in sub-s. (2) of S. 311 of that Act is "a law made by a Provincial Legislature established under this Act" That is to say only those laws that were made by Provincial Legislatures constituted under the Government of India Act, 1935, would come within the definition of 'Provincial law.' The Madras Act being an Act of 1920 passed long before the commencement of the Government of India Act, 1935, would be an existing 'Indian Law' and not a 'Provincial law.' The Central Act of 1939 would be a 'Federal law ' In the present case, therefore, the repugnancy, if any; is between a provision of an existing 'Indian law' on the one hand and a provision of a 'Federal law' on the other and not between a provision of a 'Provincial law' and a provision of either a 'Federal law' or an existing 'Indian law.' Section 107, Government of India Act, 1935, has absolutely no application. If there is such a repugnancy between an existing 'Indian law' and a 'Federal law' such repugnancy should be resolved in accordance with the general principles relating to the construction of statutes and not by any provision of the Government of India Act, 1935. (In this paragraph I have deliberately used the expressions found in the Government of India Act, 1935, prior to the adaptations made in 1947 after the passing of the Indian Independence Act).

[15] I would therefore hold that the S. 166 of the Madras Act was not repealed by necessary implication by S. 42, Central Act, inasmuch as it is possible for an owner of a motor vehicle plying for hire to comply with both the provisions. The main arguments of Mr. Das must fail.

[16] Another point which was taken up for the first time in the Court of revision was that the Crown did not lead any evidence to show that the vehicle in question was actually plying for hire on the District Board road of Ganjam and that consequently the petitioner was entitled to an acquittal. The expression 'ply for hire' has a special meaning as explained in (Local Fund Overseer v. Pakkirisami Thevan, A. I R. (15) 1928 Mad. 166 : (29 Cr. L. J. 30) where it was held

"there must be a general invitation by the person in charge of the vehicle to the members of the public to make contracts with him for carriage in the vehicle."

This interpretation of the said expression has been followed in Ganesh Ramchandra v. Emperor, A. I. R. (17) 1930 Bom. 167 : (31 Cr. L. J 931), Khushi Ram v. Emperor, A. I. R. (18) 1931 Lah. 569 : (32 Cr. L. J. 948) and Berry Mahapatra v. Emperor, A. I. R. (23) 1936 Pat. 321 (37 Cr L. J 8 0) on which the learned advocate for the petitioner relied. But in my opinion any discussion as to the true meaning of the expression 'ply for hire' is of mere academic interest in the present case. The only witness examined by the District Board, namely, Parsuram Behera (P. W. 1) stated that he knew vehicles Nos. O. R. C. 107 and O. R. C. 115 and that they were plying from Berhampur to Cuttack on hire on the District Board road. This portion of his evidence was not challenged at all and on the other hand during the examination of the petitioner under S. 342, Criminal P. C., he admitted that he did ply his passenger buses for hire without a licence from the District Board. It was thus proved as well as admitted that the vehicles were plying for hire on the District Board road and the only point in controversy was whether a licence was required under S 166, Madras Act. Moreover S. 166 (1) (a) as amended by the amending Act, 1930 (Madras Act XI [11] of 1930) does not contain the expression 'ply for hire.' On the other hand the material portion of that section is 'use of any motor vehicle for hire.' It may be that the expression 'ply' is more restrictive than the expression 'use' But S. 166 as amended is comprehensive of every kind of purpose to which the District Board road is put. Therefore even the running of a motor vehicle which is engaged on hire over the District Board road would amount to 'use' of the road within the meaning of that section. This view is supported by Veerappa v. Emperor, A. I. R. (17) 1930 Mad. 441 : (31 Cr. L. J. 625). But it is unnecessary to enter into further discussion on this point because, as already pointed out, even if it be held that S 166 (1) deals 'plying for hire' of motor vehicles, from the facts as admitted and proved in this case it is clear that the petitioner did ply his vehicles for hire on the District Board road.

[17] I may now deal with some minor points which were urged for the first time in this Court. The order of the President, District Board, sanctioning prosecution (Ex. 2) does not refer to the petitioner by name but refers to 'Secretary, Cuttack Motor Association, Cuttack.' The petitioner stated in his examination under S. 342, Criminal P. C., that he was the Secretary of that Association from 31-3-1944. The quarter during which the offence was said to have been committed ended on 31-3-1944. It was urged that the sanction order was irregular inasmuch as during the quarter in which the contravention was said to have occurred the petitioner was not the Secretary of the Association. There is not much force in this argument because on his own admission he was the Secretary on 31-3-1944. The offence of not obtaining a licence during the quarter January-March, 1944 is a continuing one (see proviso to S. 223 of the Madras Act) and consequently even on 31-3-1944 the offence was committed. Moreover there is the evidence of P. W. 1 to the effect that the petitioner is the owner of O. R. C. 115 and

O. R. C. 107 and the petitioner's own admission is that he did ply his bus for hire during the period in question without a licence from the District Board. In view of these admissions, the non-mention of his name in the sanction order of the President is quite immaterial and no prejudice has been caused to him by describing him as 'Secretary, Cuttack Motor Association.'

[18] Another minor point taken up was that in the sanction order (Ex. 2) the numbers of the buses were shown as O. R. G. 107 and O. R. G. 115 whereas the numbers of the petitioner's buses were O. R C. 107 and O. R. C. 115. The letter 'G' appears to have been typed by mistake for the letter 'C' in the sanction order. This will be clear if Ex. C is scrutinised. There the typist after first typing the letter 'G' corrected it by typing over it the letter 'C'. Moreover on this point there is the unchallenged testimony of P. W. 1 to the effect that Ex. 2 is the authority of the District Board sanctioning the prosecution of the petitioner who was the owner of O. R. C 107 and O. R. C. 115. No prejudice has been caused to the petitioner by the slight inaccuracy in the order sanctioning prosecution.

[19] The petitioner was rightly convicted. As regards sentence, however, I am inclined to take the view that the offence was somewhat of a technical nature and the petitioner was perhaps misled by the action of the Provincial Government in omitting any reference to S. 166 of the Madras Act in the Orissa Motor Vehicles Rules, 1940. While therefore maintaining the conviction of the petitioner under S. 207/166, Madras Local Board Act, 1920, I would reduce the sentence of fine to Rs. 10 only in default the petitioner should undergo simple imprisonment for one week. The Magistrate's order directing him to deposit the full licence fee of Rs. 285 plus cost to the District Board, Ganjam, under S. 212 of that Act is maintained. Subject to this modification in the sentence the revision petition is dismissed.

[20] I should add that in 1948 the Orissa Legislature amended the Madras Local Boards Act by the amending Orissa Act XVI [16] of 1948 in consequence of which S. 166 has been omitted from the Madras Act. This amendment, however, will not affect the legal questions involved in the present petition which depend on the law as it stood in the quarter from January to March 1944 in Ganjam district.

[21] Jagannadhadas J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my learned brother Narasimham J. and I agree entirely with the same.

[22] I wish only to add that as pointed out in the judgment of Knox C. J. and Gavan Duffy, J., in 37 C. L. R. 466 at p. 478.

"Statutes may do more than impose duties: they may, for instance, confer right: and one statute is inconsistent with another when it takes away a right conferred by that other even though the right be one which might be waived or abandoned without disobeying the statute which conferred it."

In the light of this test, I had some hesitation whether the "authorisation' which a permit holder has under S. 42 (1), Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, is not in the nature of a "right." I am satisfied on a careful consideration that the "authorisation" cannot be construed as vesting in the permit holder a "right" in or over the road. To so construe, it would interfere with the statutory ownership of road vested in the District Board under S. 60, Madras Local Boards Act, from which is implicit the Board's duty to keep the road in repair and the right to impose such restrictions as may be necessary in the interests of proper maintenance of roads. As stated by my learned brother, the Motor Vehicles Act is concerned with traffic and the Local Boards Act with Roads. It would not be legitimate to construe the provision of S. 42, Motor Vehicles Act, dealing with traffic, as giving to the permit-holder a right to the use of the road for plying his vehicle. If S. 42 was not couched in negative terms but gave a positive right, it would have been a matter for consideration whether the right so given would to that extent override the right of the Local Board to the Road.

[23] Ray C. J.— I am in entire agreement with what has been said by brother Narasimham J. The burthen of Mr. R. K. Das's contention ha been that a permit from the Regional Transport Authority gives him an absolute right to bus-traffic on the roads within the territory of its function. It is to be noted, however, much of looseness of terminology prevails in these matters. Loose terminology and cloudy thinking always go hand in hand. There is no constitutional right to drive a motor-car on the public highways or to do various other things there. They are privileges. The laws of the land give the citizens these privileges, or withhold them, or grant them under such restrictions as the public interest may seem to require. There is a fundamental difference between right and privilege. Privileges can be well equated with immunities from certain defined restrictions. They yield to others' rights or even privileges equally important in the social set up of things. Laws have to be administered so as to strike a happy balance between them in the same degree and to the same extent as between individual liberty and social control. The District Board a quasi-public body, has certain liabilities to its constituents, and has certain privileges too granted by the State. These latter are correlated to the former. So long as laws defining the correlation are allowed to stand, permission, granted by one authority, with assignments of particular purpose, will not have the legal effect of doing away with the need for exercise of another independent authority set up with the object of fulfilling another object. Particularly, if an authority is burdened with certain liabilities of which the financial incidence has to be offset by way of certain fees, it would require express or next to express legislation to uproot the one while leaving alone the other. The second conceptual confusion centres round the words 'fees' and 'taxes'. There is a fundamental difference between the two. Even a private individual can levy a fee for granting certain immunity but cannot appropriate the sovereign right of taxing. This distinction was prominent in the Government of India Act, 1935, that governed the legislation of the country till the other day in delimitation of taxing power of the Federation, the Central Government and the Provinces. What the District Board was empowered with was to levy fees for maintenance of the public roads and thoroughfares which vest in them for the purpose. The two authorities exist for different purposes, and accordingly there is no direct conflict between the laws relating to them.

[24] I would, therefore, agree with my learned brothers that the revision shall be dismissed subject to modification of sentence proposed.

Second Appeal No. 558 of 1948, D/- 25-4-1950.

(a) Court-fees Act (1870), S. 12 (2) — Taxing officer of High Court—Power to order payment of deficit court-fee paid in lower Courts.

The power given by sub-s. (2) of S. 12 applies to the deficit in subordinate Courts payable by the appellant in the lower appellate Court. Further, this power may be exercised even if there be no express decision by the lower Court regarding the court-fee. [Para 4]

Anno. C.-F. Act, S. 12, N. 15.

(b) Court-fees Act (1870) S. 5—Deficit court fee paid in lower Court—Registrar of Orissa High Court—Power of, to recover deficit.

By virtue of R. 13, sub-r. (4) in Chap. III of the High Court Rules, the Registrar of the Orissa High Court is authorised "to dispose of all matters relating to court-fees." This is the power of the Court itself delegated to the Registrar under cl. 38 of the Patna Letters Patent which by virtue of para. 6 of the Orissa High Court Order 1948, applies to the High Court of Orissa. The power to dispose of a matter relating to court-fee is a judicial power which can be delegated to the Registrar under Letters Patent. Therefore the Registrar of the Orissa High Court can, if he so chooses, dispose of the matter of the payment of deficit court-fees for the lower Courts himself or refer the matter to the Court. [Para 5]

Anno. C.-F. Act, S. 5, N. 5.

(c) Court-fees Act (1870), S. 12—Land situate in Patna State—Suit and appeal relating to, filed in Court in that State—Integration with Orissa State—Second appeal in Orissa High Court—Payment of deficit court-fee in lower Courts—Calculation of court-fee.

Before the integration of the Orissa State an appeal arising in a land-suit was filed on 15th October 1947 in a Court which was then in the Patna State. After the integration, a second appeal was filed in the Orissa High Court. The taxing officer revalued the suit-land and called upon the parties in the lower Courts to pay the deficit court-fees under the law prevalent in the Orissa State.

Held that the court-fee payable in the Courts below would be not on the footing of the Orissa court fees Act, but on the law relating to the court-fees prevalent at the time in the Patna State. [Para 9]

A. N. Purohit—for Appellants.

G. G. Das—for Respondents.

Jagannadhadas J. — This matter comes before us on a reference by the Registrar. The only question is as to the court-fee payable by the respondents in this appeal on the memorandum to the lower appellate Court. The plaintiffs filed a suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession and obtained a decree in the trial Court against the defendants. The defendants appealed and succeeded in the lower appellate Court. Hence the plaintiffs have come up with this second appeal and the defendants are the respondents herein.

[2] The suit property is 8.23 acres of land and the plaintiffs valued it for purposes of jurisdiction and court fees at Rs. 70 and paid a fixed court fee of Rs. 15 on the plaint. When the defendants appealed to the lower appellate Court, they adopted the same valuation and paid the same court-fee. The plaintiffs in their turn, did the same when they filed the second appeal in this Court. The valuation was not questioned in the Courts below and has been tacitly accepted. When the plaintiffs filed this second appeal on the assumption that the value of the subject-matter was Rs. 70, the Stamp Reporter objected to the same. He was of the opinion that the suit property which covers 8.23 acres should be worth not less than Rs. 800 and called upon the plaintiffs-appellants to pay D. C. F. on that footing both in the High Court and in the trial Court. The matter was referred to the Registrar, who assessed the value of the property at Rs. 1 000 and called upon the plaintiffs to pay the deficits of the two Court accordingly. The plaintiff though he originally contested the valuation, had ultimately to submit to the order of the Registrar and he paid the D. C. F. of Rs. 226-4-0 on 24th November 1949 and the appeal was admitted on 14th December 1949.

The respondent on whom notices were served entered appearance on 18th January 1950. They were thereafter called upon to pay the D.C.F., in respect of their appeal memorandum to the lower appellate Court on the valuation of Rs. 1,000 already fixed, as against the plaintiffs-appellants. The respondents objected to the same and hence this reference.

[3] Before the Registrar, two objections were raised (1) that the taxing officer has no jurisdiction to examine and call for the deficit court-fee for the lower Courts; (2) that the taxing officer's jurisdiction is restricted at the maximum to what is reported by the Stamp-Reporter to be the proper value and the deficit. We have no hesitation in over-ruling both these objections.

[4] It is no doubt true that the taxing-officer as such, that is, the officer appointed as taxing officer under S. 5, Court-fees Act, has nothing to do with the deficit of the court-fees paid in the Subordinate Courts. But in this Court the Registrar is the taxing officer. We must assume that the orders passed against the respondent and the reference to us has been made by the Registrar as such. The power of the High Court to collect the deficit court-fee paid in respect of the plaint or the appeal memorandum in the subordinate Courts is not open to any question. That is specifically provided for by the Court-fees Act, Ss. 12 (2) and 28. In the present case, however, the provision which is more appropriate is S. 12 (2). The power under that sub-section applies to the deficit in the subordinate Courts payable not only by the appellant, but also by the respondent. This follows clearly from the wording of S. 12 (2) which is perfectly general. Authority for the same is also to be found in Rowlins v. Lachmi Narain, A. I. R. (5) 1918 Pat. 210 : (3 Pat. L. J. 443) and Brij Krishna Das v. Murli Rai, A. I. R. (7) 1920 Pat. 656 : (4 Pat. L. J. 703), and other cases. Further it is now well settled that in order that the power under sub-s. (2) of S. 12, Court-fees Act, may be exercisable it is not necessary that there should be an express decision by the lower Court regarding the court-fee. See Bidhu Bhusan v. Kala Chand, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Cal. 775 : (106 I C. 335) and In re, Lakshmi Ammal, A. I. R. (13) 1926 Mad. 96 : (91 I. C. 729).

[5] The position of the Registrar in respect of the powers of the Court under S. 12 (2) would normally be that of an officer of the Court assisting the Court in the discharge of its functions under the sub-section. But by the rules of this High Court, he is also placed on a higher footing. By virtue of R. 13, sub r. (4) in Chapt. III of the High Court Rules, he is authorised "to dispose of all matters relating to court-fees." This is the power of the Court itself delegated to the Registrar under Cl. 38 Patna Letters Patent which by virtue of para. 6, Orissa High Court Order, 1948, applies to this Court. There can be no doubt that the power to dispose of a matter relating to court-fee is a judicial power which can be delegated to the Registrar under the Letters Patent. That the Registrar's power in this behalf is judicial is also implicit in R. 16 which requires this power of the Registrar amongst other in his absence to be performed by a Judge. Therefore, under the rules the Registrar can, if he so chooses, dispose of the matter himself or refer the matter to the Court. There is accordingly no substance in the contention that the Registrar has no power to deal with this matter. It is the lax use of the word "taxing-officer" that has given scope for this contention.

[6] As regards the contention that the Registrar has no power to fix the valuation higher than what was reported by the Stamp-Reporter, it is obvious that this argument is wholly without any foundation, when it is appreciated that the Registrar is exercising the delegated power of the Court itself.

[7] The respondent's counsel has, however, raised two further arguments before us. (1) He says that the valuation which has been determined as against the plaintiff at a time when he was himself not before the Court does not bind him. He, therefore, contests the valuation on its merits. (2) He says also that since this is a case that comes up from the Patna State and since the appeal in the lower appellate Court was filed by his clients on 15th October 1947, that is, prior to the integration of the States with Orissa, it is not the Court-fees Act of Orissa that was applicable but only the law relating to the court-fees which was prevalent in the state at the time.

[8] As regards the first of these points, I agree with the contention that the valuation fixed by the Registrar in the absence of the present respondents cannot bind him and that he must be given a fresh opportunity to contest that valuation. The Registrar has assessed the value of the subject-matter of the suit at Rs. 1 000 relying entirely on the allegation in para. 4 of the plaint that the plaintiffs improved the land at a cost of Rs. 1000. But he has not noticed that in para. 5 of the written statement, the defendants deny totally both the fact of the improvement and the cost of the improvement. Even if the improvement be true, the plaintiff may have exaggerated the claim. It may not also necessarily follow that because a person has had to spend a thousand rupees for improvement, the cost of the land has been added to by one thousand rupees. It may depend upon how much of that investment was well utilised and how much wasted As against the plaintiff, however, this statement of his might be taken as a piece of evidence though it cannot be held to bind him. But so far as the defendant is concerned, this statement cannot be of much value against him especially where he totally denies the truth of it in the written statement itself. The defendant must, therefore, have the opportunity of adducing material to show the correct value of the suit-land. The value will of course have to be determined on what the Court can accept as evidence and not on mere hypothetical guesswork. It is desirable in this case that the correct valuation should be re-determined in the presence of the plaintiffs-appellants also so that if it is found that the value is less than what the Registrar has previously found, the plaintiffs may also get the appropriate relief.

[9] The contention of the learned counsel that the court-fee payable in the Courts below would be not on the footing of the Orissa Court-fees Act, but on the law relating to the court-fees prevalent at the time in the Patna State is also correct. That matter has not been considered by the Registrar presumably because it has not been raised before him. The Registrar will have to investigate and determine what was the proper court-fee payable in this case in the lower Court with reference to the law in that State at the time.

[10] This matter will, therefore, have to go back to the Registrar for a proper investigation and decision. He will be free to dispose of the matter finally under the powers vested in him or to refer the matter to the Court once again if so required.

[11] I may add that in cases of this kind which raise a question of D.C.F. in the Courts below payable both by the appellant and by the respondent, it is desirable the appeal should first be taken on the file on the appellant paying the court-fee as in the lower Courts and the appeal admitted and then the question of revaluation and the deficits consequent on that in all the Courts should be determined in the presence of both the parties at one and the same time.

(a) Court-fees Act (1870), S. 7 (iv) (c) — Suit for declaration and consequential relief — Court-fee in practice of Orissa High Court.

A suit brought by Hindu sons against the decree-holder auction-purchaser praying for a declaration that the decree and subsequent proceedings are not binding and for recovery of possession of the disputed property should be treated as a suit for declaration and consequential relief. Even though under S. 7 (iv) (c) the party is entitled to value the relief at his option yet, the litigant cannot be allowed to place an arbitrary valuation on the relief and where the valuation made by the party is grossly disproportionate to the market value, the Court can require the ad valorem court-fee on the market value to be paid (Practice of Patna High Court followed). [Para 3]

(b) Practice — Precedents — Orissa High Court — In matters of court-fee, practice of Patna High Court should be followed. [Para 3]

Order. — This matter comes to me as taxing Judge in pursuance of the order of the Bench which held that the Bench has no jurisdiction to deal with the question of deficit relating to the appeal memorandum in the High Court. I proceed to deal with it treating the order of reference by the Registrar to the Bench as an order of reference to me as the taxing Judge by the taxing officer; the Registrar being also the taxing officer. The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought in the following circumstances as stated in the order of reference.

"In execution of the decree obtained against the plaintiffs' father who is defendant 3, the disputed property has been sold away in court-auction at the instance of the decree-holder, the late husband of defendant 1. The decree-holder purchased the property and also took delivery of possession through Court. In the suit out of which this appeal arises, the plaintiff questioned the decree and the subsequent proceedings on the ground that the loan was contracted for illegal and immoral purposes. They therefore pray for declaration that the decree and the subsequent proceedings are not binding and for recovery of possession of the disputed property. Defendant 2 was impleaded as a subsequent trespasser."

[2] The plaintiffs paid in the lower Courts ad valorem court-fee of Rs. 226-4-0 valuing the property at ten times the assessment of Rs. 22-10-0. This was accepted by the trial Court on a specific issue raised before it regarding the valuation and the sufficiency of the court-fee. The property in dispute is Government jerayoti land of the extent of 7.51 acres and the learned Registrar being of the opinion that the value was inadequate re-assessed the value of the subject matter of the suit at Rs. 2082 that being the amount for which the decree-holder the husband of defendant 1 purchased the suit-property at court auction as appears from the sale-certificate which has been marked as an exhibit in the case. The appellants contest this valuation and hence this reference.

[3] In the trial Court the statutory valuation of 10 times the assessment was accepted following the cases in Venkatasiva Rao v. Venkatanarasimha Satynarayana Murthy, A. I. R. (19) 1932 Mad. 605 : (56 Mad. 312). Annamalai Mudaliar v. Krishtappa Mudaliar, A. I. R. (22) 1935 Mad. 66 : (58 Mad. 385). This statutory valuation applies to cases that fall under cl. 5, S. 7, Court-fees Act, that is, suits for possession. In Madras a suit for declaration and possession is treated normally as only a suit for possession. It appears however to be the settled practice of the Patna High Court to treat a suit for declaration and possession as a suit for declaration and consequential relief and to require ad valorem court-fee on the market value to be paid. See Brij Krishna Das v. Murli Rai, A. I. R. (7) 1920 Pat. 656: (4 Pat. L.J. 703); Ram Sekhar Prasad v. Sheo Nandan Dubey, A. I. R. (10) 1923 Pat. 137 : (2 Pat. 198) and Sital Prasad v. Ramdas Sah, A. I. R. (26) 1939 Pat. 274:(18 Pat. 267), Under S. 7, cl. (4) (c) the party is no doubt entitled to value the relief at his option, but the Patna practice insists that the litigant cannot be allowed to place an arbitrary valuation on the relief and that where the valuation made by the party is grossly disproportionate to the market value, the Court can require the ad valorem court-fee on the market value to be paid. While no doubt the statutory valuation is not applicable to such cases and while it may be legitimate to correct gross undervaluation and to prevent mere arbitrary valuation, it may be a question for consideration whether the Court is entitled to substitute its own valuation for that of the litigant and deprive the party of the option that the statute has given to him of putting his own valuation. However, that may be in a matter of this kind the practice which has been all along been prevailing in this Court, namely, the practice of the Patna High Court should be followed. Following that practice, since the value of Rs. 226-4-0 is grossly inadequate as compared with the market value of the suit-property, that valuation must be rejected. The taxing officer has therefore quite properly adopted the price fetched at the Court auction sale, namely, Rs. 2082 as the market value with reference to which the court-fee on the appeal memorandum is to be assessed. Before the taxing officer a contention appears to have been raised that since the plaintiffs would in any case succeed only in respect of 2/3rds of the suit-property, the court-fee need be paid only on 2/3rds of the value as fixed. The appellant has not chosen to confine his appeal memorandum to 2/3rds share. What the court-fee he will have to pay if he so chose, it is unnecessary to say. As the appeal memorandum relates to the entire suit property as it now stands, the appellant has to pay the court-fee on the full value of the property as now determined. The appellant is therefore directed to pay deficit court-fee on the appeal memorandum on the basis of the above valuation within two weeks from the date of the reopening of the Court after the summer recess. The office will intimate to the appellant's counsel the exact deficit that he has to pay before the Court closes for summer recess.

R. K. Das and M. S. Rao — for Appellants; B Mohapatra —for Respondent.

Narasimham J. — This is an appeal from the appellate judgment of the District Judge of Cuttack reversing the judgment of the Munsif of Jajpur and dismissing the appellants-plaintiffs' suit for ejectment of the defendant-respondent from a house in village Rebana in Jajpur subdivision.

[2] It is an unchallenged fact that the disputed property consists of survey plot Nos. 446 and 447 having an area of .09 decimals and .04 decimals respectively and recorded in Khata No. 8 in the last settlement operations. The Khatian, however, was not exhibited in the lower Court but the statement in the plaint giving the aforesaid plot numbers, area and khata number have not been controverted in the written statement. It is also an unchallenged fact that the said two plots lie in the Basti of the village and at present there is a house standing thereon with its appurtenant Bari. It is further admitted by the parties that the previous owner of the property was one Rukuni Bewa. The plaintiffs claimed to have purchased the property from her by two kabalas dated 8 4-1943 and 25-6-1943. They alleged that the defendant was occupying the house as a tenant-at-will of Rukuni Bewa at a monthly rental of Rs. 1-8-0 and that after the plaintiffs' purchase the defendant was asked to vacate the house but he refused. Thereupon, the plaintiffs issued a notice to quit on 2-9-1943 and then instituted the present suit for declaration of their title, recovery of possession after eviction of the defendant therefrom and also for consequential reliefs such as recovery of arrear rental due from the defendant. The defendant contended that he had purchased the same property from Rukuni Bewa by an oral sale sometime in 1942 and that at that time there was no house standing on the plots. He claimed to have constructed a building thereon and to be staying there in his own right. He therefore challenged the title of the plaintiffs on the ground of prior sale from the original owner. The trial Court disbelieved the defendant's story of oral sale and held that the plaintiffs acquired valid title to the property by the two registered kabalas executed in their favour by Rukuni. But he disbelieved the plaintiffs' story of the defendant occupying the house as a tenant and consequently while decreeing the plaintiffs' suit for ejectment and recovery of possession he disallowed their claim for arrears of rent. The lower appellate Court however accepted the defendant's story of prior oral sale accompanied by delivery of possession from Rukuni Bewa and held that the defendant's title to the property must prevail over the subsequent sale by Rukuni Bewa in favour of the plaintiffs even though the latter might have been made by registered documents. As the value of the property was admittedly below Rs. 100 he held that under S. 54, Transfer of Property Act, title validly passed by oral sale accompanied by delivery of possession. One of the points taken up before appellate Court was that notwithstanding anything contained in S. 54, T. P. Act, all transfers of occupancy holdings or portions of the same, irrespective of their value, should be made by registered instruments as expressly provided in S. 31 (1), Orissa Tenancy Act, as amended by Orissa Act VIII [8] of 1938, and that consequently the oral sale in favour of the defendant could not convey any title. The learned lower appellate Court has not dealt with this question in a satisfactory manner. It is difficult to say what exactly his decision is on this question. He seems to have held that S. 54, T. P. Act, would prevail and that the defendant acquired good title by oral sale accompanied by delivery of possession.

[3] In the second appeal the findings on facts of the lower appellate Court were not challenged but the following two questions of law were argued at great length. (i) Section 31 (1), Orissa Tenancy Act, should prevail over S. 54, T. P. Act, and consequently the sale of an occupancy holding or a portion thereof without a registered instrument would not convey any title; and (ii) the suit was for ejectment of the defendant on the ground that he was a tenant and when the story (as?) to tenancy was disbelieved by both the lower Courts it was not open to this Court to grant relief to the plaintiffs on the ground that the defendant was a trespasser, thereby completely changing the nature of the suit.

[4] The first point involves an interpretation of the provisions of the Government of India Act, 1935, under which the Orissa Legislature passed the Orissa Tenancy (Amendment) Act of 1938 (Orissa Act (VIII [8] of 1938), and inserted S. 31 (1) which runs as follows :

"Every transfer of an occupancy holding or a portion or share thereof whether by sale, exchange or gift shall be made by registered instrument except in the case of a sale in execution of a decree or of a certificate signed under the Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act, 1914."

As already pointed out, the disputed plots are in Khata No. 8 and consequently they form part of an occupancy holding. The aforesaid section of the O. T. Act would therefore, apply unless it can be said that S. 54, T. P. Act would override the provisions of that section of the Orissa Act. Under the Government of India Act, 1935, legislation in respect of "transfer of property other than agricultural land" was dealt with in item 8, Concurrent List, and the Centre as well as the Province had concurrent powers to legislate on the subject. But under item 21, Provincial legislative list (List II), "transfer, alienation and devolution of agricultural land" was a subject exclusively in the Provincial field. Doubtless, S. 54, T. P. Act, would ordinarily apply to agricultural as well as non-agricultural land. But that Act was "an existing Indian law" under the Government of India Act (see S. 311 (2) and in respect of matters included in the Provincial legislative list (List II) the Provincial Government had full powers to legislate even though that legislation may have the effect of amending, modifying or repealing any of the provisions of such a law in respect of that subject. This follows as a necessary result from a construction of sub-S. (3) of S. 100 read with S. 292 of the Government of India Act, 1935. When the Orissa Legislature passed the Orissa Tenancy (Amendment) Act, 1938, it purported to legislate in respect of matters covered by item 21, List II, which may be quoted in full:

"Land, that is to say, rights in or over land, land tenures, including the relation of landlord and tenant, and the collection of rents; transfer, alienation and devolution of agricultural land; land improvement and agricultural loans; colonization; Courts of Wards; encumbered and attached estates; treasure trove."

The subject-matter of sub-S. (1) of S. 30 of the Orissa Act, is relatable to "transfer of agricultural land" as specified in that item. Therefore there seems to be no doubt that so far as transfer of agricultural land is concerned, the Provincial Legislature had exclusive jurisdiction and the provisions of S. 31 (1) would necessarily override the provisions of S. 54, T. P. Act.

[5] It was, however, contended that the main object of insisting on registration of transfers of occupancy holdings under S. 31 of the Orissa Act was to provide for automatic service of notice on the landlord through the Registration Officer as provided in sub-ss. (2) and (3) of that section and that the only result of non-registration of such transfers would be to make them not binding on the landlord. But so far as the validity of the transfer was concerned, it was urged that the general law as laid down in the T. P. Act should prevail and that where the property is less than Rs. 100 in value transfer by sale can be effected even without a registered instrument. This argument, however, is not sound. Prior to the passing of the O. T. (Amendment) Act of 1938, transfers of occupancy holdings required the consent of the landlord and also the payment of mutation fees. These were abolished by the Amending Act but with a view to give notice to the landlord of transfers so as to enable him to make necessary corrections in his rent-roll, elaborate provisions were made in S. 31 requiring compulsory registration irrespective of the value and making adequate provisions for service of notice on the landlord through the Registration Officer. The whole object of the amending Act was therefore to give complete freedom to the occupancy raiyats to transfer their holdings or portions of the same subject only to compulsory registration so as to ensure automatic service of notice on the landlord. There is nothing in S. 31, O. T. Act, to indicate that registration was necessary only for the limited purposes of making such transfers binding on the landlord. On the other hand, a fair construction of sub-s. (1) makes it clear that registration was made mandatory. The Legislature was fully aware of the provisions of S. 54, T. P. Act, and when they, while purporting to legislate on a subject which was in their exclusive legislative field, expressly made registration of transfers of occupancy holdings compulsory the reasonable inference is that S. 31 (1) would override S. 54, T. P. Act. I have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that notwithstanding the provisions of S. 54, T. P. Act, every transfer of an occupancy holding or a portion thereof by sale irrespective of the value of the property transferred is compulsorily registrable under S. 31 (1), O. T. Act, subject, of course, to the exceptions provided in that sub-section. In the absence of such registration title cannot pass by such transfer.

[6] Mr. Mohapatra thereupon contended that there was no clear evidence on record to show that the disputed property was 'agricultural land' and that consequently the case should be remanded to the lower Court with a view to enable the parties to adduce clear evidence as regards the nature of the land. He urged that if he could succeed in showing that the disputed property was not 'agricultural land', then the transfer of such land would be relatable to item 8, List III, (concurrent legislative list). In such a case even though the Provincial Legislature has concurrent powers of legislation any provision repugnant to S. 54, T. P. Act, would be void unless the assent of the Governor-General was obtained as provided in sub-s. (2) of S. 107, Government of India Act, 1935. From a perusal of the Gazette notification publishing the O. T. (Amendment) Act, 1938, it appears that that Act was assented to by the Governor and not by the Governor-General. Mr. Mohapatra, therefore, contended that in so far as S. 31 (1) of the Orissa Act purported to deal with transfers of non-agricultural lands it would be inconsistent with S. 51, T. P. Act, and that the latter section would prevail in view of S. 107 (2), Government of India Act.

[7] It is true that there is no finding by the lower Courts to the effect that the disputed property is 'agricultural land'. But I do not think there was any doubt on this question at all. (After discussing the evidence the judgment proceeded:) On these materials it cannot be said that the disputed property is not 'agricultural land'. The very fact that the settlement authorities entered it in a separate Khata as 'Sthitiban' would indicate that they recognised it as agricultural land because by virtue of the definition of the expression 'raiyat' in S. 5 (2), O. T. Act, the primary purpose for which the right to hold the land was obtained was for the purpose of cultivation.

[8] The expression 'agricultural land' occurring in Item 21, List II, has not been defined in the Government of India Act but there are by now several decisions explaining the same. In the case of Megh Raj v. Allah Rakhia, the first decided by the Federal Court in (1942) 5 F. L. J. 33 : (A. I. R. (29) 1942 F. C. 27) the said expression was not fully explained though there are some observations to the effect that the general character of the land and not the use to which it may be put at a particular point of time would be one of the factors in deciding whether a piece of land is agricultural land or otherwise. That case went up to the Privy Council (See Megh Raj v. Allah Rakhia, A. I. R. (34) 1947 P. C. 72 : (74 I. A. 12) and though their Lordships also did not attempt at an exhaustive definition of the expression 'agricultural land' they held that S. 3 (1), Punjab Restitution of Mortgaged Lands Act, which defined 'land' as including the sites of buildings and other structures on a land that is occupied for agricultural purpose; applied to agricultural land. This seems to be an implied decision to the effect that even sites of buildings if occupied for the purpose of agriculture would be agricultural land even though no operation of agriculture may be done thereon. In Sarojini Devi v. Sri Kristna, A. I. R. (31) 1944 Mad. 401 : (I. L. R. (1945) Mad. 61), Patanjali J. made the following observations :

"We are of opinion that for the purposes of the relevant entries in Lists II and III of Sch. 7 the, expression 'agricultural lands' must be taken to include lands which are used or are capable of being used for raising any valuable plant or trees or for any other purpose of husbandry."

Similarly in Nil Govinda v. Rukhmini Deby, A. I. R. (31) 1944 Cal. 421 : (48 C. W. N. 759), it was held that any land though lying unused, but capable of being used, for raising crops, vegetables etc. and also the land used as the site for the farmer's residences should be regarded as agricultural lands.

[9] Judged by the aforesaid decisions I do not think that there can be any doubt that the disputed plots are agricultural lands. They are entered in a raiyati Khata by the settlement authorities which itself raised a presumption to the effect that they were meant either for the residence of a raiyat for facilitating agriculture or else they were unused lands that may be used for growing vegetables or other crops. The mere fact that the plots lie in the middle of a basti will not make them non-agricultural so long as they are capable of being used for the aforesaid purposes. Moreover the defendant himself admitted that he was using a portion of the plot as his cattle-shed which shows that the plot is used for a purpose subservient to agriculture. In this state of the evidence it seems unnecessary to remand the case with a view to enable the parties to adduce further evidence to prove the nature of the land. That the land is capable of producing vegetables seems to be clear because it was elicited during the cross-examination of the plaintiffs that the defendant has been growing vegetables by fencing it all round.

[10] I would, therefore, hold that the fact that the disputed property is agricultural land was practically unchallenged in the lower Courts and that consequently the provisions of S. 31 (1), O. T. Act, would apply to the transfer of such land notwithstanding any of the provisions of S. 54, T. P. Act. The oral purchase of the defendant cannot therefore confer any valid title.

[11] Mr. Mohapatra thereupon contended that in view of the frame of the suit for ejectment of a tenant of the termination of his tenancy by a notice to quit, a decree for ejectment of a trespasser cannot be passed. He relied on Seetha Beherani v. A. Jagannath, 9 Cut. L. T. 32: (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Pat. 312). That case is, however, distinguishable on facts from the present case. Here the relief claimed by the plaintiffs was for confirmation of their title and recovery of possession after declaring that the defendant had no title to the same. Doubtless there was a consequential prayer for arrears of rent on the ground that the defendant was a monthly tenant in possession of the house from the previous owner, namely, Rukuni Bewa. But the plaintiffs had no personal knowledge of this tenancy. When they purchased the land from Rukuni Bewa they found the defendant in possession of the same and seem to have inferred the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant between Rukuni and the defendant. The plaintiffs might have failed to show that the defendant was a monthly tenant from the time of Rukuni Bewa but if they could prove their title they are still entitled to a decree for ejectment because their suit was, in essence, a suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession. In cases of this type the main point to consider is whether any prejudice was caused to the defendant. As pointed out by Banarji J. in the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court reported in Balmakund v. Dalu, 25 ALL. 498: (1903 A. W. N. 112 F. B.):

"If a Court sees that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief which he claims, although on grounds other than those put forward in his claim, the Court should grant that relief, if the defendants were not thereby taken by surprise. This is not a case in which the defendant was, or could be, taken by surprise if the question of the title set up by the plaintiff in his plaint was determined. The claim for the ejectment of the defendant from the cattle-shed in question was based upon two grounds —(1) that the plaintiff was the owner of it that the defendant had no title to it, and that he had wrongly withheld possession from the plaintiff; and (2) that the defendant had been the plaintiff's tenant and the tenancy had been determined by notice. If the plaintiff could succeed in proving either of the two grounds set up by him he would be entitled to a decree for ejectment; but his failure to prove the second ground would not preclude him from asking the Court to try the other ground put forward in the plaint."

These observations apply with full force to the present case. One of the issues raised was issue No. 2 which runs as follow:

"Assuming plaintiffs' Kabala bona fide and for consideration can it prevail over the oral sale of the defendant?"

This issue is a clear issue on the question of the relative strength of the title claimed by the real parties and it has nothing to do with the question of tenancy. Both parties led evidence to prove their respective title and no prejudice was caused to the defendant nor was he taken by surprise. I think the plaintiffs are clearly entitled to a decree for ejectment of the defendant as a trespasser even though the relationship of landlord and tenant might not have been established.

[12] For the aforesaid reasons I would set aside the judgment of the lower appellate Court and restore the judgment and decree of the Munsif with cost.

[13] Jagannadhadas J.—I agree entirely with my learned brother on the various points dealt with in his judgment.

[14] As a matter of construction of S. 31 (1), O. T. Act, it appears to me to be quite clear that an unregistered private sale of agricultural land is ineffective to pass title irrespective of the value thereof. If the section had merely said that "every sale etc., shall be registered" it might have been possible to contend that registration is superimposed on a sale, whose validity must depend on other legal provisions—and that non-compliance with registration, while it may have been so superimposed to provide for ipso facto notice to the landlord, does not vitiate the sale itself, if otherwise valid. The section, however, says that "transfer by sale shall be made by registered instrument". This language is similar to that in S. 54, T. P. Act which in respect of property of the value of rupees one hundred and upwards says that the "transfer can be made only by a registered instrument." I have, therefore, no doubt that the effect of S. 31 (1), O. T. Act, as of S. 54, T. P. Act, is to invalidate the transfer which offends against it.

[15] It does appear rather anomalous that while non-agricultural property of value less than rupees one hundred can be transferred without a registered instrument, occupancy holding in Orissa of whatever insignificant value can be transferred only by a registered instrument. This apparent anomaly is, however, intelligible with reference to the conditions prevailing at the time when this S. 31 (1) was introduced with the O. T. Act by way of an amendment by Act VIII [8] of 1938. By the same amending Act, the occupancy holding of a raiyat which was hitherto non-transferable except by consent of landlord was made statutorily transferable and the tenant was relieved of the liability to pay heavy mutation fee which was usually 25 per cent. of the sale consideration to the landlord to obtain his consent (S. 30-A, O. T. Act). The incurring of some expense for stamp and registration by the raiyat was a comparatively light burden and was probably required for the purposes of providing a dependable machinery for the information of the landlord. It would be defeating the intention of the legislature to construe the provision as merely directory and not mandatory.

[16] In the result, I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

Debt Laws — Ganjam Smallholders Relief Act (XXX [30] of 1947), S. 2 (2)—Rain-fed (Barsha-dhar land—If can fall under "wet land".

If paddy is grown on a portion of the land described as "rain-fed" (barsha-dhar), that portion is wet land within the meaning of S. 2 (2). [Para 3]

Where a tenant grows paddy on 2 acres out of the 10.6 acres recorded as barsha-dhar in his name, he is still left with 8.6 acres of "other land." Computing the two acres of paddy lands equivalent to four acres of other land according to the calculation laid down in Explanation 2 to S. 2, he would be in possession of 12.6 acres in all and would not be a small holder as defined in the Act. [Para 3]

P. V. B. Rao and S. C. Patnaik—for Petitioner.
D. Sahu—for Opposite Party.

Order. — The petitioner is the landholder and the opposite party are his tenants in respect of plots Nos. 147 and 148 measuring 10.62 acres in Rambha village. These two plots are recorded as 'Barshadhar' that is rain-fed. The point for determination is whether the lands come within the category of "wet lands" occurring in subs. (2) of S. 2, Ganjam Smallholders Relief Act, 1947 (Orissa Act XXX [30] of 1947).

[2] Orissa Act XXX [30] of 1947 defines a smallholder as a "person" who holds land not exceeding six acres of wet land or twelve acres of other land". The petitioner's case is that the classification of the suit lands as 'rain-fed' is itself an indication that they are wet. The view taken by the Revenue Divisional Officier is that 'rain-fed' is a category different from 'wet' and he relies on Board's standing order NO. 7 cl. 7, which says:

"as a rule all lands are classed under the two general heads 'wet' and 'dry'. In some districts another class of lands called Manawari has been recognized by Government. These are lands upon which wet crops are down grown with the aid of rain water impounded on the land."

The note to this paragraph also says that the transferred of ryati land from 'dry' to 'wet' and vice versa and from Manawari to dry and wet and vice versa are sanctioned by collectors. The Orissa Act does not define 'wet-lands' and it must be presumed that the meaning attaching to the expression in the area to which the Act is made applicable holds good. "Wet land" etymologically means, "holding water, saturated with water heavily," while wet crop means, "grown in a moist or watery soil," the most valuable of the wet crops being sugarcane; see Hunter's Imperial Gazette of India, vol. II, page 63. In the Madras Presidency the word "wet" has a well-recognized meaning and is applied to lands where wet crops can be grown. Paddy is admittedly wet crop: see Baden-Powell, vol. iii, p. 65. The further sub-division of wet into 'irrigated' or 'Manawari' or 'rain-fed' is made by the Settlement Department and a different rate of assessment, intermediate between irrigated and dry, is levied upon lands which grow paddy crops with the help of rain-water. Wet means mostly paddy crop land or land irrigated by river channels or tanks or those aided by wells": see Baden-Powell, vol. iii p. 56, note, and "survey field" is defined as "land not exceeding 6 acres of wet land or 12 acres of dry land". In this case, as already pointed out above the Record of Rights describes the land as 'rain-fed' (Barshadhar). The question, therefore, is whether 'rain-fed' land is or is not to be deemed 'wet land'.

[3] The opposite party was examined as P. W. 1 and his evidence is that in two or three acres, out of the plots in dispute, paddy is grown, in two acres mandia is grown, while the rest is left uncultivated. There is no source of water supply except rain. If admittedly paddy is grown on two or three acres that extent must indisputably be 'wet land' within the meaning of sub-s. (2) of S. 2 of the Act. Explanation 2 to S. 2, further lays down:

For the purpose of this clause, in the case of a person who owns wet land or other land one acre of wet land shall be deemed to be two acres of dry land and vice versa."

If the opposite party grows paddy on two to three acres, this must be equivalent to his being in possession of 4 to 6 acres of 'other land'. Admittedly he has got in all, 10.6 acres recorded in his name. Even if we take the minimum average of land according to the evidence of the opposite party, as two acres-on which paddy is grown—he will still then be left with 8.6 acres of 'other land'. Computing the two acres of paddy lands equivalent to four acres of other land according to the calculation laid down in Expln. 2 to S. 2, he would thus be in possession of 12.6 acres in all and would not be a 'smallholder' as defined in the Act.

[4] The view taken by the Revenue Divisional officer that Barshadhar, cannot be 'wet' must, in the circumstances, be held to be incorrect. Even in the other view, if paddy is grown on a portion of the land the opposite party would lose the benefit conferred upon smallholders by the Act.

[5] This revision succeeds, but in the circumstances there shall be no order as to costs.

Special Jurisdiction Case No. 16 of 1949, D/- 13-3-1950.

Income tax Act (1922 as amended in 1939), S. 25 (4)—Business assessed to tax different from one in existence in 1918—Test—Relief under S. 25 (4).

It was with a view to preventing double taxation on the same income that the remedial provision in S. 25 (4) was enacted. If, therefore, the business which is now assessed to tax is not the same, nor could it be said to have arisen from some other business which had been in existence in the year 1918, the petitioner cannot claim any relief under S. 25 (4). Whether a particular business has grown out of some business or whether two or more concerns constitute one business, is essentially a question of fact. The test for ascertaining whether two or more concerns constitute one business or not is to see whether the different businesses are so interlocked with one another or dovetailed into one another, that if one fails the others also fail. If on the other hand, each business can be carried on independently of the other, the finding would be that the business would constitute independent business.

[Para 5]

Anno. Income-tax Act, S. 25, N. 4.

B. N. Mohanty and S. K. Ray — for Petitioner; Standing Counsel, G. C. Das —for Opposite Party.

Panigrahi J.—This is a petition under S. 66 (2), Income-tax Act, against an order of the Income Tax Tribunal, Madras Branch, praying for an order calling upon the Tribunal to state a case for the petitioner and refer it to this Court for decision. The question arising for decision, according to the petitioner, is

"whether under the facts and circumstances of the case the provisions of S. 25 (4) are applicable to all the activities of a business or to those activities which suffered tax under the Income-tax Act, 1939."

[2] The petitioner represented a joint Hindu family concern and was carrying on mercantile business in grains prior to 1918 and had been assessed to income-tax under the Income-tax Act, 1918. During the assessment year 15.4 43 to 2-4-44, the joint family became separated and was succeeded by a partnership firm consisting of the members of the family. The petitioner claimed exemption from income-tax under S. 25 (4), Income-tax Act, 1939. The Income-tax officer rejected his claim, but the Appellate Assistant Commissioner held that the provisions of S. 25 (4) would apply to the facts of the case and allowed the benefit of those provisions to the petitioner in two out of the six businesses carried on by him on the relevant date of succession. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner held that the petitioner could get relief only in respect of those activities that were actually in existence in the year 1918 and suffered tax under the Act of 1918, but not in respect of the additional business activities which came into existence subsequent to that year. This view of the Assistant Commissioner was confirmed by the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal in their order, dated 24-11-48. It is against this order that the petitioner has filed the present revision petition.

[3] The admitted facts are that the petitioner-firm had only grain business and head office business in the year 1918, when he was assessed to income-tax under these two heads. In 1922, he started the business of salt manufacture and also established a cardboard factory. In addition, he purchased some shares in another partnership firm started after 1922. A branch office was opened at Calcutta sometime subsequent to that year. In 1918, assessments were being made in advance but this practice underwent a change in 1922 when it was decided to charge tax on the previous year's income. In order to prevent double taxation, relief was given to such persons as had been assessed under the Act of 1918. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner, therefore, held that those businessees which were not in existence in 1918 had never been assessed to income-tax and that, therefore, the petitioner was not entitled to claim any relief in respect of the income of those businesses. The petitioner attempted to establish that he had also salt business in 1918, but that attempt failed for want of evidence. In fact, it was found that the salt-manufacturing business had been started only in 1926 or 1927 while the cardboard factory was started sometime later. The petitioner was called upon to satisfy the tribunal that salt was one of the commodities that were being dealt with by the Hindu undivided family in 1918. The books of account produced by him in support of his case were, however, not accepted and the tribunal found that, as a matter of fact, the petitioner did not have any dealings in salt in 1918 from which the alleged salt business could have grown.

[4] Mr. Mohanty, learned counsel for the petitioner, contends that the Income-tax authorities and the Appellate Tribunal failed to properly appreciate the effect of the provision contained in S. 25 (4), Income-tax Act, 1939. That section reads as follows:

"Where a person who was at the commencement of the Indian Income-tax Amendment Act 1931, carrying on any business, profession, or vocation on which tax was at any time charged under the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act 1918, is succeeded in such capacity by another person, the change being not merely a change in the constitution of the partnership, no tax shall be payable by the first-mentioned person in respect of the income, profits and gains....."

[5] Mr. Mohanty's contention is that it is the person who is assessed to tax and not the business that he may be engaged in. In other words, he argued that a person is entitled to relief irrespective of the nature of the business he was conducting in 1918. Stretched to its logical limits, this argument would result in relief being given to every person who was assessed to tax in 1918, irrespective of the nature of the business or the number of businesses he may be engaged in during the year of assessment. The section, in express terms, refers to "business, profession or vocation on which tax was at any time charged under the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act." On a plain reading of the section, it appears to me that the income from a particular business which was in existence in the year 1918 and had been assessed to income-tax would not be taken into account and re-assessed It was with a view to preventing double taxation on the same income that the remedial provision in S. 25 (4) was enacted. If, therefore, the business which is now assessed to tax is not the same, nor could be said to have arisen from some other business which had been in existence in the year 1918, the petitioner cannot claim any relief under S. 25 (4). It is well established that whether a particular business has grown out of some business or whether two or more concerns constitute one business, is essentially a question of fact. The test for ascertaining whether two or more concerns constitute one business or not is to see whether the different businesses are so interlocked with one another or dovetailed into one another, that if one fails the others also fail. If on the other hand, each business can be carried on independently of the other, the finding would be that the businesses would constitute independent businesses. Mr. Mohanty's argument is that the concerns belong to one person arising out of common capital and should accordingly be considered to be no more than different branches of the same business. He cited the example of a shopping concern which has different items of business, such as shoes, wearing apparel, furniture and so forth; but, however varied the departments may be there is one fact that governs them all and that is the business of buying and selling. If, for instance, a shopping concern had also insurance business it can hardly be said that the two would constitute one business. In the present case, if the grain business which had been taxed under the 1918 Act and the cardboard factory which had been started in 1922 were so interdependent and so inter-connected as to constitute, in essence. one business concern, the petitioner's contention can be upheld. But the fact is that the grain business consisted in buying and selling for profit whereas the cardboard factory business was started for the purpose of manufacturing cardboards and making a profit. I cannot, therefore, persuade myself to hold that the business concerns started after 1918 such as manufacture of salt or of cardboard, were so intimately connected with the purchase and sale of graine that had been in existence from 1918, as to constitute one business. The view taken by the tribunal is, therefore, correct and we see no reason to call upon, them to state a case for the petitioner.

Criminal Revn. No. 168 of 1950, D/- 4-8-1950.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 499, Sch. V, Form XIII —Surety bond without bond by accused is not bail bond.

Criminal Procedure Code, Sch. V, Form No. XIII, contemplates that there should be two bonds, one taken from the accused undertaking to appear on the dates of hearing on pain of forfeiting the bond of any amount fixed by the Court, and the other from the surety chosen by him (accused) undertaking, on accused's failure, to make good the sum forfeited by the accused and, for the matter of that, by him. Any surety bond executed without the bond by the accused is not a bail bond within the Code and is not enforceable in the manner prescribed in the Code. If for some reason, the accused, the primary obligor, is released, the surety stands released without anything more. The word "bail" is properly applicable to "security with surety" and not "surety without security." The essentiality of the position is that until an accused forfeits his bond of appearance, the question of surety's liability does not arise : A. I. R. (27) 1940 Lah. 339 ; A. I. Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 499, N. 1 and 7.

K. N. Das — for Petitioner; Advocate-General — for Opposite Party.

Order. — The petitioner (Gobinda Chandra Srichanar) has been declared to have forfeited the bail bond executed by him to ensure attendance of accused Bira Naik in Criminal Case No. 389, started by Maguni Biswal of Dhenkanal. On 16-1-1950, which was one of the dates of hearing, the accused Bira Naik did not attend the Court, and the petitioner, his bailor, fully alive to his responsibility, made a representation to the Court that the non-appearing accused was ill. The learned Magistrate did not accept the story of illness but however, was forced to adjourn the case to 30-1-1950. On that date, the accused appeared, and the bailor too appeared and filed a petition asking to be released from the liability of bail bond. It appears from the record that one Banshi Naik executed a bail bond for Bira Naik on 3-3-1950. The petitioner was called upon to show cause why the surety bond should not be forfeited and the payment of Rs. 200 agreed under the bond to be paid in default of the accused's attendance in Court, should not be enforced.

[2] Both the Courts below have disbelieved the story of Bira Naik's illness on 16-1-1950, and have found themselves not justified, on any reason whatsoever, to excuse the bailor from the liability.

[3] Mr. K. N. Das, the learned counsel for the petitioner, has attacked the proceeding as tainted with illegality. According to him, the suretyship should have, first of all, been forfeited, and then only he could have been called upon to show cause why payment of the amount undertaken should not be enforced. I do not quite follow this argument. If his argument is upheld it would mean that the surety bond should be forfeited without hearing the bailor. That can never be the intention of law. Before forfeiting the bond, the bailor should be given an opportunity to show cause. If he fails to satisfy the Magistrate as to the existence of any sufficient reason disabling him from fulfilling the terms of the bond, he is to be directed to pay. Mr. Das should maintain that at that stage he shall be given further opportunity to show cause. At present, I am not advised to express any opinion on this. But I find no irregularity in the proceeding.

[4] But for reasons different from that placed before me, the payment should not be enforced.

I have the bond before me. What has been undertaken in that bond is that the petitioner should appear in Court from day to day. It reads like this:

"We the accused have been called upon to furnish securities with one surety of Rs. 200 each in the Criminal Case No. 389 started by Maguni Biswal (Complainant) as against Lambodar Behera and 5 others. I, therefore, agree that from today till the disposal of this case I shall appear in Court on 30-12-1949 and on all other dates to which the case is adjourned at 10 O' clock every day and in case I fail to appear I shall have to pay Rs 1200. If I fail to pay, the State shall realise it by attaching and selling my properties. I execute the Muchalika to this effect. Dated 14-12-1949, Sd. G. C. Srichanar."

[5] The document contains a list of the names of the 6 accused persons. None of them has been made to sign this document by way of execution. This amounts to saying that the accused persons have not bound themselves to appear in Court on condition of forfeiting the sum of Rs. 200 each. As it appears from Criminal P. C., Sch. V, Form No. XIII, there should be two bonds, one taken from the accused undertaking to appear on the dates of hearing on pain of forfeiting the bond of any amount fixed by the Court, and the other from the surety chosen by him (accused) undertaking, on accused's failure, to make good the sum forfeited by the accused and, for the matter of that, by him. I cannot conceive that without an accused himself executing a bond, any surety could be thought of. The very conception behind the word "surety" and the liability implied in that status as recognised by law is to reimburse the loss sustained by the principal on account of failure of performance on the part of the obligor. The principal (i.e., the State in this case) has double remedy—one against the principal obligor, and the other against his surety. Not taking a bond from the accused person to appear on the dates fixed amounts to leaving him to act at his own option. If the accused is not bound to appear, there is no meaning requiring the surety to make him appear. It is well established in law that if the principal by his laches or otherwise releases the debtor from the liability sought to be assumed by the surety, his remedy against the surety is frustrated.

[6] Execution of a bond is imperative under the Code. Section 499, Criminal P. C., reads :

"Before any person is released on bail or released on his own bond, a bond for such sum of money as the police officer or Court, as the case may be, thinks sufficient shall be executed by such person, and, when he is released on bail, by one or more sufficient sureties conditioned that such person shall attend at the time and place mentioned in the bond, and shall continue so to attend until otherwise directed by the police officer or Court, as the case may be."

The section contemplates two cases : one when the accused is to be released on his own bond, and the other release on bail. Execution of a bond by the accused is imperative, and in the case of release on bail, a bond by one or more sufficient sureties has to be executed in addition. Mark that in the first part of the section the bond is to be for such sum of money as the Court thinks sufficient, and with regard to the sureties' bond in the latter part of para (1) of the section, nothing is mentioned about the "sum". This is because surety implies pre-existence of a fixed liability by the obligor (principal) and the surety is to undertake to reimburse the primary obligation. Hence for what sum the surety bond or bonds shall be executed is thereby pre-determined. Any surety bond executed without the bond by the accused is not a bail bond within the Code and is not enforceable in the manner prescribed in the Code. Section 502 contemplates release of a surety without entailing release of the accused. If for some reason, the accused, the primary obligor, is released, the surety stands released without anything more.

[7] It may be noticed that surety does not thereby acquire an overall control of the accused's person. He is to watch the movements of the accused, and, on apprehension that he may abscond, may inform the Court and seek release of his liability where upon he is not held bound to it but the accused is arrested, and on his arrest the surety is freed from the bond and stands discharged Where the accused has not been made to execute a bond, the only control on the accused is non-existent and the foundation of the security is knocked from its bottom. The result is unenforceability of the surety bond. Bail means security with sureties whereas the bond, referred to in the first proviso to S. 496, is a simple recognisance of the principal without any surety. The word "bail" is properly applicable to "security with surety" and not "surety without security." In the case of Wadhawa Singh v. Emperor, 29 Cr. L. J. 491-109 I. C. 219 : (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Lah. 318), it has been held under no provision of the law can a police officer or a Court take a third party's bond for the appearance of the accused without taking an undertaking (bond) from the accused himself. Such a bond is invalid and the person executing it incurs no legal liability if the accused absconds. I have considered, in this connexion, the views of the Judges who decided the cases: Indar v. Emperor, 41 Cr. L. J. 958 : (A. I. R. (27) 1940 Lah. 339), Nisar Ahmed v. Emperor, A. I. R. (32) 1945 ALL. 389: (47 Cr. L. J 209), and Abdul Aziz v. Emperor, A. I. R. (33) 1946 ALL. 116 : (47 Cr. L. J. 528). With the greatest deference, I would not agree with them. In Indar's case, (41 Cr. L. J. 958 : A. I. R. (27) 1940 Lah. 339), S. 499 has not been taken into consideration. In the Allahabad cases, their Lordships have failed to consider that the accused, remaining at large without executing a bond, cannot be said to have been released on bail. To hold otherwise, would amount to setting the imperative provisions of S. 499 at naught. If the accused has not been released on bail, and has not undertaken to appear on pain of forfeiture of a bond for a certain amount, the consideration for the surety bond fails and the surety's liability is enlarged or subjected to greater risk than he shall be considered to have undertaken under the provisions of S. 499 without his consent. The surety's bond, therefore, becomes unenforceable. The Legislature has deliberately used the word 'surety' indicating that his liability is secondary. Besides, on principle, I am bound, sitting in this Court, by the view prevailing in the Patna High Court. The point has been dealt with in the case of Baidynath v. Emperor, A. I. R. (34) 1947 Pat. 58: (48 Cr L. J. 324), where it was held that a bond by the surety alone was not contemplated by the Code and there was no power in the Code to forfeit such a bond.

[8] In this view of the matter, even if I read this document in the manner in which the learned Advocate-General wants me to read, namely, that he did not bind himself to appear in Court but to cause accused's appearance, I should hold that on account of non-execution of a bond by the accused, the liability of the surety under the sort of bond did never arise. Secondly, if the State Government would insist upon the hidden or implied meaning under this document and should like to enforce the penalty, the bailor is entitled to demand his pound of flesh and to say that, in accordance with the terms of the document, he had appeared on all dates in Court. It having appeared from the record that though the accused did not appear the bailor did not fail to make his appearance, it has to be held that he has fulfilled the terms of the bond and he cannot be held liable.

[9] There are two deficiencies in the case that are at the moment irremediable: (i) No bond for appearance has been taken from and executed by the accused: and (ii) that the bailor, bound as he is by the bond, has fulfilled its terms to the effect that he should appear in Court from day to day. He has nowhere agreed to be liable to pay any sum for non-appearance of the accused. The essentiality of the position is that until an accused forfeits his bond of appearance, the question of surety's liability does not arise.

[10] In the circumstances, I would set aside the orders of the Courts below calling upon the petitioner to make payment on forfeiting his bond. In my judgment, he is not liable to any penalty whatsoever. The revision is allowed.

Kulamoni Mohanty — Petitioner v. The State—Opposite Party.

Criminal Misc. No. 97 of 1950, D/-22-8-1950.

Preventive Detention Act (1950), S. 7—Grounds vague and untrue — Detention held unjustified — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 491.

A was arrested on 24-2-1950 under S. 107, Criminal P. C. but no proceedings were started under the section. He was then put under detention for three months by the District Magistrate. Just before the expiry of the period, the order was revoked by the Chief Secretary who passed an order of detention on 16th May 1950 but made the detention effective from 28-2-1950. The grounds supplied to A which were exactly similar to those supplied to other four detenus, alleged that A was an avowed member of Communist party which described the present agitation as 'Civil War' and that A was attempting to collect weapons etc. and was likely to go underground. No further details were given on the ground that their disclosure was against public interest. In an application by A under S. 491, Criminal P. C.:

Held that the grounds were too vague. Moreover, they were such as could be taken against every member of that party and if really existed, were sufficient to declare the party unlawful. In absence of such declaration every member of the party could not be predicated to be sabotageous or violent;

Further, the circumstances of his arrest and subsequent orders showed that the grounds alleged were not true. The order of detention was therefore set aside. [Paras 4, 5]

Government Advocate—for Opposite Party.

Ray C. J. — The petitioner (Kulamoni Mohanty) has been ordered to be detained for one year by the Government of Orissa from 28-2-1950 under S. 3 (1), Preventive Detention Act (IV [4] of 1950). Long after this detention, that is on 19-5-1950, he was served with a copy of the grounds as contemplated in S. 7 of the Act, wherein he was told that he had a right to make a representation against the order of detention.

[2] We have no information if he has made any such representation In his petition to this Court, he asserts that he had been holding a service in B. N. Rly. for the last eleven years and had not been officially suspended or dismissed. This assertion is intended to convey that he is a man who is following peaceful avocation of life and no blemish has been found in his career as a public servant by his immediate superior. He further says that he was first arrested on 24-2-1950 under S. 107, Criminal P. C., but no proceeding under the section was started. He was then put under detention for three months by the District Magistrate of Cuttack as per his order NO. 354-Res. of 28-2-1950. He further says that just prior to the termination of this period of detention, the Chief Secretary to the Government of Orissa revoked the above mentioned order of detention by the District Magistrate. Then came the present order which is now the subject of consideration. This order is dated 16-5-1950, but it prescribes his detention as under the order to take effect from 28-2-1950. It does not appear that the District Magistrate gave him copy of the grounds for the detention order passed by him. It is imperative under S. 7 of the Act. The section says:

"7 (1) When a person is detained in pursuaone of a detention order, the authority making the order shall, as soon as may be, communicate to him the grounds on which the order has been made, and shall afford him the earliest opportunity of making a representation against the order, ... and in a case where it has been made by . . . . an officer subordinate thereto (State Government) to the State Government."

It is apparent that since 28th February till 16th May, his detention was insisted upon without affording him the necessary opportunity of making a representation to the State Government.

[3] The petitioner also avers in the penultimate paragraph of his petition that there is every reason and proof to believe that the grounds supplied to him are not even genuinely misconceived notions of the Government regarding him, and they are but formal recitals of a fixed formula for justifying the detentions of such persons against whom the Government cannot find any actual ground; the petitioner submits this because he finds the grounds of his detention to be completely and entirely a faithful copy of the grounds (even including the numbers of the orders containing them in some cases) supplied to four other detenus who are now in this (Cuttack) Jail along with the petitioner: the detenus concerned are Shyamaghan Ray Chowdhury, Govinda Chandra Sarangi, Graja Tripathy and Jaldhar Nanda.

[4] In the background of this statement made in the petition which the State Government has not taken care to controvert, the validity or otherwise of the grounds has to be examined. The grounds, in a nut shell are that the petitioner is an avowed member of the Communist Party who are out to follow the policy of the Communist Party of India and are describing the present agitation of the Communist as 'Civil War' and are making every attempt to collect the weapons and foment disorder, etc., and that the petitioner is likely to go underground to further the plans of the Communist Party, namely, commission of sabotage and violence. The learned Government Advocate, in supporting the State's case, urges that the grounds could not be any the more specific inasmuch as any further information might disclose facts which the State considers to be against the public interest to disclose. This provision, however, has to be read along with the provisions which prescribe the object for which the grounds are to be supplied Preventive detentions are cases in which individuals are deprived of their liberty without a trial. The provision which compels the detaining authority to supply them grounds and the provision that they will be given an opportunity to avail of the grounds in order to make representation for the purpose of clarifying their position and repudiating the grounds urged against them to a prescribed authority and periodical review of their cases by the Advisory Board are meant to be considered, in the circumstances, as substituted for trial. As it has always been said that the weapon in the hands of the Government is very powerful the minimum of liberty that has been given to the detenus in the set up of things should not be whittled down in the manner, of which the present case is the type. I can easily conceive that the grounds could have been more specific without disclosing the facts which are against the public interest to disclose. He should have been said when, where and with whom he had been planning. If the fact that he was going to plan was based upon any statement made by him or any document or correspondence from which it appeared, without disclosing specifically those documents or statements, it could have been said that those documents had been discovered or the statements had been verified, and that therefrom it appeared that he intended planning sabotage and violence. The grounds, as they stand are too vague to be availed of for the purpose of making a representation.

[5] The circumstances that he was first of all arrested in anticipation of a proceeding under S. 107, Criminal P. C., and that he was later detained under the orders of the District Magistrate, who failed to supply him the grounds of detention under S. 3 (3) of the Act but must have made a report to the State Government, make it doubtful if the informations that reached the Government at the time of his arrest were sufficient to warrant his detention. Besides such orders of detention have always been held to be sham orders. If people are arrested on charges of offence or mis-behaviour likely to prejudice the public peace within the meaning of S. 107, Criminal P. C., and then the proceedings against them are dropped and recourse is taken to the provision of Preventive Detention Act for their detention, they are entitled to have it adjudged that the grounds are not true. Besides it can be said that the grounds like these can be taken to have been extended against every member of the Communist Party, Orissa. Such grounds, if they exist, as in the nature of things they should, would be sufficient for a Party to be declared unlawful. That the Party has not been declared unlawful makes it clear that it cannot be predicated that every individual member of the Communist Party is either a sabotageous or violent. Under the circumstances, to tell of a particular communist that he is so because he is an avowed communist would be nothing but vague. The State has not made out a case of any clear immediate danger happening to the maintenance of public order by allowing the petitioner to remain at large. Under the circumstances, we direct his release forthwith.

A. F. O. D. No. 18 of 1945, D/- 25-4-1950.

(a) Benami — Burden of proof — Purchase by female—Presumption.

When a plea of benami purchase is raised, the ostensible title cannot be displaced except on clear and cogent proof of the benami character of the purchase. The burden of proving this lies on the person asserting the benami character. The source of the purchase money has always been considered a primary and crucial factor in making out the benami character of a purchase. The same burden of proof applies equally to a case where a sale deed stands in the name of a female. There is no presumption in law that merely because the female had a husband at the time of the purchase, the sale deed must be presumed to be benami for the husband. Neither is there any presumption that a married woman has no funds of her own to be available as consideration for the purpose. When considering the question as to the source of purchase money, the matter has to be looked at not necessarily by requiring express and positive proof of the supply of specific funds of the husband or of the wife for the disputed purchase, but proof of the relevant facts with reference to the broad probabilities and the circumstances in the light of the evidence is enough. [Para 6]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 6, R. 2 and O. 7, R. 7—Claim suit under O. 21, R. 63 by daughters that attached property belonged to mother and not father—Defence of benami— Plea of advancement can be taken by plaintiffs— It is not a mere alternative case. [Para 8]

Anno. Civil P. C., O. 6, R. 2, N. 5; O. 7, R. 7, N. 3.

(c) Benami—Advancement—Purchase in name of wife—Trusts Act (1882), S. 82.

Where in India a purchase has been made by a person in the name of his wife or child or other close relation, the presumption is that it was benami and that there is no presumption that purchase was intended by way of advancement. The presumption of no advancement is however a rebuttable one. But there must be proof of some circumstances which would indicate the intention to benefit though no direct proof of the same is necessary. [Para 9]

Where a comparatively small sum out of the total investment in the purchase of property in the name of the wife is stridhan of the wife and the sale deed concerned relates only to a small extent of the total extent of the property purchased and the rest of the funds are all supplied by the husband, the presumption of no advancement is not rebutted. [Para 12]

Anno. Trusts Act, S. 82, N. 3.

B. N. Das and G. B. Mohanty — for Appellants; S. N. Sengupta and S. Mohanty—for Respondents.

Jagannadhadas J. — Plaintiffs are the appellants in this appeal. The suit is one under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C. and relates to 62½ acres of land at Dolamandap Sahi in the town of Puri with pucca and kutcha structures standing thereon. The facts leading to the suit are as follows :

[2] Plaintiffs are the daughters of defendant 2. Defendants 3 to 6 mortgaged the suit property along with other properties to defendant 1 the Puri Bank, by a deed of mortgage dated 10th March 1934, Ex. 6, for a sum of Rs. 25,000. The Bank obtained a decree on the mortgage and brought this property to sale in Execution Case No. 1379 of 1941. The plaintiffs intervened with a claim petition on the ground that the suit property belonged to their deceased mother and not to their father defendant 2, that they are entitled to the same as the Stridhan heirs of their mother, and that their father and brothers mortgaged the suit property fraudulently without their knowledge. (It may be mentioned that under the Patna amendment to O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., a claim proceeding can be instituted also in the execution of a mortgage decree.) The basis for this claim by the plaintiffs is the fact that the suit property has been acquired in bits under six successive sale-deeds ranging from 1902 to 1923 all of which stand in the name of their mother who died on 15 February 1933. The claim was rejected by the executing Court and hence this regular suit by the plaintiffs under O. 21, R. 63 to establish their right to the suit-property.

[3] The case of the plaintiffs is that the various purchases were made with the stridhan money of their mother while it is the case of defendant 1, the Puri Bank that the purchases were made with the money of defendant 2 and that the sale-deeds were taken benami in the name of his wife. The learned Subordinate Judge in the trial Court has, after consideration of the evidence and circumstances, accepted the contention of defendant 1 and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit and hence this appeal.

[4] The plaintiffs' father, defendant 2 herein, one Banamali Kar, was a native of the village of Chandpur in the District of Cuttack. He was not a person having any substantial ancestral property and appears to have shifted to Puri more than fifty years ago in order to eke out his livelihood. He took up service with a Bengali Lady named Giribala Dasi who was running an excise shop a cloth shop and a grocery shop. in Puri and other excise shops in the mofussil. He seems to have won his employer's confidence fairly early and became her trusted assistant and in course of time, the management of her excise business and grocery shop appears to have been left in his hands. As early as in 1911, his employer executed a power-of-attorney in his favour including others, vide Ex, 6. He appears also to have been admitted as a partner with her into her business at one time. When for one reason or other the license of the excise shop could not be obtained by his employer, Giribala Dasi. the shop appears to have been run for a year in his name for her. In so far as can be gathered from the material exhibited in this suit, he had made purchases of various items of property between 1910 to 1923 under as many as 14 sale-deeds and the property so acquired or the price paid therefor was not inconsiderable.

[5] The suit properties have been purchased under six sale-deeds of which one dated 6th November 1906 relating to a portion of plot No. 431 has not been exhibited. The other purchases are as follows :

Ext. No.	Date of Execution.		Plot No.	Extent (In acres).	Consideration.
Ext. 1	... 16-9-1902	...	430	.10	390
Ext. 1-A	... 18-12-1919	...	432	.20	600
Ext. 1-B	... 22-2-1920	...	436	.20	350
Ext. 1-C	... 6-6-1922	... (The rest of plot No. 431 appears to have been purchased under the unexhibited sale-deed dated 6-11-1906)	Portion of 431	.9	1000
Ext. 1-D	... 13-9-1923		Part of plot No. 433	.2½	150

Thus under these six sale-deeds the suit area of 66½ decimals comprised in plot Nos 430. 431, 432 and a portion of plot No. 433 and plot No. 436 along with the pucca and kutcha superstructures standing thereon at the time were purchased for an aggregate consideration of about Rs. 2600. The question for consideration is whether having regard to the evidence and circumstances in this case, these purchases were made by the plaintiffs' mother herself or benami by defendant 2 in the name of his wife.

[6] It is necessary to appreciate clearly the principles which have to be kept in view when a question of this kind arises. There can be no doubt that when a plea of benami purchase is raised. the ostensible title cannot be displaced except on clear and cogent proof of the benami character of the purchase. The burden of proving this lies on the person asserting the benami character It is unnecessary to lay down what all circumstances are relevant to make out the benami character of a purchase; but the source of the purchase money has always been considered a primary and crucial factor. The same burden of proof applies equally to a case where a sale-deed stands in the name of a female. There is no presumption in law that merely because the female had a husband at the time of the purchase, the sale-deed must be presumed to be benami for the husband. Neither is there any presumption that a married woman has no funds of her own to be available as consideration for the purpose. The dictum of the Privy Council in Lakshmiah Chetty v. Kothandrama Pillai, A. I. R. (12) 1925 P. C. 181 : (48 Mad. 605) and other cases following it which is in the following terms:

"There can be no doubt now that a purchase in India by a native of India of property in India in the name of his wife unexplained by other proved or admitted facts is to be regarded as a Benami transaction by which the beneficial interest in the property is in the husband although the ostensible title is in the wife," cannot be, and has not been, taken to mean that such a purchase is to be presumed to be benami, merely because it was purchased during her married status. In order that the above quoted dictum of the Privy Council, may apply, it must be made out as a fact that the purchase was by the husband and that the source of the consideration for the purchase was the funds of the husband. (See Ratanchand Fakirchand v. Deochand Dayathai, A. I. R. (33) 1946 Bom. 157 : (223 I. C. 618). But it is also necessary to observe that when considering the question as to the source of purchase money, the matter has to be looked at not necessarily by requiring express and positive proof of the supply of specific funds of the husband or of the wife for the disputed purchase, but proof of the relevant facts with reference to the broad probabilities and the circumstances in the light of the evidence is enough. The position relating to the quantum of proof required in such cases to establish the benami character has been authoritatively laid down by the Federal Court in the latest case reported in Gangadara Aiyar v. Subramania Sastrigal, A.I.R. (36) 1949 F. C. 88 : (1945 F. L. J. 90) where their Lordships in an unanimous judgment state the position as follows:

"It is the settled law that the onus of establishing that a transaction is benami is on the plaintiff, the person asserting the benami character and it must be strictly made out. The decision of the Court cannot rest on mere suspicion, but must rest on legal grounds and legal testimony. In the absence of evidence, the apparent title must prevail. It is also well-established that in a case where it is asserted that an assignment in the name of one person is in reality for the benefit of another, the real test is the source whence the consideration came and when it is not possible to obtain evidence which conclusively establishes or rebuts the allegation, the case must be dealt with on reasonable probabilities and legal inferences arising from proved or admitted facts."

The evidence and circumstances in this case have to be judged with reference to these standards.

[7] There is no direct and express evidence on behalf of defendant 1, the Puri Bank, that the consideration under the various sale deeds actually belongad at the time to defendant 2 or that defendant 2 had specific funds at the time out of which the consideration was in fact paid. [After discussing the evidence the judgment proceeded.] The above review of the facts and circumstances emerging from the evidence establishes (1) that defendant 2 was in possession of substantial funds during the period 1910-1933, when almost the entire investment on the acquisition of the land relating to the suit-houses and the reconstruction of the super-structures thereon was incurred. (2) That as a matter of fact he was acquiring substantial properties during that period. (3) The recitals in the sale-deeds relating to the suit property show that the consideration therefor in so far as it was by way of set-off of previous debts was that of D-2 and in so far as it was cash, was paid through his hands. (4) It is in a way admitted by the plaintiffs in their plaint that the money required for the very substantial investment by way of reconstruction had its origin from defendant 2. (5) The plaintiffs' case of their mother being in possession of independent Stridhan funds is clearly disproved. Taking all these circumstances together, it is a reasonable inference that the consideration for the various sale-deeds and for the reconstruction of the structures thereupon was supplied completely by defendant 2 and not by the plaintiffs' mother. I have therefore no hesitation in agreeing with the conclusion arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge that the purchase of the suit property under the various sale deeds above referred to in the name of the plaintiffs' mother must be taken to have been really made by defendant 2 from out of his own funds.

[8] Learned counsel for the appellant however argues that even if it is taken as sufficiently proved that the consideration for the above sale-deeds and for the reconstruction of the houses thereupon was supplied by defendant 2, it must in the circumstances of this case be taken to be with an intention that the beneficial interest therein should belong to the plaintiffs' mother that is to say that the consideration was provided by way of advancement. It is objected on behalf of the respondents that the question as to whether there was an intention by way of advancement is a question of fact which has not been put in issue at all at the trial and that such a question of fact cannot be permitted to be raised at this stage. It has been pointed out that there is no indication in the plaint of any such alternative case and that the plaint was entirely on the footing that as a fact the consideration for various sale-deeds was actually supplied by the plaintiffs mother and not by defendant 2. The case in Ishan Chunder Singh v. Samachurn, 11 M. I. A. 7 at p. 20 : (6 W. R. 57 P. C.) is cited to show that a question of this kind is not to be allowed to be taken for the first time in the appellate stage. I am not however prepared to overrule the argument of the appellant's counsel on this ground. An argument that even if the purchase-money was supplied by defendant 2, the title does not belong to him, is not a mere alternative case. The one and the only question is whether the purchases are benami. Defendant 1 seeks to make it out by showing that the funds were supplied by defendant 2. The plaintiffs may disprove it by showing that the intention was to benefit their mother. It appears to me, however, that on the material before us, there is nothing sufficiently to indicate that there was any intention on the part of defendant 2 to purchase the property under the various relevant sale-deeds for the benefit of his wife, once it is found that the purchases were made by him and out of his funds and not by the wife out of her funds. Quite a large number of cases decided by the Privy Council have repeatedly established the proposition that where in India a purchase has been made by a person in the name of his wife or child or other close relation, the presumption is that it was benami and that there is no presumption that the purchase was intended by way of advancement. It is sufficient to refer to the cases in Gopee Krist Gosain v. Gunga Persaud, 6 M. I. A. 53 : (4 W. R. 46 P. C.); Mt. Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh, A. I. R. (2) 1915 P. C. 96 : (37 ALL. 557); F. J. R. Kerwick v. K. M. Kerwick, A. I. R. (8) 1921 P. C. 56 : (48

Cal. 260); Lakshmiah Chetty v. Kothandrama Pillai, A.I.R, (12) 1925 P. C 181 : (48 Mad. 605) and Gurandittа v. T. Ramaitta, A. I R. (15) 1928 P. C. 172 (55 Cal. 944). The presumption of no advancement is no doubt a rebuttable one. But there must be proof of some circumstances which would indicate the intention to benefit though no direct proof of the same is necessary. It is no doubt true that as stated in Mahomed Sadiq Ali Khan v Fakr Jahan Begam, A. I. R. (19) 1932 P. C. 13 at p. 20 : (6 Luck. 556) :

"Though there may be no presumption of advancement in such cases in India very little evidence of intention would be sufficient to turn the scale."

What is the nature of that "little evidence" which is required to turn the scale can be gathered from a notice of the facts of this very case in Mahomed Sadiq Ali Khan v. Fakr Jahan Begam, A. I. R. (19) 1932 P. C. 13 : (6 Luck. 556) and of a few other cases where the intention of advancement was found as a fact.

[9] In Mahomed Sadiq Ali Khan v. Fakr Jahan Begam, A. I. R. (19) 1932 P. C. 13 at p. 20 : (6 Luck. 556) the property in dispute was purchased by a Mohammedan in the name of the daughter of his favourite wife. At the time of the daughter's marriage, he sent the deed to the father-in-law of the daughter for his inspection representing it as her property. It was held that this was sufficient evidence of his intention that the purchase was for the benefit of his daughter, Shambhu Nath v. Pushkarnath, A. I. R. (32) 1945 P. C. 10 : (I. L. R. (1945) Kar. P. C. 168) is a case of deposits by the deceased in the bank in the joint names of himself and his close relations. Some of his near relations were destitute widows and others were Pardanashin ladies. Their Lordships held that these circumstances were sufficient to lead to an inference that the deposits were for advancement and that it was unlikely that the deceased chose the names of such persons as joint holders of the deposits benami. In Manmohan Das v. Mt. Ram Dei, A. I. R. (18) 1931 P. C. 175 : (134 I. C. 669) there was a deed of gift executed by a recently married husband in the name of his minor wife. The deed itself recites the fact of the recent marriage, the minority of his wife and the advice of his relations and his own desire to make arrangements for his wife's maintenance. It was also in evidence that the husband had led a somewhat extravagant life prior to marriage and that the property covered by the deed of gift was his sole remaining asset. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the deed must have been meant by way of advancement.

[10] Learned counsel for the appellants relied strongly on a case in Sitamma v. Sitapati Rao, A. I. R. (25) 1938 Mad. 8 : (I. L. R. (1938) Mad. 220). In that case it was found that a person made an adoption and that various properties were purchased in the name of his wife. The adoption deed itself suggested the possibility of strained relations between the adopted son and the adoptive mother. It was held that it was not unlikely that the purchase in the name of the wife with the funds supplied by the husband was meant to be for the benefit of the wife. It was also further found on the facts that subsequent dealings with the property were on the footing of recognising the ownership and the possession of the wife. In the case their Lordships of the Madras High Court say :

"The mere suspicion that the purchases might not have wholly been made with the lady's money will certainly not suffice to establish that the purchases were benami, nor even the suspicion that moneys belonging to the husband, whether in a smaller measure or a larger measure, must have also contributed to these purchases. Even in cases where there is positive evidence that money had been contributed by the husband and not by the wife, that circumstance is not conclusive in favour of the benami character of the transaction, though it is an important criterion. It is true that in the Indian law the English rule as to presumption of advancement has not been adopted, but S. 82, Trusts Act, recognises that money may have been contributed by another, towards a purchase with the intention of giving a beneficial interest to the person in whose name the purchase is made. The relationship of husband and wife between the person who contributes the money and the person in whose name the sale is taken will be a very important factor in determining whether the transaction was really meant for the benefit of the wife or not."

As already stated above, the facts and circumstances of that case were such as to render it very probable that the benefit of the wife was specifically intended.

[11] In the present case, the only circumstances that may be relied on in favour of an intention to benefit the wife by these purchases are if at all the following:—In 1903 to 1904, plot No. 430 purchased under the sale-deed, Ext. 1 was mutated in the name of the plaintiffs' mother, vide, Ext. 2. In 1920-21 plot No. 436 purchased under sale-deed, Ext. 1-B was mutated in the name of the plaintiffs' mother, vide Exts. 2-A and 3-B. For the purchase under Ext. 1-C of portion of plot No. 431, the mutation in the plaintiffs' mother's name was effected in 1922, vide Ex. 3. It is also in evidence that in the Puri Municipal Survey records, Ext. 4, prepared some time before 1922, the name of the plaintiffs' mother is recorded in respect of plot No. 433, with an extent of .14 acres showing her as the owner, thereof. It is also in evidence that when the application for sanction of the plan of the two storied building to be reconstructed on the suit-site was made and sanctioned in 1932, under Ext. 7, the building was stated to be that of Gouri Debi. On the other hand, however, there is absolutely no evidence of any possession or enjoyment by the plaintiffs' mother during her lifetime or by the plaintiffs at any time prior to the date of the suit which was filed in 1944, since the date of their mother's death in 1933. It is also admitted by the plaintiffs in para. 18 of the plaint that the sale deeds relating to the suit property were in the custody of defendant 2 and that the municipal assessments were also in his name. The mutation proceedings and the entry in the municipal survey record following almost immediately on the execution of the respective sale-deeds was a matter of course and are not by themselves any indication of intention of defendant 2 that the purchases were meant to be for the benefit of his wife. The application for sanction of the plan for reconstruction of a two-storied structure cannot also be said to be of any significance in the face of the admitted fact that municipal assessments were all in the name of defendant 2 himself. It is no doubt true as pointed out in Girija Kumari v. Kiran Chandra, A. I. R. (34) 1947 Pat. 471 : (26 Pat. 253) that

" where a sale-deed alleged to be benami is taken in the name of a female member of the family definite evidence of subsequent possession by that female member is somewhat difficult. "

[12] But where as in this case the evidence and the circumstances point to a conclusion that the source of the purchase money was supplied by the husband, more satisfactory evidence of circumstances leading to the conclusion that there was an intention of beneficial advancement is required. The only other circumstances that have been pointed out and relied upon on behalf of the appellants are that the last lease-deed, Ex. 1-D for Rs. 150 in terms recites that the consideration paid was Stridhan amount of the wife and it is also pointed out that during the course of the 20 years between 1910 to 1933, when defendant 2 made as many as eighteen purchases only these four all of which relate only to a particular residential house were purchased in the name of the wife and that the earliest purchases under Ex. 1 is of the year 1902, some years before the purchases in the name of defendant 2 himself appears to have started. The recital that the money supplied under Ex. 1-D was Stridhan cash of the plaintiffs' mother was no doubt a relevant factor in considering the question as to whether the money supplied for that or earlier purchase was that of defendant 2 or of plaintiffs' mother. But once a conclusion on that matter has been reached against the plaintiffs, it appears to me that a recital of that kind in the sale-deed relating only to a very small extent out of the total extent of the property and to a comparative small sum of Rs. 150 out of the total investment of over ten thousand is not enough to indicate any clear intention on the part of defendant 2 that the various purchases ranging from 1902 to 1923 were all meant for the benefit of the wife. On the other hand there are not in this case as in the cases in Sitamma v.. Sitapati Rao, A. I. R. (25) 1938 Mad. 8 : (I. L. R. (1938) Mad. 220); Mahomed Sadiq Ali Khan v. Fakr Jahan Begam, A.I.R. (19) 1932 P. C. 13 : (6 Luck. 556) and Shambhu Nath v. Pushkarnath, A. I. R. (32) 1945 P. C. 10 : (I. L. R (1945) Kar. P. C. 168), proof of any outstanding circumstances which would have rendered it prima facie probable that the husband would have intended to make these various purchases for the purpose of providing for his wife. It is to be noticed that the very first purchase on record is in the name of the wife and the other disputed purchases all relate to the residential house in which he was living all along. It is more likely than not that these purchases at that time were intended for his own benefit. It is most unlikely that a person like him succeeding in business and investing his moneys in the purchase of site and construction of structure constituting his residential house in which he happens to be living all the time would have intended that the same is not to belong to himself, but to his wife. It is not possible and it is unnecessary to speculate what might have been the reason for his making these purchases in the name of the wife or for making specific recital in the last only of the disputed purchases that the consideration therefor was stridhan money of the wife. On a consideration therefore of the entire circumstances and evidence in this case, I have come to the conclusion that there is no sufficient evidence in this case of circumstances probablising any positive intention on the part of defendant 2 of making these purchases for the benefit of his wife. I agree therefore with the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge that the suit property stood benami in the name of plaintiffs' mother and that it belonged in fact to defendant 2 and his sons defendants 3 to 6 at the time of the mortgage to defendant 1.

[13] In the result, therefore, the plaintiffs' suit must fail and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Criminal Misc. Cases Nos. 69, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82 and 83 of 1950, D/- 17-8-1950.

(a) Public Safety—Preventive Detention Act (1950) —After expiry of detention under Orissa Act, detenu can be detained under Central Act on same grounds.

Once a man is detained under a provincial preventive detention measure on the basis of his prejudicial activities he can, on the expiry of the term, again be detained under the Central Act on the self-same grounds, particularly when there has happened nothing to show that his approach, from the standpoint of his political creed, to the political, social and economical problems of the society has undergone any change. [Para 3]

(b) Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (1950) —Grounds under, for detention have no wide divergence from those under Orissa Act which was in force —Satisfaction of detaining authority under Orissa Act on previous occasion can be relied on for satisfaction of detaining authority under Central Act—It is not for Court to decide what will be particular period of detention. [Para 4]

(c) Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (1950) —Vagueness of grounds—Tests of vagueness.

Whenever the grounds are found vague, the detenu is entitled to an order of release from the Court. They can be held to be vague if the minimum of information that will entitle the detenu to present a case in his expected representation is not available on the face of it. Besides, the vagueness consists in that the reasons of apprehension of the detaining authority are too remote being mere possibility upon possibility or contingency upon contingency. Merely saying that detenu is a dangerous character and his creed is communism, is not sufficient. [Paras 5, 6]

It is not for the Court to consider the falsity or otherwise of the allegations. It is the function of the Advisory Board. [Para 7]

V. Pasayat — for Petitioners; Advocate-General— for Opposite Party.

Ray C. J.—These cases arise out of petitions made by the petitioners named above for issue of writs of Habeas Corpus as against their detention under the Preventive Detention Act (IV [4] of 1950). Mr. V. Pasayat, Advocate, appears for all the petitioners amicus curiae. The arguments advanced by him are common to all the cases and we, therefore, propose to pass one judgment covering all the petitions.

[2] The arguments advanced are : (i) That the petitioners other than those of Cr. Misc. Cases Nos. 69, 79 and 83 are old detenus, and the respective orders of detention passed against them are based on the same grounds as on which they had been detained prior to the Preventive Detention Act enacted after the Constitution. This, he urges, is sufficient indication that the detaining authority had not applied his mind to the facts and circumstances appearing against the petitioners. In the course of argument, he has pointed out that in some cases even the grammatical inaccuracies in the construction of some of the sentences have reappeared. His contention, therefore, is that there was no exercise of that mental process which is necessary in order that the detaining authority be satisfied that, in order to prevent the petitioners from acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order, their detention was necessary. This deficiency deprives the order of the irreducible minimum of rationality and reasonableness under the Constitution; (ii) The second ground urged is that the satisfaction of the detaining authority on the previous occasion cannot be relied on for the satisfaction of the detaining authority for fresh detention after the passing of the Preventive Detention Act. In this connexion, a passage from an unreported decision of his Lordship the Chief Justice of Bombay High Court is relied on:

"The satisfaction which the law required was the satisfaction of the detaining authority when the order was made and it was not open to the authority to fall back upon the satisfaction which was valid in 1948. Therefore, on this ground also the petitioners were entitled to succeed."

(iii) Lastly, it was argued that the grounds, as supplied, are vague and cannot be held to be sufficient for the satisfaction of the detaining authority.

[3] Contention No. (i) : It is difficult to say that because the self-same grounds formed the basis of the detaining authority's satisfaction on a subsequent occasion, it would necessarily follow that the mind of the authority concerned did not grapple with particular facts and circumstances of each individual's case. It is not that in one or two cases, new grounds have not been added. It cannot be ruled, as an absolute proposition of law, that once a man is detained under the preventive detention measure on the basis of his prejudicial activities, he cannot, on the expiry of the term, again be detained on the self-same grounds, particularly when there has happened nothing to show that his approach, from the standpoint of his political creed, to the political, social and economical problems of the society has undergone any change. It is not far too wrong to say that a man is to be judged by his association with politically dangerous individuals, or his advocacy of a cause, which, if pursued, involves manifestation of violence, sabotage, chaos and confusion in the present day social, political and economical set up of things, and is, otherwise, subversive of the established Government. His Lordship Chagla C. J. is reported to have said, in his judgment., (assuming that the quotation given in the newspaper "Cross Roads, Vol. II, No. 14, dated 4-8-1950" under the column "Difference between Old and New" at p. 8 is correct etc.), while examining the question as to how long past acts would determine the rationality of a fresh order of detention, that "he would refuse to lay aown any specific period." We are not inclined to accept unconditionally that the past acts of a man are not safe criteria of his propensities and likely future activities; on the other hand, if he belongs to a particular group of political agitators whose ideals to subvert the present established Government by producing confusion and chaos in the society for the purpose of unbalancing the same and by various other activities of revolutionary character are well known, it would not be unreasonable for the administrative authorities to consider the detention of such persons as necessary to prevent them from acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of the public order. Besides potential risks from a person's activities, granting that he has the definite frame of mind prone to the purpose, have to be determined by the surrounding circumstances including the political climate, both in the national and international spheres. If the members of a particular group of agitators are known to be, as a matter of habit, exploiting the situation, prevailing in the Country, and if their political aims, as judged from their past acts, are not offset by any change in their creed, and if there be no reasonable ground to believe that the particular member concerned's views have undergone fundamental change, it cannot be said that the circumstances do not constitute reasonable grounds for satisfaction of the detaining authorities. Besides, we, in Court, are labouring under the disadvantages of not being able to investigate the authenticity of the allegations on which the orders of detention are based. As an abstract proposition of law, we are not ready to say that past acts should not be taken into consideration. I would here invite attention to an observation by Roxburgh and Lahiri JJ. of the Calcutta High Court in an unreported case to the effect that

"past activity at any rate of reasonably recent date alone might in some circumstances be considered by Government as alone justifying detention."

Besides these detention orders are not punitive but preventive, so that if on the self-same grounds they are detained from time to time, it does not amount to saying that they are punished twice or several times for the commission of a solitary and specific offence. Reasonableness of the ground involving exercise of executive discretion based on ratiocination rather than arbitrariness is always relatable to social and political atmosphere of a country of which the Executive Government is the best Judge. Grounds which would be insufficient for such satisfaction in one state of things would be overwhelmingly sufficient in another state. So long and so far as the conditions justifying necessity for prevention exists, detention order made within the reasonable limits laid down by the Legislature would be quite justifiable. It would be beyond our power of interference even if it does not fit within judicial strait jacket. The Legislature has entrusted it with the Executive Head of the State on account of the vantage ground that they occupy from which they can strike a happy balance between personal liberty and social control.

[4] The second ground is based upon the short summary of his Lordship Chagla C. J.'s decision in the Bombay case, referred to. Without questioning the correctness of that decision, we are inclined to hold that it has no application to the facts of the present case. In that case, as it has been pointed out by his Lordship, there was a wide divergence of grounds between the Public Security Measures Act, the law of the land for preventive detention in Bombay, prior to the enactment of the Preventive Detention Act, and the latter Act. The divergence, as pointed out by him, seems to be fundamental. Such divergence however, does not exist between the Preventive Detention Act (IV [4] of 1950) and the Orissa Act, that was formerly in force. The relevant sections in both the Acts are almost identical. His Lordship is reported to have said :

"According to the old Act it was sufficient, if a person had acted in the past or was acting in the present or was likely to act in future in prejudicial manner, to enable the detaining authority to pass an order. In the detention Act, however, the proper authority has to be satisfied that it was necessary to detain a person with a view to prevent him from acting in a prejudicial manner."

As I have already pointed out, there being no such divergence between Orissa Act and the present Preventive Detention Act, the decision has no relevance. There is another thing to which I must draw attention in this connexion, namely, that it is either assumed or acknowledged to be correct that for certain period the past acts of a citizen will be sufficient guide for the authorities to control his movements so as to prevent him from acting in a manner prejudicial to the public safety. If that be so, what will be the particular period is not for a Court of Justice to define nor any hard and fast rule can be laid down but it is for the detaining authorities to decide, particularly they being in the more advantageous position of having all the materials before them, a large part of which is not available to the Court.

[5] Lastly, it has been argued that the grounds are vague. We know it is agreed unanimously by all the High Courts in India that whenever the grounds are found vague, the detenu is entitled to an order of release from the Court. What vagueness is in this relation has seldom been defined. In order to determine that they are vague, we have to keep in view the purpose for which the grounds are supplied. They are supplied in order to enable the detenu to make a representation to the detaining authority refuting the correctness of the involved facts and inferences founding the grounds. They can be held to be vague if the minimum of information that will entitle the detenu to present a case in his expected representation is not available on the face of it. Besides as I would hold that the vagueness consists in that the reasons of apprehension of the detaining authority are too remote being mere possibility upon possibility or contingency upon contingency. In the American Courts, in administering the law of preventive detention, they always set before them as guide a rule known as 'clear and immediate danger rule" which, I think, throws some light on what vagueness should mean in such cases. If the acts of the detenu or his mental frame or his political association or creed are of uncertain implications and there is no prospect of his taking to dangerous or violent activities in response to them, or, in other words, if under the cause-and-effect rule circumstances reveal no proximity between the apprehension and the possibility of his future activities and the reasons given for the preventive orders, they can be considered vague. As I have said, if the grounds are vague, certainly the detenus are entitled to an order of release In this connexion we have carefully examined the grounds in each individual case. Except in the case of petitioner Bharat Jena in Cr. Misc. No. 80/50, we find that the grounds are definite, clear, precise and stand the test of clear and immediate danger rule. It should have been better if the detaining authorities should have said, in the grounds, that they consider it likely that the detenu should indulge in subversive or violent activities in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. But the implications are quite clear that they have satisfied themselves that the detenus concerned must be kept in custody in order to prevent them from acting in the aforesaid manner.

[6] So far as Bharat Jena is concerned, the grounds supplied to him, we consider, are too vague to support an order of detention. He is said to be of a desperate character and his political creed is said to be communism. None of these ideas would carry us to any sense of certainty in relation to his proneness to act in a prejudicial manner endangering the social order. Besides, these are not sufficient to enable him to make a representation to the authorities concerned.

[7] In some cases, Mr. Pasayat wanted to convince us that some allegations with regard to the activities of some of the detenus are false. He could not, however, supply us the necessary materials for it except his own assertion which, assuming they are true, we could hardly act upon. Besides, it would be the function of the Advisory Board to test the correctness of these allegations and the Board will be in a more advantageous position than ourselves to consider representations of the detenus after examining all the material records including Police and other reports of a confidential character. As the detenus have been in custody for nearly 6 months and their cases are going to be reviewed by the Advisory Board, we should not concern ourselves with the requisite enquiry.

[8] In these circumstances, we dismiss the petitions of all the aforesaid petitioners except that of Bharat Jena in Cr. Misc. No. 80/50, who, we direct, shall at once be set at liberty.

Appanna — Accused — Petitioner v. The State—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 7 of 1950, D/- 28-7-1950.

Bihar and Orissa Excise Act (II [2] of 1915), Ss 47, 57 and 87—Sale of liquor at place not specified in license.

Where a license holder for sale of liquor sells Government licensed liquor at a place other than one specified in his license, he is guilty under S. 47 (a). Hence, S. 57 is not applicable and non-compliance with the provisions of S. 87 (b) will not vitiate the prosecution. [Para 9]

M. S. Rao — for Petitioner; Advocate-General — for Opposite Party.

Order. — The petitioner (Ch. Appanna) has been convicted under S. 47(a), Bihar and Orissa Excise Act, for having in possession and causing the sale of Government licensed liquor in a tati enclosure near the Jyoti Cinema in Berhampur town, and has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 200, and in default to undergo simple imprisonment for two months.

[2] Appanna is admittedly a license-holder for sale of the liquor in Shop No. 2 in Berhampur town.

[3] The contentions that are raised in this case are (1) that even if he sold, as alleged by the prosecution, at the tati enclosure, he cannot be held to have committed an offence inasmuch as there was nothing in license that it was confined to be availed of in any particular part of the town; (ii) that in view of S. 87 of the Act, initiation of the prosecution was bad in law inasmuch as cognisance had been taken on the complaint of the Excise Sub-Inspector who had not been authorised by the Collector within the meaning of the section; and (iii) in relation to sufficiency of the evidence adduced and its proper appreciation and due appraisement by the Courts below.

[4] The third contention should not be entertained as against the concurrent findings of the Courts below in revision.

[5] With regard to the first contention, the prosecution should have done well to have produced the license showing that the particular premises, referred to in S. 30 of the Act, were delimited in the license. Through Mr. Advocate-General, who was appearing for the State, I directed for the production of the license or its copy from the Berhampur Excise Department. Except a counterfoil which lacks in all details in its particulars, nothing more could be produced. But Mr. Advocate-General has handed over to me a license granted to a retail-seller of the liquor in Cuttack. It appears from that that the specification of the locality in which the retail sale is to take place has been duly incorporated and the same has been indicated by boundaries of the place. That specification of the place while granting a license is a matter of condition and essentiality will appear from the statutory rules (Vol. IV, Part I, p. 1 of the Orissa Excise Manual). The part is headed "General condition applicable to vend licenses under the Excise Law". Paragraph 1 reads:

"A licensee may sell an intoxicant only at the place or on the premises specified in that behalf on the license, and sale by him or on his behalf in any other place is absolutely prohibited."

[6] I would, therefore, hold, agreeing with the Courts below, that the place in which the petitioner was found selling the Government licensed liquor was not the place specified in his license and by doing so he did something which was absolutely prohibited. As to initiation, S. 87 says:

"No Magistrate shall take cognizance of an offence referred to—

(a) in S. 47 ..... except on the complaint or report of an Excise Officer or an Officer empowered in this behalf by the Local Government: or

(b) in S. 57 ..... except on the complaint or report of the Collector or an Excise Officer authorised by the Collector in this behalf."

[7] Mr. Rao, the learned counsel for the petitioner, forcibly contends that the offence charged is one within S. 57 of the Act and as such the complaint in the case must fulfil the requirements of S. 87 (b). According to his contention, the offence is one under S. 57(b), which, omitting the immaterial portion thereof, would read:

"If any holder of a licence, in any case not provided for in S. 47, wilfully contravenes any rule made under S. 89 or S. 90, or

(c) Willfully does any act, in breach of any of the conditions of the licence, for which a penalty is not prescribed elsewhere in this Act, &c."

[8] We have to read S. 47 (a) under which the petitioner has been prosecuted side by side. It reads:

"If any person, in contravention of ..... licence ..... granted under this Act,

(a) ..... sells any intoxicant, he shall be liable to imprisonment .... or to fine ...."

[9] Cases covered by S. 47 are excluded from the purview of S. 57. The crucial position, therefore, is whether the offence in the present case is one under S. 47 or S. 57. Section 57 either (b) or (c) refers to such violation of rules or conditions of license as are not elsewhere provided for. This amounts to say that if the offence charged falls under S. 47 (a), as quoted above, non-compliance of the provisions of S. 87, as contended for by the learned counsel for the petitioner, will not vitiate the prosecution. In my judgment, this case comes very clearly and specifically under S. 47 (a) and as such does not come under the purview of S. 57. There is, therefore, no illegality in launching the prosecution. All the contentions advanced by the learned counsel having thus failed the revision fails and is dismissed.

Hari Sahu — Petitioner v. Pasori Sahu — Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 26 of 1950, D/- 21-7-1950.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 522 (3)—Order under, long after original conviction or appellate order.

There is nothing in S. 522 (3), to limit the jurisdiction of an appellate or revisional Court to the passing of an order within one month either of the original conviction or of the appellate order. It is left to the discretion of appellate and revisional Courts not to exercise their powers under this section in cases where there has been undue or excessive delay in moving the Court for its use: A. I. R. (34) 1947 Cal. 390. Dissent. [Paras 4, 5]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 522, N. 10, Pts. 7 and 8.

S. N. Dasgupta — for Petitioner; B. K. Pal — for Opposite Party.

Order.—This petition is for revising an order under S. 522 (3), Criminal P. C., passed by the Sessions Judge of Cuttack under the following circumstances.

[2] The petitioner was tried for the offence of house trespass under S. 448, Penal Code and convicted by a Magistrate on 27-6-1949. His appeal to the Sessions Judge was disposed of on 10-8-1949 and though the conviction was maintained the sentence of fine was reduced. A criminal revision to this Hon'ble High Court was dismissed on 16-9-1949. Till then the opposite party did not apply to any of the three Courts for action under S. 522, Criminal P. C. On 24-11-1949 for the first time the opposite party applied to the appellate Court (the Sessions Judge, Cuttack) praying for an order for restoration of possession of a portion of the house which the petitioner was said to be occupying forcibly. The Court passed an ex parte order allowing the petition. Thereupon, the petitioner filed an application for reconsideration of the ex parte order and on 17-1-1950 the Sessions Judge refused to reconsider the same. This revision petition has been filed against that order dated 17-1-1950.

[3] The sole question of law for consideration is whether the Court of appeal can pass an order under S. 522 (3), Criminal P. C., long after the disposal of the appeal. In the present case the appeal was disposed of on 10-8-1949 and the order under S. 522 (3), Criminal P. C. was passed more than three months later on 24-11-1949. Mr. Dasgupta's contention is that the Court of appeal became functus officio after disposing of the appeal on 10-8-1949 and that it had no jurisdiction to pass an order under S. 522 (3), Criminal P. C. on any subsequent date. He further argued that even if it be held that the Court had any such jurisdiction that jurisdiction was limited to the period of 30 days from the date of the disposal of the appeal and that it cannot be extended beyond that period. In support of this argument he has relied on a single Judge's decision of the Calcutta High Court reported in Abdul Mannan v. Taiyab Ali, A. I. R. (34) 1947 Cal. 390 : (48 Cr. L. J. 908).

[4] Mr. Pal has, however, relied on a series of decisions of almost all other High Courts taking a contrary view. In Fida Hussain v. Sarfaraz Hussain, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Pat. 617 : (34 Cr. L. J. 940), a single Judge relying on an earlier decision of the Patna High Court held that there was nothing in S. 522 (3), Criminal P. C., to limit the jurisdiction of an appellate Court to the passing of an order within one month either of the original conviction or of the appellate order. It was left to the discretion of appellate and revisional Courts not to exercise their powers under this section in cases where there has been undue or excessive delay in moving the Court for its use. The same view has been taken in a later Division Bench decision of the Patna High Court reported in Gudri Mahton v. Jangi Mahton, A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 154 : (35 Cr. L. J. 1158). The Nagpur High Court has taken the same view in Namdeo Atmaram v. Emperor, A. I. R. (25) 1938 Nag. 316 : (39 Cr. L. J. 342) which has been followed in Ramnath Sheonarayan v. Sonaji Krishanji, A. I. R. (35) 1948 Nag. 250 : (49 Cr. L. J. 383). Similarly the Lahore High Court in Roda v. Autar Singh, A. I. R. (25) 1938 Lah. 839: (40 Cr. L. J. 980) and the Allahabad High Court in Nihal Singh v. Emperor, A. I. R. (26) 1939 ALL. 662 : (40 Cr. L. J. 958) have taken the same view. My attention has not been drawn to a decision of any High Court which has taken the view of the single Judge of the Calcutta High Court in Abdul Mannan v. Taiyab Ali, A. I. R. (34) 1947 Cal. 390 : (48 Cr. L. J. 908).

[5] Apart from the overwhelming authority against the Calcutta view, the provisions of sub-s. (3) of S. 522, Criminal P. C. do not appear to warrant such a limitation on the powers of the appellate Court. Unlike sub-ss. (1), (3) of S. 522, Criminal P. C. does not expressly say that the power of the Court of appeal or revision, as the case may be, to pass an order under that section must be exercised either at the time of passing the order or within one month from the date of such order. When the section is entirely silent as regards the law of limitation which should control the superior Court's action under sub-s. (3), there seems to be no justification for importing the same rule of limitation prescribed for the trial Court in sub-s. (1) of that section. I would, with respect agree with Rowland J.'s observation in Fida Hussain v. Sarfaraz Hussain, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Pat. 617: (34 Cr. L. J. 940) to the effect that in the absence of any such express provision, the matter should be entirely left to the discretion of the Court of appeal or revision as the case may be and though such a Court may not care to interfere and pass an order under sub-s. (3) of S. 522, Criminal P. C. where there has been undue delay there is nothing in the section prohibiting it from exercising such power in exceptional cases.

[6] I am therefore of the opinion that the lower Court has committed no illegality in passing an order under S. 522 (3), Criminal P. C. more than three months after the date of the appellate order.

[7] The revision petition is dismissed.

Pusarala Narasinhaswamy — Petitioner v. Indian Dominion—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 341 of 1949, D/- 18-8-1950.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 439 and 412—Conviction on plea of guilty—Power of High Court to interfere with conviction in revision.

Reading Ss. 435 and 439 together, it is evident that the High Court can interfere in all cases of incorrectness, illegality or impropriety of any finding, sentence or order, or the irregularity of any proceedings of the inferior Courts by taking such measures or passing such orders as could be passed by an appellate Court. The provision in S. 439 (1) to the effect that a Court of revision should exercise the powers of a Court of appeal only means that it should exercise the power which a Court of appeal in an appeal legally entertainable by it can do. [Para 6]

Therefore, even though no appeal would lie to an appellate Court under S. 412 against an order of conviction based on the accused's own plea of guilty except as to the extent or legality of the sentence, the High Court, in its revisional jurisdiction, may interfere with the conviction as distinguished from merely the sentence if it satisfies itself that the finding is either incorrect or illegal or improper. [Para 7]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 412, N. 1; S. 439 N. 25.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 439 (6) — Plea of guilty by accused—Conviction—In revision conviction if can be challenged.

Where an accused is convicted on his own plea of guilty in the trial Court, he shall not be allowed in revision before the High Court to withdraw from his plea of guilty in so far as it means his confession of the facts charged; but at the same time he shall be allowed to challenge the legality of the conviction apart from the sentence if any error in the proceeding has vitiated the trial and affected the legality of the conviction. [Para 9]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 439 N. 31 Pt. 16.

(c) Interpretation of Statutes — Erratum.

(Obiter) Ordinarily, the erratum should take effect to rectify the error with effect from the date of the original publication. [Para 4]

H. Mahapatra—for Petitioner.

Advocate-General—for Opposite Party.

Ray C. J.—The petitioner has been convicted by the Subdivisional Magistrate of Nawrangpur under S. 7 read with S. 8 of Act XXIV [24] of 1946, and has been sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two months and to pay a fine of Rs. 50 in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a further period of two months.

[2] On 16.6.1948, he was attempting to transport by road in lorry (No. ORK 139) 12 maunds and 17 lbs. of rice in small gunny bags which were kept concealed amongst bags containing tamarind from the right side of the Indravati river to the left in contravention of Government Notification No. 39547 ST dated 5 11.47. The petitioner pleaded guilty to the charge before the trial Court who convicted him, as aforesaid. The prosecution had examined two witnesses.

[3] The legality of the conviction is challenged. This gives rise to a question whether the plea of guilty in the trial Court debars him from challenging the conviction on merits. The learned appellate Court overruled petitioner's contention that he could not, in law, have been convicted of the offence charged. In this connexion he observed :

"It appears from the record of statement of the accused prepared by the learned lower Court that the details of the alleged contravention were put to in the form of a single question to the accused and his plea was recorded 'the accused has pleaded guilty to the charge'."

He further said :

"In the present case, the accused made the plea of guilty after the details of the alleged contravention had been put to him. Hence, the plea of the accused-appellant has been properly recorded and the appellant had appreciated the nature of the charge made against him and then made his plea before the lower Court. Therefore, no appeal will lie except for sentence."

[4] In two subsequent paragraphs, the appellate Court, however, did consider the merits of the contentions advanced before him which were slightly different from what have been contended here. One of the two contentions was that the Government Notification No. 39547 dated 5-11-1947 was faulty and carried no meaning. The second contention was that the prosecution had failed to prove that the Government of India had delegated their power to the Provincial Government as the fact of delegation had not been published in any Official Gazette. The notification, as first published, omitted the word 'left' before the word 'side', that is, the relevant phrase read "from the right side to the side." By an erratum published on 20-11-1947, the omission was supplied and accordingly the necessary correction was published. It is contended here that the erratum should not validate the notification. This contention can be overruled as having no substance. The alleged offence, in the particular case, was committed on 16-6-1948, long after the erratum was published. Ordinarily, the erratum should take effect to rectify the error with effect from the date of the original publication. But had the alleged offence been committed after the first publication of the Gazette notification and before the publication of the erratum, a different consideration might have been applied. But in this particular case, the notification had stood corrected long before the commission of the offence. The contention, fails. I am happy to note that the learned lower appellate Court having taken the same view overruled the contention.

[5] The contention involving absence of delegation by the Government of India has been reiterated in this Court, but in a different form and from a different aspect. What was contended there was that the fact of delegation had not been officially published and it was rightly thrown out by the Court. What is contended here is that the Government of Orissa secured the delegation in the form of an approval to their proposal to the effect that they should exercise the power of banning transport from the north side of the river Indravati to the south. Later, however, they introduced a change prohibiting such transport from the right side of the river to the left. The river has a meandering course. In some places the right side would be to the east while the left to the west. The contention, therefore, is that when, as is in the present case, the place of origin of the transport is to the eastern side of the particular sector of the river concerned and the destination is to the western side thereof, no offence can be said to have been committed even though it offends the Government of Orissa Notification, it being in excess of the delegation obtained.

[6] Before considering the merits of the contention, I shall have to address myself to a contention, raised by the learned Advocate-General, which is in the form of a preliminary objection to its entertainment, that the accused having pleaded guilty in the Court below he is not entitled to challenge the legality of the conviction except as to the extent or the legality of the sentence. In this connexion, reliance has been placed upon Ss. 271 (2), 412 and 439, Criminal P. C. It is urged that the High Court's powers of revision are limited to the powers enumerated in sub-s. (1) of S. 439, namely, powers conferred on a Court of Appeal by Ss. 423, 426, 427 and 428 of the Code or on a Court by S. 338 etc. As according to S. 418 (412 ?) no appeal lies against a conviction based upon accused's own plea of guilty, the High Court's power is too limited accordingly. Free of any authority, I should rule out this contention as unsound. Section 439 is an enabling one. Chapter XXXII of the Code in which S. 439 occurs deals with the subjects of "Reference and Revision". Section 435 confers revisional jurisdiction of either wider or more limited character on Courts of various grades of which the High Court is one. The Courts below the High Court are given revisional jurisdiction for the purpose of ultimately making a reference to the High Court. With regard to High Court, the material portion of the section reads :

"The High Court . . . . may call for and examine record of any proceeding, before any Criminal Court situate within the local limits of its jurisdiction for the purpose of satisfying itself . . . . . as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed, and as to the regularity of any proceedings of such inferior Court and may, when calling for such record, direct that execution of any sentence be suspended and, if the accused is in confinement, he be released on bail or on his own bond pending the examination of the record."

(The rest of the section is not material.) Section 436 deals with direction of further inquiry into a dismissed complaint by High Court and other Courts mentioned therein. Section 437 is not relevant for the present purpose, being confined to the powers of the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate or an Additional Sessions Judge to make a report for the orders of the High Court the result of such examination, on examining the record of any proceeding under S. 435 of the Code or otherwise. Next comes S. 439 which opens with the words

"in the case of any proceeding the record of which has been called for by itself or which has been reported for orders or which otherwise comes to its knowledge, the High Court may, in its discretion, exercise any of the powers &c."

Reading Ss. 435 and 439 together, it would be evident that the High Court can interfere in all cases of incorrectness, illegality or impropriety of any finding, sentence or order or the irregularity of any proceedings of the inferior Courts by taking such measures or passing such orders as could be passed by an appellate Court under Ss. 423, 426, 427 and 428 or by any other Court by S. 338. The ambits of the powers are to be delimited by reference to S. 435, that is, power of removing any deficiency in the finding, sentence or order, or proceedings, call it incorrectness, illegality or impropriety or the like. After so satisfying itself, the Court, in order to give proper relief to the parties themselves and to rectify the errors or illegality &c., as the case may be, shall make such orders as a Court of Appeal could make in appropriate cases. In saying that a Court of Revision should exercise the powers of a Court of Appeal what is meant to be said is that it should exercise the power which a Court of Appeal in an appeal legally entertainable by him could do.

[7] The result of my examination of the provisions, in short, is that even though no appeal would lie to an Appellate Court under S. 412 of the Code against an order of conviction based on the accused's own plea of guilty except as to the extent or legality of the sentence, the High Court, in its revisional jurisdiction, may interfere with the conviction as distinguished from merely the sentence if it satisfies itself that the finding is either incorrect or illegal or improper. This, however, shall not be understood to mean that the High Court should, without any good reason or in an arbitrary manner, disregard the plea of guilty. It must be satisfied that the plea of guilty has either been misunderstood or misconceived under the particular features present in the case.

[8] I shall now deal with certain authorities cited at the Bar. The learned counsel for the petitioner has relied on a decision of Rowland, J. of the Patna High Court in the case of Krishna Chandra Sinha v. Emperor A. I. R. (30) 1943

Pat. 313: (44 Cr. L. J. 801). The learned Judge deals with the question in the following words:

"Hence it is suggested that where in a particular case the powers of an appellate Court are restricted by S. 412 the powers of the High Court in revision are similarly restricted. The argument, it seems to me, loses right of the provisions of Ss. 413 and 414 and the consequences of those provisions. In those two sections it is enacted that in certain cases there shall be no appeal but such provisions have never been considered to forbid the High Court in revision from exercising just as wide powers as if there had been an appeal and the High Court had been the appellate Court. In my opinion, therefore, the powers of this Court in dealing with the present application are as ample as if an appeal on the merits had been entertainable by the Sessions Judge and had been dismissed."

In the case of Emperor v. Nana Sahu, A. I. R. (30) 1943 Bom. 209: (44 Cr. L. J. 668), Divatia J. held:

"As the learned Sessions Judge points out, it is open to them in revision to challenge the conviction as illegal even though they pleaded guilty to the charge. As held by our Court in Chunilal v. Emperor, 23 Bom. L. R. 1023 : (A. I R. (14) 1927 Bom. 67 : 27 Cr. L J. 1148), an accused person, who pleads guilty before a Magistrate and is convicted, can contend under S. 412, Criminal P. C., in his application for revision, that his conviction is illegal."

In the case of Supdt. and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Jnanendranath, 33 C. W. N. 599 : (A. I. R. (16) 1929 Cal. 747 : 30 Cr. L. J. 1038), Mukherji J. held that even when a person had been convicted on his own plea of guilty, he had the right under S. 439 (6) to show cause against his conviction, withdrawing in effect the said plea. Graham J. taking a contrary view held that S. 439 (6) had no application where there was a plea of guilty except when the convicted person could show that there was some mistake in recording the plea of that he did not in fact take such plea. On account of this difference of opinion, the case was referred to a third Judge, Buckland J. His Lordship held that in the case of a person who had been convicted on a plea of guilty, the conviction against which he might show cause under S. 439 (6), Criminal P. C. would mean the judgment of the Court sentencing him. Against such conviction, cause might be shown by attacking the propriety or legality of the sentence but not by withdrawing the plea of guilty or going behind such plea as a confession of the facts charged. His Lordship had, however, said that against a conviction on the accused's own plea of guilty, he might show cause by contending that there was some defect in the proceedings or the fact to which he confessed by his plea of guilty did not amount to an offence or offence of which he had been convicted. His Lordship, in this connection, relied on the case of Reg. v. Brown, (1890) 24 Q. B. D. 357: (59 L. J. M. C. 47). His Lordship explained his decision to be confined to the case that such an accused could not go behind his plea of guilty as a confession of the facts charged. Dealing with Mukherji J's view, based mainly on the theory that an accused even after passing of sentence on conviction was entitled to withdraw his plea of guilty, his Lordship said that, the withdrawal of a plea of guilty was a totally different matter; actually there was no provision in the Criminal P. C. which allowed that to be done, though his Lordship had no doubt that the Court would permit it in a proper case. The English authorities moreover agreed that the leave of the Court was required and that such leave could not be given after sentence, that is judgment, had been pronounced. (Reg. v. Clouter, (1859) 8 Cox. 237, Reg. v. Sell (1840) 9 C. & P. 346: (173 E. R. 863); and Rex. v. Plummer, (1902) 2 K. B. 339: (71 L. J. K. B. 805).)

[9] It is clear from examination of the authorities that ordinarily the accused shall not be allowed to withdraw from his plea of guilty in so far as it means his confession of the facts charged but at the same time he shall be allowed to challenge the legality of the conviction apart from the sentence if any such error in the proceeding has vitiated the trial and affected the legality of the conviction. I reserve my opinion, however, as to the view given by Rowland J. of the Patna High Court that the disqualification of the order of conviction's appealability attaches strictly to a case where the trial Court convicts the accused on his own plea alone without any aid or consideration of any evidence adduced before him.

[10] In this view of the matter, coming to the present case, the accused's plea of guilty is based upon his confession of the facts charged, namely, that he was attempting to transport contraband foodgrains from the right side of the local sector of Indravati river to its left. If such transport does not amount to an offence in law for lack of delegation to the Provincial Government by the the Central Government of the power of banning transport, his conviction cannot be held determined by his plea. We have, therefore, to consider the contention of the learned counsel on its merits. I have set forth his contention above. Its merit hinges upon whether delegation with reference to transport from north side to to the south of the river stands good in relation to the ban of transport from the right side to the left.

[11] The course of a river is, in its broad outline, the direction of the line between its source and its mouth. For the purpose of general direction, the line joining the two points would be the indicator. If the line runs from east to west, the two sides of the river should be north and south. The direction north is to the right of man standing with his rear to the east and front to the west. Therefore, in the case of such a river, with its flow from east to west, its right side is generally the north side and left side is the south side. In the case of a river, meandering in its course, the midstream-line of a particular sector considered independently may be such that its right side lies to its east and the left to its west; but taking the river as a whole, it is on the north side of the river. In the circumstances, in the facts of this particular case, there has been no substantial variation between the power delegated and the power exercised. Alteration, if any, is merely a matter of form rather than of substance. This alteration in the phraseology of the notification has been adopted for the sake of exactitude and to avoid evasion of the ban. I would, therefore, hold that the power of the Provincial Government does not suffer from lack of delegation by the Centre.

[12] In the result, I uphold the order of conviction. With regard to the sentence, however, it errs on the side of severity and calls for reduction. I would, therefore, remit altogether the sentence of imprisonment and alter the sentence to one of fine only. Subject to this modification in the sentence, the revision is dismissed.

L. K. Das Gupta (in No. 218 of 1945) and R. N. Sinha (in No. 33 of 1945) — for Appellants; L. K. Das Gupta (In No. 33 of 1945) — for Respondents.

Ray C. J.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal in a suit for declaration that the suit lands are their ancestral joint family properties and that defendant 1 has not acquired any title thereto by virtue of a sale-deed dated 27-3-1940, executed by defendant 2. The plaintiffs and the husband of defendant 2 were members of a joint Hindu Mitakshara family at the time of the latter's death. On his death, defendant 2 succeeded to her husband's interest in the family properties under the Hindu Women's Right to Property Act. She transferred her this interest in favour of defendant 1 by the aforesaid sale-deed. The suit was resisted on the ground that defendant 2 had the right to alienate and the said alienation is binding on the plaintiffs. There was some dispute as between the parties as to whether the claimed properties were ancestral joint family properties. That controversy, however, has been set at rest and has not been re-agitated here. In this appeal, we shall proceed on the assumption that Judhisthir was joint in mess and estate at the time of his death.

[2] The learned Munsif dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the findings that the properties, in dispute, were joint family properties and defendant 2 had no right. The learned lower appellate Court reversed the decree of the trial Court holding that defendant 2 had the right of alienation under S. 3 (3), Hindu Women's Right to Property Act, as extended to agricultural lands in Orissa. Hence the second appeal by the plaintiffs.

[3] Mr. L. K. Das Gupta, the learned counsel for the appellants, contends most strenuously that the interest that devolves upon a widow under the Hindu Women's Right to Property Act is not alienable by her till she exercises the right of partition as a male coparcener. The hard core of his reasoning is that the interest that devolves upon her is defined in sub-s. (2) of S. 3 of the Act as 'the same interest as he (the husband) himself had.' His submission is that as the husband before reducing his undivided interest in the coparcernary property to a specified one by partition, had no right of alienation, the same right cannot be conceded to a widow. He tries to substantiate his proposition dexteriously by picking up a few judicial pronouncements in which several characteristics attributable to coparcener's interest in the coparcenary have been attributed to the widow's interest that devolves upon her under the Act and argues that the absence of right of alienation is a necessary corollary. This method of reasoning, however ingenious, does not serve well in law which is not logical. I shall deal with these cases gradually and will show that the views expressed therein do not run counter to the conception of right of alienation as inherent in the estate that devolves upon a deceased male coparcener's widow. With regard to the scheme of the Act and the language employed to carry that out, his contention, in the main, is that sub-s. (2) of the section contains the key provision as to the extent and nature of the widow's interest and, that, in that context, sub-s. (3) is a limited provision, that is to say, it lays down certain limitations that detract from the right that is connoted by the defining words 'the same interest as he himself had.' When encountered with the question why then should the interest be described as the limited interest known as a Hindu Women's estate' in sub-s. (3), he replies that its object was to deny to her the status of being a fresh stock of descent which she would otherwise have been had not that limitation been imposed by the aforesaid words. But this answer, to my mind, is not adequate to resolve the difficulty. The legislature shall not be presumed to have been redundant in expression of its will. Right of claiming partition would obviously be included within the words 'the same interest as he himself had' occurring in sub-s. (2). It would then be redundant to provide for the right of partition in the proviso to sub-s. (3). In view of the language of the section, it would be irreconcilable and inconsistent to hold that the scope and object of sub s. (3) is confined to curtailment of the interest defined in sub-s. (2) by imposing certain limitations thereon. It is fundamentally correct to say that in the absence of compelling circumstances, full effect shall be given to the plain ordinary grammatical meaning of the words used in a statute. The relative importance of sub-ss. (2) and (3) shall have to be ascertained by interpreting the words used therein in their plain grammatical meaning. It is significant that the sub-s. (2) is subjected to the provisions of sub-s. (3) in so far as it provides for what interest the widow shall get. The word 'subject,' in Oxford Dictionary, means 'in a state of subjection or dependence; under the control, rule or influence of something; subordinate.' The author of the lexicon illustrates the significance of the word by certain citations, such as,

"treaty is subject to ratification that this is not valid unless ratified. The arrangement is subject to your approval, that this is not final until you approve."

The plain grammatical meaning of sub-s. (2), therefore, is that predominantly her interest is that defined in sub-s. (3). In construing the extent and nature of the interest, the provision of sub-s. (3) cannot be precluded from consideration. The words 'the same interest as he himself had' must, in giving a meaning to them, be either subordinated to or reconciled with what is conveyed by the words 'the limited interest known as a Hindu Women's estate in sub-s. (3). If that estate under the Hindu law gives her a larger estate, she shall get it. In order, therefore, to reconcile the meaning of the word 'interest' in sub-s. (2) with the conception underneath sub-s. (3), it should either refer to quantity as distinct from quality or to such quality as appertains to a male coparcener's interest but not repugnant to nor inconsistent with the interest of a Hindu woman's estate. On a detailed analysis, it will appear that there is no repugnancy between the two sub-sections. Both can be harmonised. The words 'limited interest of a Hindu woman's estate' have been advisedly used by the Legislature as the most appropriate conveyancer of connotation of the 'interest' conferred on the widow by the statute. The incidents of Hindu woman's estate are as follows: (i) it is not a life estate; (ii) it reverts to the heir of last full owners; (iii) it has limited power of disposal; (iv) it carries full power of enjoyment; (v) it is not a trust estate for the benefit of the reversioners; and (vi) it is subject to such liabilities as would be in the hands of prudent owner and as would prevail against her husband.

[4] The object of the Act is remedial and benevolent. The rule of survivorship that stands in the way of widow succeeding to her husband's estate in a joint family property is suspended for her benefit. This suspension is not intended to disrupt the coparcenary except in so far as it is necessary to give the widow an independent status which can be worked out so as to make her economically independent. As observed by Mayne, in his commentary on Hindu Law, in Ch. XVII 'Woman's Estate' Para. 635:

"The typical form of estate inherited by a woman from a male is the widow's estate. The same limitations apply to all estates derived by a female by descent from a male, or a female, whether she inherits as daughter, mother, grandmother, sister or as any other relation. In the phraseology of English law, her estate is neither a fee nor an estate for life, nor an estate tail. This is the view in all the schools except in Bombay."

[5] It would be shocking to interpret the Act in such a manner as would deny to a joint coparcener's widow an estate inferior even to that of a widow's estate. The fallacy of Mr. Das Gupta's argument will be clear if we visualise that in order to give her the same interest as her husband had, she should have an absolute interest rather than a limited estate enuring till her death. It would also follow from his argument that she exercises her right of partition and she becomes a full owner without any limitations on her right of alienation. But is that view consistent with her having the limited estate of a Hindu widow? All the limitations that would prevent her from dealing with the property as an absolute owner are attributable to her estate being defined as a limited interest of a Hindu Woman's Estate.

[6] In accordance with Hindu law, as administered in certain provinces, a coparcener has a right to alienate his undivided share in the joint family property, e. g., in Madras. His interest is liable to be seized by attachment by a creditor. It is a property which is reducible to possession either on partition or on mere declaration of an intention to separate. But this right of separation from the coparcenary by declaring one's intention cannot belong to the widow within the meaning of the Act. That is only available to a coparcener. A Hindu widow on whom the interest devolves, under the Act, of a coparcener, is undoubtedly not a coparcener. On the other hand, in order to give effect to Mr. Das Gupta's argument, she should also be clothed with the rights which her husband had, or could have called to his aid, had he chosen to do so and this will include a right to disrupt the coparcenary by a declaration of her intention, This would amount to reductio ad absurdum. The general effect of the Act is that the rule of survivorship is kept in abeyance. The widow succeeds to her husband's interest without being a coparcener. The interest that devolves upon her becomes defined and definable in her hands though continues to be a part of the joint family estate in the sense in which a male member of a joint family under the Dayabhag School or such a male member's widow has. Like any other property, it is alienable and can be alienated by her. There must be express words in the Statute to deny to her right of alienation which is fundamentally inherent in every right to or in property. In the statute, under consideration, the only words of limitations are to be found in the expression 'limited interest of a Hindu Woman's Estate' occurring in sub-s. (3). In short, interpreting the provisions of sub-s. (3), according to the plain grammatical meaning of the language in which it is enacted and after assigning such meaning to the terms of art (namely, Hindu Woman's Estate), such meaning as they carry under the law in which the terms are used, the interest that a widow gets in her husband's interest in a joint family estate is the same as she would get in her separate or self-acquired properties. If there is nothing in conflict as between the two sub-sections due to the plain grammatical meaning of the words 'the same interest' in sub-s. (2), it should be limited in its connotations to quantity rather than quality or nature and character of the interest for the sake of reconciling the two sub-sections so as to produce a coherent and harmonious working of the Act. As sub-s. (3) is clear and unambiguous, any ambiguity or indistinctness in the meaning of sub-s. (2) emerging from its language must be dissolved on account of the latter's subordination to the former and a harmonious construction should be put upon it so as to give effect to sub-s. (3). In this view, the widow has a limited power of disposal over the interest that devolves upon her. The objection as to alienation by a coparcener of his interest in the joint family estate is not applicable when that interest devolves upon or is acquired by one who is not a coparcener of the joint family. Take the instance of a coparcener's interest having been attached by his creditor during his life time. His subsequent death does not prevent the attaching creditor from getting the attached interest sold. It is because as soon as it is attached, it is prevented from lapsing into the joint family estate and stands out of fluctuation. It then becomes a specified interest. It so happens when it devolves upon the widow. After devolution, it is an interest which unlike a coparcener's interest can be predicated with certainty. In that event, as a property, it carries with it the incidents of transferability at the hands of its holder either limited or absolute.

[7] I shall now proceed to deal with some of the cases relied upon by the learned counsel for the appellants.

[8] Vinod Sagar v. Vishnubhai Shankar, A. I. R. (34) 1947 Lah. 388—This has been cited to establish that the widow and her interest that has devolved on her under the Act still continues under the management of the Karta of the joint family until she has exercised her right of partition and from this it is urged that she is under the disability of a coparcener which means absence of right of alienation in her. This argument is fallacious As I have already said, in a Dayabhag joint family, the interest of a member is defined and is not subject to the same limitation as to its alienability as that of a Mitakshara family; but as regards the management of the family property, the Karta has the same dominion and the same right of representation as that of a Mitakshara family.

[9] Jadaobai v. Puranamal, A. I. R. (31) 1944 Nag. 243 : (I. L. R. (1944) Nag. 832)—This case decides that the devolution of the interest on the widow under the Act is by way of succession and not survivorship. This favours the contention that the widow holds the property as a tenant-in-common and not as a joint tenant though after her death it again lapses into the joint estate. The learned Judges, who decided this case, referred to a decision of Horwill J. reported in Natarajan Chettiar v. Perumal Ammal, A. I. R. (30) 1943 Mad. 246 : (206 I. C. 356) in which Horwill J is reported to have said that the effect of S. 3 cls. (2) and (3) may be regarded as survival of the husband's persona in the wife, giving her the same rights as her husband had except that she can alienate property only under certain circumstances. The theory of survival of husband's persona was not accepted by the Hon'ble Judges of the Nagpur High Court. But the theory of her right of alienation was not repelled.

[10] Kalian Rai v. Kashi Nath, A. I. R. (30) 1943 ALL. 188 at p. 190 : (I. L. R. (1943) ALL. 307). Here her interest in the joint family estate is compared to that of a member of Dayabhag joint family. In this view, she shall have a right of alienation.

[11] M. C. Chinniah Chettiar v. Sivagami Achi, A. I. R. (32) 1945 Mad. 21 : (I. L. R. (1945) Mad. 402). This is a case in which it has been held that before partition is effected, the interest devolving upon the widow is liable to fluctuation so as to be reduced on an adoption. With great respect, I cannot go so far as that because it would be difficult to assume that her interest will be enhanced on the death of a coparcener as it would have been had her husband been alive.

[12] Siveshwar Pd. Narain Singh v. Haranain Mal, A. I. R. (32) 1945 Pat. 116 : (23 Pat. 760) has been relied upon for the proposition that her interest is an undivided interest in the joint family; but the actual decision is against Mr. Das Gupta's submission. Firstly because, Fazl Ali. C. J. (as he then was) has held that it is an asset of her husband in her hands, the position untenable in the light of Mr. Das Gupta's contention. This may be contrasted with the position that such an interest could not have been seized in the hands of a coparcener as an asset left by a deceased coparcener. This reason proves that the interest in her hands is a defined and definable interest. Fazl Ali C. J. quotes with approval from the decision of Venkataraman Rao J. reported in Saradambal v. Subbarama Ayyar, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Mad. 212 : (I. L. R. (1942) Mad. 630) which has also been cited by Mr. Das Gupta. I shall quote a passage from this learned Judge's observation. He says:

"Giving the language its plain meaning, the widow takes that interest subject to the rights and obligations attached to that interest and subject to the restrictions placed on her powers by Cl. (3) of S. 3 of the Act. That clause leaves the right to partition untouched but restricts the right of alienation because the nature of the interest which she takes is a Hindu woman's interest. What a Hindu woman's interest is, is well defined in Hindu law, that is she is competent to alienate that interest only for purposes sanctioned by Hindu law and that interest is liable to be seized in execution of decrees for the payment of debts of the last male owner.

Once the rule of survivorship no longer operates, there is nothing to preclude a creditor from attaching the property.

* * * *

As pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Moni Ram v. Kerikolitani, 5 Cal. 776 at p. 789 : (7 I A 115 P. C.) 'the whole estate is for the time vested in her absolutely for some purposes, though in some respects for only a qualified interest."

[13] In consideration of what I have said above, I am unhesitatingly of opinion that defendant 2 was competent to alienate the interest that devolved on her on the death of her husband in the joint family estate and that defendant 1, has acquired a good title thereto. In the result the appeal is dismissed with costs throughout.

[14] Panigrahi J.—The facts giving rise to the litigation out of which this second appeal arises are simple. Plaintiff 1, Narottam father, of plaintiff 2, Dharu, father of plaintiffs 3 and 4, and Judhisthir, husband of defendant 2, were brothers and lived in a joint family. On the death of Judhisthir sometime in 1939, his widow defendant 2, executed a sale-deed of the suit lands in favour of defendant 1 on 27-2- 40. The plaintiffs thereupon filed a suit in 1944 for a declaration that the suit lands being their ancestral family lands, no title passed to defendant 1 under the sale deed executed in his favour by defendant 2. The plaintiffs prayed for confirmation of, or, in the alternative, for recovery of possession. Both the Courts below found that Judhisthir was the Karta of the family and died while living jointly with the plaintiffs. The learned Munsif who tried the suit in the first instance gave a decree to the plaintiffs, but, on appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge ordered the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit as he held the alienation valid under the Hindu Women's Right to Property (Extension to Agricultural Land in Orissa) Act —Act V [5] of 1944, by which the provisions of the Hindu Women's Right to Property Act, 1937, were extended to agricultural land with retrospective effect.

[15] The question agitated in this appeal is as to whether the widow of a deceased coparcener has the right to alienate her husband's interest in the corparcenary estate. The Hindu Women's Right to property Act—Act XVIII [18] of 1937—came into force on 14-4-37. The Act was intended to improve the status of Hindu widows in a joint family. Prior to the passing of the Act, a widow, in a joint family, had no interest in the coparcenary property of her husband except a right to maintenance. The Act gave her a right to claim the share that her husband would have had and this right can be enforced by partition. Section 3, sub-s. (2) provides as follows:

"When a Hindu governed by any school of Hindu law other than Dayabhag school or by customary law dies, having at the time of his death an interest in a Hindu joint family property, his widow shall, subject to the provisions of sub-s. (3), have in the property the same interest as he himself had."

Sub-section (2) of S. 3 says :

"Any interest devolving on a Hindu widow under the provisions of this section shall be the limited interest known as a Hindu woman's estate, provided however that she shall have the same right of claiming partition as a male owner."

[16] As I read the two sub-sections, I come to the conclusion that sub-s. (2) limits the extent of the widow's estate to 'the same interest as her husband had' while sub-s. (3), describes the character of that estate as a Hindu Woman's estate. The proviso to sub-s. (3), creates a right in the widow to reduce the interest of her husband to her separate possession by claiming partition as a male owner. The expression 'the same interest as he himself had' occurring in S. 3, sub-s. (2), is not very happily worded and is capable of different interpretations. It is contended for the plaintiffs-appellants that the expression means that the interest that the widow acquires is of the same kind and is subject to the same limitations as it was while in the hands of her husband as coparcener. It is, therefore, argued that as the husband was incapable of alienating the undivided interest in the coparcenary, his widow suffers from the same disability so long as the coparcenary has not been disrupted by a suit for partition. This is the only ground on which the alienation in favour of defendant 1, is challenged.

[17] The Act does not effect a statutory severance of status though it creates, on the death of a coparcener a limited interest known as the Hindu Women's Estate in favour of his widow. The coparcenary remains intact, but the husband's interest does not pass to his coparceners by survivorship and devolves on his widow. The widow remains a member of the coparcenary though she is not a coparcener herself. She can thus be represented by the Karta of the family and the interest that she has acquired is liable to fluctuation as the interest of any other living coparcener is, unless she carves out her estate from the coparcenary by a partition. Prior to the passing of the Act, she had no such right which could be enforced in a Court of Law. The Act being remedial, it should receive a beneficial construction so that the purpose of the legislation may be carried out. If the appellants' contention were to be accepted, the result would be that, on the death of a coparcener, his widow should invariably be driven to file a suit and she can claim no right in the coparcenary unless it is disrupted. This could hardly have been the result intended by the Legislature. On the other hand, by recognising the right of the widow to alienate for purposes for which a woman's estate can be sold even while the coparcenary is left intact, no disruption of the coparcenary would be necessary. According to the appellants' argument, the husband was incapable of alienation during his lifetime and therefore his widow would likewise be unable to alienate because sub-s. (2) of S. 3 says that she has the same interest as her husband had. It would equally be arguable that the widow becomes a coparcener or the manager as her husband was the one or the other quoad the family property because she succeeds to the same 'interest' of her husband. This reading of the section would render the next succeeding subsection nugatory as the interest devolving on the widow shall be limited interest known as Hindu Woman's estate if she is deprived of her right to alienate during her lifetime which she would have if she were the widow of a sole surviving coparcener. Sub-sections (2) and (3) would, therefore, be inconsistent with each other and would stultify the object and intendment of the Act.

[18] In my judgment, therefore, 'the same interest' means that the interest of the husband shall devolve on his widow to the same extent, i. e., subject to the rights and obligations which that interest had at the time of her husband's death. If that interest had been encumbered or had been otherwise charged, the widow cannot ignore them. If there were debts of the family for the discharge of which the husband's interest was liable, they can be recovered from the husband's interest in the hands of the widow. 'Same interest' is not synonymous with 'same kind of interest' or 'same status' it means 'same right a share'.

[19] Having regard to the intendment and purview of the Act, the two sub-sections can be reconciled only in the way that I have indicated above. I agree with the order proposed that this appeal should be dismissed.

Re:— Second Appeal 33 of 1945.

[20] Ray C. J.— For the reasons, stated in my judgment in S. A. NO. 218 of 1945, the appeal is dismissed. There shall be no order for costs of this Court.

[21] Panigrahi J. — This is a defendant's appeal, and the very same question that has been raised in another case before this Court, viz., S. A. 218/1945, arises in this appeal also.

[22] The plaintiff-respondent alleging to be the adopted son of one Krupasindhu filed the suit, out of which this appeal arises, for a declaration that the alienation made by his adoptive mother defendant 2, in favour of defendant 1, is invalid and is not binding upon him. The plaintiff obtained a decree in the trial Court and it was confirmed by the learned District Judge on appeal. We have held in S. A. No. 218 of 1945 that a widow can alienate the interest devolving upon her, on the death of her husband, and that such alienation will be valid as against the other member of the coparcenary. In this case, both the Courts have found in favour of the plaintiff's adoption. The plaintiff and defendant 2 therefore succeed to the property of Krupasindhu Pandu and take it in equal shares. The plaintiff shall accordingly be entitled to the joint possession of the suit properties with defendant 1, the alienee from the adoptive mother of the plaintiff.

L. K. Dasgupta—for Petitioners; P. Mohanty and Bijoy K. Ray—for Opposite Party.

Order.—The petitioners have been found having seized a few heads of cattle which belonged to the opposite party and impounded them. The seizure but not the detention has been adjudged illegal by the Honorary Magistrate. The Magistrate has awarded a compensation of Rs. 75 distributing the same as between the petitioners equally. Thus each petitioner has been awarded a liability to pay a sum of Rs. 15 to the complainant-opposite party. Several contentions have been raised by Mr. Dasgupta, the learned counsel for the petitioners. They are : (i) That the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to hear and dispose of the complaint; (ii) That neither in the petition of complaint nor in the evidence, the complainant made any mention of the loss or, at any rate, the items or heads of such loss, and in the absence of such allegations and proof, no compensation beyond the fines, paid to the pound-keeper, being a sum of Rs. 7/8, should have been awarded to the complainant; and lastly, (iii) that the compensation awarded is highly excessive.

[2] For the first contention, reliance is placed upon S. 20, Cattle-Trespass Act (I [1] of 1871), which reads :

"20. Power to make complaints—Any person whose cattle have been seized under this Act or, having been so seized, have been detained in contravention of this Act, may, at any time within ten days from the date of the seizure make a complaint to the Magistrate of the District or any Magistrate authorised to receive and try charges without reference to the Magistrate of the District."

Within the purview of the section, contention 1 must succeed. In the case of Raghu Singh v. Abdul Waheb, 23 Cal. 442, it has been held that an order of compensation awarded by a Magistrate other than one before whom a complaint of illegal seizure was made and who was not competent to entertain the same is not curable either by S. 529 or by S. 537, Criminal P C. In this view, the order passed by the Honorary Magistrate is illegal and void. The appellate Court's decision against that cannot stand on a better footing. I, therefore, quash the order as also the proceeding taken before the Honorary Magistrate.

[3] I am not aware nor have I been fully advised if the Sub-Divisional Magistrate before whom the complaint was filed is a Magistrate who is authorised to receive and try the charges referred to in S. 20 of the Act without reference to the Magistrate of the District. In case the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was not entitled to entertain it, the complainant will be in tremendous difficulties. According to S. 20 he has to make his complaint within ten days from the date of the seizure. It is no longer open to him to make a complaint to a competent Magistrate within the meaning of S. 20 as the ten days' period has expired. I do not think S. 14, Limitation Act, is applicable to such cases.

[4] With regard to the second contention there is no doubt some amount of conflict of authorities in the different High Courts. In cases reported in Baijnath Sahay v. Emperor, A. I. R. (10) 1923 Pat. 292 : (24 Cr. L. J. 311); Ramdularey v. Monohar, A. I. R. (17) 1930 Nag. 149 : (31 Cr. L J. 278) and Boijoo v. Emperor, A. I. R. (26) 1939 Oudh 37 : (40 Cr. L. J 141), it has been consistently held that specific sum representing the loss sustained shall be claimed in the petition of complaint in lieu of compensation. A contrary view has been indicated in Bhujharat v. Emperor, A. I. R. (22) 1935 ALL. 925 : (37 Cr. L J. 247) and Kolandai Chetty v. Perumal Kavundan, A. I. R. (15) 1928 Mad. 869 : (29 Cr. L. J. 325). I do not find any difficulty in coming to my own decision. My decision is that in the petition of complaint, or, at any rate, in the evidence adduced for the complainant the different heads on which losses have been suffered must be specifically indicated. Suppose, by illegal seizure of cattle, the owner is deprived of any amount of milk that he should have otherwise obtained, he must be entitled to be compensated against such loss. But in order to be so compensated, he must lodge it and prove it so that the accused may have the opportunity (to meet? that case. Suppose, the accused knew what grounds were relied upon, he would have been able to show that each of the grounds on which the loss was based was without foundation. It is fundamental in administration of justice that no part shall be allowed to steal a march over the other. Every party must specifically lodge and prove his case so that his adversary gets an opportunity to meet it. I am also, at the same time, of the view that suppose the petition of complaint is silent, it would be no reason to throw away the complainant's claim for compensation for the loss, provided he alleges and proves it during the hearing and the so-called accused gets an opportunity to plead and prove in reply. In this case, there is neither such allegation nor proof though there is a general prayer in the petition for Khatikhesara. It has also been held in Shaik Hussain v. Sanjivi, 7 Mad. 345 : (1 Weir. 713), that the complainant may be allowed the costs of the proceeding though not the pleader's fee, if any, incurred by him. I would, therefore, hold that the petitioners will also succeed in their second contention.

[5] The last contention is whether compensation awarded is excessive and if the High Court can interfere. High Court's power of interference is neither challenged nor is it challengeable. I will refer to the case of Emperor v. Madho, 126 I. C. 497 : (A. I. R. (17) 1930 Oudh 250 : 31 Cr. L. J. 1015). But it does not arise for me to settle the fair compensation as I have held that I shall set aside the order of the Magistrate and the proceeding so far as they were conducted before him.

[6] Let this case go back to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Kendrapara. It is for him to find out whether he is a Magistrate authorised to receive and try the charges under S. 20 of the Act without any reference by the District Magistrate. I bring to his notice the provision of S. 20 of the Act. If he is a competent Magistrate to take up the case, the proceeding shall be deemed to be based upon the complaint which has been duly filed within the period of limitation prescribed in the section. He shall, and I consider it is imperative, that he should allow the parties to adduce fresh evidence as the proceeding before the Honorary Magistrate, which includes examining and recording the evidence of witnesses, is bad in law. In case he is not a Magistrate competent, it is all hopeless for the complainant. He has absolutely no remedy. I invited the parties to settle their differences, so that some amount of compensation could have been awarded to the complainant, who, I have no doubt, has suffered losses on account of the illegal seizure. The matter of illegality of seizure is also in dispute and the petitioners stand on their right to have the case retried if the case does lie before a competent Magistrate.

[7] In the result the petition is allowed. The orders of the Courts below are set aside.

A. F. A. D. No. 255 of 1945, D/- 20-1-1949.

(a) Tenancy Laws—Orissa Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1913), S. 212—Transfer of holding after rent decree—Holding, if can be sold in execution in absence of transferee.

At the time of sale in execution of a decree for recovery of rent, the entire landlord's interest and also the ryoti interest should be represented respectively by the decree-holder as well as the judgmedt-debtor. Anyone of these parties having ceased to have either the landlord's interest or the ryoti interest, as the case may be, the execution and the sale thereunder should lose the character of being an execution of a rent decree as such with the result that the sale will not pass the holding or the tenancy, as the case may be. Therefore, a particular landlord after knowledge of the transfer and after knowing that the occupancy right has accrued to the transferee to the exclusion of the till-then-recorded tenant and the judgment-debtor, he cannot be allowed to effectively pass the holding by the sale in execution proceedings conducted in the absence of the transferee to the auction-purchaser at such sale. [Paras 3 and 5]

(b) Tenancy Laws — Orissa Tenancy (Amendment) Act (VIII [8] of 1938), S. 31 — Notice — Object.

The object of the Legislature is that after a transfer is made valid and binding against a landlord, he shall not be permitted to sell away the holding in the absence and behind the back of the transferees provided he had notice of the transfer. [Para 4]

(c) Tenancy Laws—Orissa Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1913), S. 74—Charge under—Execution proceeding—S. 52, T. P. Act, if attracted—T. P. Act (1882), Ss. 52 and 100.

A charge under S. 74, Orissa Tenancy Act, is not a charge within the meaning of S. 100, T. P. Act, as all the incidental rights and liabilities are not attracted to such a charge. It cannot, therefore, be held that a proceeding in execution of a rent decree is a proceeding within the purview of S. 52, T. P. Act in which any right to immovable property is in dispute between the parties until a valid attachment is effected. [Para 9]

Anno : T. P. Act, S. 52, N. 2, S. 100, N. 12.

B. K. Pal — for Appellant; S. P. Mohapatra — for Respondents.

Ray C. J.—It is a defendant 1's appeal in a suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession of the disputed property which constitutes an occupancy holding in Touzi No. 3019 in the district of Cuttack. Defendant 5 was the original owner of the occupancy holding. He had usufructorily mortgaged the same to defendent 2 and father of defendant 3 who were recorded as mortgagees. Ultimately, defendants 6 to 9 purchased the holding in execution of the mortgage decree before 1938. An ex parte decree in a rent suit was obtained against the recorded tenants on 27-2-1941. The decree was put into execution on 3-4-1941 in which an order to issue attachment against the holding was passed on 4-4-1941. The attachment was effected on 30-4-1941. Before effectuation of the attachment and after the commencement of the execution, that is, on 25-4-1941, the plaintiff purchased the holding and it can be premised without any controversy that by such purchase he acquired the right of occupancy and all other rights appurtenant thereto under the provisions of S. 30A, Orissa Tenancy Act. The section provides that such transfers (of occupancy holding of a ryot, or a portion of share) shall carry with it the occupancy right in the holding and all the rights appurtenant thereto. The transfer, referred to in S. 30A, has to be effected notwithstanding the provisions of the T. P. Act in the manner provided in S. 31. The latter section provides that the registration of the transfer deed made compulsory in case of sales of occupancy holdings of any valuation must be accompanied with a notice to the landlord. So in the case of auction sales. The object behind this specific provision as to the mode of transfer being to make it binding on the landlord for all purposes and to all the extent for which such binding character is needed under the provisions of the Orissa Tenancy Act. It has been found by the Courts below and has not been controverted at the Bar that the requisite notice had been given to the landlord on 9-5-1941. The auction sale was held in pursuance of the execution case already referred to long after this notice. The auction-purchaser, namely, the appellant took possession through Court and thereby dispossessed the plaintiff. Hence this suit. The suit was decreed by both the Courts below. Hence this appeal by defendant 1 who was the only contesting defendant.

[2] Mr. Pal, appearing for the appellant, raised certain very interesting points of law. The pith and substance of his argument is that rent being a first charge on the holding, his purchase in execution of the rent decree should prevail over the private purchase of the plaintiff who must be held bound by the execution proceeding and by the order passed in the said proceeding resulting in the sale of the disputed holding. He supplements his contention by invoking the aid of doctrine of lis pendens as enacted in S. 52, T. P. Act. According to him, notwithstanding the plaintiff's purchase during the pendency of the execution proceedings, the holding passed to him under the provisions of S. 74 read with S. 212, Orissa Tenancy Act.

[3] This contention, with equal strenuousness is repelled by Mr. S. P. Mohapatra, counsel for the respondent, who contends that the doctrine of lis pendens is not attracted to the facts of the present case as neither the suit for recovery of rent nor the execution proceedings arising therefrom are such suits or proceedings as are contemplated in S. 52, T. P. Act, as no right to immovable property was at any moment in dispute as between the parties thereto. He, however, contends that in order to pass the occupancy holding at the sale, the conditions necessary under the provisions of S. 212, Orissa Tenancy Act, are that the relationship of landlord and tenant shall continue till the date of sale which did not happen in this case as the holding had been effectively sold with notice to the landlord before the relevant date. At the date of sale, the judgment-debtor in the suit was no longer the ryot and was not representing the holding. The position of law is too well settled to be controverted that at the time of sale in execution of a decree for recovery of rent, the entire landlord's interest and also the ryoti interest should be represented respectively by the decree-holder as well as the judgment-debtor. Anyone of these parties having ceased to have either the landlord's interest or the ryoti interest, as the case may be, the execution and the sale thereunder should lose the character of being an execution of a rent decree as such with the result that the sale will not pass the holding or the tenancy, as the case may be.

[4] The only contention that I have to consider in this case is whether the landlord could sell the holding without impleading the transferee. The transferee is one in this particular case who became the ryot of the holding as against the landlord. His purchase was, no doubt, subject to the charge of arrears of rent till then accruing due, whether decreed for or not sued upon. Under the circumstances, to allow him to sell the holding without bringing him upon the record as a judgment-debtor would amount to encourage the sale of one's property at a court's sale without bringing him unto the proceedings before the Court. As a principle, it is fundamental that nobody's property will be sold except in a proceeding to which he is a party. The case might have been different if this purchase was either not binding upon the landlord or was not within his knowledge or notice. That the object of this notice to the landlord in effecting the transfer is to make it binding against a landlord so that he cannot have the privilege of selling the holding by way of enforcement of a decree without making the transferee a party for arrears of rent is clear from certain provisions of the Act in addition to the one providing for compulsory service of notice. Much assistance is deprived from Expl. (2) of sub-s. (2) of S. 31-B, 31-B is the section which made all transfers of pre-amendment days of the Tenancy Act valid and binding against a landlord. As this measure was given, as it was, a retrospective effect of divesting the landlords of certain vested rights that have already accrued to them, the Legistature thought it fit to compensate them by enabling them to sue for recovery of such registration fees as were lawfully payable by the transferees. Then the Legislature was confronted with the position whether this by itself, will be sufficient protection to the transferees. They realised, protection from rent execution sales was needed too. In order to effectuate it, sub-s. (2) was enacted which is to the effect that the holding or portion or share of an occupancy ryot shall not be liable to be sold in satisfaction of a decree for arrears to rent without making the said transferee a party to the proceedings in execution of a decree provided that the transferee has given notice of transfer by registered post to the landlord. There is no doubt this sub-section applies to the cases of prior transferees and it is so indicated by the words "the said transferee" which mean "the transferee referred to in the earlier part of the section, namely, sub-s. (1)". The object of the sub-section, however, was completely fulfilled by making it incumbent upon the transferee to give notice of the transfer by registered post. The object of the Legislature, however, is clear that after a transfer is made valid and binding against a landlord, he shall not be permitted to sell away the holding in the absence and behind the back of the said transferees provided he had notice of the transfers. Though sub-s. (2) does not in terms apply to subsequent transfers, there is no doubt as to the intention behind the explaination attached to it. The explanation reads :

"Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act or in the Code of Civil Procedure, in the case of a transfer of a holding or a portion or a share thereof, whether before or after the decree, the transferee may be brought on record in the proceedings in execution either in substitution of or in addition to the judgment-debtor, and such transferee shall, when so added or substituted, be treated as a judgment-debtor for all purposes of the said proceedings in execution of the decree."

[5] I say this explanation enures to the benefits of all transferees either prior to or later than Orissa Tenancy Amendment Act, 1938, on account of the occurrence of the following words "notwithstanding anything contained in this Act." If the explanation was intended to be confined in its operation to the case of subsequent transferees only, it could have been said "notwithstanding anything contained in this section." At any rate, this explanation enables the landlord to implead the transferees at any stage of the execution case, even at the time of the sale or thereafter before confirmation, and to treat them as judgment-debtors for all purposes of the proceedings. This explanation shall be understood in the context of the previous tenancy laws according to which none but the recorded tenant would be allowed to have the privilege of paying up the decretal amount either in course of execution proceedings or after holding of the sale and before its confirmation. No landlord would be allowed to implead such a transferee unless he be deemed to consent to the transfer. The present change was necessary to keep pace with the changes with regard to the newly conferred substantive rights of an occupancy ryot to sell his holding in a manner and with the effect of having a binding force against the landlord. Under the circumstances, if a particular landlord after knowledge of the transfer and after knowing that the occupancy right has accrued to the transferee to the exclusion of the till-then-recorded-tenant and the judgment-debtor, it would amount to violence to the language of the law and the principles behind it to hold that he would still be allowed to effectively pass the holding by the sale in execution proceedings conducted in the absence of the transferee to the auction-purchaser at such sale. Mr. Pal also agrees that in case this transfer had taken place either during the pendency of the rent suit or after the decree but before the execution proceedings started, the holding could not have been proceeded against in the absence of the transferee. His contention is that the application of the doctrine of lis pendens makes the sale binding against the transferee even without his being impleaded. In order to attract the provisions of S. 52, T. P. Act, the proceedings or suit concerned must be one in which any right to immovable property is directly and specifically in question. It is not contended that such a right is in question in the suit for recovery of rent even though rent is a first charge according to S. 74 of the Act. It is well settled in the case of A. H. Forbes v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh, 41 I. A. 91 : (A. I. R. (1) 1914 P. C. 111) and Krishnapada Chatterji v. Manadasundari, 59 Cal. 1202 : (A. I. R. (19) 1932 Cal. 321 F.B.), that in case the landlord loses the landlord's right in respect of the holding before it is put to sell in execution of a rent decree, the execution of the decree as such loses the character of its enforcement as a rent decree with the consequence that the holding or tenure, as the case may be, does not pass. The Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court overrules certain previous decisions of that Court reported in Kshetrapal Singh v. Kritarthamayee Dassi, 33 Cal. 566 : (3 C. L. J. 470 F. B.), Manindranath v. Ashutosh, 21 C. W. N. 1132 : (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Cal. 521) and Syedunnessa Khatun v Amiruddin, 45 Cal. 294 : (A. I. R (4) 1917 Cal. 2). Their Lordships of the Full Bench fully approved the doctrine laid down in the case of Prafulla Krishna v. Nosibannessa, 24 C. L. J. 331 at p. 331 : (A. I. R. (4) 1917 Cal. 308 S. B.). Similarly, it has been held in the case of Sm. Binapani Debi v. Banku Behari Mandal, A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 475 ; (209 I. C. 237) that if the tenant loses the interest before execution of the rent decree, the execution sale will not be competent so as to convey the holding to the purchaser. Mr. Pal, therefore, contends that the case will be different if the holding is dealt with by way of transfer during the pendency of the execution proceedings, when according to him it becomes a proceeding in which 'any right to immovable properties directly and specifically in question.' This leads us to consider whether the charge declared in S. 74 is a charge within the meaning of S. 100 so as to attract all the provisions of the Act in respect thereto. If the matter was res integra, I could hold otherwise, but it is covered by abundance of authorties that a suit for enforcement of a charge is a suit relating to immovable property for the purpose of S. 53, T. P. Act. The authorities in this respect are Sudhamoyee Singh v. Jessore Loan Co., Ltd. (A. I. R. (32) 1945 Cal. 322 : (49 C. W. N. 68)), Setharamanuja Charulu v. Venkatasubbama, 54 Mad. 132 : (A. I. R. (17) 1930 Mad. 824), and Aravamudu Ayyangar v. Abhiramvalli Ayah, 66 M. L. J. 566 : (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Mad. 353). But there is a clear distinction between the charge as declared in S. 74, Orissa Tenancy Act and the charge within the meaning of S. 100. According to the latter section, a charge is one either created by act of parties or by operation of law. The section provides:

"Where immovable property of one person is by act of parties or by operation of law made security for the payment of money to another, and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property and all the provisions hereinbefore contained which apply to simple mortgage shall, so far as may be, apply to such charge."

[6] Truly speaking, a charge created by operation of law would be a charge within the meaning of the section if the law that creates the charge does not provide for any limitations in relation thereto. Charge, to start with, even if it is a charge with all necessary incidents thereof does not create an interest in immovable property. In this connexion I would quote a passage from Mulla's commentary on S. 100, T. P. Act:

"In a charge there is no transfer of an interest in the property but the creation of a right of payment out of property specified. The broad distinction between a mortgage and a charge is this: that whereas a charge only gives right to payment out of a particular fund or particular property without transferring that fund or property, a mortgage is in essence a transfer of an interest in specific immovable property. A mortgage is a jus in rem, a charge a jus ad rem and the practical distinction is that a mortgage is g od against subsequent transferees and a charge is only good against subsequent transferees with notice."

[7] In this view of the matter, it has to be seen whether the charge as declared in the Tenancy Act is necessarily and without any choice left to the landlord made payable out of the charge property, namely, occupancy holding. The suit for recovery of rent is commenced as a suit of recovery of money due as arrears of rent in respect of a holding from the tenant holding it. There is not a word in the suit about either declaration or enforcement of the statutory charge. Under the provisions of the Tenancy Act, such a decree is enforceable against any properties of the judgment-debtor other than the holding. In that view, it is difficult to say that execution of a decree for recovery of rent is of necessity and of essence a proceeding relating to any right to immovable property. As in the case of landlord's losing his interest either after the decree or the execution proceeding the decree loses the character of being a decree for enforcement of the charge or a proceeding in which some right to immovable property is to be proceeded against, so in the case of the tenant losing his interest as such the decree or the execution proceeding is devested of its character as such. Under the circumstances, it cannot be always said that a proceeding set on foot for execution of a decree is necessarily a proceeding in which any right to immovable property is specifically and directly in question. There is a very valuable guide which can be obtained from a decision of Stone C. J. in the case of Sitaram Sheolal v. Krishnarao Balaji, (A. I. R. (27) 1940 Nag. 156: (I. L R. (1941) Nag. 607). This decision relates to interpretation of a charge as provided in S. 9 (1), C. P. Tenancy Act. The language of the Act which came up for consideration is as follows:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in S 100, T. P. Act, and O. 34, Sch. 1, C. P. C., 1908, such holding shall be liable for the satisfaction of such charge in execution of a decree for rent against the tenant, whether such decree orders such sale or not."

[8] How far it is a charge within the meaning of S. 100, T. P. Act, is answered by his Lordship in the following passage:

"The extent to which the ordinary law is set aside is therefore clearly indicated, and, in our opinion, the departure cannot be carried further by implication. The object of S. 9 (1) is to give the landlord precedence for his rent. That object is completely attained the moment the holding is sold in the manner specified in the Section. In our opinion, the 'first charge' enures no further than that. Section 9 does not confer rights of subrogation."

[9] To give effect to Mr. Pal's contention would amount to give such incidents of a charge to the charge under consideration under the ordinary law as are either set aside or departed from by the very law which declares it to be a charge. Assuming for a moment that Mr. Pal is right in his contention that as soon as execution starts with a prayer to put the holding to sale, it commences as a proceeding in which some specific right to immovable property is specifically and directly in question as between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor, the provision for effecting attachment in order to enable the decree-holder (landlord) to proceed against an occupancy holding would be completely nugatory: but it is difficult to explain the position on any other hypothesis than that the decree is considered to be a money decree and enforceable only as such until the occupancy holding is attached in the manner provided in the Civil Procedure Code. Such is not the case under the ordinary law relating to enforcement of charge decrees. It appears from S. 100 that a charge under the ordinary law is to be enforced in the manner provided for enforcement of a simple mortgage. The section says

"and all the provisions hereinbefore contained which apply to a simple mortgage shall, so far as may be apply to such charge (which includes a charge created by acts of parties as well as by operation of law)."

One of these provisions is that a holder of a charge is not entitled to enforce it even though personal liability may be involved in it, against any property of the charge-maker before exhausting his remedies against the charge property. This is the rule which applies to the available remedies of a mortgagee. That it is so will appear from the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case Banku Behari v. Naraindas Dutt, 54 I. A. 129: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 P. C. 73). In this connexion, reference may be made to O. 34, R. 15, Civil P. C. But unlike charge-holder under ordinary law, the landlord of a tenancy is not confined to first exhausting his remedies against a holding and then only to proceed against the judgment-debtor's other properties. He can exhaust his other remedies on the other hand before he considers it necessary to fall back upon the holding as a security for repayment of the decretal debt in a rent suit. Under the circumstances, all the incidental rights and liabilities are not attracted to a charge under S. 74, Orissa Tenancy Act. It is difficult, therefore, to hold that the execution proceeding is a proceeding within the purview of S. 52, T. P. Act, in which any right to immovable properties is in dispute between the parties until a valid attachment is effected. Besides, any transfer by one party during lis which is otherwise binding on the other party of the suit or proceeding, cannot be hit by the mischief of the section. Suppose, both the parties agree in making a transfer, the transfer must stand unaffected by the result of the suit or proceeding. So is a transfer by an occupancy tenant to which his landlord's consent is implicit by virtue of the statute as soon as its conditions for giving notice to him are fulfilled. In my view, therefore, the doctrine of lis pendens does not help the appellant: the only result is that the holding has not passed to the auction-purchaser, namely, the appellant, and in fact, he has purchased the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor who had lost all rights in the holding by virtue of his transfer in favour of the plaintiff.

[10] Then the question arises what other remedy is the appellant entitled to? There is no doubt that the appellant is a bona fide purchaser for value. He had paid the money for the arrears of rent decree to the landlord. There is no doubt nor is it controverted at the Bar that the transferee (plaintiff) purchased the holding subject to his liability to pay the arrears of rent then due in respect of the holding. This includes his liability to pay the decretal amount. Mr Mohapatra, relying upon the Nagpur case, already cited argues that the idea of subrogation being foreign to the rent charge, the auction-purchaser cannot be said to have subrogated to the right of a charge holder and of calling upon him to pay. This may be the technical aspect of the law, put under the general principles which, so far as they apply to contracts between the parties, have been enacted in S. 70, Contract Act, would apply to cases not directly governed by contract but by considerations which amount to those in the nature of contracts. Strictly giving effect to the technical rules, we could direct the sale to be set aside and relegate the landlord to the position of an execution creditor reviving the execution case and giving him leave to proceed against the transferee; but that would be multiplying unnecessary litigations, the ultimate result of which will be that the auction-purchaser would be refunded the money paid by him as purchase money and the plaintiff would be liable to pay up the decretal dues. In the circumstances, the learned counsel of both sides have agreed that the plaintiff shall be put on terms in respect of his decrees which he has secured of having his title declared and having restored to him the possession. Accordingly, we put him on terms that he shall re-imburse defendant 1 by paying back the amount for which he had purchased the property at the court sale. I do not fix any time for this payment as it is a condition affixed to his execution of the decree for possession. Under the circumstances of the case, each party should bear his costs throughout. In view of the fact that the plaintiff should recover possession on making payments, the decree for mesne profits, as passed by the Courts below, must stand vacated. In the result the appeal is dismissed without costs.

A compromise decree merely embodies the agreement arrived at between the parties and is no more than any other contract between the parties. It cannot, therefore, claim the sanctity of a judgment followed by a decree of the Court. [Para 4]

An executing Court has got the power to apply the equitable principle embodied in S. 74, Contract Act, and relieve one of the parties to the contract against any term which operates as a penalty although the contract may have been embodied in a decree of the Court : A. B. K. Pal—for Appellants.

Panigrahi J. — The judgment-debtors in a compromise decree for maintenance are the appellants before us.

[2] The decree provided that the judgment-debtors should pay maintenance to the decree-holder at the rate of Rs. 6 a month and in case of default of payment of the allowance for six consecutive months the judgment-debtors shall be liable to pay maintenance at Rs. 12 a month. The judgment-debtors defaulted payment for six months consecutively and the decree holder assigned his decree to opposite parties 1 and 2 (respondents). When the decree was put in execution, the judgment-debtors (appellants) raised several objections one of which has been debated before us. The contention of the judgment-debtors is that the stipulation embodied in the compromise decree, to the effect that the judgment-debtors shall pay double the monthly maintenance allowance in case of default for six consecutive months, is in the nature of a penal class and cannot be enforced in execution.

[3] The Courts below overruled the plea of the judgment-debtors on the ground that an executing Court cannot go behind the decree and is bound to give effect to whatever terms are embodied in the decree. Reliance was placed for this view on the case reported in Jitendra Nath v. Jasoda, A. I. R. (13) 1926 Pat. 122 : (92 I. C. 617) where a Division Bench of the Patna High Court held that the doctrine of penalty is not applicable to stipulations contained in decrees whether passed on compromise or contest. Their Lordships who decided this case relied on a case of the Bombay High Court reported in Shirekuli Timappa v. Mahablya, 10 Bom. 435. The principles underlying these decisions is that S. 74, Contract Act, which provides for relief against penalty does not apply to decrees which embody and express the adjudication of a Court. It was held that the application of the principle of contract to execution of decrees would introduce uncertainty and confusion and that, therefore, the application of the equitable principle should be confined only to cases where the parties have not gone beyond the stage of contract. The case reported in Shirekuli Timappa v. Mahablya, 10 Bom. 435 arose under the old Civil Procedure Code and was later expressly dissented from by a Full Bench of that Court in Krishna Bhai v. Harigovind, 31 Bom. 15 : (9 Bom. L. R. 813 F. B.). The question referred to the Full Bench was whether when the plaintiff is seeking to enforce by original suit a right to forfeiture contained in a consent decree whereby the status of landlord and tenant is established between the plaintiff and the defendant, the Court, in the exercise of its equitable jurisdication, is precluded from granting such relief against forfeiture as it might have granted had the status arisen from contract or custom, and this question was answered in the negative. The principle has been laid down as early as in Wentworth v. Bullen, (1829) 9 B & C. 840 at p. 850 : (9 L. J. K. B. 33) as follows ; and has since been repeatedly affirmed :

"A contract of the parties is not the less a contract, and subject to the incidents of a contract, because there is superadded the command of a Judge."

[4] Turning now to the language of the Civil Procedure Code we find that O. 23, R. 3 lays down as to how the compromise of a suit is to be recorded. It says :

"Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise . . . . the Court shall order such agreement, compromise or satisfaction to be recorded, and shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as as it relates to the suit."

When a compromise is filed by the parties to a suit during the pendency of the suit, the Court merely records the compromise and does not look into the legality of the terms embodied therein. The agreement between the parties may be voidable at the option of one of the parties; or the decree itself may be set aside by a suit at the instance of one of the parties on the ground that the compromise was brought about by undue influence or fraud. It cannot therefore claim the sanctity of a judgment followed by a decree of the Court. A compromise decree accordingly merely embodied the agreement arrived at between the parties and is no more than any other contract between the parties. That this is the view taken by all the Hight Courts in India, including the Patna High Court, is now beyond doubt.

[5] In Mt. Nand Rani v. Durga Das, 2 Pat. 906 : (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Pat. 387) the question whether an executing Court had the power to extend the time allowed by agreement and embodied in a decree of the Court, was directly raised, and Mullick and Bucknill JJ. held—following Kandarpa Nag v. Banwari Lal Nag, 33 C. L. J. 244 : (A. I. R. (8) 1921 Cal. 356), that although a contract may have ripened into a decree the Court will not be precluded from giving relief which it would have been competent to give if it had been called upon to adjudicate upon a contract in the first instance. Unfortunately the attention of their Lordships who decided the case reported in Jitendra Nath v. Jasoda, A. I. R. (13) 1926 Pat. 122 : (92 I. C. 617) was not invited to the earlier case in Mt. Nand Bani v. Durga Das, 2 Pat. 906 : (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Pat. 387). Subsequent to the decision in that case of 1926, there have been a series of decisions of the same High Court, in which not only has that decision not been followed but a contrary view has been expressly adopted. Our attention has been drawn to the cases reported in Sasadhar Ganguli v. Raghal Singh, A. I. R. (17) 1930 Pat. 234:(125 I. C. 123), Saheb Lal Bhagat v. Mohd. Ishaque, A. I. R. (22) 1935 Pat. 59 : (154 I. C. 393); Jahuri Lal v. Kandhai Lal, A. I. R. (22) 1935 Pat. 123 : (156 I. C. 302) and Khetro Swain v. Padmnaabha Singh Deo. A. I. R. (30) 1943 Pat. 403 : (211 I. C. 41). In the last-mentioned case, the latest Bombay case reported in Burjorji Shapurji v. Madhavlal Jesingbhai, 58 Bom. 610 : (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Bom. 370), which is based on the Full Bench view of that High Court in Krishna Bhai v. Harigovind, 31 Bom. 15: (9 Bom. L. R. 813 F. B.), was followed. Mr. Pal, appearing for the judgment-debtors has also cited before us the Full Bench decisions of the Allahabad High Court and the Lahore High Court reported in Mohiuddin v. Kashmiro Bibi, 55 ALL. 334 : (A. I. R. (20) 1933 ALL. 252 F. B.) and Prem Parkash v. Mohanalal, A. I. R. (30) 1943 Lah. 268: (I.L.R. (1944) Lah. 379 F. B.). The view of the Madras High Court is also in conflict with the decision in Jitendra Nath v. Jasoda, A. I. R. (13) 1926 Pat. 122:(92 I. C. 617). See Peda Linga Reddi v. Hanumayya, 37 I. C. 764:(A. I. R. (5) 1918 Mad. 1307); Jaya Rao v. Venkatanarayana Chetty, A. I. R. (12) 1925 Mad. 264:(80 I. C. 925); Subbayya v. Peddayya, A. I. R. (24) 1937 Mad. 234 : (169 I. C. 345).

[6] On a review of the various authorities, we are satisfied that the consensus of opinion in all the High Courts is that an executing Court has got the power to apply the equitable principle embodied in S. 74, Contract Act, and relieve one of the parties to the contract against any term which operates as a penalty although the contract may have been embodied in a decree of the Court. We have therefore to hold that the authority of the decision in Jitendra Nath v. Jasoda, A. I. R. (13) 1926 Pat. 122:(92 I. C. 617) has been considerably weakened, if not expressly overruled and cannot be regarded as sound law. The decision of the Courts below—based on the authority of this case—must accordingly be overruled and the objection of the judgment-debtors upheld.

[7] We accordingly direct that the decree-holder shall be entitled to execute his decree and realize maintenance allowance, only at the rate of Rs. 6 a month and that penal clause providing for payment of double that amount in the event of non-payment for six consecutive months shall not be enforced. This appeal succeeds but as there is no appearance for the opposite party respondent there shall be no order as to costs.

Special Jurisdiction case No. 15 of 1949, D/- 22-3-1950.

(a) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 66—Question of law—Legal facts and physical facts.

Facts, as such, are divisible into "facts physical" and "facts legal". Where the Court pronounces a finding of legal fact, it is more often than not a question of law to adjudge whether the materials are sufficient in law to the establishment of the legal fact. The finding of the legal fact recorded by the Appellate Tribunal, in order to be binding and conclusive as a finding of fact, must be based upon sufficient evidence. The legal fact, must flow conclusively from the physical facts, if not established. [Paras 8, 14]

B. N. Mohanti and Monohar Lall—for Petitioner; Standing Counsel—for Opposite Party.

Ray C. J.—This case was heard on 22-3-1950 and its result was then communicated after close of the hearing. We reserved deliverance of our judgment incorporating the reasons.

[2] This is a motion by an assessee, a Hindu undivided family invoking our jurisdiction to issue a writ requiring the Appellate Tribunal (income-tax) to state a case and to refer the same to the Court in the event of our not being satisfied of the correctness of their decision in rejecting the assessee's appeal and in refusing to state a case to this Court. For the reasons stated below, we are not satisfied with the decision of the Tribunal as correct.

[3] The facts that constitute the background in which the correctness of the Tribunal's decision has to be considered are that one Jagannathram and his five sons [(i) Gangaram, (ii) Ramanarayan, (iii) Bhagawan, (iv) Kanhialal and (v) Surajmal] constituted a joint family. The family owned extensive properties, both movables and immovables, inclusive of two business concerns in Yarn and Timber. Indisputably the family continued joint till 9-11 1942, the date of commencement of the accounting period 1942-43 the period ends on 28-10-1943. Before that date two of the aforesaid sons had died. Of them late Ramanarayan has left behind a widow and late Bhagwan a son by name Satyanarayan, a minor who is a member of the joint family. It is claimed by the assessee that on 9-11-1942, the members of the family under the leadership of Jagannathram ascertained the shares of the family members, namely, Jagannathram, his three sons and the son of a predeceased son, to be 1/5th each in the joint family assets. They separated the aforesaid two businesses of Yarn and Timber from the joint family and divided the same amongst five members allotting the timber business to Jagannathram and Satyanarayan and the Yarn business to the shares of Gangaram, Kanhialal and Surajmal. The bone of contention is that since that date these two business concerns ceased to be joint family properties and became the separate properties of the members to whom they were alloted and held, inter se, "in common tenancy" and distinct from "in coparcenary". In order to carry out the purpose of the said division, two deeds of partnership agreements were brought into being—one was executed and entered into between Gangaram, Kanhialal and Surajmal governing the Yarn business which had been taken out of the joint family assests and allotted to them as a part of their share in the joint family properties and the other was similarly executed and entered into as between Jaganathram and Satyaranayan covering Timber business. Each of the two documents with material variations as were appropriate in relation to the business which it was intended to govern contained a recital giving out the fact of partition of the joint family and formation of partnership firms. For the sake of perspicuity, the following quotation may be taken from one of said two documents :

"The aforesaid Jagannathram, Gangaram, Kanhialal, Surajamal and Satyanarayan minor through guardian Jagannatharam on 8-11-42 mutually agreed and decided that their share in the entire joint family properties is equal i. e., 1/5th share each and in pursuance of the same they further decided to divide their joint family business in Twist and Timber in the same proportion and further decided that the Twist business with a capital of Rs. 105,000 will fall to the lot of Gangaram of the first party, Kanhialal, Surajmal of the second and third party, each being deemed to have contributed and contributing Rs. 35,000 as his share capital and which they will run in partnership to the exclusion of Jagannath and Satyanarayan and similarly timber business with capital of Rs. 70,000 will fall to the lot of Jagannathram and Satyanarayan minor through guardian Jagannathram each being deemed to have contributed Rs. 85,000 as his share capital and which the latter two alone will run in partnership under the name of Jagannathram Satyanarayan to the exclusion of the former, namely, Gangaram, Kanhialal and Surajmal, and all the members further decided that their remaining properties, namely, their landed properties, buildings and all other movables and immovables will continue as joint as before under the name of Jagannathram Gangaram and with this clear understanding that they are separate so far their twist business is under the name of Kanhialal Surajmal and timber business under the name of Jagannathram Satyanarayan with the specification of shares and contribution of capital as enumerated above are concerned and they are joint as regards the remainder of the joint family property ....."

[4] On execution of the aforesaid two documents, the parties approached the Registrar of Firms and secured certificate of registration in March 1944. This was followed by correspondence to the Commilla Bank and to a supplier of Yarn in the years 1944 and 1945 respectively stating that the two trades referred to therein were being run as partnership Firms as between the different groups of persons named in the partnership deeds.

[5] In the assessment year, namely, 1944-45, three sets of returns were filed —one for Jagannathram Gangaram as representing the Hindu undivided family before the Income-tax Officer (Special Circle), Cuttack who had been vested with special power to deal with it by the commissioner, Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa, Patna, and the other two separate returns, one for Kanhialal Surajmal and another for Jagannathram Satyanarayan, in relation to the incomes of the timber and the twist business respectively before the Income-tax Officer, Cuttack, who had territorial jurisdiction over them. Side by side, the two partnership Firms filed applications before the said Income-tax officer Cuttack, for registration of their Firms for the purpose of this Act under S. 26A, Income-tax Act, 1922. The Income-tax officer Cuttack, it is stated, instead of making an assessment order or registering the firms under S. 26A, sent the case records to the Income-tax Officer (Special Circle) who had seisin of the assessment of the Hindu undivided family income. The Income-tax Officer (Special Circle) treated the incomes of the aforesaid two business concerns as part of the Hindu undivided family incomes and made an order of assessment on the consolidated income of Rs. 96,918 in place of Rs. 579 returned by the Hindu undivided family as such. The firms of Kanhialal Surajmal and Jagannathram Satyanarayan fruitlessly appealed to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner in the matter of S. 26A. The Appellate Asst. Commissioner observed that he had no such case before him. Thereupon they appealed to the Appellate Tribunal. The said Tribunal, by its order dated, Camp-Puri, 27-3-947, observed:

"No orders seem to have been passed by the I. T. O., Cuttack, to whom applications for registrations have been filed. Objection was also raised by the Hindu Undivided family Firm before the I. T. O. (Special Circle) that the income from these two partnerships should not be included in the income of the Hindu Undivided family. The Special I. T. O. has stated that there was no proceeding for registration of a partnership before him and, therefore, no application under S. 26A can be entertained by him. Against that order as confirmed by the Appellate Asst. Commissioner, the present appeals have been filed before the Tiounal. . . . . The appeal against the decision of the Special I. T. O. of the Hindu Undivided family Firm is pending before the Tribunal. . . . . We have no doubt that after the appeal of the Hindu Undivided family Firm is disposed of by the Tribunal, the I. T. O. Cuttack before whom the returns and the applications for registration of the appellant's firms were filed will deal with them in accordance with law. The two appeals are rejected."

The result is that the matter of assessment of the Firms will be governed by the decision of the Tribunal against which the present partition is directed.

[6] The Appellate Tribunal, agreeing with the orders of the Income-tax Officer (Special Circle) and the Appellate Asst. Commissioner, observed:

After considering the several matters brought before us and having heard both the parties to the appeal, we cannot but hold that the timber and yarn business continued to be in the ownership of the Hindu Undivided family of Jagannathram Gangram during the relevant accounting period commencing on 9-11-1942 and ending on 29-10-43."

[7] The assessee moved the Tribunal to state a case under sub-s. (1) of S. 66 of the Act. The reply of the Tribunal was:

"The evidence adduced by the assessee in support of its contention was examined and after considering in para. 7 of its order the salient features of that evidence, the Tribunal came to the conclusion that the timber and yarn businesses continued to be in the ownership of the Hindu Undivided family of Jagannathram Gangram during the relevant accounting period. That finding, based as it is on the evidence placed before it, is a finding of fact. No question of law arises out of the said finding and this application is dismissed."

times several inferences do, as their combined effect, create a legal fact. Declaration of intention to separate with ascertainment of shares by the members of a coparcenary creates disruption of a Hindu joint family. Here, the fact of declaration is a physical fact, so is the ascertainment of shares to be held in separate tenancy in pursuance of that declaration. But disruption of the joint family which create severence of the joint family which creates severence of the joint status into individual is the legal fact. Where the Court pronounces a finding of legal fact, it is more often than not a question of law to adjudge whether the materials are sufficient in in law to the establishment of the legal fact.

[9] The learned Tribunal refer to para. 7 of their order disposing of the appeal as containing the salient features of the evidence adduced by the assessee. The paragraph, therefore, needs examination. It is there that, if at all, the materials sufficient in law to make out the legal fact expressed, as found, have to be searched for. The documents of partnership of the two businesses of yarn and timber are rejected along with the certificate of registration with the Registrar of Firms on the ground that they were made on 25-1-1944 and June 1944 respectively. It is held that they being subsequent to the accounting period afford no evidence of the severence of the two businesses from the assets of the joint family property. This conclusion is arrived at even though the recitals in the document contradict such a conclusion. The partnership agreements themselves predicate that the division of the joint family assets, so far as the two businesses form an integral part of them, had taken place from 9-11-1942. The Tribunal observe :

"The clauses in the partnership agreements that the partnership businesses shall be deemed to have commenced on and from Kartik Sudi-1-Samvat 1999-2000, corresponding to 9-11-1942 have no meaning. This may have been mentioned despite the fact that the decision to take these businesses out of the family fold, was arrived at a much later date."

In the same strain the learned Tribunal say:

"Even the division of profits between the partners in the books of the two different businesses for the accounting year ended 29-10-1943 might have been done long after, i. e., after the partnership agreements were executed."

[10] The questions that can be addressed to are if the legal fact that the status of the joint family was not disrupted is supported by the physical fact, that the deeds of agreements recited the physical fact of division having taken place on 9-11-1942, and the profits, acquired in the businesses since that date up to 29-10-1943, were divided as between the partners and not carried into the joint family assets. The answer cannot but be in the negative. It has to be borne in mind that in the Head Office books relating to joint family concerns, the real division of capital of these two businesses, as between the five members of the family, each getting Rs. 35,000, was made on 9-11-42. It should also be borne in mind that partial partition of joint family assets by verbal agreements followed by necessary changes in the account-books of the family is permissible in law. Earlier in their judgment in para. 5, the Tribunal have observed :

"But mere entries in the books of account cannot alone be considered to be sufficient for the purpose of establishing transfer of a business from one ownership to another. There seems to be no agreement in writing for recording the arrangement to take out these two businesses from the family fold, and turn them into two separate partnerships."

This observation is undisputably based upon misconception of law. It has been held over and over again on high judicial authorities that division of businesses can best be achieved by necessary changes in the books of account. This also is in accord with commonsense.

[11] Secondly, the Tribunal observe in para. 7 :

"In addition to that, one of the books, viz., Malhacoolly account book, written up in 1943 showed the name of Jagannathram Gangaram despite the fact that the timber business had changed its name and belonged, as claimed by the appellants, to the firm of Jagannathram Satyanarayan."

This fact has not been considered in its context. The Tribunal has not examined the nature and contents of these books. They may, consistently with the assessee's theory, contain in the name of Jagannathram Gangaram if the entries therein present either the previous advances from or arrears due to Jagannathram Gangaram which were carried over to the year 1943. Besides, to demonstrate the uncertainty involved in such summary consideration, I shall quote from para. 13 of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner's judgment in Income-tax Appeal No. 80 of 1946-47 of the year of assessment 1945-46 and of the assessee Messrs. Jagannathram Gangaram, Cuttack, wherein he says :

"Under the heading 'Non-production of books' the I. T. O. has also discussed 'the few pages of rough Rokar and the few pages of Hatachitha 'which were discovered during a surprise visit on 30-11-1944. I have examined these books, so-called rough Rokar which consists of a few stitched papers in which there are stray jottings. It is alleged that they were found by the I. T. O. on the top of the Almirah and they did not belong to the assessee. The figures reproduced by the I. T. O. were practically the only figures noted therein and these related to the prior accounting year. This does not prove the existence of any regular rough Rokar for the previous year. The Hatachitha is similarly an obscure book-let consisting of entries in 2½ pages from 1-6-1944 to 7-9-1944. There are stray jottings regarding sale of timber amounting to Rs. 575-3-0 and grains Rs. 12-14-0. During this period the two timber accounts of the assessee produced before the I. T. O. showed a sale of Rs. 5088. The identity of the Chitha is of doubtful nature, and as noted in para. 4 above the I. T. O. in summing up his reasons for S. 23 (4) assessment has not laid any stress on these two booklets containing few pages."

[12] The Appellate Tribunal seems to think that the assessee on whom did lie the onus did not adduce sufficient evidence to establish his case. To sum up, the assessee has produced books of account containing severance of the concerned businesses from the joint family assets, the distribution of allotment of those businesses to several members or group of members, the documents sufficiently proclaimed to the world by their registration of creation of partnership firms, and the separate bank accounts and business transactions with the customers on the footing that they are separate partnership firms businesses as distinguished from joint family businesses. It was up to the Tribunal to consider the cumulative effect of these as to their sufficiency to establish the assessee's version. To counterbalance the above, it has not been shown that either the incomes derived from these businesses or the expenses incurred in them are shared in by all the members of the joint family as part of their joint family business. As regards interpolation of the transaction of division of capital in the Nakal (of yarn shop) within 6" of space, the Tribunal observe:

"The Appellate Assistant Commissioner has not come to any finding on this point in his appellate order dated 28-8-46."

Nor have they arrived at any finding of their own as to the suspicious feature of the writing. The Head Office books are the only relevant books in which the division of capital as such is to be duly entered into. No exception has been taken by any of the authorities concerned about them.

[13] The Appellate Tribunal had not dispelled in their judgment, the doubt created by the I. T. O. on the effectiveness of the partnership agreements executed on 25-1-44 on the ground that there could be no division of the joint family assets without all the five male members of family being signatories either as executants or otherwise thereto. This objection overlooks that the recitals in both the documents are identically the same and in them there is a clear acknowledgment by two members of the family in one document and three in the other that there has been such a division. Besides in those recitals the members of the timber business group disclaim any interest in the yarn business and the members of the yarn business group disclaim any interest in the timber business. These documents have, therefore, the necessary substance though not the form of being documents establishing complete division having taken place with the concurrence of all the members of the family in respect of the two businesses since 9-11-42.

[14] My conclusion, therefore, is that the finding of the legal fact recorded by the Appellate Tribunal, in order to be binding and conclusive as a finding of fact, must be based upon sufficient evidence. The legal fact must flow conclusively from the physical facts, if not established. On the high authority of Sir George Rankin, in the case of Sundar Singh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, C. P. & U. P., (1942) 10 I T. R. 457 : (A. I. R. (29) 1942 P. C. 57), it has been said :

"To decide that an Instrument is in this sense not genuine is to come to a finding of fact. Whether there was evidence upon which it was open to the Income-tax Authority to come to such a decision is a question of law."

[15] In the circumstances, stated above, we should issue a writ of mandamus to the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal, Madras Branch, to state a case as to whether there was sufficient evidence in the case to hold that the timber and yarn businesses were not severed from the joint family assets.

Criminal Revn. No. 112 of 1950, D/- 16-8-1950.

Police Act (1861), S. 30 — Thoroughfare — Meaning — Comparison with public place — Words and phrases.

If people gather as a matter of right in a particular place it may become a public place but it does not necessarily follow that the place is a "thoroughfare". For a place to be thoroughfare there must be unobstructed transit. That is to say, the place must be used as a passage for the people to pass through. A "thoroughfare" is wider expression than a "road" or a "street" but it is narrower than a "public place." [Para 5]

The foot of a hill close to a tank in the absence of evidence that it was used as a path by the public cannot be held to be a thoroughfare even assuming that the public had a right to gather there.

[Paras 5, 7]

Anno. Police Act S. 30 N. 2.

V. Pasayat — for Petitioners; Govt. Advocate — for Opposite Party.

Narasimham J. — The eight petitioners were convicted under Ss. 143 and 145, Penal Code, and also under S. 32, Police Act, and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. Their appeal was dismissed by the Additional Sessions Judge of Berhampur.

[2] The charge against them was that on 18-9-1945 they assembled at a meeting at the foot of a hill in village Roulpalli in Ganjam district with the common object of disobeying a notice issued by the District Superintendent of Police under S. 30, Police Act, requiring the obtaining of a licence as a condition precedent to the holding of meetings and assemblies on public roads and thoroughfares. While the meeting was being held a Police Officer approached the crowd and asked them to disperse. They however refused and then some of the leaders were arrested with the help of additional police force which arrived at the spot.

[3] The facts are all admitted. On 17-8-1949 the District Superintendent of Police with the sanction of the District Magistrate issued a notice under S. 30, Police Act, (Ex. 6), requiring all persons intending to convene or collect an assembly in any public road or thoroughfare to take a licence from the appropriate police officer. This notice was to remain in force for a period of three months from that date and the orders were duly promulgated in the locality. The petitioners admittedly collected at a public meeting on 18-9-1945 and none of them had a licence.

[4] In the charge framed against the petitioners the common object of the unlawful assembly was specified as follows: "the common object of which was to resist the execution of the orders under s. 30, Police Act." It was therefore the duty of the prosecution to prove beyond reasonable doubt the aforesaid common object of the assembly. That is to say, the prosecution must show that the common object of the persons who collected at the meeting was to hold a meeting without a licence on any public road or thoroughfare in the thanas specified in the notice. All that the prosecution has proved is that the petitioners and other persons collected at the foot of Gupteswar hill and that there was a tank close-by. No evidence at all was led to show that the place where the meeting was held was either a road or a thoroughfare. Mr. Pasayat therefore urged that the prosecution failed to prove the essential ingredients of the offences and that on the meagre evidence led by the prosecution it cannot be said that the petitioners either disobeyed the order of the Superintendent of Police issued under S. 30, Police Act, or else that they had the common object of disobeying such an order.

[5] It appears that this point was taken up in the lower appellate Court and that Court has met the point as follows :

"It is however clear that the meeting was being held near the Gupteswar temple. There was also a tank nearly and only the mere fact that it was at the foot of a hill does not detract from the character of the spot from being a thoroughfare where people admittedly gather as a matter of right and the dictionary meaning of the word is "a place of unobstructed transit" which obviously imports something wider than roads and streets."

The lower appellate Court appears to have overlooked the essential distinction between a public place on the one hand and a thoroughfare on the other. If people gather as a matter of right in a particular place it may become a public place but it does not necessarily follow that the place is a "thoroughfare". The dictionary meaning of the word, as pointed out by the lower appellate Court, indicates that there must be unobstructed transit. That is to say, the place must be used as a passage for the people to pass through. The Oxford Dictionary meaning is as follows :

"A road, street, lane or path forming a communication between two other roads or streets, or between two places; a public way unobstructed and open at both ends."

This indicates clearly that every public place will not necessarily become a thoroughfare unless that place is used as a passage for people to pass through. The lower appellate Court is undoubtedly right in saying that a "thoroughfare" is a wider expression than a "road" or "street," but it is narrower than a "public place". Therefore, in the present case, the prosecution should not have remained content with merely proving that meeting was held at the foot of Gupteswar hill close to a tank where the people may be expected to gather as a matter of right. The prosecution must further establish that the actual site of the meeting was used as a passage by the public. It may be that the meeting was held away from the path so that the traffic on the thoroughfare may not be disturbed and where the prosecution has failed to prove that it was held actually on a thoroughfare the petitioners can claim the right of acquittal.

[6] If statutes enacted after the passing of the Police Act are carefully scrutinised it seems clear that the Legislature was fully aware of the difference between a "publice place" on the one hand and a "way" or "thoroughfare" on the other. For instance, in para. 2 of sub-s. (1) of S. 133, Criminal P. C. the expressions "way which is or may be lawfully used by the public" and "public place" are used in juxtaposition so as to indicate that there is a difference in the meaning of the two expressions, Similarly, in S. 2 (24), Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, the expression "public place" was given the following wide definition.

A 'public place' means a road, street, way or other place, whether a thoroughfare or not, to which the public have a right of access, and includes any place or stand at which passengers are picked up or set down by a stage carriage."

This shows that though a thoroughfare may be a public place the converse may not always be correct.

[7] The same question has been considered in an Allahabad case reported in Emperor v. R. N. Basu, A. I. R. (20) 1933 ALL. 614 : (34 Cr. L. J. 1062) where it was held that the whole of a public park known as the Parshottem Das Park in Allahabad cannot be said to be a thoroughfare within the meaning of S. 30, Police Act. The present case is weaker for the prosetion than that Allahabad case where the public nature of the park was beyond doubt. Here the prosecution has not proved that the foot of the hill where the meeting was held was itself a public place. But even if we assume that the public have a right to collect there, we cannot further assume, in the absence of any evidence, that it was actually used as a path by the members of the public.

[8] The learned Advocate-General asked for a remand so as to enable the prosecution to show that the place where the meeting was held was actually thoroughfare. We have however gone through the case diary and we find that this aspect of the question was not considered at the time of the investigation. There is absolutely no material in the diary to show what was the nature of the place where the meeting was held. A remand at this belated stage may lead to fabrication of false evidence and unnecessary harassment to the petitioners.

[9] We would therefore allow this petition, set aside the convictions and sentences and acquit the petitioners.

He has been held guilty of having murdered one Bhima Panda on the night of 19-5-1949 and caused the disappearance of the dead body from the scene of the offence with the intention of screening himself. At the trial, there was another accused, A-2, the brother of the appellant but he has been given the benefit of doubt by the learned Sessions Judge and acquitted.

[2] The appellant Hadu Samanta is a resident of Humma Gada. The deceased Bhima Panda is a resident of the village Nadapandapalli, some distance away. The evidence on the side of the prosecution shows that the appellant and the deceased were on friendly terms and that the deceased was placing implicit confidence in the appellant. The appellant had taken a lot of gold and money from the deceased under the inducement that he would teach him some vidya whereby he could get gold and that he would perform a homa which would bring out to him golden pots from the earth. It is in evidence of the wife of the deceased, P. W. 13, that the deceased sold away his lands and the gold and silver ornaments on the person of his wife and his daughter and had given in all about Rs. 3000 to the appellant in the course of about two years prior to the date of the alleged occurrence, and that her husband used to go to the house of the appellant frequently to demand gold from Hadu and was being put off. It is also her evidence that her daughter grew into marriageable age and that the deceased accordingly pressed the appellant for return of his money in order to be able to perform the marriage of his daughter. This evidence of the wife of the deceased, P. W. 13, is substantially corroborated by her brother, P. W. 1.

[3] According to the prosecution case, the deceased went to the house of the appellant for the last time for demanding money 8 days prior to his death. On the day of the occurrence, he was returning to his village, but on the way by the time he arrived at the village called Borada, he felt suffering from some ailment and started belching and vomiting in front of the house of one Natia Parida, P. W. 5. P. W. 5 sent word to one Govinda Panda, nephew of the deceased who was running a tea-shop at a place called Munshipenta on the other side of the river which adjoined the village Borada. On the arrival of Govinda Panda, the deceased wanted to go back to the house of the appellant, presumably because he thought that his ailment was the result of some medicine which, according to him, he had taken at the house of the appellant, and wanted to take his advice for getting rid of the trouble. P. W. 5 was persuaded to take the deceased back to the village of the appellant for hire. According to his evidence, he took the deceased on a cart from Borada to Gada Humma and arrived there at about sun set time. He stopped in front of a house whose owner he could not identify. The owner was not there at the time and the deceased got out of the cart and sat in front of the house waiting for the arrival of the owner, coughing, belching and spitting all the time. The owner arrived at about 2 ghadis after sun set and Bhima Panda said to the owner:

"What medicine you gave me. I become restless. I could not go to my village, so I returned. I shall remain with you."

The owner told him: "All right." Thus saying he took him inside his house. The owner while taking the deceased inside his house asked P. W. 5 to wait to take him back. But the deceased refused to go back and accordingly P. W. 5 returned back to his village with the cart.

[4] Information that the deceased felt unwell while he was returning back to his village was sent by Govind Panda to the wife of the deceased, P. W. 13, on that very day. P. W. 13 accordingly went to Humma Gada early next morning, that is on 20th, and went straight to the house of the appellant. But she did not find him there. She found, however, his brother, A-2, who on enquiry told her that her husband was at the house till midnight, but that he did not know anything further about him as he himself had gone away to Rambha. She thereupon felt suspicious and went to the Karan of the place, P. W. 2 who also sent for the Karji, P. W. 8. They all went to the house of the appellant and she there made a statement, Ex. 2, in which she reported the fact that her husband was missing and that she suspected foul play by the appellant and made mention of the pre-existing back-ground of the relations between her husband and the appellant. The village officers had some search made for the deceased in the village and by about 1 P. M. got news that a dead body, was lying near a tank in the village. The wife of the deceased immediately went to the place and recognised the dead body as that of her husband. The matter was reported to the police by the Karji, P. W. 8, as per Ex. 5. There was the usual inquest and post mortem examination of the dead body. The post mortem report Ex. 3 and the evidence of the doctor, P. W. 4, shows that the deceased had on his body six injuries, namely, one contused wound on the left side of the face and head, one bruise with haemmatoma on the left side of the head and face, one bruise with haemmatoma on the left side of the neck. One bruise with haemmatoma on the front of the chest mainly on the left side, one echymosis on the left eye-brow and a bruise on the left skin. On dissection it was found that the muscles were found severely contused and there was lacerated blood clot throughout musculation. The lower jaw had broken into small pieces and also the greater part of the ramus of the same bone. The super part artery was macerated on the leftside of the neck and there were other internal injuries. The doctor was of the opinion that all the injuries were ante mortem and that the death of the person was probably due to the combined effect of the injuries on the neck, face and chest. The prosecution case as above stated is spoken to by P. Ws. 13, 2, 8, and 4. There can be no reasonable doubt that the deceased came back to the house of the appellant on the evening of 19-5-1949 and that he was not there early morning of the 20th when is wife, P. W. 13, came and made inquiries for him. These facts are clearly made out by the evidence of P. W. 5 and P.W. 13. That the deceased was inside the house of the appellant for some considerable time on the night of 19-5-1949, is also amply made out by the prosecution evidence. P. W. 3 an Inamdar in the village and a close neighbour of the appellant, says that he saw the deceased being brought to the house of the appellant by a cartman in a retching and vomiting condition at a time when the appellant was not in the house; that the appellant returned to his house at about 6 P. M. and that he heard the sound of retching and vomiting of the deceased from inside the house of the appellant till about 10 P. M. when he went to his bed. He no doubt admits in cross-examination that he did not himself see Bhima Panda on that occasion, but says that from the sound of the retching and vomiting, which he was hearing, he was able to recognise that it was Bhima Panda, presumably because according to his evidence, he knew the deceased as he was frequenting the appellant's house fairly often. P. W. 9 gives evidence that he went out from his house to the village shop to make purchases by about 8 P.M., that when on his way he passed the house of the appellant, he heard belching sound from inside the house of the appellant both when going to the shop and returning from the shop. P. W. 10 gives evidence that on that day at about 6 P. M. when he was going to the tank, he saw a person coming towards Humagada on a cart and that on his return journey he saw the cart standing at the door of the appellant and saw a man lying on the cart vomiting and making vomiting noise. P. W. 5 himself, the cart-man who brought the deceased from Borada to Hummagada has definitely stated that the deceased was taken inside the house presumably by the appellant. The accused in his statement before the Sessions Court admits that the deceased was brought in a cart to his house that evening when he was not in his house and that when he came to the house, he found the deceased sitting on the verandah vomiting and retching. He further says that he asked him to leave the place fearing that he might have been attacked with cholera and that the deceased thereupon sat on the cart and left his place. In his earlier statement before the committing Magistrate's Court, however, he stated as follows :

"Bhima came to my house on the evening of 19th. He was sitting on the cart and was vomiting. I took him inside my house. At about 8 P. M. in the night, I had gone away to Rambha to see the Jatra. I returned back by about 9 or 10 next morning. By the time, I returned, Bhima Panda, was not in my house."

In view of this categorical admission in the committing Magistrate's Court, it is clear that his present statement in the trial Court that he sent back the deceased immediately on seeing him by the very cart on which he came fearing that he might have been attacked by cholera is an after-thought and is false. The evidence of P. W. 5 definitely contradicts this. Further as appears from the evidence of P. W. 13, the second accused, the brother of the appellant had stated to her the next morning that Bhima Panda the deceased was inside the house until about 12 P. M. in the night when he left for Rambha for the Jatra. It must therefore be taken as conclusively established that Bhima Panda was in the house of the appellant on the night of the 19th for some considerable time.

[5] There can also be no reasonable doubt on the medical evidence of P. W. 4 and Ex. 3 that the deceased met with his death as a result of serious injuries inflicted on him. Learned counsel for the appellant argued that the effective cause of the death may not have been the injuries received by the deceased in the murderous assault but only poisoning. The basis for this suggestion is the fact that on dissection in the course of the post mortem examination, the viscera of the dead body had been taken out and sent for chemical analysis and that as appears from the report, Ex. 13, atropin, the active principle of Belladona and Dhatura had been detected in the viscera. Learned counsel for the appellant points out that on the evidence it is clear that the deceased had a lot of vomiting and retching prior to his death. He suggests that it must have been the effect of Dhatura poisoning. While this may be so, there is absolutely no indication in the evidence that such poisoning was the effective cause of the death in this case. None of the usual results of such poisoning on the internal organs of the body have been found on dissection as is clear from the post mortem certificate. The doctor has not been asked whether the death was likely to have been the result of poisoning. He is clear and definite that the deceased died as a result of the injuries received. There is therefore no room for speculation. Some faint suggestion has also been made that the deceased may have died as a result of a jackal bite. The foundation for this suggestion is a statement in Ex. 2, the report said to have been given by P. W. 13 to the village officers. In her evidence, however, she denied that her husband had been bitten by a mad jackal. There is therefore no proof of the same. It is clear beyond doubt that the deceased died as the result of a murderous assault.

[6] It is also beyond any doubt that the deceased met with his death in the village of the accused at some time before 1 P. M. on 20th since his dead body was found by the side of the village tank at 1 P. M. The only question is at whose hands did he meet with his death.

[7] There is admittedly no eye-witness to the murder. The prosecution seeks to bring home to the accused the offence of murder by relying on the circumstances. It is necessary therefore in the first instance to see what are the circumstances proved. There is the fact that the deceased was in the house of the accused on the night of the 19th some hours prior to the find, at 1 P. M. the next day, of the dead body of the deceased within a distance of probably less than a mile from his house. There is the further fact of the pressing demands of the deceased against the appellant, shortly prior to the occurrence, for the return of his money to enable him to perform his daughter's marriage, which might render it not unlikely that the appellant might have wished to do away with the deceased. A few other circumstances have also been brought out in the prosecution evidence some of which appear to be of no consequence. The Sub-Inspector of Police, P. W. 15, in a search of the house of the appellant on 26th recovered from the room in his occupation, one blood-stained lungi, Ex. 5, one blood-stained gamuchha, Ex. 6, two stones, Exs. 1 and 1-A and one grinding stone, Ex. 7, one door-plank, Ex. 2 and a clod of earth from his wall, Ex. 8. The Chemical Examiner has certified that Exs. 5, 6, 7 and 8 had stains of blood and sent them up to the Serologist for test as to the origin of the blood. The Serologist's report shows that the blood stains had disintegrated and their origin could not be detected. No significance therefore attaches at all to the find of these articles on seizure, especially having regard to the fact that the seizure was as late as nearly a week after the alleged occurrence. It further appears from the evidence of the Sub-Inspector, P. W. 15 that on 29 5-1949, he seized a cart lying by the side of the road near the house of one Dinabandhu Raja, a brother-in-law of the appellant. He found some blood stains on it and according to his evidence, there was no other cart in the village. The blood has not been certified to be human blood and it is impossible to attach any value to this evidence especially having regard to the fact that the seizure is ten days after the occurrence.

[8] The most important incriminating circumstance however on which the prosecution relies is this. It is in the evidence of P. W. 6, a resident of Raghunthpor, a village about a mile from Hummagada, that on 19th, he had taken cart-load of fruit on hire from his village to Pratappur, Jaleswar Khandi, and that on his return therefrom by about 10 P. M., he passed through Humagada village. As he was coming in his cart, he found a cart standing at the door of the accused on the road with bullocks unyoked and tied to the cart. The cart was blocking his way and he accordingly asked the man, standing by to shift the cart a little to allow his cart to pass. That person asked him to take the cart by the side way as a dead body has been loaded on it. Out of fear he left the place. He says in chief examination that as a matter of fact he saw a dead body on the cart, but in cross-examination he explains that he found a man lying in the cart and took it to be a dead body when the man standing near the cart told him that it was a dead body. It was a dark night though there was visibility. He saw the appellant and his brother sitting on the verandah of their house at the time, but that he cannot recognise the person standing near that cart. If this evidence can be taken as proving that a dead body was actually in front of the house of the accused on a cart the night of 19th at about 10 P. M., it undoubtedly leads to a reasonable inference that there was a death within the house of the accused that night to the knowledge of the appellant and this would be a very strong circumstance against the accused. Learned counsel for the appellant urges that this evidence is not admissible since what is proved is only the hearsay of some unidentified person on the basis of which this P. W. 6, believed that he saw a dead body at the time. He also urges that what P. W. 6, may have seen was only the cart in which the deceased was brought by P. W. 5 at the time when he was waiting for the arrival of the accused and just at the time when the accused had come. There is however no room for thinking that the cart which P. W. 6, saw, was the cart of P. W. 5, P. W. 6, says that the cart which he saw was an open cart while it is in the evidence of P. W. 3 that the cart on which the deceased was first brought to the house of the accused was a cart with a Doli in which the deceased at that time was lying. Furthermore, according to the evidence of P. W. 5 he left the deceased inside the house of the accused by about two Gadhias as after sunset which he puts at 8 P. M. and left the village presumably with the cart, but according to the evidence of P. W. 6, he saw the cart on which a body was lying in front of the house of the accused at about 9 or 10 P. M. on the night. Though the exact time to which these witnesses speak may not be accurate, it does not appear likely from the evidence that P. W. 6 refers to the same point of time at which P. W. 5 was still waiting in front of the house of the accused. It must therefore be taken that what P. W. 6 speaks to, is not the cart of P. W. 5 at the time when he brought the deceased to the house of the appellant. One remarkable matter in this connection may be noticed. The accused when asked in the Sessions Court "Have you heard the evidence of P. W. 6? What have you to say to it "answers" Yes, he went past my house at 8 P. M. while Bhima Panda was on the cart alive." This taken in connection with his other answer in the Sessions Court that he sent back the deceased on the very cart of P. W. 5 fearing that he was attacked with cholera without taking him inside the house may be taken to mean that according to him, P. W. 6 saw him only when the deceased was on the cart of P. W. 5. But as already pointed out above, the defence of the accused that the deceased was sent back immediately on the same cart and was not taken inside his house is clearly false, and the evidence shows as above stated that what P. W. 6 saw was not the cart of P. W. 5. The above quoted answer of the accused however clearly shows that P. W. 6 has stated the truth when he deposed that he saw a cart with a body lying on it in front of the accused's house, P. W. 6 has not recognised the body as that of Bhima Panda, but this gap has been supplied by the accused himself in his answer. The question still remains whether what P. W. 6 say at the time was Bhima Panda alive or already dead. This depends entirely on the admissibility of the statement made by the unidentified person standing by the side of the cart to P. W. 6 to the effect that there is a dead body on the cart and offering it as a reason for taking P. W. 6's cart away by another route. The learned Sessions Judge while noticing that this statement may not be admissible being hearsay, thinks that the person who made the statement must be treated as an accomplice and that the statement is therefore admissible on that ground. The learned Judge is obviously wrong in this view. Though no doubt the unidentified person was in charge of the cart on which the dead body was found which according to his own statement was a dead body, there is no material on which it can be said that he was aware that the death was the result of a crime and that he was therefore participating in the offence of screening the evidence of the crime. It cannot therefore be assumed that the unidentified person is an accomplice. But even if he is, his statement cannot be evidence without his being examined in Court. The learned Judge obviously makes a confusion between an accomplice and a co-accused. The statement of a co-accused may be admissible in certain circumstances, though not examined, but not that of an accomplice, who is available to be examined. It may no doubt be taken to have been proved from the evidence of P. W 6 that an unidentified person stated to him that there was a dead body on the cart and that P. W. 6 believed it to be so. But this obviously is not enough unless the statement of the unidentified person is admissible as substantive evidence to prove the existence of the dead body itself at the time. The learned Government Advocate very strongly urged that it is admissible on the principle of the admissibility of res gestae falling within S. 6, Evidence Act. He also says that since the statement was made while, according to the evidence of P. W. 6 the accused and his brother were sitting on the verandah, it would be admissible under S. 8. The argument based on S. 8, can be summarily disposed of. What is in evidence is only that at the time when the statement was made, the appellant was on the verandah. There is no proof as to what was his reaction when he heard it or if he heard it at all. What is admissible under S. 8 is the conduct of the appellant, and the statement which effected or influenced that conduct. Though silence may in certain circumstances, amount to conduct there is no proof even of a positive silence which may conceivably be taken to be conduct. There is therefore no basis for the argument that the statement is admissible under S. 8.

[9] What therefore has to be considered is whether the statement is admissible under S. 6 Evidence Act, which runs as follows :

"Facts which, though not in issue, are so connected with a fact in issue as to form part of the same transaction, are relevant, whether they occurred at the same time and place or at different times and places."

The argument strongly urged by the learned Government Advocate is that on the assumption that the murder may have taken place in the house of the appellant and that the body was disposed of by carrying the dead body on a cart and throwing it away at or about the place where it was ultimately found, the whole of the series of events from the murderous assault to the throwing away of the dead body constituted one transaction and that the statement of the unidentified person spoken to by P. W. 6 was part of that series of events and that the said statement being a spontaneous reaction to the request of P.W. 6 for removing the cart from his way is admissible. He relies not only on S. 6, but also on the illustration "A" thereto, to show that spontaneous statements in the course of the transaction are admissible, as being res gestae, The learned Government Advocate referred us to authorities from tex books on the principle of res gestae. The term "res gestae" is not used in the Evidence Act and the use of that term as indicating any well-defined and intelligible principle has been strongly criticised by learned authors on Evidence like Phipson and Wigmore. They point out that it has been responsible more for confusion than for any clear definition. It also appears from the text books that the rule relating to res gestae has been differently understood and applied in English Law and in American Law. It is not therefore helpful to try to determine the admissibility of the statement in question by any elaborate reference to either the American Law or the English Law. We must only turn to S. 6, Evidence Act. Illustration "A" to S. 6 no doubt has indicated that the spontaneous statement of a bystander who sees the commission of murder is admissible. From this it cannot be deduced as is contended that all spontaneous statements in someway connected with the transaction under investigation are admissible. According to S. 6 what is admissible is a fact which is connected with the fact in issue as "part of the transaction."

"A transaction may consist of a single incident occupying a few minutes or it may be spread over a variety of facts etc. Occupying a much longer time and occurring on different occasions or at different places". (See Sircar on Evidence, p. 54).

Where the transaction consists of different acts, in order that the chain of such acts may constitute the same transaction, they must be connected together by proximity of time, proximity or unity of place, continuity of action and community of purpose or design. (See Amrita Lal v. Emperor, A. I. R. (3) 1916 Cal. 188 at p. 196 : (16 Cr. L. J. 497). Hearsay statements to be admissible as substantive evidence of the truth of the facts stated therein must themselves be "part of the transaction" and not merely uttered in the course of the transaction. Where the transaction is a single incident, a statement by a person who was perceiving the incident made simultaneously with the occurrence of the incident, may, with justification, be said to be part of the transaction inasmuch as it is the result of a spontaneous psychological reaction through perception. If 'A' assaults 'B' in the neck with a knife and this is seen by a bystander who exclaims 'A' is killing 'B' the exclamation is as much a part of the transaction of murder as the gushing out of the blood from the wound inflicted on the neck with the only difference that the wound inflicted is a physical reaction to the act and the other is the psychological reaction through perception. While no doubt the spontaneity of the statement is the guarantee of the truth, the reasons for its admissibility under S. 6 is that it is a part of the transaction and not merely because it is spontaneous. It must further be noted that the statement as that in Ill "A" to S [6?] is relevant only if it is that of a person who has seen the actual occurrence and who uttered it simultaneously with the incident or so soon thereafter as to make it reasonably certain that the speaker is still under the stress of the excitement caused by his having seen the incident. In the present case, in order that the statement in question may be admissible in evidence as substantive proof of the murder, it is not enough that it has been made spontanously in the course of the transaction constituted by the murder and the disposal of the dead body, but it must be made out that the person had himself seen the commission of the murder and that the statement was made almost simultaneously with it. There is no indication in this case at all that the unidentified person who made the statement had actually witnessed the murder or that no substantial time had elapsed between the occurrence of the murder and the making of the statement spoken to by P. W. 6, assuming that the murder had already taken place. Nor can the said statement be considered by any stretch of imagination to be a part of the transaction. The statement was made in answer to a request made by P. W. 6 for removing the cart out of the way. It was a statement which arose out of the mere casual accident of P. W. 6 going that way in his cart. Therefore the proximate connection of the statement is not with the murder and the attempt to dispose of the dead body, but with the mere accidental fact of some other cart coming along that way. No kind of connection by way of continuity or community of design or purpose can be traced between the murder or the disposal of the dead body and the statement made. All that can be said is that the statement was made in the course of the transaction, but it cannot be said to be part of it. If statements of that kind arising out of such accidental facts occurring in the course of a chain of events which constitute the transaction are to be treated as part of the transaction and admitted in evidence under S. 6, it will lead to a serious inroad on the salutary rule prohibiting hearsay evidence. I can see no reason for extension of S. 6 to statements of the kind in question in the present case and no authority has been placed before me to justify it. I am therefore of the opinion that the statement of the unidentified person to P. W. 6 at about 10 P. M. that night that there was a dead body in front of the appellant's house is inadmissible in evidence.

[10] Ruling out the statement, therefore, the only two circumstances that remain against the appellant are as already stated, (1) the fact that the deceased was with the appellant in his house for some considerable time prior to the finding of the dead body the next day at about a mile from his house, the deceased having gone there in a state of illness. (2) The fact that the appellant might have had a substantial motive to do away with the deceased. To this, may be added the further fact that the accused gives prevaricating explanations in the committing Court and in the Sessions Court as to whether the deceased was with him on the night of 19th and that while he had no explanation to offer in the Committing Magistrate's Court as to how the deceased who admittedly came to his house in a sick condition disappeared by next morning, he gives a false explanation in the Sessions Court that the deceased was never taken into his house but was sent away immediately on the very cart on which he came.

[11] I am clear in my mind that the two circumstances stated above, apart from the attitude or explanation of the accused are not by themselves enough to bring home the guilt to the accused. The mere fact that a person has been last seen with the murderer is not by itself enough, unless it appears that he was in the company of the deceased at or about the time when and at the place where the murder appears to have been actually committed. There is no clear indication in this case where and when the murder was committed. As regards the existence of motive, it is well established that the mere existence of motive is by itself not an incriminating circumstance. The only hesitation, I have felt in the case, was whether the false explanations and the prevaricating pleas of the appellant in this case can be treated as an additional circumstance which taken in connection with the other two circumstances can be said to establish the guilt of the accused beyond any reasonable doubt. I have come to the conclusion that in the circumstances of this case, this is not enough and that the accused must be given the benefit of doubt, however grave the suspicion against him may be. The absence of any explanation or a false explanation no doubt is a circumstance that is sometimes relied on to bring home the guilt of the accused in a case depending on circumstantial evidence, on the ground that the facts proving his innocence must be within his special knowledge and that the burden of at least offering a reasonable explanation is on him on the principle of S. 106, Evidence Act. But that would be so only in a case where other circumstances proved are so sufficiently strong against him as to point to him as very probably the culprit and therefore calling for his explanation. If in such a situation the accused gives an explanation which may be reasonably true in the proved circumstances, the accused gets the benefit of doubt, though he may not prove the truth of the explanation. See Rex v. Schama and Abramovitch, (1915) 84 L. J. K. B. 396: (112 L. T. 480). But if the accused in such a case does not give an explanation at all or gives a false explanation, this by itself is a circumstance which may well turn the scale against him. But to infer the guilt of the accused from absence of reasonable explanation in a case where the other circumstances are not by themselves enough to call for his explanation is to relieve the prosecution of its burden. In this case, as I have already pointed out, there is nothing else except the presence of probable motive and the fact that the deceased was in the house of the accused on the previous night. The position might have been different if the medical evidence indicated that the death must have occurred at a time when the deceased was found, on the evidence, to be inside the appellant's house or if any traces of human blood had been discovered inside or in front of his house or on his person or on the articles connected with him and likely to have been used in the murder. But no such facts have been proved in this case. I am, therefore, of the opinion that however grave may be the suspicion against the accused, the guilt cannot be said to have been brought home to him. The appeal must accordingly be allowed and his conviction and sentence must be set aside and he must be acquitted.

[12] I may add that one cannot help feeling that if there had been some vigorous investigation in this case, sufficient material connecting the appellant with the crime might probably have been discovered. The death must have taken place some time on the night of 19th and the F. I. R. was lodged in the police station on 20th. The A. S. I. P. W. 14 proceeds to the spot on 21st and holds the inquest and seizes only a gunny bag which is not proved to have any connection with this case. The Sub-Inspector, P. W. 15, arrived on the scene only on 22nd. Even then he did nothing more than searching the house of the appellant in respect of some medicine which he could not find. He apparently misled himself by some theory of poisoning. Neither the A. S. I. nor the Sub-Inspector, looked for the traces of any murder that may have been committed inside the house of the appellant which they should have done in view of the apparent injuries on the dead body as disclosed from the inquest report, Ex. 1. The inquest report shows serious external injuries on the head and the left side of the face appearing to have been caused by some weapon. In the face of this, it is surprising that the Sub-Inspector waited as appears from his evidence for the receipt of the post mortem report before he made any further attempts to look for traces of blood in and around the house of the appellant. In fact, he actually did search only on 26th having received the post mortem report on 24th, but by then he could find nothing of any consequence. It is also a matter for regret that sufficient efforts do not appear to have been made to trace the person who was by the side of the cart and who stated to P. W. 6 that there was a dead body on the cart. P. W. 6 has no doubt stated that he is not able to identify him and there may have been consequent difficulty. But one cannot help feeling that some further vigorous efforts might have helped to secure that person to be available either as a witness or as a co-accused.

Second Appeal No. 277 of 1947, D/- 31-8-1950.

(a) Hindu law -Religious endowment — Family endowment—Permanent lease of endowed lands — Right to avoid—Who can exercise — Sale of lands in execution of decree for cess—Auction-purchaser has no right to avoid lease.

Where a permanent lease is created by a Marfatdar of a deity in respect of lakheraj lands belonging to a family endowment of a private nature, the right of avoidance of the permanent lease on the ground of want of legal necessity can be exercised by the succeeding Marfatdar or the members of the family. A Court auction-purchaser in execution of a decree for arrears of road-cess against the endowed estate does not, by his purchase of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, acquire the right to avoid the prior permanent lease. [Para 7]

(b) Tenancy Laws—Orissa Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1913), Ss. 3 (16) and 74 — Cess is not rent — Decree for cess against estate-holder — Execution sale—Estate does not pass to purchaser.

Though 'cess' may be realisable under S. 47, Bengal Cess Act, 1880, as if it is rent, it is not 'rent' under the Orissa Tenancy Act and a sale held in execution of a decree for arrears of cess against an estate-holder who can by no means come within the meaning of S. 74, Orissa Tenancy Act, as a permanent tenure-holder or as a tenant as defined by S. 3 (23) of that Act, does not pass the estate itself to the purchaser. [Paras 12 & 13]

B. K. Pal and G. Jagati — for Appellants; L. K. Dasgupta—for Respondents.

Jagannadhadas J. — This is an appeal by defendants 2 to 4 lessees from defendant 1, against an order of remand by the lower appellate Court. The plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of 4.68 acres of Lakhraj Bahel lands which belong to defendant 1, a Thakur represented by a Marfatdar. The plaintiff is the landlord of the Touzi to which this Lakhraj land was attached for purposes of road-cess under S. 85, Bengal Cess Act. The Lakhrajdar, defendant 1 fell into arrears with reference to road-cess for the year 1940-41. Under S. 47 of the Cess Act the Touzidar is entitled to recover such arrears as arrears of rent. The plaintiff accordingly filed a suit for the said arrears, obtained a decree and purchased the property in execution sale of, the said decree. He got delivery in pursuance thereof on 11-4-41. Defendant 1 through his Marfatdar, had previously created in favour of defendants 2 to 4, a permanent lease dated 28-8-37, marked, Ex. A. The plaintiff claims to recover possession of the land covered by the permanent lease on the footing that by virtue of his purchase in court auction the prior permanent lease has become annulled and that therefore he is entitled to recover possession free of that lease. In the alternative, he claims that the lease was created by the Marfatdar of the deity without any legal necessity and that he is entitled to prove the same and get the land freed from the permanent lease on such proof.

[2] The trial Court held that the plaintiff did not obtain any first charge by virtue of the purchase which he took in execution of the decree for arrears of road-cess and that therefore he cannot treat the previous permanent lease as annulled. He also held that since he has purchased only the right, title and interest of defendant 1 as on the date when he obtained the decree, he was not entitled to question the validity of the prior lease created by defendant 1. The suit was accordingly dismissed.

[3] The plaintiff appealed to the lower appellate Court. On appeal the point relating to the annulment of the prior permanent lease as the legal result of his purchase in execution of the decree for arrears of road-cess does not appear to have been seriously pressed. The point which appears to have been argued is as to the locus standi of the plaintiff to question the validity of the permanent lease on the ground that it was not executed for legal necessity. The learned appellate Judge was of the opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to challenge the validity. But in view of the fact that the question as to the existence or otherwise of the legal necessity did not form the subject-matter of a specific issue and trial, though raised in the pleadings, be, at the request of both parties, remanded the case to the trial Court in order that an issue about the question of legal necessity may be framed and tried and decided. It is against this order of remand that defendants 2 to 4 have come up in appeal before us.

[4] The main point argued on behalf of the appellants is that the learned appellate Judge was wrong in thinking that the court-auction-purchaser, the plaintiff, was entitled to challenge the validity of the prior permanent lease by defendant 1. He argues that the validity of the lease could be challenged only by the succeeding Marfatdar of the deity and for its benefit and that the right, title and interest conveyed under the court-auction-purchase does not convey the right of the judgment-debtor to question the lease. He further urges that Mahomed Muzami Ullah Khan v. Mithu Lal, 33 ALL. 783 : (11 I. C. 220), on which the learned Judge relies cannot be applied to a case like the present. I agree with the contention of the appellant. In discussing this legal question, it is necessary to mention that it has been stated by counsel for the appellant that the property we are concerned with here, is property which belongs to what may be called a family endowment constituting a private trust and that the case has gone on that footing though there is nothing very expressly on the record to substantiate it. This assertion on behalf of the appellant's counsel has not been challenged by the respondents' counsel who agrees that, that was the impression on which the case was conducted throughout. I state this at the outset of the consideration of the legal question, because it is conceivable that if the endowment was a public endowment, different considerations may arise.

[5] The question that arises for decision is whether when in respect of a family endowment of a private nature, a perpetual lease which may be invalid for want of legal necessity, is created, the subsequent purchaser thereof in court-auction, has the right to challenge the validity of the lease. There is no doubt that the succeeding Marfatdar or other members of the family interested in the endowment and upkeep are entitled to challenge the validity for the benefit of the deity. It is said that this right of challenge is incidental to the property which has been transferred and passes to the transferee with the property transferred. It is argued on behalf of the respondents that once a property is transferred, the right to challenge any prior transaction affecting it which in any way detracts from the full enjoyment of the property is incidental to the transfer itself as being an incident of the property-right transferred. In support of this certain cases have been cited of which it is sufficient to refer to the cases in Dickinson v. Burrell, (1866) 1 Eq. 337 : (35 L J. Ch. 371) and Khudi Ram v. Somnath, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Cal. 451 : (143 I. C. 575). This legal position is undoubtedly correct. But it does not follow that where the right of challenge is a right of avoidance and where the transfer is of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor in court sale, such right of avoidance is necessarily incidental to the transfer of right, title and interest. That must depend upon the nature of the right of avoidance and the ambit of the right, title and interest purchased. A prior transaction may be totally void and in such a case the right of challenge and avoidance may be nothing more than the obtaining of declaration that the property is unaffected by the prior transaction. On the other hand, a prior transaction may be avoidable either in the sense that it is good until actually set aside or though invalid from its inception, such invalidity can be taken advantage of only by certain persons who have either the option to affirm or disaffirm the transaction. (See In re Appava Naicken, A. I. R. (18) 1931 Mad. 377 at p. 379 : (128 I. C. 695) ; Kesheo Prasad Singh v. Chandrika Prasad, A. I. R. (10) 1923 Pat. 122 at p. 128 : (2 Pat. 217) and Hanmanthappa v. Dundappa, A.I.R. (21) 1934 Bom. 234 at p. 239 : (151 I C. 1043), for the distinction between void and voidable. In such cases, the right of avoidance is in the nature of a personal right and is not necessarily implicit in the transfer of the property. The person affected by the prior transaction having the option either to ratify or affirm the transaction it cannot necessarily be assumed that that option which is personal to him has been transferred, even assuming that such a personal right can be the subject-matter of the transfer, in view of the fact that the property itself is transferred. See Inayat Elahi v. Hardeo Sahai, A. I. R. (11) 1924 ALL. 29 at p. 30 : (45 ALL. 692).

[6] Learned counsel for the respondents has drawn our attention to the case in P. Kamaraju v. Gunnayya, A. I. R. (11) 1924 Mad. 322 : (74 I. C. 1003) and similar cases, but they are cases where the prior transaction consisted of an absolute sale of the entire property under circumstances which are open to challenge and the later transfer is of that very property by the very person entitled to challenge and in such a case, the later transfer itself amounts to exercise of the right of avoidance by the very person entitled to avoid it originally. But where as in the present case, the prior transaction was only a transfer of limited interest in the property, a subsequent transfer may be merely of the outstanding interest or it may be of the property itself under terms and in circumstances which express or imply the avoidance of the prior transaction by the transferor himself, what it actually is depends on facts.

[7] In the present case, the prior transaction sought to be challenged by the plaintiff is a permanent lease created by the Marfatdar, defendant 1 on behalf of the deity. If, as has been assumed, the endowment is a private family trust, the only persons entitled to challenge the alienation are the members of the family. They have the right either to affirm it, or disaffirm it because it is well settled that they could even withdraw the endowment from the trust by their consensus as held by the Privy Council in Durga Nath v. Ramchunder, 2 Cal. 311 : (4 I. A. 52 P. C.). It therefore follows that the right of avoidance of the permanent lease in this case could be exercised only by the succeeding Marfatdar or the members of the family. The plaintiff cannot be said to have that option vested in him as a result of his court-auction purchase. Indeed a court-auction purchase which is in invitum and not based on the consensus of the judgment-debtors, cannot be taken to proceed on the footing of the judgment-debtor having previously exercised his right of avoidance. There are no doubt certain cases where a court auction-purchaser has been permitted to exercise the right of avoidance which his judgment-debtor had. But all the cases of such kind which have been brought to our notice are cases relating to the purchase in court auction of the undivided interest of a Hindu coparcener and they stand on a special footing. The right of the court auction-purchaser in such cases to challenge a prior avoidable transaction has been based on the Privy Council decisions which recognise the equity of the court-auction-purchaser to compel the partition of the family property which his judgment-debtor could have. See Deendayal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh, 4 I. A. 247 : (3 Cal. 198 P. C.), Balgobind v. Narain Lal, 15 ALL. 339 : (20 I. A. 116 P. C.). The case in Mahomed Muzami Ulah Khan v. Mithu Lal, 33 ALL. 783 : (11 I. C. 220) which has been relied on by the lower appellate Court is a case which is based on the authority of those cases. It appears to me therefore that the plaintiff in this case has not, by his purchase of the right, title and interest of his judgment-debtor, acquired the right to avoid the prior permanent lease. The question of legal necessity does not therefore arise and the order of remand by the lower appellate Court is erroneous.

[8] The respondent has filed a memo of cross-objection raising the question that by virtue of his auction-purchase in execution of decree for arrears of land-cess, he takes the property free of any prior encumbrance and is therefore entitled to treat the permanent lease as annulled. If this contention is correct, the suit is bound to succeed on this single ground alone. It appears, however, from the judgment of the lower appellate Court that this question was not pressed before that Court, though the point had been decided against the plaintiff in the trial Court. Since, however this is a pure question of law, we have allowed learned counsel for the respondent to argue it. I am satisfied, on a consideration of the relevant provisions, that his argument is untenable. It is no doubt true that the arrear of road-cess is collected by the Touzidar under S. 47, Cess Act, whereby he can collect it as an arrear of rent. Learned counsel for the respondents relies on the definition of the word "rent" in the Orissa Tenancy Act and points out that that definition for certain purposes includes also any money recoverable under any enactment for the time being in force as if it was rent. One of the purposes so specified is S. 74, Orissa Tenancy Act, under which a landlord has a first charge. It appears to me, however, that the arrear of land-cess cannot be treated as rent falling within this definition. That definition by the very connotation of the words and phrases therein applies as between persons from whom the rent as such is recoverable, for instance, as between a landlord and tenant and the like. It is unnecessary for me however to deal with it at any great length as the same will be dealt with fully by my learned brother.

[9] In the result, the appeal must be allowed and the suit must be dismissed with costs throughout.

[10] Panigrahi J.—I agree, and would like to add a few words. Mr. Dasgupta appearing for the plaintiff-respondent relied upon certain provisions of the Cess Act (Bengal Act IX [9] of 1880) and certain other provisions of the Orissa Tenancy Act of 1913, and contended that 'cess' is rent within the meaning of the Orissa Tenancy Act and what passed at a sale held in execution of a decree for arrears of cess is the tenure itself and not merely the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor. As this question is of some importance, I would like to make a few observations.

[11] The contention is that under S. 47, Cess Act, the holder of an estate to whom any sum may be payable under the provisions of the Cess Act may recover the same with interest at the rate of twelve and a half percent per annum in the same manner as if they were arrears of rent due to him. It is next pointed out that the Orissa Tenancy Act defines rent as including "also money recoverable under any enactment for the time being in force as if it was rent." It is, therefore, contended that "cess" is rent within the meaning of the Orissa Tenancy Act.

[12] It is next contended that S. 74, Orissa Tenancy Act, which creates a first charge in respect of rent on a holding is one of the sections specifically mentioned in S. 3 (16) of the said Act in defining rent. It is, therefore, argued that cess' like 'rent' is a first charge upon the holding within the meaning of S. 74, Orissa Tenancy Act. If this is correct, the rest of the provisions of the Tenancy Act would undoubtedly apply and what would pass at the execution sale is the tenure itself and not the mere right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor. If the hypothesis on which this argument proceeds is correct, the result must follow. But I am unable to accede that the hypothesis itself is right. To appreciate the position, it is necessary to refer to certain provisions of the Cess Act. Section 4, Bengal Cess Act defines an "estate" as land included under one entry in the general registers of revenue-paying lands and of revenue-free lands prepared and maintained by the Collector of a District under the Land Registration Act, 1876, or under any similar law for the time being in force. The land is admittedly registered as Lakhraj-Babel of defendant 1 recorded under special NO. 8753 and general NO. 31239 of Mauza Bichitrapur. Section 41 (1), Cess Act prescribed the mode of payment of cess by the holder of an estate. It says:

"Every holder of an estate shall yearly pay to the Collector the entire amount of the local cess calculated on the annual value of the lands comprised in such estate ....."

and S. 41 (2) prescribes how a tenure-holder is to pay the cess and S. 41 (3) prescribes how a cultivating raiyat and the holder of a chaukidari chakaran is to pay cess for every year. Section 85 of the Act makes a special provision for Orissa and lays down that "any revenue-free estate not exceeding 500 standard bighas in extent, of which the valuation shall have been completed, shall, for the purpose of payment and levy of the cess due in respect thereof, be annexed to any other estate within the ambit of which it is situate or which it adjoins."

It would, therefore, appear on a mere reading of these provisions that defendant 1 who is the holder of an estate is liable to pay his cess to the Collector and for purpose of collection this estate has been annexed to the neighbouring estate of the plaintiff, namely, plaintiff's Touzi NO. 3797. I may also mention here that under S. 9, Cess Act, any cess payable by an estate-holder to the Collector may be realised as a public demand and would obviously come within the public demand enumerated in Sch. I, Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act, 1914. The question, therefore, is, if the holder of the neighbouring touzi has been authorised by the Collector to collect the cess due from this estate, does he fulfil the character and role of the Collector and does the estate-holder become his tenant within the meaning of Orissa Tenancy Act? It is clear that if the Collector were to file a suit or to recover it under the Public Demands Recovery Act, what would pass to the purchaser in such a sale held by him is only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor and not the estate itself. See Mahanund Chuckerbutty v. Banimadhub Chatterjee, 24 Cal. 27 and Ahsanulla v. Manjura Banoo, 30 Cal. 778. Does it make any difference if that collection is made by the holder of a Tauzi to whom the right of collection has been assigned by the Collector? Section 74, Orissa Tenancy Act, on which reliance has been placed runs as follows:

"Where a tenant is a permanent tenure-holder, a bajiaftidar, a raiyat holding at fixed rate, a chandnadar or an occupany raiyat, he shall not be liable to ejectment for arrears of rent, but his tenure or holding shall be liable to sale in execution of a decree for the rent thereof, and the rent shall be a first charge thereon."

Is defendant 1 who is holder of an estate, a tenure-holder, within the meaning of the Bengal Cess Act? "Tenure" is defined in S. 4 (3) of the said Act as including every interest in land, whether rent-paying or not, save and except an "estate" as above defined. The "holder of an estate" has been in explicit terms excluded from the definition of "tenure." Defendant 1 can by no means come within the meaning of S. 74, Orissa Tenancy Act, as a permanent tenure-holder. Nor can his status be that of a tenant as defined by the Act itself. 'Tenant' is defined in S. 3 (23) and

"means a person who holds land under another person and is, or but for a special contract would be liable to pay rent for that land to that person."

Defendant 1, as has already been pointed out, holds the land under the Collector on a revenue-free tenure and not as a tenant under the plaintiff. Section 74, Orissa Tenancy Act, therefore, cannot be invoked by the plaintiff in this case, and the definition of "rent" must apply only to such classes of people between whom there is the relationship of landlord and tenant.

[13] My conclusion, therefore, is that "cess" is not "rent," though it may be realisable as if it was rent under the Orissa Tenancy Act and a sale held in execution of a decree against an estate-holder doe not pass the estate itself to purchaser. The plaintiff must, therefore, fail on this ground also.

[14] In the result the suit must fail and the appeal allowed with costs as has been directed by my learned brother.

(a) Hindu law— Adoption—Custom—Civil P. C. (1908), S. 100.

The adoption of a daughter's son is valid by custom though not according to general Hindu law. The question of the validity of such adoption cannot be allowed to be taken for the first time in second appeal. [Para 2]

Anno. C. P. C., S. 100 N. 21.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 9 — Right to officiate as priest.

Though the right to officiate as a priest or as a Guru simpliciter is not a civil right, such a right has been recognised where it amounts to an office attached to an institution such as a temple. When the question whether there is such an office is in issue, the fact that there are emoluments of a non-gratuitous character payable out of the funds of the institution, has generally been considered as relevant though the absence thereof is not always decisive. (c) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 9—Claim to office—Test.

The crucial test in considering whether the claim to the purohitship of a temple is a claim to an office or not is whether there are duties attached to the purohitship which are enforceable by law, custom or usage, whether by deprivation or other temporal sanction. [Para 15]

R. K. Ratho and B. K. Pal—for Appellant; B. N. Das—for Respondent.

Jagannadhadas J. — Defendant is the appellant in this second appeal. It arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff for a declaration that he is the Purohit of the deity of Kapileswar in Chonomeri, and that he is the Guru of the Archakas of the said deity, and for the issue of a permanent injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with his rights as such Purohit and Guru. Both the plaintiff and the defendant trace their title from a common ancestor, Madhab Tripathi, who had two sons, Kapila and Harekrishna The last descendant in the male line of Harekrishna was one Dasarthi who died unmarried at a young age in or about 1927. The defendant is his sister's son. The plaintiff is the descendant of the said common ancestor Madhab Tripathi, through Kapila. His father, one Agadhu, was a daughter's son in the male line of Kapila. But it is the plaintiff's case that the said Agadhu was adopted to one Lokenath, the brother of his maternal grand-father, Jugalo, was a direct agnatic descendant of Kapila so that in law Agadhu was also an agnatic descendant of Kapila through Lokanath. The plaintiff was therefore according to his case an agnatic descendant of Kapila through his father Agadhu. It is the case of both parties that for a very condsiderable time, the duties of the Purohit of this temple and of the Guru of the Archakas, were being performed by the members of the family of Madhab Tripathi. It is not very clear .rom the plaint whether the alleged right was being enjoyed by the two branches of Madhab Tripathi's family jointly or in severalty by some arrangement of partition, but in his evidence the plaintiff says that both sharers perform the service by turns and sometimes jointly. The plaint proceeds on the footing that the plaintiff as an agnate is the successor to the rights of Dasarathi Tripathi, the last agnatic descendant of Harekrishna's line in preference to the defendant who is Dasarathi's sister's son, without any clear indication whether Dasarathi was only a part-owner of the rights the rest being already vested in him. However that may be, the plaintiff would be the full owner of the said rights if his case is established. The defendant contested the suit on various grounds. He denied that the plaintiff's father Agadhu was adopted to Lokanath and asserted that plaintiff was only a cognate heir of late Dasarathi, remoter than himself. He put forward a will by the late Dasarathi in his favour. He maintained that the plaintiff's suit was not maintainable being one not appertaining to a civil right. He further contended that the suit was barred by limitation. The Courts below have held against the defendant on all these points and hence this second appeal.

[2] It cannot be disputed that if plaintiff's father Agadhu is not the son of Lokanath, he would, in relation to Dasarathi, be only the daughter's grandson of a collateral agnate and thus would be remoter in heirship than the defendant who is Dasarathi's sister's son. Both the Courts below however have held it clearly established that the plaintiff's father Agdhu, who is the Daughter's son of one Jugal, was adopted to Jugolo's brother, Lokanath, relying on the recognition of Agadhu as such adopted son in various documents, viz., Exs. 1 to 7. The factum of such adoption must therefore be taken to have been conclusively established between the parties and is not challenged in second appeal. Learned counsel for the appellant however has attempted to argue that the adoption of Agadhu by Lokanath was invalid in law inasmuch as he was the daughter's son of his own brother, Jugal. There is no trace of any such contention in the Courts below. It is no doubt true that the adoption of a daughter's son is not recognised as being valid according to general Hindu law. (See Privy Council case in Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh, 21 ALL 412: (26 I. A. 153 P.C.). But it is also recognised that such an adoption is valid by custom. Such a custom is now well established in South India. (see Vayidinada v. Appa, 9 Mad. 44 (F. B.), Ranganayakamma v. Somasundara Rao, A. I. R. (7) 1920 Mad. 451 : (43 Mad. 876), and Soorathx Singa v. Kanaka Singa, A. I. R (7) 1920 Mad. 648: (43 Mad. 867). The question of the validity of adoption of the daughter's son being therefore one which depends on proof of custom cannot be permitted to be taken for the first time in second appeal, when the Courts below assumed its validity without any objection being raised. It is not at all unlikely that no such objection was raised in the Courts below, because the parties are Oriya Brahmins of Ganjam District which until 1936 formed part of the Madras Province, and who presumably followed the laws and customs relating to adoption as prevalent in the Madras Province. It is noteworthy that in the case in Ranganayakamma v. Somasundara Rao, A. I. R. (7) 1920 Mad. 451 : (43 Mad. 876), where this custom was upheld on the evidence of various instances of such adoptions, 22 of such instances related to Oriya Brahmins of Ganjan District. See Ranganayakamma v. Somasundara Rao, A. I. R. (7) 1920 Mad. 451 at p. 465, Col. II : (43 Mad. 876). The attempt to raise this question therefore in second appeal must be disallowed.

[3] As regards the defence that the defendant was entitled to the rights of the deceased Dasarathi Tripathi, under the alleged will. Ex. A, the plaintiff answered the same by putting forward a release-deed, Ex. I executed by the father of the defendant as his guardian. Both the Courts below have held and, quite rightly, that Ex. A is not a will, but is a settlement deed requiring registration and that therefore the defendant can derive no rights under it. This defence has not been pressed before us. As regards the plea of limitation, raised by the defendant, both the Courts below have concurrently found that since the date of Dasarathi Tripathi's death in or about 1927, the plaintiff has been performing the duties of his alleged office and no question therefore of any limitation arises. This contention also has not been repeated before us.

[4] The only question that has been strongly argued before us in this appeal is that the rights asserted by the plaintiff in this suit are not civil rights and that the suit is not of a civil nature and therefore the suit is not maintainable. This is the only substantial question in this appeal. It is urged that there can be no civil right to officiate as a Purohit or as a Guru, that the members of the public are entitled to choose whomsoever they like to minister for them as their Purohit or as their Guru and that no declaration can be granted recognising such a right in one person, nor can any injunction be issued restraining another person from officiating as a Guru or Purohit. It has been pointed out that the Courts below have proceeded on the erroneous view that the question as to whether there is such a civil right or not depends on whether it carries any emoluments and that they assumed without any basis that the rights asserted by the plaintiff amount to an office carrying certain emoluments.

[5] There can be no doubt that the right to officiate as a priest or as a Guru simpliciter is not a civil right and that no suit lies to enforce the same. This is well settled as appears from the cases in Hira Pandey v. Bachu Pandey, A. I. R. (3) 1916 Pat 215 : (1 Pat. L J. 381) ; Ahmed Hussain v. Ghulam Ali, A. I. R. (6) 1919 Pat. 313 : (52 I. C. 866) ; Dinanath Jha v; Ganesh Dutt, A. I. R. (16) 1929 Pat. 103 : (8 Pat. 677), and Tholappala Charlu v. Venkata Charlu, 19 Mad. 62 : (5 M. L. J 209). A distinction has however been made as regards cases where the ministration of priestly services amounts in law to "property" or to an "office". Explanation to S. 9 of the Civil P. C., recognises that a right to property or an office may be one of a civil nature, notwithstanding that it may depend entirely on the decision of questions as to the religious rights or ceremonies. While therefore a right to officiate as a priest of a particular community or in a particular locality has not been normally recognised as offending against the general right of the public or of the members of a community to choose whomsoever they may like for purposes of spiritual ministration, such a right has been recognised where it amounts to an office attached to an institution such as a temple. Religious and priestly offices attached to temples and the like institutions have been in vogue in the country by long-standing custom and are recognised by law as a species of property. The restriction thereby implied, if any, on the freedom of choice of a priest or other religious minister by the person requiring ministration is one that is in the larger interests of orderly and disciplined administration of such institutions. An office so attached to an institution may exist whether with or without emoluments and whether the emoluments incidental thereto are gratuitous or obligatory. When the question whether there is such an office is in issue, the fact that there are emoluments of a non-gratuitous character payable out of the funds of the institution, has generally been considered as relevant though the absence thereof is not always decisive. In support of what has been stated above, it is sufficient to refer to the following cases : Krishnama v. Krishnaswami, 2 Mad. 62 : (6 I. A. 120 P. C.) ; Amrito Moyee v. Bhogiruth Chundra, 15 Cal. 164 ; Kali Kanta v. Gouri Prosad, 17 Cal. 906 ; Dino Nath v. Pratap Chandra, 27 Cal. 30 ; (4 C. W. C. 24 at p. 28 : (I. L. R. (1940) Kar. P. C. 47). Cases have also recognised as between members of a family, a species of property in priestly services, though not amounting to an office, where it has been found that for generations past, the priestly family has developed a reputation and a sanctity which attracts to it a large body of pilgrims who on account of sentimental attachment make substantial offerings to the members of the family, who minister to their religious needs and in particular where such ministration is connected with certain large and reputed pilgrim centres such as in the cases of Gayawals, Pragwals, Gangaputras and Pandas. (See Lachmanlal v. Baldeo Lal, A. I. R. (4) 1917 Pat. 37 : (2 Pat. L. J. 705), Mt. Sarda Kunwar v. Gajananda, A. I. R. (29) 1942 ALL. 320 : (I. L. R. (1942) ALL. 821), See also Mahadev Vajulu v. Mathura Suryaprakasam, A. I. R. (2) 1915 Mad. 597 : (24 I. C. 204) (Contra). The question for consideration in this case has to be decided with reference to these well-settled principles. In the present case what is claimed by the plaintiff is not the right to officiate as the priest of a particular class or in a particular locality, but the right to officiate as a priest in a particular temple, and as a Guru of the Archakas of the temple. At this stage, it may be convenient to deal with the question of the right as a Purohit and the right as a Guru separately. It is necessary to deal with the evidence on record relating to these as the Courts below have not correctly appreciated the legal principles to the same.

[6] As regards the right to Purohitship the plaintiff's evidence is as follows :

"I receive, remuneration on different occasions when I perform Purohit work such as I receive Rs. 6 as Dakhina and Rs. 2 for cloth. On Makar day I receive Prasad. On Sivaratri I offer Bhog and receive Prasad On Mesa Sankranti I receive Bhog and take Prasad. In the Jaistha, I perform the marriage of the deity Kapileswar. I receive cloth, Dakhina and rice. On Binayak Chaturthi I get Prasad on performing Puja. All these are performed in the temple of Kapileswar and I do these works as Purohit."

He also says the remuneration for Purohit is met from the temple funds. He is supported in his evidence by one of the temple trustees, P. W. 2, an old man of 60 who though only a trustee for the last four years has been a resident of the place all along, and speaks to the plaintiff's family performing the Purohit's work in the temple for generations and speaks to the plaintiff himself doing Purohit work for about thirty years. This evidence is supported by other witnesses, P. Ws. 3, 4 and 5. The defendant both in the plaint as well as in his evidence as D. W. 4 admits this, in essence, inasmuch as it is also his case that his ancestors have been doing this Purohit service and have been getting emoluments therefor. His plea in the written statement while admitting these facts is that it was in the nature of a moral right and not a civil right. His most important witness, D. W. 3, the managing trustee of the temple also admits that the family has been performing the Purohit services from generation to generation and that the emoluments therefor are paid from the temple funds and are entered in the accounts, though he would have it that prior to Purushottam Tripathi, a person used to come from Phasiguda and work as the Purohit for the temple. On this evidence, there can be no reasonable doubt that as a fact the family to which the plaintiff belongs has been performing Purohit services in the temple for some generations at least from the time of Purushottam, and that the remuneration for the same is being paid out of temple funds. Whether this is enough to make out a hereditary claim to an office of the Purohit in the temple as against the temple authorities or not, it appears to me that as between the members of the family and the parties to this litigation, this is enough to make out that it is an office of a civil nature and is an item of property as between members of the family. Learned counsel for the appellant urges that there can be no right to an office unless it is clear that there is a compellable duty attached to it and cites Ayyanachariar v. Sadagopa Chariar, A. I. R. (26) 1939 Mad. 757 ; (189 I. C. 190). He relies on the evidence of D. W. 3, the managing trustee to show that there is no such compellable duty attached to this supposed office. It appears to me however that the plaintiff cannot be denied relief on this ground. In cases where the office has been claimed on the footing that it is attached to a temple, it must be taken as implicit in the very pleading of the plaintiff that he admits the existence of such a duty and the plaintiff in his evidence also virtually admits the same. D. W. 3 no doubt states in his evidence that there is no compulsion to do the Purohit work and that he can appoint any person he likes to be the Purohit of the deity. He has given no instances of his having so appointed any different person at any time other than a member of this family and he admits that the Archakas and Purohits of the temple are coming from generation to generation. It is to be noticed that in the various reported cases where such religious offices attached to a temple have been recognised, there is no specific discussion as to the compellable obligation attached to such office which suggests that such obligation is assumed from the fact that the office is found to be hereditary. In the circumstances, I have no difficulty in holding that the claim of the plaintiff to the Purohitship of the temple amounts to a right to an office recognisable in law and that he has substantiated the same.

[7] As regards the claim of the plaintiff to be the Guru of the Archakas of the temple, the evidence stands on a somewhat different footing. It would appear that what he has to do as the Guru of the Archakas is to give the Karna Mantra to the Archaka and to teach him the Puja Bidhan (rules of worship) and that the person who receives this Mantra pays nothing fixed as Dakhina and that each gives according to his means. (See the evidence of P. W. 4). It would appear no doubt that the plaintiff's family have been rendering services as Guru of the Archakas hereditarily in the same way as they have been performing the duties of the Purohit of the temple. It is probably meant to be the plaintiff's case that he is the Guru of the Archakas inasmuch as he is the Purohit of the temple but this is not so specifically stated. The plaintiff himself states in his evidence as follows;

"The duties of the Guru is to give them (Archakas) Mantra and to teach them Puja Nyasa. I never force them to take Mantra, but they are bound to come to me for Mantra as there is nobody else to give them Mantra."

He also admits that defendant's forefathers have also initiated some of the Archakas. P. W. 2 says :

"In case an Archaka does not desire to take Mantra from the Guru he can take from an agnate, failing which he cannot get salvation. He can get Mantra from anybody."

There seem to be as many as nearly 100 Archakas connected with this temple according to the evidence of witnesses. While no doubt the Archakas are connected with the temple, it is not unlikely that the plaintiff's family, being the Purohit of the temple, has in fact, been ministering as the Guru of the Archakas. It may have been possible to make out such an office if it was established that no person could officiate as an Archaka of this deity unless he received the Mantra and the Puja Nyasa from a member of the plaintiff's family and accepted him as his Guru. Indeed that is what the plaintiff himself claims to be the position in his evidence, but he is not supported in it by his witness, P. W. 2. There being, therefore, no necessary connection made out on the evidence between the duties of the plaintiff's family connected with the temple and his ministration of services as the Guru for the Archakas, it cannot be held that the plaintiff has established a civil right to the Guruship which he has claimed as an office appurtenant to the temple. The trial Court has given a decree in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the Guruship also without adverting to the difference in the nature of the evidence relating to the two. The appellate Court however thinks that what the plaintiff asks is his right to be the Guru of the Archakas of the deity in his capacity as the Purohit and what he has found is this alleged limited right. In so finding, he has made a note that the plaintiff's right cannot affect or interfere, in any way with the defendant's right to minister to the spiritual needs of the Archakas by being their Guru in his own individual capacity independent of the office of the Purohit of the deity. This limitation has been incorporated in the modified decree that he has passed. It is doubtful whether such a limitation is workable. It seems to me however that, as pointed out by me above, there is no evidence in this case which establishes that there is an office of the Guru of the Archakas attached to this temple with the limitation specified or that the Guruship is incidental to the office of the Purohit. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the claim of the plaintiff to the office of the Guruship of the Archakas of the temple has not been made out. This, however, does not mean that if there is any usage of the institution whereby an Archaka receives the Mantra and the Puja Bidhan from a member of the plaintiff's family as a matter of spiritual sentiment, this is in any way intended to be affected. That is a matter for internal regulation by the appropriate temple authorities.

[8] In the result, therefore, the appeal must be allowed in so far as the claim of the plaintiff to the right of the Guru of the Archakas is concerned and must be dismissed with reference to his claim as the priest of the temple. The decree of the Courts below will be modified accordingly. In the circumstances, there will be no order as to costs of this appeal.

[9] Narasimham J.—I agree that the appeal should be partially allowed as suggested in the judgment of my learned brother. The main question of law for consideration is the maintainability of the suit under S. 9, Civil P. C.

[10] The reliefs asked for by the plaintiff are (i) a declaration that he is the Purohit of the deity of Kapileswar of Chanameri village; (ii) a declaration that he is the Guru of the Archakas of the said deity.

[11] It was the common case of both the parties that the right to the Purohitship of the said deity was all along vested in the family of Madhab Tripathy, their common ancestor. They claimed it as a hereditary right and the main dispute was whether the plaintiff or the defendant had the preferential right.

[12] Certain specific duties in the temple were ascribed to the Purohit such as offering Puja and Bhog during Shibaratri, performance of marriage of the deities in the temple in Jaistha and performance of Puja on Binayaka Chaturthi day. For performing such duties the Purohit was receiving certain emoluments and perquisite from temple funds. The question for consideration, therefore, is whether the Purohitship of the temple of Kapileswar is an 'office' within the meaning of the Explanation to S. 9, Civil P. C. As early as 1879, the Privy Council in Krishnama v. Krishnasami, 2 Mad. 62: (6 I. A. 120 P. C.) approved a decision of the Madras High Court in Narasimma Chariar v. Sri K. T. Chariar, 6 M. C. R. 449 to the effect that claim to certain pecuniary benefits and payments in kind in respect of performance of certain religious services in a temple was entertainable in a civil Court. The construction of the expression 'office', however, came up for consideration later in Srinivasa Thathachariar v. Srinivasa Aiyangar, 9 M. L. J. 355, where Subrahmania Aiyar C. J. observed:

"Now the term 'office' in the sense with which we are concerned, implies, of course, a duty in the office-holder to be discharged by him as such."

and he relied on Kent's Commentaries where it was pointed out:

"Offices consist in a right, and corresponding duty, to execute a public or private trust and to take the emoluments belonging to it."

O'Farrell J., in a separate concurring judgment observed:

"In order that an office may exist there must be a duty enforceable by deprivation or other temporal sanction. Where there is no duty or a duty enforceable merely by moral or social sanctions, there can be no office."

In Sri Ranga Chariar v. Rangasami Battachar, 32 Mad. 291 : (3 I. C. 881), the question for decision was whether a suit for certain honour (First thirtham) in a temple was maintainable and it was held that where the honour in question was a remuneration for a hereditary office involving both secular and religious duties inseparable from the office, a suit was maintainable. In coming to this conclusion the High Court relied on the finding of the lower Court to the effect that the plaintiffs as office-holders were bound to perform certain duties in the temple. In Chunnu Dattu v. Babu Nandan, 32 ALL. 527 : (6 I C. 223) while dismissing a suit for declaration that the plaintiff was entitled to perform certain religious pageants in Benares, the High Court of Allahabad (at p. 588) laid emphasis on the absence of any obligation on the plaintiff to undertake any responsibility in the matter of pageants. In Mahomed Sahib v. Sayed Sahib, A. I. R. (3) 1916 Mad. 379 : (28 I. C. 459) also Tyabji J., pointed out that the "existence of something which may be described as the duties of the person holding office" is a necessary part of that which is connoted in the term 'office.' In Lachman Lal v. Baldeo Lal, A. I. R. (4) 1917 Pat. 37 : (2 Pat. L. J. 705) while discussing the case of Gayawals, Mullick J. pointed out that the essential of an office is a duty to some person enforceable by law custom or usage. To a similar effect are the following observations of Krishnan J. in Venkatachariar v. Ponappa, A. I. R. (6) 1919 Mad. 1026 : (45 I. C. 959) :

"It is clear that to constitute an office, one, if not the essential, thing is the existence of a duty or duties attached to the office which the office-holder is under a legal obligation to perform and the non-performance of which may be visited by penalties such as suspension, dismissal etc."

In Chinnaswami Thathachariar v. Singaracharlar, A. I. R. (15) 1928 Mad. 377 : (109 I. C. 771) also while discussing the duty of an office attached to the well-known temple at Conjeeveram, Srinivasa Aiyangar J., pointed out:

"An office in connection with such institutions must really be regarded as a bundle of duties liable to be performed by the same persons under a particular designation and carrying with it certain emoluments."

In a recent decision reported in Ramaswami Goudan v. Lakshmana Reddi, A. I. R. (26) 1939 Mad. 886 : (I. L. R. (1940) Mad. 40) also it was emphasised that the conception of an office involves a corresponding obligation to perform the duties of the office.

[13] There is thus sufficient authority to support the view that the expression 'office' in the Explanation to S. 9, Civil P. C., means a position which has some duties attached to it to be performed by the holder of the office and which are enforceable by law, custom or usage. It is true that generally such offices are attached to institutions like temples, muths etc. But there may be offices of a purely personal nature attached to no institution at all. In the present case, however, any discussion about an office which is not attached to an institution would be merely academic because the Purohitship in question is claimed in respect of the temple of Kapileswar. It is therefore unnecessary to discuss how far a claim to a bare personal office would come within the scope of S. 9, Civil P. C., regarding which there seems to be some apparent conflict of authorities (see Gour Mani Debi v. Chairman of the Panihati Municipality, 6 I. C. 861: (12 C. L. J. 75) and Debendra Narain v. Satya Charan, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Cal. 783: (54 Cal. 614).

[14] Though, ordinarily, emoluments are attached to an office, and some emoluments have actually been claimed in the present litigation, there may be offices without emoluments at all (see Sayad Hashim Saheb v. Huseinsha, 13 Bom. 429 and Ram Bayan v. Bapu Ram, 15 Cal. 159.)

[15] Therefore, the crucial test in considering whether the claim to the Purohitship of the temple of Kapileswar is a claim to an office or not is whether there are duties attached to the Purohitship which are enforceable by law, custom or usage, whether by deprivation or other temporal sanction (to quote O'Farrell J.). The plaintiff stated that he has the right to perform the duties of Purohitship and if for any reason he is unable to perform the same his representative would do it. He thus admits that it is a duty cast on his family. The Managing Trustee, Mohan Bisoi (D. W. 3), doubtless stated that there was no compulsion to do the Purohit's work and that he could appoint anyone else as Purohit but no instance in which anyone outside the family has been appointed as Purohit in recent times has been proved. Though no clear evidence as to the method of enforcement of the duties of the Purohit has been led, it seems to be impliedly admitted by the parties that right claimed is a hereditary right enforceable either by custom or usage. The appellant himself elicited in the cross-examination of the plaintiff (P. W. 1) that the Commissioner of Endowments, Orissa, exercises control over the temple by appointing trustees and that "everything is in writing in the Endowment Office." Therefore, the duties of the office of a Purohit of the temple can be enforced in accordance with the provisions of S. 17, Orissa Hindu Religious Endowments Act, 1939, by the trustee or by the Commissioner of Endowments under his general powers of superintendence and control. There is thus temporal sanction behind the duty of the Purohitship in the temple and it is not a case of mere social or moral sanction. I would therefore agree with my learned brother that the claim to the Purohitship is a claim to an office and as such is maintainable in civil Court.

[16] As regards the claim to the Guruship of the Archakas I would agree with my learned brother that it is not a claim to an office.

Chandramoni Jena and others—Petitioners v. Bhraman Biswal—Opposite party.

Criminal Revn. No. 59 of 1950, D/- 11-8-1950.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 350 (1), Proviso (a) — Recommencement of trial or enquiry—Supersession of previous proceedings — Revival of such proceedings.

Once, whether at the request of the accused, or on his own motion by the Magistrate, trial or enquiry is recommenced by resummoning the prosecution witnesses for being reheard afresh, the previous proceedings are superseded and, even with the consent of the accused, they cannot be revived in complete ignorance of what took place between the first Magistrate and his successor. [Para 10]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 350 N. 12.

G. C. Das and S. K. Ray — for Petitioners; V. Pasayat —for Opposite Party.

Order.—The petitioners have been convicted under Ss. 380 and 418, Penal Code, for having entered into a house and carried away the stock of paddy and other properties stored therein.

[2] The complainant and the accused advanced rival claims to that house which, it must be made clear, was not ancestral house of late Radhakrushna Jena of whom the complainant is the son-in-law, but is the self-acquired house as distinct from the ancestral one. The ancestral house and other properties had admittedly been gifted to the daughter, namely, the complainant's wife, and there is no dispute about it. The dispute centres round the right and possession of the self-acquired house in which Radhakrushna Jena lived at the time of his death. The consideration of this revision involves the question whether there was illegality or irregularity causing prejudice to the petitioners in their defence in the trial.

[3] The circumstances are that the trial was held by one Sri M. B. De, Magistrate, before whom the prosecution witnesses had been examined, charge had been framed, and cross-examination after charge had been completed. At that stage, that Magistrate was transferred, and the case came to the file of one Sri S. K. Das, Magistrate. This transfer no doubt entitled the accused persons to claim that the witnesses already examined be resummoned and reheard. They exercised that right at the commencement of the trial before Sri S. K. Das. He allowed the plea and directed that the prosecution witnesses should be resummoned and reheard. Accordingly, he summoned the prosecution witnesses for 30-4-1949. On 30-4-1949, however, he was already under order of transfer and he adjourned the case to 20-5-1949. On the latter date, Sri S. S. Roy took charge of the case. He recorded an order to this effect :

"The accused persons pray that the accused Dibyasingha Jena, who is dead, wanted de novo trial, when the case was transferred to Mr. S. K. Das's Court, but they do not want this case to be tried de novo. The accused persons to go on bail of Rs. 100 each. Posted to 18-6-1949 for statement of the accused and defence. The accused to take steps at once to summon the D. Ws. and no further adjournment to be granted."

[4] There were several adjournments in the case after this. On one of the dates, the petitioners put in a prayer for cross-examining some of the prosecution witnesses under S. 257, Criminal P. C., but this was rejected. The learned Magistrate writes :

"When this case came on transfer to my Court, the accused persons got another opportunity for demanding the resummoning and rehearing of the P. Ws. under S. 350 (a), Criminal P. C. but they waived that right. After expiry of two dates for adducing the defence they have come forward with this petition . . ."

[5] The view, that the learned Magistrate takes, is one that can be supported by Moti Shankarlal v. Keshrichand, 39 Cr. L. J. 815 : (A. I. R. (25) 1938 Nag. 288), in which Gruer J. of the Nagpur High Court held in a similar case :

"I am of opinion that each transfer gives an accused a fresh opportunity of exercising his right under the proviso to S. 350, Criminal P. C."

[6] From the facts of that case, it does not, however, appear that the second Magistrate before whom the claim for resummoning and rehearing the prosecution witnesses had been made had granted the prayer. I shall quote a passage from the judgment of Gruer J. in this connexion :

"These witnesses had been examined by the first Magistrate and the second Magistrate did nothing beyond recording on one hearing before him that the accused claimed trial de novo, and on the second hearing adjourning the case."

The fact, in this particular case, is, however, quite different. As it appears from the order-sheet recorded by Sri S. K. Das on 9-4-1949, he had started recommencement of the trial, if it can be so-called, for the sake of convenience. The question, therefore, in the background of this circumstance, reduces itself to whether a fresh right did accrue after the case was taken over by the third Magistrate or not. On reading S. 350, Criminal P. C., as a whole, it appears that the accused's claim is with regard to resummoning and rehearing the witnesses when the witnesses, either all or some of them, had been previously heard, or, in other words, examined and cross-examined. But when the case is transferred from one Magistrate to another at a stage when there was no examination of witnesses, there is absolutely no meaning of any right having accrued within the proviso. When the witnesses are ordered to be resummoned and reheard, that necessarily means that the accused's prayer, that the evidence already recorded be dispensed with and fresh evidence be taken in, is granted. Under the circumstances, the case came to the third Magistrate with an order that the case should proceed from the beginning, that is, by resummoning and rehearing the witnesses, in other words, the occasion for exercising the right of resummoning and rehearing the witnesses after dispensing with the previous record of the witnesses' statement did not arise. Therefore, the question of waiver is immaterial. If the third Magistrate completely ignores the proceedings before the second Magistrate and takes the case as it were transferred to him from the first Magistrate, he does commit an illegality notwithstanding a Magistrate having power to act on the evidence recorded by his predecessor. He cannot ignore the proceedings before the second Magistrate (under orders of transfer) as of no effect, or, in other words, as if there has been no change of hands before he took over the case as between the first and the second Magistrates. It is quite well known that waiver applies to a subsisting right; a right, which has already been enforced and given effect to cannot be waived because there is nothing to be waived thereby. The result, therefore, is, as it happened in this case, that the Magistrate revived the dead proceedings of recording of the evidence before the first Magistrate, and the accused persons stood by. If they waived the right in the same sense in which the learned Magistrate understood it, it would mean that they had not exercised their right before the second Magistrate and they would not require the exercise of the same right over again at the hands of the third Magistrate. It might be that their learned counsel was mistaken with regard to the law, but illegality that has come to stay cannot be overlooked. The learned counsel for the petitioners has invited my attention to several cases of the Madras and Patna High Courts. They fully support the view that I have taken.

[7] In the case of Ramalingam Pillai v. Emperor, 35 Cr. L. J. 1363 : (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Mad. 475), it was held that

"The granting of a de novo trial by the successor of the Magistrate had the effect of wiping out the prior proceedings and hence the old Magistrate could not proceed with the trial from the point where he had left it; where a succeeding Magistrate on taking charge, issued summons to the prosecution witnesses, he must be held to have taken cognizance of the case and that whoever is to hear the case, in such circumstances, must hear it de novo."

[8] Mr. Pasavat has cited a decision of the Nagpur High Court in the case of Emperor v. Ganapat, 38 Cr. L. J. 15 : (A.I.R. (23) 1936 Nag. 220) to establish that the effect of wiping out the proceedings occurs only where the Magistrate of his own accord decides to recommence the enquiry or trial under S. 350 (1), Criminal P. C. But the point, however, is not supported by the decision. The learned Judge has not drawn the contrast with the circumstance when the enquiry is recommenced by the order of the Magistrate, without any request from the accused. On the contrary, it supports the view that if according to a Magistrate the enquiry or trial is recommenced, the previous proceeding is wiped out.

[9] The case of the Patna High Court has also been cited. In the case of Daroga Chowdhury v. Emperor, 20 Cr. L. J. 638 : (A.I.R (6) 1919 Pat. 578), the accused were charged with certain offence. The case was assigned to a Joint Magistrate who was transferred before he was able to complete the case. The S.D.O. withdrew the case to his own file and heard the case de novo disregarding all the evidence recorded by the first Magistrate. Before the S. D. O. had concluded the case, the Joint Magistrate, who first started the trial, came back to the district whereupon the S.D.O. transferred the case to him with a direction that he should take it up from where he had left it before being transferred; it was held that the trial was illegal and must be set aside and the accused tried de novo; that the order of the S.D.O. was ultra vires and without jurisdiction because all that had taken place before the Joint Magistrate had been superseded and formed not part of the record in the proceeding then actually pending and being prosecuted as against the accused, and that as a consequence, the Joint Magistrate coming back to the district, had no authority or jurisdiction to act on the record of the proceedings which had been antecedently taken before him, the result being that the accused were gravely prejudiced in their trial.

[10] The fundamental principle, on which Madras and Patna High Courts' cases are based, is to the effect that once, whether at the request of the accused, or on his own motion by the Magistrate, trial or enquiry is recommenced by resummoning the prosecution witnesses for being reheard afresh, the previous proceedings are superseded and, secondly, even with the consent of the accused they cannot be revived in complete ignorance of what took place between the first Magistrate and the third. Looked from one aspect, the view taken in the Nagpur High Court may be fundamentally distinct, but I am more bound by the Patna view than by that of Nagpur High Court.

[11] Conceding that it is a case of irregularity but not illegality, has there been any prejudice? In my judgment, prejudice is apparent on the face of the record, because the third Magistrate (Sri S. S. Roy) refused the right to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses under S. 257, Criminal P. C. True, he was not bound to grant the prayer, but as it appears from his judgment, the core of the defence case had not been put to the prosecution witnesses, namely, whether the defence people were or were not in possession of the disputed house. Had the Magistrate who had recorded the prosecution evidence, been the trying Magistrate, he should have known under what circumstances the prosecution witnesses had been cross-examined and whether from the defence standpoint, it would not be prejudicial to deny the prayer for further cross-examination which was permissible under S. 257, Criminal P. C., under the special circumstances. It may be that cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses began under stress and strain flowing from the insistence of the first Magistrate and might have been hurriedly finished up. That may be the reason why very important questions had not been put. Being a succeeding Magistrate, who had only the dumb pages of the depositions before him, he was not then in a position to judge how the refusal to give an opportunity of further cross-examination would prejudice their defence.

[12] In these circumstances of the case, I am constrained to hold that the conviction and sentence cannot be sustained.

[13] The next step that arises is whether the accused persons should be retried. Mr. Pasavat is not very sanguine if retrial would enure to his client's benefit. But, however, I should not allow myself to be led by that fear. It is no doubt true that it is the negligence of the accused or their counsel or both that this very important feature of the case has never been put or argued either before the trial Court or before the lower appellate Court. Under the circumstances, if there has been delay in the trial they have largely contributed to that. Under the circumstances, I direct that the accused persons shall be retried. The offences, if committed, are serious. Send the records at once to the District Magistrate, Cuttack, for marking over the case to a competent Magistrate to try.

Suka Misra and others —Appellants v. The State.

Criminal App. Nos. 8 and 16 of 1950, D/- 1-8-1950.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 154—First information report in case of dacoity—Penal Code (1860), S. 395.

It is not necessary that the F. I. R. should specify every little detail and describe the specific part played by each one of the dacoits, when many of them enter into the house and commit dacoity. [Para 6]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 154, N. 9; Penal Code, S. 395, N. 2.

(b) Precedents—Obiter—Ratio decidendi.

The principle of a case is limited to the sum of all the facts held by the Court to be material in that case and all observations of a general nature are merely obiter. The distinction between what is raticnis and what is mere obiter should always be borne in mind when following a precedent. It is often embarrassing to the subordinate Courts even to ignore what is palpably obiter when a case is cited before them. But it must always be remembered that it is the abstract ratio decidendi which alone has the force of law. [Para 10]

(c) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 164 (3) and 533—Failure to record all questions put to accused—Effect.

A mere failure to record all the questions the Magistrate put to the accused does not necessarily entail the rejection of the confession as inadmissible. [Para 10]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 533, N. 9.

(d) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 164 (2) — Proper recording of confession.

In matters of procedure it is essential that the rules must be certain rathert han wise, flexible rather than complete. Whether a confession has been properly recorded or not must, therefore, left to be decided by the Judge before whom it is tendered as evidence. Whether it should be accepted or not will depend upon the wisdom and understanding of the trial Judge who knows the essentials of a fair trial. [Para 10]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 164, N. 11.

(e) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 164 (3)—Motive for making confession—Confession, when to be presumed to be voluntary.

When the accused makes a confession, the law does not require the motive to be elicited. The only requirement laid down by the law is that the confession should be free from the blemishes of compulsion, inducement, threat or promise. If the recording Magistrate is satisfied that the confession is not tainted by any of these vitiating factors he is entitled to presume that the confession is voluntary. Whether, however, the confesion made to him is true or not will be for the trial Judge to decide. [Para 10]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 164, N. 14.

(f) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 164 (3)—Accused making confession and sticking to it in committing Court—Accused more or less standing by confession also in Sessions Court—Confession held could not be rejected. [Para 10]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 164, N. 14.

(g) Penal Code (1860), S. 395—Conviction of less than five persons—Twelve persons put on trial—Nine of them acquitted and three convicted—Conviction held was proper. [Paras 11 and 14]

Anno. Penal Code, S. 395, N. 2, pts. 5 to 7.

P. C. Chatterji and A. K. Das—for Appellants; B. M. Patnaik—for Respondent.

Panigrahi J.—There are two appeals directed against the judgment of the Sessions Judge Bolangir Kalahandi, in Sessions Case No. 27 of 1949. There are three appellants in Cri. App. No. 8 of 1950 and one in Cr. App. No. 16 of 1950. All of them have been convicted under S. 395, Penal Code and sentenced to seven years rigorous imprisonment each. Altogether twelve persons were put on trial and eight of them have been acquitted.

[2] The case for the prosecution is that the appellants, along with certain other persons, numbering about thirty, forcibly entered into the house of the complainant Sardul Nag at about 10 P. M. on the night of 4-9-48 and committed dacoity. They were all armed with thabies, knives, lathis and torches, and carried away paddy, rice, utensils, molasses, as well as gold ornaments. On the next morning the complainant reported the matter to Dasarathi, Gountia of Rugurupalli, a neighbouring village and also sent word to Sribanta, Gountia of Nagapalli, another neighbouring village. Both the Gountias, along with other villagers, gathered at the house of the complainant, and thereafter Sardul Nag went to the Police Station at Sonepur and lodged F. I. R. at about 7 P. M. on 5-9.48. The Police took up investigation, recovered some properties from the houses of appellants 1, 2 and 3, viz., Suka Misra, Sabda Pujhari and Garjan Dumal (appellants in Cr. App. No. 8 of 1950) and charge-sheeted twelve persons, of whom as has been stated already-all except the four appellants were acquitted.

[3] The main incident of dacoity is spoken to by P. W. 11 (the complainant), P. W. 12 (wife of the complainant), P. W. 13 (mother of the comp'ainant), P. W. 14, Damai Gourin (an inmate of the house) and P. W. 15 (a servant of the complainant). Besides these persons, there were also in the house an infant son of the complainant, the complainant's sister and his farm servant, but these were not examined by the prosecution. The prosecution case is that some of the dacoits were known to the complainant even before the date of occurrence and that he could recogoise the others by the light of the torches that they had been flashing in the course of the dacoity. The prosecution further alleged that some trails of rice were discovered along the path leading to the house of appellant 2, Subda Pujari, and some articles were recovered from his house. Appellant 4 Shyam Keot (appellant in Cr. App. No. 16 of 1950) absconded the day after the occurrence and was arrested on 27-12-48 by the Police of Binka Police Station in connection with another offence said to have been committed by him. Shyam Keot made a confessional statement on 30-12-48 which was recorded by a Magistrate examined as P. W. 10. Thus, the case for the prosecution rests on the direct evidence of the eye-witneses' who were inmates of the complainant's house at the time of the incident, the recovery of some of the articles alleged to have been stolen, the confessional statement of Shyam Keot' one of the appellants. The prosecution has also relied upon a few circumstantial details.

[4] The complainant alleged in the F. I. R. (Ex. 5) that as he was about to retire to bed on the night of 4-9-48, a person entered into his house and asked him for some fire and that he refused to give any fire at that hour of the night. Immediately, about 15 persons said to have been armed with knives and axes forced their way into the house and threatened to kill him. They forcibly opened the doors of the other rooms, and it is said that altogether about thirty persons committed theft of various articles belonging to the complainant. He could recognise, among them, appellant 1, Suka Misra, appellant 3, Garjan Dumal and appellant 4, Shyam Keot. The complainant gave a list of the properties stolen worth, according to him, Rs. 247. At the trial the complainant introduced an additional fact into the case, viz., that a pair of silver bangles was removed from the wrist of his infant son and that one silver bangle was removed from his own wrist. According to the evidence appellant Suka Misra snatched away some ornaments from the person of the complainant's wife while appellant Garjan Dumal removed the bangle from the person of the complainant himself. The complainant further stated that he was able to recognise Suka Garjan, and Shyam as he had known them from even before the occurrence. He knew the appellant, Sabda Pujari by sight from before, but as he did not know his name he could not mention it in the F. I. R. He identified the pots containing molasses and rice exhibited as M. O. Exs. I, II and II-A, as also the bell-metal cup (Ex. V) and two small cups (Exs. IV and IV-A) which were recovered from the house of appellant Suka Misra. He was also able to identify a brass-vessel (M. O. Ex. VI), a sickle (Ex. VIII), an axe. (Ex. VII), a piece of cloth (Ex. IX) and a gold ornament (Ex X) recovered from the house of appellant 3, Garjan Dumal as his property (M. O. EX. IX) and belong to his wife, while M. O. EX. VI was found concealed inside loose paddy kept in a basket. The cloth (Ex. IX) was also recovered from inside a basket of paddy. Exhibit X was in a small box along with some other ornaments, kept concealed inside the paddy. In cross-examination the complainant admitted that he did not recognise Sabda Pujari even by face during the dacoity. He said that there were bleeding scratches on the wrist of his son, and on the ear and nose of his wife, but these were not examined by any Medical Officer. This evidence is substantially corroborated by P. W. 12, the wife of the complainant, who speaks to having recognised appellants 1 (Sukadev), 3 (Garjan) and 4 (Shyam Keot). Her evidence is that appellant 1 was guarding her while the dacoity was in progress and later snatched away her nose-ring and ear-rings. She could identify the pots of rice and molasses, the axe, the brass vessels as well as the bundles of rice that had been recovered from the house of the appellants. P. W. 13 the mother of the complainant also speaks to the dacoity having taken place that night, but could not recognise any of the persons who have alleged to have taken part in it. P. W. 14 recognised appellants 1 and 3 as having participated in the dacoity and further speaks to the removal of the nose-ring and ear-rings from the person of P. W. 12 by appellant 1. P. W. 15 speaks to the main incident of the occurrence and swears that appellant 4 was the first person who came to the house and asked for some fire. He also recognised appellants 1 and 3, among others, as having entered into the house. He corroborates the other witnesses in saying that appellant 1 removed the nose and ear-rings from the person of P. W. 12 and that appellant 3, Garjan, removed the bangle from the wrist of the complainant. P. Ws. 16 and 17, the two gountias of neighbouring villages, who arrived at the house of the complainant early next morning, speak to having seen traces of rice scattered all over the house and also prove the statement made by the complainant to them about the dacoity that took place in his house the previous night. These two gountias were present at some of the searches effected by the Sub-Inspector of Police (P. W. 18). P. W. 8 is a Punch member of Kirtipur, a village within about a mile of the place of occurrence. He was watching his ground-nut crop in his field adjoining the road leading to the complainant's house and saw the appellants in the company of several others going towards that house. On his enquiry one of them is alleged to have told him that they were going to the mango grove at Rugurupalli for gambling. This witness identified appellants 3 and 4 among the persons whom he saw that night. P. Ws. 1 to 3 were present at the search of the house of appellant 2 and prove the search lists Exs. 1 and 1-A; P. Ws. 4 and 5 prove the recovery of articles from the house of appellant 1 and also prove the search lists Ex. 1-B. P. Ws. 6 and 7 are the witnesses to the search of the house of appellant 3, Garjan, and prove search list Ex. 1-C. There can therefore be no doubt on the evidence that a dacoity was committed at the house of Sardul Nag on 4-9-1948 between 9 and 10 P. M. In fact this has not been seriously challenged by the appellants.

[5] Mr. Chatterji, learned counsel for appellants 1, 2 and 3, contends that the evidence against these appellants is not sufficient to justify their conviction for the offence of dacoity and that the articles alleged to have recovered from their houses are of such common use that their identification by the complainant cannot, in any sense, be deemed as conclusive. On behalf of appellant Shyam Keot, it is urged that his confessional statement is not admissible in evidence as it has not been satisfactorily proved that the confession was made voluntarily. And finally it is contended that there can be no conviction for dacoity, as less than five persons have been found guilty, the other having been acquitted.

[6] The case against appellant 1, Sukadev Misra, rests on the oral evidence of eye-witnesses, viz., P. Ws. 11, 12, 14 and 15. He is the person, according to the evidence of these witnesses, who removed the ornaments from the person of P. W. 12. He was known to the complainant even before the date of the occurrence and was, in fact, named in the F. I. R. as one of the persons who took part in the dacoity that night. The utensils recovered from his house were identified by the complainant and other inmates of the house and there is no person to disbelieve them. Whatever may be said with regard to the identity of the pitcher of molasses, we are of opinion that the identification of the brass vessels, at any rate, stands on a different footing and we are inclined to accept the evidence of P. Ws. 11 and 12 on the point as reliable. It is argued that the F. I. R. is silent on the point as to whether the appellant removed the ornaments from the person of P. W. 12. No doubt the F. I. R. does not furnish this detail, but it mentions not only about the loss of gold ornaments but also gives a description of the articles lost, in the list. It is not necessary that the F. I. R. should specify every little detail and describe the specific part played by each one of the dacoits, when so many of them entered into the house and committed theft. We are accordingly satisfied that the appellant Sukadev Misra has been rightly convicted as the offence has been brought home to him.

[7] The appellant Sabda Pujari was not recognized by any of the witnesses nor was his name mentioned in the F. I. R. The only evidence against him is that some rice and a pitcher of molasses were recovered from his house and that a trail of rice was found leading to his backyard. This evidence is of a weak character and is not sufficient to support his conviction. His name, doubtless, figures in the confessional statement of appellant Shyam Keot, as one of the participants in the incident, but in the absence of any substantive evidence against him we are not disposed to place any reliance on the statement made in the confession of Shyam Keot and uphold Sabda Pujari's conviction. He is accordingly given the benefit of doubt and acquitted.

[8] Appellant 3 Garjan Dumal, has been named in the F. I. R. and has been identified by P. Ws. 11, 12, 14 and 15. P. W. 8 also speaks to his presence among the persons who were going in the direction of the complainant's house that night. The brass-pitcher, the axe, the sickle, the cloth and nose-ring belonging to P. W. 12 were all recovered from the house of this appellant. The brass pitcher and the gold nose-ring were found concealed inside the paddy. It is contended on behalf of this appellant that the gold nose-ring was found broken and its identification therefore could not have been satisfactory. The description of the nose-ring has been given in the F. I. R. as Magar Muha with Red Stone. The article was produced in Court and the appellant, if he liked, could easily have established that it did not answer the description given in the F. I. R. Nothing of the kind was done and it is too late now to complain in the appellate Court that the identification of the nose-ring could not be accepted. It is further pointed out that, according to the evidence, appellant 1 removed the gold nose-ring from the person of P. W. 12 and that he also removed the silver bangle from the wrist of P. W. 11, but that the silver bangles alleged to have been removed by him have not been recovered. The recovery of the gold nose-ring alone from the house of this appellant is, however, not inconsistent with its having been removed by one of his associates who participated in the dacoity. It may be that this article fell to the share of appellant Garjan or that it was left in his custody as it is said that his father is a man of some means in order to divert suspicion. We are, therefore, not prepared to accede to the contention raised on behalf of this appellant and to discard the identification made by P.W. 11 as unreliable. The oral evidence against this appellant is almost overwhelming and he has been rightly convicted and we see no reason to interfere.

[9] The case against appellant Shyam Keot rests on the oral evidence of P.Ws. 11, 12 and 15. He is said to have been known to the complainant from his childhood. It was this appellant who appears to have entered into the house of P. W. 11 on the pretext of asking for some fire. His name is mentioned in the F.I.R. P. W. 8 also speaks to his presence in the company of persons proceeding towards the house of the complainant on the night of 4-9-1948 when he was watching his ground-nut crop. This appellant, as stated already, absconded immediately after the occurrence and was arrested three months later by the Binka Police. Three days after his arrest, he made a confessional statement, which was recorded by a Magistrate (P. W. 10) under S. 164, Criminal P. C. In that statement he said that he went to Rugurupalli along with appellant 1, appellant 2 and some others, and carried away articles from the house of the complainant, that these articles were kept in the house of appellant 2, Sabda Pujari, and that he was advised by appellants 1 and 2 to make himself scarce and that he, therefore, left the village and absconded. He states that he joined in the dacoity as he was asked to do so by the persons named by him. In his examination by the Committing Magistrate he repeated the above statements and added that he was asked by appellant Garjan and another person, about the evening of that day, viz., 4-9-1948, to go to Banjipalli. There were others assembled at that place. Suka Misra and others were present at the house of Sabda Pujari. Others were in front of his house :

"All said : 'Let us go and commit dacoity'. I said : 'I am afraid as I have no previous experience' . . . . . Keot . . . . were present . . . . We brought all the articles from there and kept them in the house of Sabda Pujari. They told me to go away to Bargarh side and that they would look after my maintenance. I went to Barmarh. I came home and went to Seli to my aunt's house . . . . . "

When he was questioned whether it was a fact that he asked Sardul (the complainant) for some fire that night, he said he did not ask him for any fire but that he was in front of Sardul's house. He further said that he did not take a pie towards his share. In the Sessions Court he said that his statement before the committing Magistrate had been correctly recorded and added that as he was heavily drunk he lay under tree in Banjapalli and that the others went to commit dacoity leaving him behind. He named the appellants as those who went to participate in the dacoity. He also says that he made the confession as he was threatened by the Police with assault.

[10] The Magistrate who recorded the confessional statement of appellant, Shyam Keot deposed as P. W. 10 that he gave the necessary warnings and explained to the accused that he was not bound to make any confession and that he should not confess even if he was required to do so either by the police or any other person, and finally that his confession would be used as evidence against him. P. W. 10 also gave evidence to the effect that no police officer was present at the time of his recording the confession and that he was satisfied, in the circumstances, that the confession made to him was voluntary. The witness did not ask the accused why he was making a confession as he was satisfied about the voluntary character of the confession. In cross-examination P. W. 10 admitted that he did not caution the confessant that his confession would be used against him even if he retracted it later, though he repeated that he was satisfied from the answers given to his questions that the accused was confessing voluntarily. The learned Sessions Judge, however, held the confession to be inadmissible on the ground that the record made by the Magistrate (P.W. 10) did not show that the statement was voluntary, and particularly because the accused was not asked that the confession, even if retracted later, might be used against him, and relied upon the observations of the learned Chief Justice in Gurubaru Praja v. The King, I. L. R. (1949) 1 Cut. 207 : (A. I. R. (36) 1949 Orissa 67 : 51 Cr. L. J. 72). In that case it was established that the accused had been in Police custody for over a fortnight and that he was given 2½ hours time for reflection before his confession was recorded. The learned Chief Justice, delivering the judgment of the Court, observed that in the circumstances of that case the Court was not satisfied that the confessional statement, as recorded under S. 164, Criminal P. C., was admissible in evidence. The accused in that case repeated his statements before the Committing Magistrate, but that was not read out and explained to him either by the Committing Magistrate or by the Sessions Judge and on that ground the statements were excluded from consideration. After having thus ruled out the statements of the accused, his Lordship proceeded to summarise the principles of law that should guide a Magistrate in recording a confession under S. 163 and made a few general observations. The decision of the case itself proceeded entirely on the evidence of P.Ws. 2, 3 and 4 and as their evidence was found acceptable the conviction of the accused was upheld and the appeal was dismissed. It is, therefore, clear that the observations made by the learned Chief Justice in Gurubaru Praja v. The King, I L R. (1949) 1 Cut. 207: (A. I. R. (36) 1949 Orissa 67: 51 Cr. L. J. 72) regarding the procedure to be followed by a Magistrate acting under S. 164, Criminal P. C., were not necessary for the decision of the particular case and did not form a part of the ratio decidendi. The actual decision is not of much importance and most of the observations in the judgment—and much that is of interest in it—is obiter. It does not appear to have been realised that the principle of a case is limited to the sum of all the facts held by the Court to be material in that case and all observations of a general nature are merely obiter. The distinction between what is rationis and what is mere obiter should always be borne in mind when following a precedent. It is often embarrassing to the Subordinate Courts even to ignore what is palpably obiter when a case is cited before them. But it must always be remembered that it is the abstract ratio decidendi, which alone has the force of law. The only thing, says Sir George Jessel in Osborne v. Rowlett, (1880) 13 Ch. D. 774 at p. 785: (49 L. J. Ch. 310), in a Judge's decision binding as an authority upon a subsequent Judge is the principle upon which the case is decided. Courts of Justice, therefore, take care, in their formulation of principles, to limit themselves to the requirements of the case in hand and shrink from laying down any principle which is wider than is necessary for the purpose of the case. The prerogative of Judges is not to make law by formulating and declaring it—this pertains to the Legislature—but to make law by applying it. A judicial declaration unaccompanied by a judicial application is of no authority, as Salmond puts it. The precautions that a Magistrate acting under S. 164, Criminal P. C., has to take by warning the accused before recording his confession are prescribed in the Code itself in S. 164 (3). A mere failure to record all the questions he puts to the accused does not necessarily entail the rejection of the confession as inadmissible. For, S. 533 of the Code provides for evidence being taken that the statement was duly made. Any further precautions prescribed by judicial decisions can have no statutory authority and are intended only to serve as rules for the guidance of the recording Magistrate. In matters of procedure, it is essential that the rules must be certain rather than wise, flexible rather than complete. Whether a confession has been properly recorded or not must, therefore, be left to be decided by the Judge before whom it is tendered as evidence. Whether it should be accepted or not will depend upon the wisdom and understanding of the Trial Judge who knows the essentials of a fair trial. In the web of human affairs, it will be a futile task to attempt to reduce those conditions to a mathematical formula. The learned Sessions Judge—in more cases than one that have come up before this Court—has rejected the confessions as inadmissible on the only ground that the confessant was not asked why he was making a confession and that he was not told that it may be used as evidence against him, even if retracted later. The evidence in the case before us clearly shows that the Magistrate warned the accused that his statement may be used against him; he did not go further and add that it may be so used even if the confession is retracted. I cannot see any logic or reason for a further warning anticipating a retraction of the confession. Nor can I appreciate the need for asking the accused about the motive for making a confession. He may have several or he may have none. The simplest motive is that it is most natural for a guilty person to lift a load off his mind by making a clean breast, because truth is natural and dissembling is difficult. Some people confess because they prefer jail life to normal life. The law does not require the motive to be elicited. The only requirement laid down by the law is that the confession should be free from the blemishes of compulsion, inducement, threat or promise. If the recording Magistrate is satisfied that the confession is not tainted by any of these vitiating factors he is entitled to presume that the confession is voluntary. Whether, however, the confession made to him is true or not will be for the trial Judge to decide. Having regard to the language of S. 163 (2), Criminal P. C., which says that

"no police officer or any other person shall prevent, by caution or otherwise, any person from making . . . . . any statement which he may be disposed to make of his own free will",

I am inclined to think that too much of questioning by the Magistrate or too many warnings administered by him may amount to dissuading the accused from making a confession. Under S. 164 (3) he called upon to "explain" to the accused that he is not bound to make a confession and that it may be used against him. If, after this explanation, the Magistrate is satisfied that the accused is disposed to make a statement of his own free will, he is under no further obligation to give any further caution; in fact he would be violating S. 163 (2) were he to do so. Ordinarily, Magistrates of the First Class record confessional statements of accused persons and there is no reason to presume that they cannot make up their minds, after putting a few questions, whether a person is making a confession voluntarily or under duress. I do not think therefore that it is possible to prescribe any litmus paper test for determining whether a Magistrate had reasons to believe the voluntary character of a confession made to him. That any such attempt is bound to fail is demonstrated in this very case itself. The appellant not only made a confessional statement but stuck to it in the committing Court and more or less stood by it also in the Court of Session although he attempted to water it down. To reject the confession in such a case would result in a miscarriage of justice. I have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that the learned Sessions Judge was in error in ruling out the confessional statement of appellant Shyam Keot, under S. 161, Criminal P. C., as inadmissible.

[11] The last point urged for the appellants is that the conviction under S. 395, Penal Code, for the offence of dacoity cannot stand as the eight persons, along with the four appellants have been acquitted. Mr. Chatterji relied upon the cases reported in Emperor v. Ikram-ud-din, 39 ALL. 348 : (A. I. R. (4) 1917 ALL. 173 : 18 Cr. L. J. 491), Girdhar v. Emperor, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Lah. 519 : (28 Cr. L. J 547) and Abbas Ali v. Emperor, A. I. R. (15) 1928 Mad. 144 : (29 Cr. L. J. 5).

[12] In Emperor v. Ikram ud-din, 39 ALL. 348: (A. I. R. (4) 1917 ALL. 173: 18 Cr. L. J. 491), the trial was by Jury and the conviction was set aside on the ground that the legal definition of what a dacoity is was not explained to the Jury. In Girdhar v. Emperor, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Lah. 519 : (28 Cr. L. J. 547), there were four persons charged for dacoity and one of the alleged dacoits was examined as an approver. The Sessions Judge definitely held that two of the accused were not concerned in the offence and convicted the other two under S. 395, Penal Code. Following the rule in Rex v. Plummer, (1902) 2 K. B. 339: (71 L. J. K. B. 805), a single Judge of the Lahore High Court held in that case that the conviction for dacoity was bad. The case reported in Abbas Ali v. Emperor, A. I. R. (15) 1928 Mad. 144 : (29 Cr. L. J. 5) is really against the point urged for the appellants. In that case three known and named persons were charged with two other unknown men. Of the three persons charged one was acquitted and the other two were convicted of dacoity. A Division Bench of the Madras High Court held that the conviction was not illegal.

[13] The learned Assistant Government Advocate appearing for the State drew our attention to the case reported in Kapil Deo Singh v. The King, 1950 S. C. J. 143 : (A. I. R. (37) 1950 F. C. 80 : 51 Cr. L. J. 1057) which was a case under S. 147, Penal Code. He also cited the case reported in Rashid-uz-Zaman v. Emperor, 12 Cr. L. J. 193 : (10 I. C. 684 Cal). It is a Division Bench case of the Calcutta High Court where their Lordships held that though all the persons charged were not convicted, it would not affect the question regarding the number of persons engaged. Plummer's case, ((1902) 2 K. B. 339 : (71 L. J. K. B. 805) was not followed as it related to a case of conspiracy. The last case relied upon the learned Assistant Government Advocate is Mohd. Ahsan v. Emperor, A. I. R. (17) 1930 Lah. 263 : (31 Cr. L. J. 112). This was a Division Bench case and Tekchand J., who delivered judgment in Girdhar v. Emperor, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Lah. 519 : (28 Cr. L. J. 547) was a party to this judgment. In this case the identity of four out of five persons was established, while the fifth man remained unidentified. It was held that the conviction of the four accused under S. 395, Penal Code, was correct though it was not possible to trace and identify the fifth man.

[14] The preponderance of authority, therefore, is against the contention raised on behalf of the appellants. I have accordingly no hesitation in overruling that contention.

[15] In the result the conviction and sentence of appellants Sukdev Misra, Garjan Dummal, and Shyam Keot under S. 395, Penal Code, are upheld and their appeals dismissed. We give the benefit of doubt to appellant Sabda Pujari and acquit him. The sentence of seven years rigorous imprisonment is, however, reduced to five years rigorous imprisonment in the case of appellants Sukdev Misra and Garjan Dummal, and to four years rigorous imprisonment in the case of appellant Shyam Keot as he has already been in Jail trial for over a year and a half.

[16] Jagannadhadas J.— I agree with my learned brother that the conviction and sentence of the appellants Sukdev Misra, Garjan Dummal, and Shyam Keot, should be upheld and that the appellant Sabda Pujari should be given the benefit of doubt and acquitted.

[17] I wish, however, to say that I am not satisfied that in the circumstances of this case the conviction under S. 395, Penal Code, was correct. In the Sessions Court twelve persons were put on trial. Eight out of them have been acquitted by the Sessions Judge and we have given the benefit of doubt to another so that in the result only three out of the twelve persons are convicted. As the offence of dacoity requires the conjoint participation of five persons, the question has been raised before us that the appellants can be convicted only of robbery under S. 392. It is no doubt perfectly true that, in spite of the acquittal of a number of persons, if it is found as a fact that along with the persons convicted there were other unidentified persons who participated in the offence, bringing the total number of participants to five or more, the conviction of the identified persons though less than five is perfectly correct. But the difficulty in this case is that certain named twelve persons were charged with having committed dacoity by conjointly doing various acts. The charge does not say that these twelve persons along with other unidentified persons committed the dacoity conjointly. If, therefore, 9 out of 12 persons are acquitted, the question arises whether the remaining three can be said to be conjoint participants with another two or more persons not identified. Is the Court to find that some persons outside the individuals charged participated or some out of the very persons charged but acquitted? To find the former is to give a decision on a fact of which the accused have no notice through the specific terms of the charge. To find the latter is to assume that some of the very persons that have been acquitted by giving the benefit of doubt have, in fact, been the participants. I find difficulty in arriving at either of these conclusions. Certain cases bearing on this matter have been brought to our notice. The cases in Rashid-uz-Zaman v. Emperor, 12 Cr. L. J. 193 : (10 I. C. 684 Cal), Narayan Dinba v. Emperor, 47 Cr. L. J. 832 : (A. I. R. (34) 1947 Nag. 57) and Mohd. Ahsan v. Emperor, A. I. R. (17) 1930 Lah. 263 : (31 Cr. L. J. 112) have been cited in favour of the legality of a conviction under S. 395 under such circumstances; while Emperor v. Ikram-ud-din, 39 ALL. 348: (A. I. R. (4) 1917 ALL. 173: 18 Cr. L. J. 491), In re Koila Thevan, 11 Cr. L. J. 249 : (5 I. C. 797 Mad.), Girdhar v. Emperor, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Lah. 519 : (28 Cr. L. J. 547) and Abbas Ali v. Emperor, A. I. R. (15) 1928 Mad. 144 : (29 Cr. L. J. 5) have been shown to us as being against the propriety of such a conviction. It has also been said that Kapil Deo Singh v. The King, A. I. R. (37) 1950 S. C. 80 : (1950 S. C. J. 143 : 51 Cr. L. J. 1057) concludes the matter. I am not satisfied that it does. I do not propose, however, to go into this matter at any length for the purpose of this case and to dissent from the view taken by my learned brother that the conviction under S. 395 is to be maintained in this case. For even if I held that the appellants other than Sabda Pujari were to be convicted only under S. 392, I should not have been inclined to reduce the sentences beyond what has been indicated in the judgment of my learned brother.

[18] I desire also to add that I propose to express no opinion, in this case, as to the correctness of the observations in the ruling reported in Gurubaru Praja v. The King I. L. R. (1949) 1 Cut. 207 : (A. I. R. (36) 1949 Orissa 67 : 51 Cr. L. J. 72) and as to whether or not they are obiter because I am satisfied that even if the confession of the appellant Shyam Keot is excluded, as the learned Sessions Judge has done, the evidence of P. Ws. 11, 12 and 15 is quite sufficient for his conviction.

V.R.B. Order accordingly.

Dibyasinga Misra — for Appellant; Asst. Govt. Advocate—for the State.

Panigrahi J. — This is an appeal directed against a conviction under S. 302/149, Penal Code, by the Additional Sessions Judge, Ganjam-Nayagarh. The occurrence in respect of which the appellant, Khalli Behera, was charged took place on the night of 11-10-1949 at about 7 P. M. on the Grand Trunk Road between Berhampur and Golanthra when the deceased, a jutka driver by name Kalia Behera, was attacked by a number of persons and done to death. The appellant, along with a number of other persons, was arrested on 12-10-1946, the day after the occurrence. Two days later, he was produced before a Magistrate as he was willing to make a confession. On 15-10 1949 his confessional statement was recorded. On 19-11-1946 he was charge-sheeted along with the other accused. On 19-12-1949 he was tendered pardon and he executed a bond agreeing to make a true and full disclosure of all the facts he knew about the occurrence and that he was willing to be examined as an approver. He was actually examined as an approver on 17-2-1947 in the Court of the Committing Magistrate. The case was later committed to the Court of Session and the approver was again examined as a witness (P. W. 13) in that Court, in Sessions Case No. 10 of 1947. The appellant was examined on 3-7-1947 in the Sessions Court when he went back completely upon his earlier statements. The Public Prosecutor of Ganjam thereupon certified, under S. 339, Criminal P. C. that the appellant had forfeited the pardon and that he was liable to be put on his trial. The case which has given rise to this appeal is a sequel to the failure of the appellant to abide by the terms of the bond which he had executed. The appellant pleaded that he had not forfeited the pardon and that he was not guilty of the charge of murder.

[2] The learned Additional Sessions Judge who tried the case held that the confession of the appellant made three days after his arrest was true and was supported by the other evidence in the case. He therefore accepted the appellant's confessional statement as evidence against him in spite of the fact that it was retracted later. He also relied upon the deposition of the appellant before the Committing Magistrate on 17-2 1947 as the facts mentioned therein had been corroborated by the other oral evidence. He held that the reasons given by the appellant for retracting the confession and the deposition were a tissue of falsehood and accordingly found the appellant guilty of the charge of murder and sentenced him to transportation for life.

[3] Mr. Dibyasinga Misra who appeared amicus curiae for the appellant has urged in an able and painstaking argument that the confessional statement should be ruled out as inadmissible as it was not voluntary, that the deposition made by the appellant as approver amounts to a departure from the facts stated in his confessional statement inasmuch as it makes mention of a large number of details omitted in the confession and that the deposition itself, having been induced by the hope of a pardon, should not have been admitted in evidence.

[4] That a confession, though retracted, can be the basis of a conviction, cannot be disputed as a matter of law. The Courts, however, look for corroboration of the statements made in the retracted confession, before acting upon it, as a rule of prudence. It is not necessary to refer to all the cases that were cited at the Bar as the point has been well recognised by all the High Courts. As the learned Sessions Judge has summarised the evidence relating to the factum of the occurrence, as alleged by the prosecution, I shall only briefly give an outline of the broad facts deposed to by the witnesses.

[5] It is established that the deceased Kalia Behera was decoyed by Dhanu, who was one of the persons charged along with the appellant, from Berhampur and that the deceased was also accompanied by one Nartu Jagayya when he started on his ill-fated journey. That a number of people had been waiting on the road—apparently anticipating the arrival of the jutka is spoken to by Jagayya. The appellant, in his confessional statement, said that Bhubani, Trinath, Bhima, Mangulu and Matta Sima were waiting for the jutka with lathis at the scene of occurrence and that Dhanu came in the jutka and got down at the spot. This is corroborated by Jagayya's evidence though he does not give the names of the people assembled at the spot. The appellant's further statement that the cloth of the deceased slipped from him and that Bhubani picked it up and threw it by the side of a screwpine bush nearby is corroborated by the recovery of the cloth itself from the identical spot where, according to the appellant, it had been thrown away. The cloth has also been identified to be that of the deceased by the father of the deceased who was examined in the case. The confessional statement further states that after the deceased fell down he was stabbed with a knife. The post-mortem certificate shows that the deceased had received not only lathi blows but also knife injuries. According to the appellant, Dhanu gave a knife blow and a shirt belonging to Dhanu, suspected to contain blood-stains, was seized. The Serologist has certified those blood stains to be of human origin. In the confession the appellant states that he gave a stick blow. In his deposition before the Committing Magistrate he said:

> "Accused Bhubani gave us lathis and I was given a khantabadi by him . . . . I subsequently gave the khantabadi to Trinath and he handed over the Khantabadi at Bhubani's house."

The khantabadi was subsequently recovered from Bhubani's house and exhibited in the case. In his confessional statement the accused implicated Dhanu and Bhima. It was proved at the trial that a shirt belonging to Dhanu and a white cloth and a bundle of thread belonging to Bhima were seized and later certified by the Serologist to have contained human blood. It would thus appear that not only have the broad facts attending the death of the deceased Kalia Behera been proved but also the part actually taken by the appellant in the murder has also been corroborated by the evidence on record. The confessional statement of the accused has therefore been corroborated in material particulars not only with regard to the occurrence and the general aspects of the murder, but also with regard to the part played by the appellant. His presence at the scene of occurrence and his complicity in the crime have been satisfactorily established by the evidence on record.

(6) In his examination before the Court of Session in S. C., 10 of 1947 (Ex. 19-4) the appellant completely denied any knowledge of the occurrence but he admitted that his statement of confession made to the Magistrate had not been made under the influence of the Police. He said :

"I made a statement before the Magistrate three days after the occurrence. I told him that I did not know anything about the occurrence. By that time nobody tutored me."

At another place he said :

"It was only in connection with my examination at the Committing Court that I was tutored."

It cannot therefore be seriously contended that the statement that he made before the Magistrate under S. 164, Criminal P. C. was not voluntary or that it had been brought about by any undue influence or pressure. The Magistrate who recorded the confession and who was examined as P. W. 18, says that he warned the appellant that he was not bound to make a statement and that whatever he said may be used as evidence against him. The appellant is said to have replied: "I am going to make a voluntary statement of all that I know". The appellant was again asked by the Magistrate "Why do you agree to confess your guilt before me"? and he replied: "whatever I know I will speak". It is pointed out by the learned counsel for the appellant that inasmuch as the appellant was not specifically asked that his statement might be used as evidence against him, even if he retracted, the confession could not be voluntary and should not have been acted upon. Our attention was drawn to the case reported in Gurubaru Praja v. The King, 1 Cut. 207: (A. I. R. (36) 1949 Orissa 67: 51 Cr. L. J. 72). That case is no authority for invalidating a confession on the mere ground that the accused was not specifically warned by the Magistrate recording his confession that his confessional statement, even if retracted later, may be used as evidence against him. Section 164, Criminal P. C., says that the Magistrate is bound to explain to the accused that the statement which he makes may be used as evidence against him. I see no reason to superimpose a further qualification to what is already contained in the Statute. It was also urged that the statement was taken at the house of the Magistrate (P. W. 18) and that on that ground it is vitiated. There is no specific rule that I know of which prohibits a Magistrate from recording a statement under S. 164 either at his house or in camp, wherever it may suit him. In fact it may be necessary in some cases to record a statement outside the Court so that the accused may be altogether free from any influence or fear.

[7] Whatever may be said with regard to the admissibility of the confession recorded under S. 164, the statement of the appellant, as approver, made in the Court of the Committing Magistrate cannot be assailed on any ground. This statement is marked as Ex. 19. It was recorded in the course of the enquiry by the Committing Magistrate and not under S. 164. Section 337 (2), Criminal P. C. lays down that :

"Every person accepting a tender under this section shall be examined as a witness in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence and in the subsequent trial, if any."

Exhibit 19 is, therefore, a statement of a witness and not the confession of an accused. Admittedly this was preceded by pardon tendered and accepted. There is no substance in the contention that this evidence is also tainted because the accused made the statement with the hope of getting release from the charge. Section 337 is enacted to meet a contention like the one urged before us. A person who accepts the tender of pardon accepts also the grave risk of not departing from the truth, on pain of being charged with the offence if he abused the privilege granted to him. Section 339 (2), therefore, provides that "the statement made by a person who has accepted a tender of pardon may be given in evidence against him at such trial."

This provision is accordingly in the nature of an exception to S. 164, Criminal P. C., and S. 24, Evidence Act. I am, therefore, satisfied that Ex. 19 could be legitimately used against the accused though retracted later. In this statement, the appellant repeated what he had stated before the Magistrate under S. 164 and added one more detail. He repeated the statement that he had been given a khantabadi by Bhubani, that he along with his associates waited on the road for the arrival of the jutka from Berhampur, that Dhanu came along with the deceased jutka driver, and that along with others he himself beat the deceased with a lathi. He implicates Bhima as having assaulted the deceased with a lathi. He says that the cloth worn by the jutka driver slipped and that it was thrown away by Bhubani and that Dhanu stabbed the deceased on his abdomen with a knife. The only new fact that he added for the first time was the receipt of Rs. 25 from Bhubani. He has also confirmed his earlier statements that he gave the khantabadi to Trinath and that Trinath later handed it over at Bhubani's house. His presence at the scene of occurrence and that part he took in the occurrence have been corroborated, as I have already indicated earlier. The cloth of the deceased was actually seized from the place where, according to the appellant, Bhubani had thrown it. With regard to the weight to be attached to the find of the cloth I may quote the observations of the Judicial Committee in Bhuboni Sahoo v. The King, 1949-2 M. L. J. 194 at p. 197 : (A. I. R. (36) 1949 P. C. 257 : 50 Cr. L. J. 872) :

"With regard to the cloth, as already noticed, the evidence of the approver was that the appellant threw the cloth over a hedge and it was proved at the trial that the cloth was found in the place pointed out by the approver. This fact no doubt was of value as supporting the credibility of the approver's story."

So far as the approver's story relating to the Khantabadi, is concerned, it is an equally valuable piece of evidence against himself though it was not of much evidentiary value against Bhubani from whose house it was recovered. The presence of human blood on the clothes of Dhanu and Bhima is another important piece of evidence which implicates the appellant and proves beyond doubt his participation in the crime.

[8] We are satisfied that the appellant has forfeited the pardon tendered to him and that his confessional statement and his later statement, as approver, though retracted, have been corroborated in material particulars. Agreeing with the learned Sessions Judge, therefore, we uphold his conviction and sentence and dismiss this appeal.

[9] Jagannadhadas J. — I agree that the conviction and the sentence should be upheld and the appeal dismissed.

[10] I wish, however, to add that I consider it quite improper on the part of the Magistrate to have recorded the confessional statement of the accused under S. 164 at his house without assigning any reason. This is all the more a matter for comment, since it appears that the learned Judge on that very date recorded the confessional statement of another accused in the main case, named, Dhanu in open Court just only 20 minutes earlier. The confession of Dhanu appears to have been recorded at 2 p. m. and that of this accused at 2. 20 p. m. on the same day. No reason for the same has been elicited either in the examination or cross-examination of the Magistrate, P. W. 18. Rule 11, sub-r. (2), General Rules and Circular Orders, Criminal, which I presume was in force at the time within the confession was taken states as follows :

"Confessions should be recorded in open Court and during the court hours except when unusual circumstances require a different procedure, as for instance, when an open record will be detrimental to public interest or when the recording of the confession in open Court is rendered impracticable by reason of the fact that the Court is closed for two or more successive days on account of holidays."

[11] In spite, however, of room for the above comment, I have satisfied myself that on the record there is no ground for rejecting the confession as not being voluntary. There also the clear evidence afforded against himself by the deposition of the accused as approver in the Committing Magistrate's Court.

Raghunath Patnaik — Petitioner v. State Transport Authority, Orissa and another — Opposite Party.

M. J. C No. 118 of 1950, D/- 18-9-1950.

(a) Motor Vehicles Act (1939), Ss. 44 (3) (a) and (4) and 45 — Scope of sections — Resolution of P.T.A. D/ 3-10-1947 — Validity.

There is a clear distinction between disposal of an application for a permit and filing of such an application. Section 45 deals with the forum for filing such applications. It has nothing to do with their disposal and for the latter purpose the Provincial Transport Authority can issue appropriate direction under S. 44 (3) (a) and (4). [Para 4]

The resolution of the Provincial Transport Authority dated 3 10 1947 which said that applications for permit should be made to the Regional Transport Authority within whose jurisdiction the longest stretch of the route lies goes against the provisions of S. 45 and cannot, therefore, be a valid direction under S. 44 (4). [Para 4]

(b) Motor Vehicles Act (1939), S. 44 (3) (a) and (5) — Power to take over inter-district route — Delegation to Chairman, P. T. A. — Absence of rules under sub-s. (5) — Resolution D/- 15-1-1946 — Validity.

The power to take over any inter-district route cannot be delegated to the Chairman, Provincial Transport Authority, except under the rules framed under sub-s. (5). In the absence of such rules, such delegation itself becomes invalid and consequently the resolution of the Provincial Transport Authority dated 15-1 46 authorising the Chairman to take over any inter-district route if the circumstances justify unitary control must be held to be ineffective. As the Provincial Transport Authority had no jurisdiction to delegate its functions to its Chairman, even if the latter takes over the control of any route his action cannot oust the jurisdiction of the Regional Transport Authorities of the regions through which such route passes. [Para 5]

(c) Motor Vehicles Act (1939), Ss. 57 (4) and 64 (f) — Objection to grant of permit filed after period fixed by S. 57 (4) is over — Such person, if has right to appeal.

Where a person files an objection to the grant of a permit to another person long after the period fixed by S 54 (4) is over, he has no right of appeal. Consequently, the Chairman of the Provincial Transport Authority has no jurisdiction to hear the appeal filed by such a person and to set aside the order of the Regional Transport Authority. [Para 7]

(d) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Order in appeal of Chairman, Provincial Transport Authority — Writ of certiorari if lies against order — Motor Vehicles Act (1939), S. 64.

The Chairman, Provincial Transport Authority, is not a Court as ordinarily understood. But where he passes an order in appeal after hearing the parties and after deciding between a proposal and an opposition, a writ of certiorari lies against his order.

[Para 8]

K. Patnaik and S. C. Parija—for Petitioner; Advocate-General and P. V. B. Rao—for Opposite Party.

Narasimham J.—This is an application for the issue of a writ of certiorari under Art. 226 of the Constitution for quashing an order dated 27-7-50 passed by the Chairman, State Transport Authority while purporting to decide an appeal under S. 64, Motor Vehicles Act, 1939, against an order of the Regional Transport Authority, Puri, granting a permit for stage carriage on the route from Banpur to Berhampur to the petitioner Sri Raghunath Patnaik. The said route lies in the districts of Puri and Ganjam but a major portion of the route lies in the latter district. On 16-4-49 the R. T. A., Ganjam gave a permit for stage carriage on the said route to the opposite-party Somanath Patro. On the same day, the R. T. A., Puri granted a stage carriage permit conditionally to the petitioner, Sri Raghunath Patnaik, the condition being that his vehicle should be inspected and certified by the Motor Vehicles Inspector. On 16-7-1949 the R. T. A., Puri after perusing the fitness certificate issued by the Motor Vehicles Inspector confirmed the grant of the permit in favour of the petitioner. Some time in May 1949, the opposite party Sri Somanath Patro on coming to know about the conditional grant of permit to the petitioner by the Puri authorities filed an objection before them against the grant of permit to the petitioner. But his objection was not looked into because it was filed long after the period prescribed for filing objections under S. 57 (4), Motor Vehicles Act. The opposite-party thereupon filed an appeal before the Chirman, State Transport Authority who by his order dated 27-7-1950 set aside the order of the R. T. A., Puri mainly on the ground that the application for permit made by Sri Raghunath Patnaik before the R. T. A., Puri was incompetent in view of a direction issued by the Provincial Transport Authority under sub-s. (4) of S. 44 of the M. V. Act.

[2] It is necessary to describe briefly the functions of the R. T. A. and the P.T.A. under the M. V. Act. Both the said authorities are constituted by the State Government under S. 44 of the Act and while the jurisdiction of the R. T. A. ordinarily extends over a district, the jurisdiction of the P. T. A. extends over the whole State of Orissa. The function of granting a stage carriage permit is primarily that of the R. T. A. (S. 47) and it has to follow certain principles and procedure described fully in Ss. 47 and 57. A permit issued by a R. T. A. is not valid in another district and consequently where a route lies in two districts, the permit issued by the first R. T. A. requires validation by the R. T. A. of the second district in accordance with the procedure prescribed in S. 63 of the Act. In the present case that section has been complied with and the counter-signature of R. T. A. Ganjam obtained to the permit issued by R. T. A, Puri in favour of the petitioner. Section 64 provides for an appeal against some of the orders of the R. T. A to a prescribed authority and it is admitted that the Chirman of the P. T. A. has been notified by the Government as the appellate authority over the decisions of the R T.A. The P.T.A. is a superior body which ordinarily does not take upon itself the function of the R. T. A., though under cl. (b) of sub-s. (3) of S. 44 it may perform the duties of the R.T A. if it thinks fit in respect of a route common to two or more regions. Its main function however is to co-ordinate and regulate the activities and policies of the R. T. A. and for that purpose it is empowered to issue directions from time to time for their guidance (see sub-s. (4) of S. 44). By an amendment made in 1942, a new sub-section (sub-s. (5)) was inserted in S. 44 of that Act and the P. T. A. was given the power to delegate such of its powers and functions to such authority or person as may be prescribed by the rules framed by the State Government. It was not challenged before us that no rules have yet been made by the State Government under sub-s. (5) of S. 44 and consequently this power of delegation could not be validly exercised by the P. T. A

[3] On 15-1-1946 the P. T. A., passed the following resolution:

"Resolved further that the Chairman is authorised to take over any other inter-district route or routes if the circumstances justify unitary control."

In pursuance of this resolution the Secretary of the P. T. A., issued the following letter to all the R. T. As.

No. 150 (4) PTA
Dated Cuttack, the 9th March 1946

To

The Regional Transport Authority,
Cuttack/Puri/Ganjam/Sambalpur.

Subject:—Control of routes by Provincial Transport Authority.

It has come to notice that some of the Regional Transport Authorities are granting or renewing permits over the routes, the control of which has been taken over by the Provincial Transport Authority. As the Provincial Transport Authority is not consulted before the grant or renewal of such permits, it is not convenient to introduce efficient control over the management of the various services in order to give better facilities to the public and to avoid uneconomical and rival competitions. The Regional Transport Authority should, therefore, consult the Provincial Transport Authority before the grant of renewal of any permit or change of timings or fares of the existing and future service for any part over these routes. The following routes are under the Provincial Transport Authority's control :

(1) Cuttack-Berhampur.
(2) Cuttack-Puri.
(3) Sambalpur-Meramundali.
(4) Cuttack-Sambalpur."

The Advocate-General urged that by virtue of the aforesaid resolution read with the subsequent letter, the P. T. A. in exercise of its powers under cl. (b) of sub-s. (3) of S. 44 took over the duties of the R. T. A. in respect of inter district routes such as Cuttack-Berhampur. The route from Banpur to Berhampur lies on this route except for a few miles near Banpur and hence that route also may be said to have been taken over by the P. T. A. In 1947 the P. T. A. found the work of granting permits over inter-district routes to be unmanageable and therefore passed the following resolution on 3-10 1947.

"2. The granting of original permits and counter-signature of permits by the P. T. A. :—

Discussed the question of application for original permits and applications for counter-signature of permits coming to the P. T. A. Resolved that in view of the large volume of work it involves which can conveniently be done by the R. T. As. application for original permits and for counter-signature permits should be made to the R. T. A. in whose jurisdiction the longest stretch of the route lies. Applications for extension of the existing permits or extension of any permit that will be granted in future should be made to the R.T.A. of the region in which the extended route lies."

The Advocate-General further urged that by the aforesaid resolution of 3-10-1947 the P. T. A. divested itself of its power of issuing permits over Cuttack-Berhampur route but it directed that applications for orignal permits and for counter-signature of permits should be made to the R. T. A. in whose jurisdiction the longest stretch of the route lies. In accordance with this direction an application for a permit over Banpur-Berhampur route ought to have been made before the R. T. A. Ganjam within whose jurisdiction a major portion of the route lies and that consequently the R. T. A., Puri had no jurisdiction either to receive the application or to grant a permit. This argument appears to have weighed with the lower Court.

[4] In my opinion this argument is untenable. It is true that under sub-s. (4) of S. 44 the P. T. A. has the power to issue directions for the guidance of the R. T. As. But such directions should be consistent with the other provisions of the M. V. Act. Section 45 of the Act is as follows :

"General provision as to applications for permits : Every applications for a permit shall be made to the Regional Transport Authority of the region or of one of the regions in which it is proposed to use the vehicle and, if the applicant resides or has his principal place of business in any one of those regions, to the Regional Transport Authority of that region."

This section therefore says that if a route lies in two regions an application for a permit may be made to the R. T A. of either of the two regions; but that if the applicant resides or has his principal place of business in any of those regions the application shall be made to the R. T. A. of that region. The petitioner Sri Raghunath Patnaik is a resident of Puri district and consequently under S 45 he is entitled to apply to the R. T. A., Puri for the grant of a permit over the Banpur-Berhampur route. This right conferred by S. 45 cannot be taken away by any direction that may be issued by the P. T. A. under sub-s. 4 of S. 44. But this does not mean that the P. T. A. cannot issue directions regulating the disposal of such applications. Under cl. (a) of sub s. (3) of S. 44 the P. T. A. has the power to co-ordinate and regulate the activities of the R. T. As. and in exercise of that power the P. T. A. could have directed one R. T. A. to send such applications for disposal to another R. T. A. within whose jurisdiction the longest stretch of the route lies. There is a clear distinction between disposal of an application for a permit and filing of such an application. Section 45 deals with the forum for filing such applications. It has nothing to do with their disposal and for the latter purpose the P. T. A. could have easily issued appropriate directions. But the resolution of the P. T. A. dated 3-10-1947 says that applications should be made to the R. T. A. within whose jurisdiction the longest stretch of the route lies, thereby clearly going against the provisions of S. 45 Hence that resolution cannot be a valid direction under S. 44 (4), M. V. Act so as to oust the jurisdiction of the R. T. A., Puri to receive the application of Sri Raghunath Patnaik. As there was no further direction from the P. T. A., regarding the disposal of such applications the R. T. A., Puri was within its powers in disposing of it in accordance with the other provisions of the M. V. Act.

[5] It is now necessary to examine how far the resolution of the P. T. A. dated 15-1-1946 took away the power of the R. T. As. to grant permit over inter-district routes. The resolution has been already quoted and it merely authorises the Chairman to take over any inter-district route if the circumstances justify unitary control. The power to take over such routes is conferred on the P. T. A. by cl. (b) of sub-s. (3) of S. 44, M. V. Act. That power cannot be delegated to the Chairman except under the provisions of sub-s. (5) of that section. But as already pointed out, the exercise of the power of delegation is dependent on the existence of rules framed by the Government under that sub-section. In the absence of such rules such delegation itself becomes invalid and consequently the aforesaid resolution of the P. T. A. must be held to be ineffective. The letter of the P. T. A. dated 9-3-1946 doubtless implies that the P. T. A. has taken over control of Cuttack-Berhampur route. But the learned Advocate-General has not placed before us any other resolution of the P. T. A. between 15-1-1946 and 9-3-1946 to show that the P. T. A. itself took over that route. Apparently, in pursuance of the January resolution, the Chairman took over that route and this was considered to be an act of the P. T. A. itself and then instructions were issued to all R. T. As. As the P. T. A. had no jurisdiction to delegate its functions to its Chairman, it is obvious that even if the latter took over the control of the Cuttack-Berhampur route his action cannot oust the jurisdiction of the R. T. As. of the regions through which the said route passes.

[6] It must therefore be held that neither the resolution of the P. T. A. dated 15-1-1946 nor its letter dated 9-3-1946 nor its subsequent resolution dated 3-10-1947 had the effect of taking away the jurisdiction of the R. T. A., Puri to receive the application of the petitioner for a permit over Banpur-Berhampur line and to grant the same. It is true that the permit issued by the R. T. A., Puri will be valid only within the limits of Puri district and to validate the same in Ganjam district the petitioner was required to apply to the R. T. A., Ganjam under S. 63. This was also done and the counter-signature of the R. T. A., Ganjam was obtained.

[7] The aforesaid conclusion vitally affects the competence of the Chairman, P. T. A. to hear the appeal which was filed before him by opposite party 2 Somanath Patro. The right of appeal is conferred by cl. (f) of S. 64, M. V. Act, on a person who having opposed the grant of a permit is aggrieved by the grant thereof. The said Somanath Patro did not oppose the grant of a permit to Sri Raghunath Patnaik prior to 16-4-1949. It is true that he filed an objection some time in May 1949. But that was long after the period fixed for filing objections under sub-s. (4) of S. 57. Consequently he had no right of appeal and the Chairman, P. T. A. had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal and set aside the order of the R. T. A. The Chairman was fully aware of this difficulty; but he tried to get round it by saying that as the R. T. A., Puri was not the proper authority for receiving applications for permits in view of the resolution of the P. T. A. dated 15-1-1946 the opposite party could not file a valid objection before him. But in view of what has been said above it is clear that the R. T. A., Puri was competent to receive the application and grant permit and consequently the objection of Somanath Patro ought to have been filed before him within the prescribed time as required by S. 57 (4).

[8] It was not seriously contested before us that a writ of certiorari would lie in a case of this type. It is true the Chairman, P. T. A. is not a Court as ordinarily understood. But it has been laid down in (The King v. Londons County Council; Ex parte The Entertainment Protection Association, (1931)-2 K. B. 215: (100 L. J. K. B 760), by Scrutton L. J. following previous decisions that a writ of certiorari would lie against the order of a tribunal exercising judicial functions even though such a tribunal may not be a Court. To a similar effect are the following observations of Viscount Simon L. C. in Ryots of Garabandho v. Zemindar of Parlakhimedi, A. I. R. (30) 1943 P. C. 164: (I. L. R. (1944) Kar P. C. 119).

"This writ does not issue to correct purely executive acts, but on the other hand, its application is not narrowly limited to inferior 'Courts' in the strictest sense. Broadly speaking, it may be said that if the act done by the inferior body a judicial act, as distinguished from being a ministerial act certiorari will lie.

The order of the Chairman, P. T. A is clearly a judicial act inasmuch as it purports to be an order passed in appeal after hearing the parties and after deciding between a proposal and an opposition In Vedachala Mudliar v. Central Road Traffic Board Madras, A. I. R. (35) 1948 Mad. 454 (I. L. R. (1949) Mad. 194) this power was exercised for quashing an order passed by the Central Road Traffic Board Madras (which corresponds to the P. T. A. in Orissa) on an incompetent appeal.

[9] I would therefore make the rule absolute and quash the order dated 27-7-1950 passed by the Chairman, State Transport Authority in M. V. Apps. Nos. 32 and 37 of 1949. The petitioner should get costs and hearing fee of two gold mohurs to be apportioned equally between the two opposite parties.

(a) Penal Code (1860) S. 188—Complaint by public authority is essential—Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 195 — Criminal Law Amendment Act (1932), S. 10.

The effect of S. 10 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act making offence under S. 188, Penal Code, cognizable does not render the provisions of S. 195, Criminal P. C. nugatory; nor is there any conflict between the two provisions in their essentialities. Non-compliance with S. 195 is fatal to the prosecution under S. 188. Complaint by the public authority concerned is essential. [Para 4.]

Anno. Penal Code S. 188, N. 5; Cr. P. C., S. 195, N.3.

(b) Penal Code (1860) Ss. 145, 188—Trial for offences under—Non compliance with S. 195, Criminal P. C., in respect of offences under S. 188—Conviction under S. 188 set aside—Conviction under S. 145 held did not stand—Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 195.

The accused was convicted under Ss. 188 and 145, Penal Code. Prosecution for offence under S. 188 was found vitiated on account of want of a complaint by public authority as required by S. 195, Criminal P. C. As regards his conviction under S. 145:

Held, that on vitiation of the trial under S. 188 and therefore its exclusion from trial there would remain no unlawful assembly and therefore the order for disposal of such an assembly would have not legal validity. Without unlawful assembly, offence under S. 145 could not be said to have been committed. (Conviction and sentence quashed). [Para 10]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 195, N. 3; Penal Code, S. 145, N. 1

V. Pasayat and R. N. Das—for Petitioners; Advocate-General—for Opposite Party.

Ray C. J.—The petitioners seek review of the orders of the Court below convicting them under Ss. 145 and 188, Penal Code, for having violated an order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., promulgated by the Magistrate and having failed to disperse the unlawful assembly after having been commanded to do so.

[2] The petitioners' contention is that the prosecution under S. 188, Penal Code, is bad in law as no complaint was filed by the public authority concerned according to the provisions of S. 195, Criminal P. C. Secondly, that the trial, being bad in law as to S. 188, Penal Code, is bad in its entirety.

[3] These contentions are sought to be met by the learned Advocate-General, appearing for the State, in two ways: (i) that the offence under S. 188, Penal Code, has been declared cognisable under S. 10, Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1932, and hence compliance with S. 195, Criminal P. C. is not necessary; and (ii) that even if the trial be bad with regard to offence under S. 188, it is not so with regard to the offence under S. 145, Penal Code. The latter is an independent offence. The prosecution therefore is not subject to prerequisite of complaint by the public authority concerned.

[4] The effect of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, does not render the provisions of S. 195 nugatory nor is there any conflict between the two provisions in their essentialities. Cognisable offences are those in which the police may arrest without warrant. It has not been pointed out to us how this would obviate the necessity of a complaint by the public authority concerned. Arrest by the police does not necessarily amount to cognisance of an offence by the Magistrate. Section 195, Criminal P. C. interposes a barrier between commission of an offence and cognisance by the Magistrate. This barrier can be removed only by a complaint being filed before the Magistrate. It has been held in the case of Magan Lal v. Emperor, 35 Cr. L. J. 1097 at p. 1100: (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Nag. 71):

"The fact that no proceedings may be instituted for an offence under S. 19 (f) of the Arms Act without the permission of the District Magistrate does not make the offence non-cognisable."

This contention, on behalf of the State, has found favour with the Court below. We hold that non-compliance with S. 195, Criminal P. C. is a fatal defect.

[5] The next contention that remains to be considered is whether the conviction under S. 145, Penal Code, would stand. A large number of authorities has been cited on both sides in support of their respective contentions. In all the cases, it has generally been accepted that evasion of S. 195, Criminal P. C., should not ordinarily be allowed. The larger question whether where an accused is convicted in one trial of several offences, the trial of some of which is bad in law for the non-fulfilment of certain primary conditions, the entire trial shall be held invalidated for such non-fulfilment and the conviction set aside, need not be decided in this case. There are some decisions which would support the contention that even though the trial is bad in relation to one or more offences, the conviction for other offences could be maintained. In the case of Guru Prasad Rim Gupta v. Rameswar Marwari, A. I. R. (25) 1938 Cal. 527: (39 Cr. L. J. 730), their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court, relying upon a Full Bench decision of that Court reported in Satish Chandra v. Ram Dayal A. I. R. (8) 1921 Cal. 1: (22 Cr. L. J. 31 SB) held:

'Since the Legislature has not chosen to include S. 500, I. P. C. amongst those sections, in which the prosecution must be initiated by the Court, in connection with which the offence has been committed, there is no provision of law by which the Court can refuse to permit a prosecution under S. 500 where the facts appear to justify such a prosecution, on the ground that the proceedings have not been initiated under S. 476, Criminal P. C. by the Court before which the offence is alleged to have been committed and that the prosecution is designed to evade the provisions of S. 195, Criminal P. C."

[6] In a Patna case, Sheo Ahir v. Emperor, A. I. R (25) 1938 Pat 548: (40 Cr. L. J. 71), Noor J. sitting with Rowland J. held:

"If in course of one transaction, a number of offences are committed some requiring sanction for prosecution of some authority or the other, and others not requiring such sanction, it is not necessary that the prosecution of those offences which do not require such sanction would depend upon the obtaining of the sanction for prosecution for those offences which required, such sanction. The law requires that for the prosecution of a number of offences sanction of the Court should be obtained; but it does not say if in course of commission of an offence which requires sanction for prosecution, other offences are committed, the magistracy or the police are helpless in proceeding to prosecute the offender for these offences, unless the Court sanctions the prosecution of the former."

[7] Some support to this contention is also obtained from a decision of the Federal Court in the case of Dr. Hori Ram Singh v. Emperor, A. I. R. (26) 1939 F. C. 43: (40 Cr. L. J. 463). In this case, a public servant was tried jointly for offences under Ss. 409 and 477-A, Penal Code. Of the two, the latter offence was said to have been committed in course of discharge of his public duty and the prosecution for the offence necessitated, under S. 270, Government of India Act, 1935, previous consent or sanction of the Government. Their Lordships of the Federal Court held, with regard to the order of acquittal of both the offences:

"If the prosecution is defective for want of proper consent, the proceedings would be void and hence the proper order to pass is that the complaint should be dismissed. Order directing acquittal is wrong."

[8] Taking this view, their Lordships set aside the order of acquittal passed by the High Court and sent the case back to the Sessions Judge for rehearing the appeal against the conviction under S. 409 holding that the conviction under S. 477 A was, in any account, bad in law. They further observed that it was quite open to the learned Sessions Judge to grant the accused a retrial if he found that the accused was prejudiced in his trial for the offence under S. 409 on account of his being jointly tried for the offence under S. 497-A without previous consent of the public authority concerned. This conveys to my mind that according to their Lordships the accused in that case could be tried only for the offence under S. 409, Penal Code, and the trial cannot be held to have been vitiated as a whole on account of the joinder with it, of the charge, in the same trial, under S. 477-A without the requisite consent, unless it caused prejudice to him in defending himself against the charge under S. 409.

[9] I would, however, accept and adopt, with respect, the distinction between cases and cases as pointed out by Sir George Rankin C. J. in the case of Ibrahim v. Emperor, 111 I. C. 433 (Cal.) I would quote the headnote of this case which summarises accurately the finding of his Lordship:

"Where the offence committed is really one under S. 471, Penal Code, it is illegal to reduce the charge to one under S. 474, Penal Code, and prosecute the accused without a complaint under S. 476, Criminal P. C."

In course of argument, the Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court, already referred to, was relied upon for the contrary view. His Lordship said:

"It is said that in a Full Bench case reported as Satis Chandra v. Ram Dayel De, 42 C. L. J. 94: (22 Cr. L. J. 31 F. B), the contrary of this doctrine was laid down. In that case, however, the view taken was that the offences defined in Ss. 211 and 499 were fundamentally distinct in nature."

[10] In the present case, however, the commission of offence under S. 188 is the common object of the unlawful assembly. Exclude S. 188 from the trial, and there would be no unlawful assembly and therefore the order for dispersal of such an assembly (not being an unlawful assembly) will have no legal validity. Without an unlawful assembly, an offence under S. 145, Penal Code, cannot be said to have been committed.

[11] Under the circumstances, the trial for the offences, the facts constituting which are intimately, rather inextricably intertwined, is bad in law without a complaint in writing of the public authority concerned in relation to one of the offences charged.

[12] In the result, the conviction and sentences are quashed. The rule is made absolute. The petitioners should, forthwith, be discharged from their bail bonds.

Criminal Misc. Nos. 21, 22, 32, 33 of 1950, D/-11-9-1950.

(a) Public Safety—Orissa Maintenance of Public Order Act (X [10] of 1950), Ss. 2 (1) (b) and 3—Provisions, if void under Arts. 13 (2) and 21 of Constitution—Constitution of India, Arts. 13 (2), 19 (1) (d), (e) and (5) and 21.

In considering the reasonableness of restrictions contemplated by Art. 19 (5) of the Constitution, a Court has to consider whether the fundamental principles of natural justice, which require that no party ought to be condemned, or to have a decision given against him unless he has been given a reasonable opportunity of putting forward his case before an impartial tribunal, have been contravened. Judged by this standard, the provisions of S. 2 (1) (b) and S. 3 of the Orissa Act of 1950 cannot be held to authorise the imposition of reasonable restrictions on the fundamental rights guaranteed to a citizen under Art. 19 (1) (d) and (e) of the Constitution and consequently those provisions must be held to be void. [Para 7]

Per Ray C. J.—Provisions are void also as inconsistent with Art. 21 of the Constitution as they do not provide for the essentials of a legal procedure. [Para 15]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 491—Order of internment—Writ of habeas corpus, if applies.

A writ of habeas corpus will not apply against an order of internment which is not 'detention' as ordinarily understood. [Para 10]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 491 N. 7.

(c) Constitution of India, Art. 226—Scope.

Article 226 empowers the High Court to issue necessary directions for the enforcement of any of the rights conferred by Part III of the Constitution even though such directions may not strictly conform to one of the writs specifically mentioned in that Article. [Para 10]

(d) Constitution of India, Art. 19 (5)—Reasonable restrictions—If matter of substance or of procedure.

Per Ray C. J.—Consideration of reasonable restrictions in the interests of the public necessarily gives rise to a question whether the social control delimiting personal liberty as provided in a particular legislation is reasonable. Reasonable restriction is more a matter of substance than of procedure in the background of the Constitution of India. The restriction must be so scaled as to ensure that the execution of the law will not generally entail greater restrictions than are required for protection of the general public. In this respect the Act should be more or less self-contained so that the person restricted may avail of it, granted that he is also provided with a procedure of being apprised of the cause against him and having an opportunity to be heard in an impartial tribunal in answering the charge against him. [Paras 14 and 15]

S. M. Mohanty and R. K. Ghose—for Petitioners, Government Advocate—for Opposite Party.

Narasimham J.—These four petitions have been filed under Art. 226 of the Constitution against certain orders of the District Magistrate of Kalahandi directing the internment of the petitioners within the limits of Nawapara subdivision of that district in exercise of the powers conferred on him by Cl. (c) of sub-s. (1) of S. 2, Orissa Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1948.

[2] Petitioner Ismail is the son of the petitioner Khan Sahib Adam Hazi Saleh Mohammed and the family have extensive business with headquarters in Nawapara sub-division. They have also extensive agricultural lands in that sub-division. Affidavits were filed on their behalf to the effect that they were nationals of the Indian Union and in the counter-affidavit filed by the Government this citizenship was not challenged and we would therefore take it as well-established that the two petitioners are citizens of the Indian Union. On 17-7-49 the then District Magistrate of Sambalpur, (within whose jurisdiction Nawapara subdivision was then included) issued two orders on the two petitioners under S. 2 (1) (c) of the said Act directing that they should not move out of Nawapara sub-division for a period of six months from the date of the orders. Against these orders the petitioners applied for a writ of habeas corpus under S. 491, Criminal P. C., to the High Court (Cr. Misc. Case Nos. 155 and 156 of 1949). The High Court rejected their petitions on 19-12-49 on the ground that the order of internment was not 'detention' as contemplated by S. 491, Criminal P. C. Then on 12-1-50 the District Magistrate of Kalahandi (within whose jurisdiction Nawapara subdivision was transferred meanwhile), issued two further orders extending the period of internment of the two petitioners for a further period of three months from the date of expiry of the previous orders. Against these extension orders Cri. Misc. Cases Nos. 21 and 22 were filed. In the meantime however for some inexplicable reason the District Magistrate issued two fresh orders on 7-3-1950 cancelling his previous orders dated 12-1-50 and directing the internment of the two petitioners within the limit of Nawapara sub-division for a period of six months from the date of his last orders. Criminal Misc. Cases Nos. 32 and 33 were filed against the last two orders and they alone are very material for the purpose of this judgment. On 31-3-1950, the Orissa Legislature passed a new Act known as the Orissa Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1950 (Act X [10] of 1950) omitting all provisions relating to preventive detention and in other respects re-enacting the provisions of the Orissa Maintenance of Public Order Act, 1948. Apparently this new Act was passed in view of the self-contained Preventive Detention Act, 1950, made by Parliament. Under the new Orissa Act, the power to intern any person was conferred by S. 2 (1) (b) and that provision is identical with S. 2 (1) (c) of the old Act. The old Act was repealed by S. 29 of the new Act. But sub-s. (2) of that section expressly saved all orders issued under the old Act by stating that those orders "shall continue in force and be deemed to be made or done under the corresponding provisions" of the new Act. Therefore though the two internment orders on the petitioners dated 7-3-1950 were actually passed in exercise of the powers conferred by S. 2 (1) (c) of the old Act, they should now be deemed to be orders passed under S. 2 (1) (b) of the new Act by virtue of the deeming provisions of S. 29 (2) of the new Act. The old Act and the new Act differ in one important particular, namely, in the old Act the duration of an order of internment was only six months in the first instance. If the Government wanted to extend the term they were required to consult an Advisory Council after giving the internee an opportunity of making his representation in writing. The learned Advocate-General has filed an affidavit to the effect that in the present two cases the Advisory Council was in fact consulted when the last orders dated 7-3-1950 were passed. But under the new Act an order of internment is to remain in force for a period of one year (see S. 3) and there is no provision either for consulting the Advisory Council or for even giving the petitioner an opportunity of making his representation. We are now concerned mainly with the provisions of the new Act under which the two petitioners are constructively deemed to have been interned.

[3] The petitions were originally heard sometime in April 1950. But at the conclusion of the arguments our attention was invited to the petition of Dr. N. B. Khare which was then pending in the Supreme Court in which one of the main points in these petitions was also for consideration. We therefore thought it advisable to postpone the delivery of the judgment till the receipt of the decision of the Supreme Court on the petition of Dr. N. B. Khare. That judgment has since been received and the learned counsel for both sides were given further opportunities for argument in the light of that judgment. Many of the contentions advanced by Mr. Mohanty on behalf of the petitioners in his first argument need not therefore be considered now in view of the judgment of the Supreme Court (Original Jurisdiction Petn. No. 37 of 1950) dated the 26th May, Dr. N. B. Khare v. State of Delhi, (A. I. R. (37) 1950 S. C. 211.)

[4] Mr. Mohanty's arguments may be briefly summed up thus: The orders of internment passed by the District Magistrate deprive the petitioners of their fundamental rights to move freely throughout the territory of India and to reside and settle in any part of the territory of India, which rights were guaranteed to them under sub-cls. (d) and (e) of cl. (1) of Art. 19 of the Constitution. The provision of S. 2 (1) (a) of Orissa Act X [10] of 1950 which authorises the imposition of such restrictions is not saved by cl. (5) of Art. 19, inasmuch as restrictions authorised by the said provision are not 'reasonable' restrictions. Therefore, the said provision is void under Art. 13 (2) of the Constitution. In support of this argument he has not only relied on the Supreme Court judgment mentioned above but also on a Full Bench decision of the Patna High Court reported in Brajnandan Sharma v. State of Bihar, A. I. R. (37) 1950 Pat. 322 (F. B.) and an unreported Full Bench decision of the Bombay Court in Jeshingbhai Ishwarlal v. State of Bombay, Cri. Appln. No. 114 of 1950: (A. I. R. (37) 1950 Bom. 363 F. B.).

"2. (1) The State Government, if satisfied with respect to any particular person that with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to the public safety and the maintenance of public order it is necessary so to do, may make order:

(a) .....

(b) requiring him to reside or remain in such place or within such area in the State of Orissa as may be specified in the order and if he is not already there to proceed to that place or area within such time as may be specified in the order."

It will be noticed that the Act does not make it mandatory on the part of the appropriate authority to furnish the internee with a copy of the grounds on which the decision is taken to intern him nor is he given any opportunity of making a representation against the order. Moreover, there is absolutely no provision for referring the whole case to an impartial tribunal such as an Advisory Council. In this respect the new Orissa Act is much more drastic, than the old Act of 1948. As already pointed out, in that Act an order of internment for a period of six months can be passed without consulting an Advisory Council and without giving the internee an opportunity of making a representation. But if it is desired to extend the period of internment for a further term, consultation with the Advisory Council was made mandatory and the internee was given a statutory right of making a representation. Any discussion as to how far the provisions of the old Act are intra vires of Art. 19 of the Constitution seems academic in view of the fact that the new Act came into force on 31-3-1950 and the impugned orders of internment have to be taken as having been passed under the new Act.

[6] Article 19 (5) of the Constitution has been fully explained in the aforesaid decision of the Supreme Court in which the Chief Justice of India made it clear that in considering the reasonableness of restrictions on the liberty of a person imposed by any law the Court is entitled to consider the substantive as well as the procedural provisions of that law. He further pointed out that the minority view taken in the two Full Bench decisions of the Patna and Bombay High Courts overlooked this aspect of the question. In the judgment of Mukherjea J. however this point has been further elaborated and it was pointed out:

"One could understand that the exigencies of circumstances might justify the vesting of plenary powers on certain authorities which could pass orders on their own personal satisfaction temporarily and for short period of time; but if these orders are to continue indefinitely, it is only fair that an opportunity should be given to the person against whom such order is made to say what he has to say in answer to the allegations made against him. There may not be an investigation by a regular Court but it is necessary that the aggrieved person should be given a fair hearing and that by an impartial tribunal."

Mahajan J. concurred with this view and the other Judges of the Supreme Court have not dissented from this view. On the other hand my Lord the Chief Justice of India examined the relevant provisions of the East Punjab Public Safety Act under which Dr. N. B. Khare was externed and held that those provisions made the furnishing of grounds to the externee mandatory and that there was also a provision for referring the whole case for the consideration of an Advisory Board. Therefore his view regarding the validity of the East Punjab Public Safety Act was not based on his dissenting from the view expressed by Mukherjea and Mahajan JJ. regarding the principles laid down about but solely because he held that in the statute in question those principles have been followed.

[7] Therefore the decision of the Supreme Court may be taken as sufficient authority for the view that in considering the reasonableness of restrictions contemplated by Art. 19 (5) of the Constitution, a Court has to consider whether the fundamental principles of natural justice which require that no party ought to be condemned, or to have a decision given against him unless he has been given a reasonable opportunity of putting forward his case before an impartial tribunal, have been contravened. Judged by this standard the provisions of S. 2 (i) (b) and S. 3 of the Orissa Act of 1950 cannot be held to authorise the imposition of reasonable restrictions on the fundamental rights guaranteed to a citizen under Art. 19 (1) (d) and (e) of the Constitution. The District Magistrate as the delegated authority has the power to pass an order of internment which shall remain in force for a period of one year. There is no duty cast on him to furnish the grounds of such internment to the internee so as to enable the latter to make a representation against the order. There is absolutely no provision for referring the whole case to an impartial tribunal such as an Advisory Board which has been constituted to deal with cases under the Preventive Detention Act, 1950 or an Advisory Council as was constituted under the old Orissa Act. Consequently those provisions must be held to be void.

[8] There were several other arguments advanced in support of Mr. Mohanty's contention. But these have been fully noticed in the majority judgments of the Patna and Bombay High Courts referred to above and also in the Supreme Court judgment. I, therefore, do not consider it necessary to discuss them in this judgment in view of the principles laid down by the Supreme Court mentioned in the preceding paragraph. The Advocate General, however, urged that as the majority Judges of the Supreme Court held that the impugned provisions of the East Punjab Public Safety Act were valid the minority judgment of Mukherjea J. should not be taken as binding on this Court. I have, however, shown how as regards principles laid down by Mukherjea J. no dissentient view has been expressed by the other Judges of the Supreme Court and consequently those principles bind the subordinate Courts. Even if it be held that those views are not binding on this Court, I would with great respect, adopt the principles laid down by Mukherjea J. which have not been expressly dissented from by the majority of Judges of the Supreme Court.

[9] The result is that the petitioners have been interned under the provisions of a law which are void.

[10] The next question is what is the nature of relief that can be granted to the petitioners? In their applications they prayed for the issue of a writ of habeas corpus. But strictly speaking such a writ will not apply against an order of internment which is not 'detention' as ordinarily understood. But in their applications they have clearly referred to Art. 226 of the Constitution which empowers the High Court to issue necessary directions for the enforcement of any of the rights conferred by Part III of the Constitution even though such directions may not strictly conform to one of the writs specifically mentioned in that Article. This view has been accepted by the Full Bench decisions of the Patna and Bombay High Courts mentioned above. I would, therefore, issue a direction on the State Government prohibiting them and any of their officers from taking any action for enforcement of the orders in question.

[11] Ray C. J.—I have had the advantage of perusing the judgment of my learned brother. I have no hesitation in agreeing with the conclusion reached by him. The point of law involved in the subject-matter before us is substantially concluded by a binding authority, I mean, the judgment of the Supreme Court in Original Jurisdiction Petn. No. 37 of 1950 dated 26-5 1950 Dr. N B. Khare v. State of Delhi, (A. I. R. (37) 1950 S. C. 211).

[12] At the time of the aforesaid decision their Lordships of the Supreme Court had before them two decisions of two State High Courts dealing with the same point, namely Brajanandan Sharma v. State of Bihar, A I. R. (37) 1950 Pat. 322 F. B. and the unreported Full Bench decision of the Bombay High Court in Jeshingbhai Ishwarlal Modi v The State of Bombay, Cri. Appln. No. 114 of 1950: (A. I. R. (37) 1950 Bom. 363 F. B.). As pointed out by my learned brother in his judgment, the decisions in the two State High Courts consisted of both majority and minority view of the learned Judges of those Courts who decided them. The minority view pivoted on that the word 'reasonable' qualifies the word 'restrictions' in the phrase "making any law imposing, reasonable restrictions" and it has no reference to the word 'law'. In that background they held that the law imposing such restrictions did not contain any provision enjoining upon the State administrative or executive authorities to furnish the grounds of the restrictions imposed and affording the person restricted to make a representation either to the State Government or to any other tribunal of whatsoever character, either known by the name of Advisory Council, or Board or otherwise, do not have material bearing on the reasonableness of the restrictions. The difference of views consisted in that, according to the majority view, the absence of the aforesaid provisions in the impugned Act would make the restrictions unreasonable or not reasonable, while, according to the minority, denial of such a procedural right would not make the restrictions, the less reasonable. The minority took the view that it was for the Legislature either to afford opportunities to be heard to the persons restricted or not. According to them denial of such opportunities on account of the lack of such remedial provisions, in the concerned (impugned) Acts may make the law unreasonable, but it is not within the jurisdiction of the Court to throw it out on that ground.

[13] In the decision of my Lord the Chief Justice of India, the majority view of the two State High Courts has not been approved of and the minority view not accepted. His Lordship observes:

"Similarly, if the law provides the procedure under which the exercise of the right may be restricted, the same is also for the consideration of the Court, as it has to determine if the exercise of the right has been reasonably restricted. I do not think by this interpretion the scope and ambit of the word 'reasonable' as applied to restriction on the exercise of the right, is in any way unjustifiably enlarged. It seems that the narrow construction sought to be put on the expression, to restrict the Court's power to consider only the substantive law on the point, is not correct. In my opinion this aspect of the construction of Art. 19 (5) has escaped the minority judgments in the two matters mentioned above. I am not concerned with the conclusions of the two Courts about the invalidity of the provisions of the Acts they were asked to consider. To the extent they help in the interpretation of Art. 19 (5) only, they are helpful."

[14] Under the circumstances we are bound to hold that the impugned Orissa Act which deprives the person restrained of the remedial right is inconsistent with Art. 19 cl. 1 (d) read with cl. 5 and, to that extent void under the provisions of Art. 13 (1) of the Constitution of India. Free of authority I would, however, come to the same conclusion by a different process of ratiocination. I would say, if I was so permitted, with great respect, that reasonableness of the restrictions should be determined with reference to 'the interests of the general public or the protection of the interests of any scheduled trible for the protection whereof restrictions are imposed."

The constitutional requirement that the law delimiting a citizen's right to move freely throughout the territory of India should impose reasonable restrictions in the interests of the general public etc., can be identified with personal liberty protection by due process of law as a matter of substance in the rule obtaining in the United States of America accruing from due process clauses of the 5th and the 14th amendments. The 5th amendment so far as is material contains, "No person . . . . be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law; . . . . .". The 14th amendment so far as is relevant, reads:

"Section I—All persons born or naturalised in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State. . . . . ; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of Law; . . . . . ".

The Supreme Court of the United States started interpreting due process clause protecting personal liberty against delimitation, not only where the agencies of Government had no jurisdiction, but where the law imposing such delimitation did not afford a person the essentials of due process as to legal procedure. About the eighties the Supreme Court brought into existence the constitution guarantee of personal liberty by extending the due process clause to matters of substance :

"Prior to that time there had been no such guarantee. There had been a due process clause, in the 5th amendment, limiting the powers of the Federal Government, and a due process clause in the 14th amendment limiting the powers of the State Governments, but up to the eighties the due process clause had guaranteed only due process as a matter of legal procedure and due process as a matter of jurisdiction." (Hugh Evender Willis: Constitutional law of the United State.)

In this context the settled position in American law is that personal liberty has protection by due process of law as a matter of substance. Whatever mode the Government may undertake to follow, there is some personal liberty which cannot be limited. Due process of law, as a matter of substance, does not forbid all social control but it protects personal liberty against social control unless such social control is reasonable either because of a constitutional exercise of the police power or otherwise. If any legislation delimiting personal liberty is held to be outside the reasonable exercise of police power, it amounts to taking all personal liberty without due process of law and is unconstitutional. In short, due process of law protects personal liberty against unreasonable social control, but does not protect against all social control. I would hold consideration of reasonable restrictions in the interests of the public necessarily gives rise to a question whether the social control delimiting personal liberty as provided in a particular legislation is reasonable. In other words "reasonable restrictions" is more a matter of substance than of procedure in the background of the Constitution of India. The framers of this Constitution have done their best to run away from the due process of laws as understood in the American Court. I would in this connection quote a passage from Willis Constitutional Law (at p. 709—Remedies) :

"The common law remedies as well as common law antecedent rights are protected by the due process of laws. A person who has an antecedent right has the right to some remedial right: to say that a person has no property right in a remedy does not help. Property rights are subject to the police powers and to the power of taxation, and the power of eminent domain. Consequently, in the same way, a person is entitled to the protection of the common law remedies unless changing them is a proper exercise of the police power. If all remedies were abolished, it would be very difficult to hold such action to be a proper exercise of the police power, but if some one remedy is abolished, it is possible to find a social interest for doing so and therefore, to hold it to be a proper exercise of the police power."

In the same way remedy may be taken away, a new remedy may be created if there is social reason for it. In our Constitution, however, a right to procedure for remedial measures has, if at all, been provided for in Art. 21. An impression has gone out that words personal in Art. 21 has reference only to liberty of the person. This, in my view, is a very narrow construction. A procedural guarantee, given by the Article, would apply to all liberties personal to an individual. "Personal liberty" in its legal connotation may include, or rather should include, the rights enumerated in Art. 19 (1) and something more. In this connection I would invite attention to a passage from Willis Constitutional Law at p. 710.

"Does the personal liberty protected by the due process of laws as a matter of substance include the rights, powers, privileges and immunities of the bill of rights? The answer apparently is that it includes some of them but not all, but the tendency is towards including more and more of the bill of rights. It includes the rights to protection of the eminent domain clause. It includes the rights to protection of the equality clause. It includes the right to protection of the contract clause. Many other guarantees in the bill of rights are procedural. Some of these are protected by due process as a matter of the procedure and some of them are not. This, in short, envisages the ambit of "personal liberty."

Bill of right, as such, is not known to us but the passage is quoted to illustrate the meaning of the word. From this arises the question if the impugned Act that imposes reasonable restrictions, in the interest of the general public or otherwise within the meaning of sub-cl. 5 of cl. 19, provides for no remedial right, should it be not inconsistent with Art. 21 of the Constitution? In my opinion, it would be inconsistent. I am aware of the compelling view that procedure established by law means procedure established by statute law. But where the particular statute does not provide any procedure at all, can it be said that the person, the victim of the law restricting his movements, is deprived of his personal liberty according to the procedure established by law? I should say, no. I would understand the Article to mean not total denial of any sort of procedure whatsoever. The article means that the citizen has no right to any specific or particular kind of procedure but he has a right to some sort of procedure which would ensure the observance of the rule of natural justice that nobody should be condemned without being heard. By way of comparison as to how this branch of law is understood in the United State of America, I would quote another passage from Willis Constitutional Law, at p. 663:

"Due process, as a matter of procedure, always applies in the case of a judicial tribunal performing judicial functions, and the usual rule is that it applies to executive and administrative action whether the Governmental power exercised is a tax power, or the power of eminent domain, or the police power."

The essentials of procedure, in the minimum, are essentials of notice, opportunities to be heard and a tribunal. Essential of notice requires to apprise the victim of the nature of the cause against him in order to afford him sufficient opportunity to prepare and to make his answer. Opportunity to be heard is the second essential of procedure established by law. To condemn without hearing is repugnant to natural justice. Any procedure which does not guard against this requirement is no procedure by law. The essentials of such opportunities do not, however, consist in any particular form or method of hearing. All that is required is a reasonable opportunity to be heard. The opportunity does not guarantee a person a right to an appeal. One hearing is all that is required. Tribunal as the third essential of procedure does not necessarily mean a judicial tribunal. Any impartial tribunal will meet the requirement.

[15] To conclude, I find that there is nothing in the impugned Act which would guarantee that the restrictions sanctioned under it are reasonable. We are not concerned with the reasonableness of particular order restricting the movement of a citzen. We must be sure that the restrictions considered in the light of 'the interest of the general public' for the protection of which they are imposed, are reasonable, that is to say, that the restrictions are so scaled as to ensure that the execution of the law will not generally entail greater restrictions than are required for such protection. In this respect the Act should be more or less self contained so that the person restricted may avail of it, granted, that he is also provided with a procedure of being apprised of the cause against him and having an opportunity to be heard in an impartial tribunal in answering the charge against him. The impugned Act does not stand the tests and is, in my opinion, therefore, void. Secondly it is void as inconsistent with Art. 21 of the Constitution as it does not provide for the essentials of a legal procedure.

[16] This approach to the question of validity of the impugned Act may attract criticism that it is not realistic. But I would say that such a criticism is wholly unfounded. The reasons are: that though personal liberty of a citizen is no doubt subject to social control, one of the forms of the social control is valid exercise of the police power against which personal liberty is not protected. The police power is the legal capacity of sovereignty, or one of its agents to delimit personal liberty for the protection of other more important social interests by means which bear a substantial relation thereto. There are two main requirements for a proper exercise of the police power: (1) There must be a social interest to be protected which is more important than the social interest in personal liberty, and (2) there must be, as a means for the accomplishment of the purpose, something which bears a substantial relation thereto. It may be noted that it is the substantiality of this relation which would determine the reasonableness of the restrictions in relation to the interest of the general public.

[17] Certificate —A Certificate under Art. 132 (1) of the Constitution to the effect that this case involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Constitution is granted.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 561A—Objectionable remarks in judgment — Power to expunge when no appeal or revision is filed.

The High Court has power under S. 561A to expunge objectionable remarks in a judgment of an inferior Court which has not been brought before it in regular appeal or revision. [Para 4]

Anno Cr. P. C., S. 561 A. N. 7, Pt. 3.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 561-A—Adverse remarks of sweeping nature against witness—Expunging of such remarks.

Doubtless Magistrates should be free to make bold and fearless comments on the evidence before them while writing their judgments so that they may be able to discharge their duties effectively. But they should use restrained language while commenting on the character and credibility of witnesses, who unlike the accused persons, do not get adequate opportunities to defend themselves. If the Magistrates overstep the limits and make adverse remarks of a sweeping nature against witnesses unsupported by the evidence on record, the High Court, for the ends of justice, has to interfere. [Para 5]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 561 A, N. 7, P. 10.

H. Mohapatra—for Petitioner; Govt. Advocate—for Opposite Party.

Order.—This is a petition under S. 439 read with S. 561A, Criminal P. C., for expunging certain remarks made against the character of the petitioner by Sri P. N. Sarkar, Magistrate, 1st Class, Berhampur in his judgment in G. R. No. 10 of 1947.

[2] The petitioner is a resident of village Pitala P. S. Aska in Ganjam district. He is also a member of the Orissa Legislative Assembly and belongs to the Congress Party. On 8-12-46 one Chori Santra of village Raisinghpur which is very close to village Pitala lodged a station diary entry at Aska Police Station at about 10 A. M. to the effect that one Sibarama Patnaik, the Karanam of village, had been assaulted and wrongfully confined by several persons of Pitala village led by Haribar Panda. The police did not take any immediate action thinking that it was a non-cognisable offence. Subsequently, however, a petition was sent to the Superintendent of Police on the basis of which the S. I. of Aska instituted a regular F. I. R. on 26-1-47 and after due investigation submitted charge-sheet against Haribar Panda, Biswanath Panda and six other persons who were all tried for offences under Ss. 147, 342/149 and 355, Penal Code in the Court of Sri P. N. Sarkar Magistrate, 1st Class, Berhampur. In that case the petitioner figured as one of the eye-witnesses (P. W. 5). Chori Santra (P. W. 1) and Sibaram Patnaik (P. W. 2) also deposed in support of the prosecution case. The substance of the allegations made against the accused persons in that case was that the said Sibaram Patnaik (P. W. 2) wrote a love-letter to a female inmate of the house of accused Haribar Panda which, however, fell into the hands of the accused persons. Thereupon, they were so much enraged against Sibaram Patnaik that they collected in a mob and wanted to kill him. He hid himself in the village Pathaghar for some time but subsequently on the assurance given by the petitioner he came out. The accused persons thereupon tied his hands, put an earthen pot on his head and led him in a procession in a humiliating way throughout the village. In the end, however, the petitioner succeeded in persuading Haribar Panda and his men to release Sibaram Patnaik.

[3] The learned Magistrate while acquitting the accused persons observed that the prosecution case appeared to be an exaggerated and inflated account of some alteration or misunderstanding between Sibaram Patnaik (P. W. 2) and the accused's party. He further observed:

"P. W. 2 having done a wrong and indecent act which brought general denunciation from the public must have taken the help of the enemies of the accused in saving his face some how."

He pointed out that all the eye-witnesses were interested persons inimically disposed towards the accused persons and held that the charges were not brought home against them. While discussing the evidence of P. W. 5 (the petitioners) who claimed to be an eye-witness to the occurrence, the learned Magistrate made the following comments:

"Besides the aforesaid facts this witness has made a number of admissions which go to show that the witness has evinced extraordinary interest in the case from its inception and during trial. He has often misused his position as a public man in trying to influence the police and officers in getting a verdict against the accused persons."

The passage underlined (here italicised) has been taken exception to and I have been asked to expunge those remarks on the ground that they were not justified from the evidence on record. The learned Magistrate was called upon to show cause why these remarks should not be expunged and he has submitted an explanation pointing out extracts from the evidence from which he thought that those remarks were justified.

[4] The first question for consideration is whether the High Court has power under S. 561A, Criminal P. C., to expunge these remarks when no appeal or revision has been filed in the High Court against the order of acquittal passed by the trying Magistrate. In P. J. Rogers v. Shrinivas Gopal, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Bom. 266 : (41 Cr. L. J. 855), Beaumont C. J. (as he then was) took the view that the High Court has no jurisdiction to expunge passages from the judgment of an inferior Court which has not been brought before it in regular appeal or revision. This decision has been followed in a later Single Bench decision of the Patna High Court reported in Bhutnath Khawas v Dasrathi Das, A. I. R. (28) 1941 Pat. 544 : (42 Cr. L. J. 516). On the other hand, several other High Courts have held that whatever might have been the law prior to 1923 the effect of the insertion of S. 561A, Criminal P. C. by the amendment of 1923 was to make it clear beyond any doubt that the inherent powers of the Court can be invoked for expunging objectionable remarks from a judgment when they are not justified from the evidence on record, Panchanan v. Upendra Nath, A. I. R. (14) 1927 ALL. 193 : (27 Cr. L. J. 1407); Emperor v. Atta Ullah Shah, A. I. R. (23) 1936 Lah. 429 : (37 Cr. L. J. 661); Lachhman Das v. Jai Gopal, 40 Cr. L. J. 214 : (A. I. R. (25) 1938 Lah. 793); Ghumanmal v. Emperor, A. I. R. (31) 1944 Sind 133: (46 Cr. L. J. 85); In re Public Prosecutor, A. I. R. (31) 1944 Mad. 320 : (45 Cr. L. J. 763) and Mohd. Fazal Shah v. Muhammad Asghar, 51 Cr. L. J. 500 : (A. I. R. (37) 1950 Lah. 66). The law on the subject has been fully discussed in those decisions and with respect I am inclined to follow the reasonings given therein. As pointed out in Ghumanmal v. Emperor, A. I. R (31) 1944 Sind 133 : (46 Cr. L. J. 88).

"One of the inherent powers of the highest Court of a Province is to prevent grave injustice and injury being caused to a person, who, though not a party, has as a witness been called before the Court upon a summons which he cannot disobey and who has nevertheless been made the subject of defamatory remarks by a Magistrate or Judge, which remarks can in no way be justified from the record and the making of which, therefore, must involve the abuse of the judicial office. To expunge any such passage at the instance of a person aggrieved is 'otherwise to secure the ends of justice' within the meaning of S. 561A, Criminal P. C. Once it is considered that the High Court has this power, it must be conceded that it has the necessary ancillary power to call for the record so that its inherent power may be exercised."

[5] The main question therefore for consideration now is whether the remarks made against the character of the petitioner by the learned Magistrate were justified from the evidence on record. That they are of a highly defamatory nature and are likely to damage the petitioner's reputation amongst the public admits of no doubt whatsoever. The petitioner is a member of the Orissa Legislative Assembly and a prominent Congress worker of Ganjam district. If a Court of justice says that 'he has often misused his position as a public man in trying to influence the police and officers in getting a verdict against the accused persons' such remarks would lower him in public estimation and may prove fatal to his whole political career. Doubtless Magistrates should be free to make bold and fearless comments on the evidence before them while writing their judgments so that they may be able to discharge their duties effectively. But they should use restrained language while commenting on the character and credibility of witnesses, who, unlike the accused persons, do not get adequate opportunities to defend themselves. If the Magistrates overstep the limits and make adverse remarks of a sweeping nature against witnesses unsupported by the evidence on record, the High Court, for the ends of justice has to interfere.

[6] The petitioner was admittedly on inimical terms with the accused persons though they were both related. There seems to be no doubt that the petitioner took an active part during police investigation. The earliest information about the occurrence was lodged at Aska Police Station not by the aggrieved party Sibaram Patnaik (P W. 2) but by one Chori Santra (P. W. 1) who is a son of Purohit of the petitioner himself. The police did not take any action on that information and thereupon a report was sent to the Superintendent of Police with a covering letter forwarded by the petitioner himself. It was on the basis of this report that under the orders of S. P. further investigation started. The petitioner admitted that he sent a latter to the Circle Inspector of Aska to investigate this case. The Inspector of Police (P. W. 8) deposed that during police enquiry the petitioner (P. W. 5) was present and that he was putting questions now and then to the witnesses. He tried to persuade P. W. 8 to file charge sheet in the present case and in two other connected cases and he went to the length of requesting P. W. 8 to arrest the accused persons and not to grant them bail. Apart from these facts, there is also the admission of P. W. 5 to the effect that after the completion of the investigation of this case he sent a report to the Hon'ble Prime Minister complaining against the S. I of Aska. From these proved facts the learned Magistrate was undoubtely justified in saying that the petitioner took extraordinary interest in the case. It is true that as an eye-witness it was his duty to narrate all that he knew about the occurrence to the police during investigation. But his extraordinary action in forwarding a complaint against the local police to the S. P., in putting questions to the witnesses now and then during investigation and in asking the Police Inspector (P. W. 8) to arrest the accused persons and not to grant them bail and also trying to persuade him to submit charge-sheet in the case—all tend to support the view that the petitioner was anxious to exploit to the full the advantage derived from a case of this type against his rivals. Doubtless if the occurrence is substantially true there is nothing wrong in a public worker trying to help the police in bringing the offenders to justice; but even for that purpose, the petitioner being a member of the Legislative Assembly need not have taken such an extraordinary interest which, he must have known, would embarrass and overawe the local official. But I am unable to understand why the learned Magistrate observed that the petitioner' often misused his position as a public man in trying to influence the police and officers in getting a verdict against the accused persons'. The use of the words 'often' and 'misused,' seem to indicate that the petitioner was deliberately concocting several false cases against the accused persons with a view to get them convicted. But even the Magistrate does not say in his judgment that entire prosecution case is false. On the contrary he gave the benefit of the doubt to the accused persons though he seems to have recognised that there was some sort of altercation and misunderstanding between P. W. 2 and the accused persons due to the former's indecent action. There is no evidence to show that apart from this case and the other connected cases there was any other criminal case against the accused persons in which the petitioner played any part. Thus when the occurrence is not held to be false and when there is no evidence of similar conduct by the petitioner against the accused persons it is not proper to say that the petitioner 'often misused his position as a public man' even if it be held that he tried to influence the police to submit charge-sheet in this case.

[7] The learned Magistrate further observed that the petitioner tried to influence officers also in getting a verdict against the accused persons. This portion of the remarks seems to be based on the admission made by the petitioner to the effect that while the present case was being tried by a Magistrate of Aska the petitioner as a public worker saw him several times though not in connection with this case. There was also a suggestion to the effect that the trying Magistrate actually went to the house of the petitioner on 18-9-1947. But this suggestion was denied. The Magistrate, however, felt highly embarrassed while these questions were put to the petitioner during his cross-examination. Therefore, in the order-sheet dated 6-9-1947 he himself suggested to the District Magistrate for the transfer of the case from his file. The case was eventually transferred to the file of a Magistrate at Berhampur. The evidence on record only shows that while the present case was going on in the Court of the Magistrate at Aska the petitioner saw him several times in connection with some other matter. This conduct of the petitioner has been sought to be justified on the ground that as a public worker, there might have been a necessity for him to see the Magistrate who was also an Executive Officer. But as his action was likely to be misconstrued, the trying Magistrate rightly himself suggested for the transfer of the case from his file. But from these facts it is not fair to infer that the petitioner misused his position as a public man by trying to influence the Magistrate to give a verdict against the accused persons. For such a sweeping statement there must be stronger evidence on record. Apparently the learned Magistrate was, to some extent, influenced by the contents of a letter said to have been written by the petitioner to the Hon'ble Prime Minister of Orissa on 9 4-1947, a copy of which was reproduced in the 'Observer' dated 20-4-1947. That letter has not been proved in this case and a copy of the 'Observer' has merely been marked as 'X' for identification. The petitioner has not admitted the contents of the letter though his answers in cross-examination with reference to that letter are evasive and unsatisfactory. Whatever that may be, so long as that letter has not been proved properly in the case and admitted as evidence it should not have been taken into consideration.

[8] I am, therefore, of the opinion that though the Magistrate was justified in observing that the petitioner took an extraordinary interest in the case from its inception and that his evidence should be viewed with suspicion in view of his admitted enmity with the accused persons, he was not justified in saying 'he has often misused his position as a public man in trying to influence the police and officers in getting a verdict against the accused persons'. It may be that the petitioner's conduct during police investigation was not prudent and his seeing the trying Magistrate at Aska while the present case was pending in his Court was also not proper. As a prominent public worker and a Congress member of the Legislative Assembly the petitioner should have known that any extraordinary interest that he might evince during police investigation of this case and his repeated interviews with the trying Magistrate while the case was pending in his Court are likely to be misconstrued by the public and are also likely to embarrass and sometimes overawe the local officials. It may be that the petitioner had absolutely no intention of interfering with their discretion so far as the investigation or trial of this case was concerned. But in view of his peculiar position, he might have kept himself strictly aloof except to the limited extent of stating to the police and the Magistrates what he knew personally about the occurrence. But mere impropriety of conduct is not sufficient to justify a sweeping remark to the effect that 'he often misused his position as a public man'.

[9] I would, therefore, allow the petition and expunge the passage complained of from the judgment of the lower Court.

JAGANNADHADAS AND NARASIMHAM JJ.

Reghu Singh and others — Plaintiffs — Appellants v. Government of Orissa and others — Defendants — Respondents.

First Appeal No. 38 of 1948, D/- 4-4-1950.

(a) C. P. Land Revenue Act (XVIII [18] of 1881), Ss. 65A and 80 — Protected status of thekadar — Evidence—Admission by defendant.

If the Settlement Officer has declared certain thekadar to be a protected thekadar he is bound in law to mention that fact in the khewat in view of S. 80 read with the rules framed under that section. [Para 6]

The protection under S. 65A can be granted only to those thekadars who have obtained the proper declaration from the Settlement Officer under that section. Mere admission by some of the defendants cannot confer that status. [Para 9]

(b) C. P. Land Revenue Act (XVIII [18] of 1881), S. 65-A—Power to confer protected status.

Under S. 65-A the Settlement Officer alone has the power to confer the status of a protected thekadar, subject of course to appeal or revision by the superior Revenue authorities, and the special incidents of a protected thekadar such as non-saleability in execution of any decree as specified in sub-s. (4) of S. 65-A apply only to those thekadars who have been declared to be protected under that section. [Para 8]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 14, R. 1—Specific issue raised notwithstanding admission — Evidence by plaintiff to prove his case.

Where a specific issue is raised on a question notwithstanding the admission by some of the defendants, the plaintiff is bound to lead evidence to prove his case on the question. [Para 9]

Anno: C. P. C., O. 14, R. 1, N. 2.

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 27 — Appeal — Additional evidence.

Where to allow additional evidence during the hearing of the appeal would involve a rehearing of the suit and there is no good reason given for failure to adduce such evidence in the trial Court itself, the prayer for adducing additional evidence in appeal can be refused. [Para 10]

Anno: C. P. C., O. 41, R. 27, N. 8.

(e) C. P. Land Revenue Act (XVIII [18] of 1881), Ss. 4 (9), 116 — Zamindar — If entitled to claim benefit of S. 116.

For the purposes of the C. P. Land Revenue Act there is no distinction between a Zamindar and a Malguzar so far as the assessment of land-revenue and realisation of land-revenue from inferior proprietors are concerned. From a mere construction of cl. (9) of S. 4 he would come within the definition of the expression 'Malguzar'. Consequently, S. 116 which confers on a Malguzar a right to realise arrears of revenue due to him from an inferior proprietor with the help of the Deputy Commissioner would apply to a Zamindar also. [Para 11]

(f) Tenancy laws—C. P. Tenancy Act (XI [11] of 1898), S. 45 (1) — Sale of village for arrears of land revenue—Occupancy rights in sir lands—Acquisition of by proprietor — Withdrawal of balance by proprietor—If extinguishes those rights—Evidence Act (1872), S. 115—C. P. Land Revenue Act (XVIII [18] of 1881), S. 108 (c).

From a scrutiny of sub-s. (1) of S. 45 it follows that when a proprietor loses his proprietary right in the village by sale for arrears of revenue due thereon, on the same day he gets occupancy right over his sir lands and the person who has newly acquired the proprietary right from him is entitled only to realisation of fair rent from him in respect of those lands. This occupancy right can be given up by him only on an application made by him to the Revenue officials for transfer of his sir lands without reservation of the right of occupancy as provided in sub-s. (2) of S. 45. That right cannot be extinguished by a decree even of a Revenue Court in view of the clear words of sub-s. (1) of S. 45. The mere conduct of the proprietor and his other co-sharers in withdrawing the balance of the sale proceeds will not have the effect of extinguishing that right. An occupancy right, once it has accrued, can be extinguished only in the manner provided in the C. P. Tenancy Act and not by mere rule of estoppel based on subsequent conduct. [Para 12]

(g) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 1 — Appeal — Question of law — Right to raise.

Where a pure question of law arises it is not open to the party to object to the raising of that question for the first time in first appeal. [Para 14]

Anno: C. P. C., O. 41, R. 1, N. 12.

(h) C. P. Land Revenue Act (XVIII [18] of 1881), S. 4 (1) (a) — Proprietor.

When the Settlement authorities entered some lands as the sir lands of a person it necessarily follows that his status was recognised as that of a proprietor. [Para 15]

P. C. Chatterji and B. Dube—for Appellants; S. Misra, B. Mohapatra and Advocate-General — for Respondents.

Narasimham J. — This is an appeal from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Sambalpur, dismissing the plaintiff-appellants' suit for recovery of possession of village Pandripathar together with its Sir and Khudkast lands as given in Schedule 'A' to the plaint.

[2] Pandripathar village is a village within Rampur zamindary in Sambalpur district, the present Zamindar being Mohan Brajaraj Singh defendant 7. In the Khewat (Ex. 2) of the last settlement of Sambalpur district (known as Hamid's Settlement) which took place in 1921 25 the whole village excluding some lands of the B. N. Rly., was entered in the name of Dasarath Singh (defendant 3) as Kharposdar (maintenance-holder) under the Khewat of the Zamindar of Rampur to whom the said Dasarath Singh was liable to pay an annual revenue of Rs. 144 8-0. In 1930, the Zamindar of Rampur applied to the Sub-divisional Officer of Sambalpur for the sale of the right of Dasarath Singh (see Ex. 9) for realisation of the arrear revenue due to him. His application was made under S. 116, Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1881 under which any arrear due to a Malguzar can be recovered through the Deputy Commissioner as if it were an arrear of revenue payable directly to Government. The procedure for realising arrears of revenue payable directly to Government is described in S. 94 of the said Act and one of the methods of such realisation is by the sale of the mahal in respect of which an arrear accrued (see cl. (f) of S. 94). But such a sale requires the sanction of the Board of Revenue and consequently the Sub-divisional Officer in his order dated 18-7 1931 (Ex. A 1) submitted a note to the Deputy Commissioner requesting that the Board of Revenue be moved for sanctioning the sale of the property of Dasarath Singh under S. 116 read with proviso (1) to S. 94, C. P. Land Revenue Act. From a subsequent order (Ex. B-1) dated 11-3-1932 it appears that the sanction of the Board of Revenue was communicated in letter No. 407R dated 8-3-1932 from the Commissioner to the Deputy Commissioner, Sambalpur. The sale was first held on 7-6-1932 and the price fetched was only Rs. 700. On 27-6 1932 a petition was filed (Ex. 7) by one Durjodhan Singh claiming to be the guardian brother of Dasarath Singh said to be insane, objecting to the sale on the ground that the sale proclamation was not properly served on the spot and that the property was sold for a grossly inadequate sum. The S.D.O. apparently felt that there was much force in this objection and, therefore, issued a fresh sale proclamation (Ex. G-1) on 22-9-1932 for the sale of the sixteen annas Kharposh right in Mouza Pandripathar together with the Sir and Khudkast lands attached to the same belonging to the said Dasarath Singh. In the proclamation, however, it was specifically noted that the sale was subject to the provisions of S. 108, C. P. Land Revenue Act, and a list of the encumbrances known to exist on the property was also appended to it. In due course the sale was held and the property was purchased at an auction by one Mangal Mistri on 21-10-1932 for Rs. 4000. The auction-purchaser was required to pay a further sum of Rs. 1433 4-0 before the confirmation of the sale. After the confirmation of the sale by the Deputy Commissioner a sale certificate (Ex. J-1) was issued in favour of Mangal Mistri under the signature of the Deputy Commissioner himself on 10-1-1933. After some obstruction by some of the co-sharers of Dasarath Singh delivery of possession of the village was given to the auction-purchaser on 2-9-1932 (Ex. I-1). On 28-7 1936 the said Dasarath Singh and some of his co-sharers (who are defendants in this suit) applied to the Deputy Commissioner (Ex. A 2) and withdrew the balance of the sale proceeds amounting to Rs. 1,742-13-0.

[3] The plaintiffs are also some of the co-sharers of Dasarath Singh who were, however, not signatories to the petition (Ex A 2) dated 28-7-36 for withdrawal of the balance of the sale-proceeds. Their present suit is for recovery of possession of the whole village including its sir and khudkast lands on the main ground that the sale held by the S D.O. on 21-10-32 (Ex. C-1) was invalid inasmuch as the property was inalienable and non-transferable. They impleaded as defendants the auction-purchaser (defendant 2), the Government of Orissa (defendant 1) Dasarath Singh (defendant 3) and other co-sharers who had withdrawn the balance of the sale-proceeds (defendants 4, 5 and 6) the zamindar of Rampur (defendant 7) and a subsequent transferee from the auction-purchaser (defendant 8). The impleading of the Government of Orissa was clearly wrong inasmuch as it is not the case of the plaintiffs that either the Government or its subordinate Revenue Officials entered into a fraudulent conspiracy with the other defendants with a view to defraud the plaintiffs by misusing their powers under S. 116, C. P., Land Revenue Act and thus bring about a sale of the property. The Revenue Officials merely exercised their statutory powers under the said Act and there is absolutely nothing to suggest that their action was not bona fide. At the commencement of the hearing of the appeal Mr. Dube on behalf of the appellants properly conceded that he claimed no relief against the Government and that the latter was not a necessary party to the litigation. In view of this concession, it is unnecessary to consider the various points regarding the maintainability of the suit against the Government and the adequacy of the notice under S. 80, Civil P. C., which have been discussed at great length by the trial Court.

[4] From the foregoing narrative, it will be clear that the crucial point for consideration is whether the sale of the village held by the S.D.O. on 21-10-32 (Ex. C-1) was invalid. A second point which was strenuously pressed before us is whether even on the assumption that the sale was valid, the right of Dasarath Singh and his co-sharers to the sir lands of the village which ripened into an occupancy right under S. 45 (1), Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 1892 was also transferred to the auction-purchaser by the said sale or else whether that right remained unaffected by the sale.

[5] I shall deal with each of these points separately.

[6] The validity of the sale dated 21.10 32 was challenged on three grounds; ((i) the judgment-debtor Dasarath Singh was insane at the time of the sale and he was not properly represented before the S.D O. in the proceeding; (ii) the right of the said Dasarath Singh was that of a protected thekadar under S. 65-A, C. P. Land Revenue Act and that consequently his tenure was not saleable in execution of any decree in view of cl. (a) of sub-s. (4) of that section; and (iii) the Zamindar of Rampur is not a Malguzar within the meaning of S. 116, C. P. Land Revenue Act and consequently the S.D.O. acted without jurisdiction in selling the tenure while purporting to act under S. 116 of that Act.

[7] None of these grounds is sustainable. The plea that Dasarath Singh was insane in 1932 has not been substantiated. (After discussing the evidence, the judgment proceeded:) I would, therefore, in agreement with the lower Court, hold that the plea of insanity must fail as it is not supported by reliable evidence.

[8] As regards the second ground, there is absolutely no evidence on record to show that Dasarath Singh's right in the village was that of a protected thekadar under S. 65A, C. P. Land Revenue Act. That section confers on a Settlement Officer the power to declare certain thekadars to be protected for the purposes of that section. No such declaration of the Settlement Officer was proved before the Court. On the other hand, from the settlement khewat (Ex. 2) already referred to it appears that the only right of Dasarath Singh recognised by the Settlement authorities was his right as a maintenance holder (Kharposdar). If the Settlement Officer had declared Dasarath Singh to be a protected thekadar he was bound in law to mention that fact in the Khewat in view of s. 80, C. P. Land Revenue Act, read with the rules framed under that section. The special reasons as to why these maintenance-holders were not given the status of a protected thekadar would be found at p. 30, Para. 34 of Hamid's Settlement Report where the Settlement Officer relied on a decision of a Munsif in a suit from Rampur zamindari in 1907 to the effect that the declaration of certain maintenance holders as protected thekadars was ultra vires. That decision was upheld in appeal by the Subordinate Judge and also by the High Court in the case reported in Hedayet Ali v. Kalanand Singh, 20 I. C. 332 : (17 C.L.J. 411). The Settlement Officer relying on this view of law regarding the construction of S. 65-A, refused to recognise the maintenance-holders as protected thekadars. It was certainly open to the aggrieved party to take up the question on appeal or revision before the superior Revenue Officials challenging the correctness of the aforesaid decision. But it was not done. Mr. Dube on behalf of the appellants, however, suggested that subsequent to the settlement operations the parties might have applied to the Deputy Commissioner who under S. 132 (i), C. P. Land Revenue Act, exercises the powers of a Settlement Officer for certain limited purposes and that the Deputy Commissioner might have given the status of a protected thekadar to Dasarath Singh. Though there is no legal objection to the Deputy Commissioner giving such protected status the question for consideration is whether in fact he did so. No order of the Deputy Commissioner to that effect has been produced either before the lower Court or before us. Consequently not only is there no evidence on record in the nature of a certificate or order either by the Settlement Officer or by the Deputy Commissioner or any other superior Revenue Officer recognising Dasarath Singh as the protected thekadar of the village but on the other hand the entry in the Khewat specifying the right of Dasarath Singh to be that of a mere Kharposdar coupled with the reasons given by the Settlement Officer at p. 30 of Hamid's Settlement Report for refusing to recognise maintenance-holders as protected thekadars would indicate that Dasarath Singh was not given that status by the Settlement Officer deliberately. In the present litigation it is unnecessary to consider whether the Settlement Officer's view about S. 65-A, C. P. Land Revenue Act, which is based on a judicial decision of a Munsif of Sambalpur in respect of some other villages though within the same zamindari is correct or not. Under S. 65-A the Settlement Officer alone has the power to confer such a status, subject of course to appeal or revision by the superior Revenue authorities, and the special incidents of a protected thekadar such as non-saleability in execution of any decree as specified in sub-s. (4) of S. 65-A apply only to those thekadars who have been declared to be protected under that section. The plaintiffs cannot claim the benefit of cl. (a) of sub-s. (4) of S. 65-A in view of their failure to show that Dasarath Singh was declared to be a protected thekadar under that section.

[9] Mr. Dube, however, contended that from the pleadings of the parties it was clear that they all admitted the status of Dasarath Singh to be that of a protected thekadar and that in view of this admission no evidence on this point was necessary. In support of this argument he has invited our attention to Para. 8 of the plaint in which such status was claimed by the plaintiffs and Para. 1 of the written statement of defendants 2 to 7 where also it was specifically admitted that Dasarath Singh's status was that of a protected thekadar. But the Government of Orissa in Para. 5 of their written statement challenged this fact and one of the principal issues raised by the parties was issue 8 which ran as follows:

"What was the status of Dasarath Singh? Whether he was protected Thekadar or Kharposdar and did his status affect the liability of the plaintiffs on the sale of the tenure for default in paying the thika jama?"

Thus when a specific issue was raised on the question notwithstanding the admissions made by defendants 2 and 7, it is clear that the plaintiffs were bound to lead evidence to show the status of Dasarath Singh as protected thekadar. The admission of defendants 2 and 7 is not unambiguous and in any case the protection under S. 65-A, C. P. Land Revenue Act, can be granted only to those thekadars who have obtained the proper declaration from the Settlement Officer under that section. In the absence of any proof of such declaration and in view of the other circumstances already referred to, I would hold that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that the status of Dasarath Singh was that of a protected thekadar and consequently the sale cannot be challenged on the ground that the tenure is non saleable.

[10] During the hearing of the appeal a petition was filed by Mr. Dube, the learned counsel for the appellants, for admitting as additional evidence the Khewat of the village in Dewar's Settlement of 1906 in which Dasarath Singh's predecessor-in-interest was recorded as a protected thekadar of the village. Mr. Dube submitted that this document was not adduced in evidence in the trial Court chiefly because of the admissions made in the pleadings and that consequently he should be given an opportunity to prove the protected status of Dasarath Singh from Dewar's Settlement Khewat. Mr. Mohapatra on behalf of the respondents, however, objected to the admission of this document at this belated stage on the ground that it would be highly prejudicial to the opposite-party unless they are given a further opportunity to adduce rebutting evidence. He submitted that even if Dasarath Singh's predecessor had been recognised as a protected thekadar during Dewar s Settlement, such protection might have been withdrawn subsequently prior to Hamid's Settlement and that had this document been proved in the trial Court they (Mr. Mohapatra's clients) would have had an opportunity to show how by subsequent events the effect of the entry in Dewar's Settlement has been practically removed. We are satisfied that Mr. Mohapatra's objection is based on good grounds. To allow additional evidence at this stage would involve a rehearing of the suit inasmuch as in fairness to the other side they should be given an opportunity to adduce rebutting evidence. Moreover, we are not satisfied with the reasons given by Mr. Dube, for the failure of his clients to prove Dewar's Settlement Khewat in the trial Court itself. As already pointed out the question about Dasarath Singh's protected thekadari status was one of the issues in the suit notwithstanding the guarded admission in the pleadings. The plaintiffs were therefore bound to adduce all possible evidence to prove this protected status. In fact they proved the Khewat of Hamid's Settlement (Ex. 2). But for some inexplicable reason they did not care to prove the Khewat of Dewar's Settlement. We have, therefore, decided to reject the prayer for adducing additional evidence at this belated state.

[11] The third ground of attack of the sale depends on whether the Zamindar of Rampur is a Malguzar within the meaning of S. 116, C. P. Land Revenue Act. The expression 'Malguzar' has been defined in cl. (9) of S. 4 of that Act as follows:

"'Malguzar' means a person who, under the provisions of this Act, has accepted, or is to be deemed to have accepted, the assessment of a mahal, and includes his representatives and assigns, and also any person with whom a settlement has been made before this Act comes into force, and his representatives and assigns."

The expression 'mahal' has also been defined in cl. (7) of the same section as follows:

"'Mahal' means any local area held under a separate engagement for the payment of the land-revenue direct to Government, and includes also any local area declared, under the provisions of this Act, to be a mahal but does not include a survey number."

There is no definition of the expression 'Zamindar' nor does that expression appear in any of the provisions of the C. P. Land Revenue Act. Doubtless in the Wajib-ul-arz prepared by the Settlement Officers under that Act villages in Sambalpur were divided into Malguzari villages and Zamindari villages. But the Wajib-ul-arz deals with other incidents of such villages and as regards assessment of land-revenue, collection of land-revenue and realisation of revenue by Malguzars from inferior proprietors etc., the Act itself makes exhaustive provisions. The Act does not make any separate provision for a Zamindar as distinct from a Malguzar. The main difference between a Zamindar and a Malguzar will be clear from a perusal of Chap. VI of Dewar's Settlement Report of 1906. Zamindars are bigger proprietors having an ancient historical origin and the revenue they pay to the Government usually known as Takoli is generally not based on full assessment due to various reasons. Their estates are impartible and not transferable except to a limited extent and each estate is held by a Zamindar under the Government under separate terms. Malguzars appear to be recent creations. But for the purposes of the C. P. Land Revenue Act there is no distinction between a Zamindar and a Malguzar so far as the assessment of land revenue and realisation of land-revenue from inferior proprietors are concerned. The Zamindar also holds a 'mahal' "under separate engagement for payment of land-revenue direct to Government" and from a mere construction of cl. (9) of S. 4, C. P. Land Revenue Act, he would come within the definition of the expression 'Malguzar'. Consequently S. 116, C. P. Land Revenue Act, which confers on a Malguzar a right to realise arrear of revenue due to him from an inferior proprietor with the help of the Deputy Commissioner would apply to a Zamindar also. The Revenue officials were therefore justified in selling the property under S. 116 read with S. 94, C. P. Land Revenue Act.

[12] I now take up the second main point urged by Mr. Dube regarding the accrual of right of occupancy in the sir lands of the village by Dasarath Singh and his co-sharers. The sale proclamation (Ex. G-1) makes it absolutely clear that the sale of the village was subject to the provisions of S. 108, C. P. Land Revenue Act. That section says that unless the Chief Commissioner (in the present case the Board of Revenue) otherwise directs a purchaser of any land sold for arrears of revenue due in respect thereof acquires the proprietorship free of all leases, liens and other encumbrances. In the sale proclamation, however, certain encumbrances were specified and the sale was made subject to those encumbrances. But cl. (c) of S. 108 further says:

"Nothing in this section shall deprive any defaulter whose property is sold of the rights in respect to his sir land conferred by any law for the time being in force."

This section, therefore, makes a difference between leases, liens and other encumbrances on the one hand and the special rights over the sir lands conferred by any law for the time being in force on the other. That law for the purpose of the present case will be found in S. 45 (1), C. P. Tenancy Act* which says:

"Notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary and save where sanction has been given under sub-s. (2) a proprietor who, after the commencement of this Act, temporarily or permanently loses (whether under decree or order of a Civil Court or a Revenue Officer or otherwise) or transfers his right to occupy sir land as a proprietor, shall at the date of such loss or transfer become an occupancy tenant of that sir land, and the rent payable by him as such shall be the sum determined by the current settlement as the rental value of such land, unless and until, on the application of either landlord or tenant, the rent is fixed by a Revenue-Officer."

From a scrutiny of sub-s. (1) of S. 45, C. P. Tenancy Act, it follows that when a proprietor loses his proprietary right in the village by sale for arrears of revenue due thereon, on the same day he gets occupancy right over his sir lands and the person who has newly acquired the proprietary right from him is entitled only to realisation of fair rent from him in respect of those lands. This occupancy right can be given up by him only on an application made by him to the Revenue Officials for transfer of his sir lands without reservation of the right of occupancy as provided in sub-s. (2) of S. 45, C. P. Tenancy Act. That right cannot be extinguished by a decree even of a Revenue Court in view of the clear words of sub-s. (1) of S. 45, C. P. Tenancy Act. Therefore when in the sale proclamation of the village (Ex. G-1) it was expressly stated that the sale was subject to the provisions of S. 108, C. P. Land Revenue Act and when cl. (c) of that section saves the right which the defaulting proprietor may have in respect of his sir lands by any law for the time being in force it must follow that when the village Pandripathar was sold on 21-10-32 on the very same day Dasarath Singh acquired occupancy rights over his sir lands by virtue of sub-s. (1) of S. 45, C. P. Tenancy Act. That occupancy right can be extinguished only on an application made by him under sub-s. (2) of S. 45, C. P. Tenancy Act to the Revenue authorities. Admittedly this has not been done and mere conduct of Dasarath and his other co-sharers in withdrawing the balance of the sale proceeds, on 28-7-36 (vide Ex. A-2) will not have the effect of extinguishing that right. An occupancy right, once it has accrued, can be extinguished only in the manner provided in the C. P. Tenancy Act and not by mere rule of estoppel based on subsequent conduct as proved by Ex. A-2.

[13] Mr. Mohapatra on behalf of the respondents raised the following points in reply to this contention. (i) The appellants were not entitled to raise the question of applicability of S 45 (1), C. P. Tenancy Act, for the first time in the appellate Court; (ii) Dasarath Singh was not a proprietor within the meaning of S. 45 (1), C. P. Tenancy Act and (iii) in any view of the case though Dasarath might have had occupancy rights in the sir lands the plaintiffs are not his co sharers joint with him and consequently their suit must fail.

[14] As regards the first point, though there is some force in the contention of Mr. Mohapatra I think where a pure question of law arises it is not open to him to object to the raising of that question for the first time in a first appeal. It is true that the pleadings do not show that the plaintiffs claimed occupancy right in respect of the sir lands only under S. 45 (1), C. P. Tenancy Act, and the lower Court's udgment also does not show that this point was pressed before the Court. But this is a pure question of law and in view of the clear terms of cl. (c) of S. 108, C. P. Land Revenue Act, and S. 45 (1), C. P. Tenancy Act I fail to see how any objection can be taken to it at the first appellate stage. The point was raised clearly in the grounds of appeal (see para. 11) and there can be no question of any prejudice to any party. In the plaint, the relief asked for was the recovery of possession of the whole of village Pandripathar together with its sir and khudkast lands. A list of the sir lands of the village was appended to the plaint. Thus recovery of possession of the sir lands was a portion of the relief sought, and if the plaintiff is entitled to that part of the relief by virtue of S. 45 (1), C. P. Tenancy Act, it may not be proper to deny him that relief merely because the legal basis on which it was claimed was not set forth in the plaint.

[15] Next as to whether Dasarath Singh is a proprietor within the meaning of S. 45 (1), C. P. Tenancy Act I think the Khewat (Ex. 2) furnishes a satisfactory answer. The expression 'proprietor' has not been fully defined either in the C. P. Land Revenue Act or in the C. P. Tenancy Act and the definition given in cl. (8) (a) of S. 4, C. P. Land Revenue Act being of an inclusive nature is not helpful. But Ss. 49, 50, 51 and 108 and other sections of the C. P. Land Revenue Act speak of 'superior proprietors and inferior proprietors' and they seem to indicate that the position of Dasarath Singh was that of an inferior proprietor. Moreover under S. 4 (1) (a), C. P. Land Revenue Act, sir lands are the home-farm lands of a proprietor and when the Settlement authorities entered some lands as the sir lands of Dasarath Singh, (see Ex. 3) it necessarily follows that his status was recognised as that of a proprietor.

[16] The third objection of Mr. Mohapatra requires some investigation of facts. In the plaint it was clearly stated that the plaintiffs were joint with Dasarath and other co-sharers (defendants 4, 5 and 6) though the sir lands were being possessed by them separately for their maintenance. In the written statement of Dasarath Singh and his other co-sharers (defendants 3, 4, 5 and 6) this statement about the jointness of the parties was admitted. Defendants 2 and 7 being stranger auction-purchasers were not in a position to affirm or deny this plea of jointness. But on the contrary from para. 2 of their written statement it would appear that they also admitted the jointness of the plaintiffs and defendants 3, 4, 5 and 6. In fact their main defence was that Dasarath fully represented the family in the revenue proceedings. The Government of Orissa doubtless put the plaintiff to a proof of this fact and one of the issues raised was issue 12 which ran as follows : "whether the statements made in paras. 2, 3 and 4 of the plaint are true". The learned lower Court instead of giving a clear finding on this issue refused to record any finding without giving reasons. Here I think the lower Court made a mistake. Perhaps he was somewhat misled by the confused language used in the issue. Whether defendants 3, 4, 5 and 6 are joint or separate with the plaintiffs is of much importance both on the question of their right to sue which was fully agitated in the lower Court and also on the question of the applicability of S. 45 (1) (a), C. P. Tenancy Act as I shall show presently. As this is a first appeal I have thought it necessary to give a separate finding both from the pleadings as well as from the evidence recorded. From the pleadings of the plaintiffs and the contesting defendants it is clear that the parties admitted their joint status. In the order-sheet dated 21-10-1932 (Ex. C-1) the Sub-divisional Officer wrote that Mudgar Singh (defendant 4) was joint with Abhiram (defendant 6), Lokanath (defendant 5) and Durjodhan Singh (since dead) In the petition for withdrawal of money dated 28-7-1936 (Ex. A-2) defendants 3, 4, 5 and 6 jointly applied and withdrew the money. This shows clearly the jointness of defendants 3, 4 and 6. The plaintiffs are none else but the sons and brothers of these defendants as will be clear from a perusal of the pedigree appended to the plaint. For instance plaintiffs 1, 2, 3 and 4 are brothers of defendant 4 and plaintiff 8 is the son of defendant 4. Plaintiffs 6 and 7 are sons of Dasarath Singh and plaintiff 5 is the brother of defendant 6 and plaintiff 9 is the son of defendant 5. In fact defendants 3, 4, 5 and 6 are senior members of each of the branches of the original joint family and as they have been proved to be joint, their jointness with their own sons and brothers seems to be beyond question. The only witness to prove the jointess is P.W. 1, who though not expressly mentioning this fact, speaks throughout as if the whole property belonged to all of them. From the aforesaid evidence and pleadings I would, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs and defendants 3,4,5 and 6 are members of a joint family though each of the members is in separate possession of a small portion of the sir lands for maintenance as described in the Settlement Parcha (Ex. 3).

[17] Therefore, though Dasarath Singh's name alone appears in the Khewat as the proprietor of the village, from his own admission in his written statement it is clear that he was only representing the whole joint family. When he lost his proprietorship over the village by the sale dated 21-10-1932 he on behalf of the family acquired occupancy right over the sir lands on the same day and the whole family is, therefore, entitled to that right. In the present litigation it is unnecessary to consider the rights of the members of the family as amongst themselves. This right of occupancy over the sir lands is not extinguished by the sale and consequently the auction-purchasers (defendants 2 and 8) were not justified in dispossessing Dasarath Singh and his co-sharers from their sir lands. All that they are entitled to is the right to get a fair rent fixed for such lands and to realise the same.

[18] As regards the khudkast lands, however, no special right can accrue to Dasarath and his co-sharers after the sale and consequently the auction-purchaser (defendant 2) was entitled to full possession.

[19] I would, therefore, allow the appeal to the following limited extent only It should be declared that plaintiffs and defendants 3, 4, 5 and 6 acquired occupancy rights over the sir lands of village Pandripathar as described in schedule 'A' to the plaint from 21-10-1932 by virtue of sub-s. (1) of S. 45, C. P. Tenancy Act, and the auction-purchaser Mangal Mistri and his vendee defendant 8 acquired only the right to realise rent from those sir lands after it is fixed by a Revenue Officer as provided in that sub-section. Plaintiffs and defendants 3, 4, 5 and 6 are, therefore, entitled to recover actual possession of those lands only. Their claim in respect of the khudkast lands and in respect of the proprietary right in the whole village is not maintainable and is accordingly dismissed.

[20] As there has been partial success of both the parties, each party will bear its own costs both in the lower Court and in this appeal. The appeal against the Government of Orissa is dismissed with costs and the plaintiffs should pay costs to the Government both in the lower Court and in this appeal.

Second Appeal No. 52 of 1949, D/- 12-10-1950.

(a) Sonepur State Code (Vol. I), Bhumi Bidhi Rules (Corrected upto Aug. 1939), Rr. 22 and 23 — Transfer of occupancy holding without consent of Gountia — Validity of transfer — Rights of transferee — Tenancy Laws—Orissa Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1913), S. 31.

Occupancy holdings are not inalienable, but are alienable under limited and specified circumstances, namely, for reasonable cause, as defined in note (1) to Cl. (b) of R. 22. If such reasonable cause exists, the other deficiencies of validating circumstances, such as, consent, signature of Gountia or certificate by the Revenue Department as to its fitness, can be removed on the mere asking for it. On the whole, till the transaction is set aside for absence of such reasonable cause in a suit at the instance of either the Gountia or the successor of an occupancy tenant or till so declared by the Revenue Department in a proceeding specifically drawn up for the purposes and carried on in the presence of the transferor the transferee and the person entitled to avoid a transfer, the transaction binds the whole world including the parties or privies to it. This right of avoidance is exercisable by a suit within the period of limitation of two years, even though the person entitled to sue, be a minor at the time fixed for instituting the suit. Gountia cannot avoid the transaction by accepting a surrender from the occupancy tenant and entering upon the land. The transferor having represented to the transferee that there was reasonable cause for the sale, he cannot be allowed to avoid it on the ground that he had no right to transfer. Subsequent transferee who derives his title from the occupancy tenant stands on no better footing. Simply because a process of surrender to the Gountia and settlement by the latter has been gone into, would not improve their posi ion. Gountia too cannot enter upon the lands on the mere fact that the recorded tenant has transferred it. He must, in Court, establish that the transfer is voidable at his instance and is avoided. If it is not avoided within the period of two years, the transfer becomes binding against the persons entitled to avoid it, or persons deriving title through them. The fact that the transferee has not applied within 6 months for mutation under R. 23 (2) does not affect the character and status of his purchaser so far as his relationship with his transferor and the Gountia is concerned. [Paras 6 and 7]

(b) Administration of Orissa States Order (1948), Ss 10, 12 — Effect — Tenancy Laws regarding transfer of occupancy holding already in force, how far affected by Order — Pending suits — Law governing — Sonepur State Code (Vol. I), Bhumi Bidhi Rules.

After the integration of Sonepur State into the Province of Orissa, the Bhumi-bidhi stands modified by S. 10 of the Admini-tration of Orissa State Order 1948. While allowing the tenancy laws in force in any of the Orissa States prior to the commencement of the order to continue, it provides that it shall continue to remain in force subject to the provisions of this Order. Therefore, so much of it as interferes with the very transfer of an occupancy holding is no longer a good law. [Para 9]

Suits pending on 31-12-1947 must be decided in accordance with the laws continued in force under sub-para. (b) of para. 4 of S. 12 of the Order. This means that the occupancy holding which is the subject-matter of such suit shall be taken to be one free to be transferred in an ordinary manner. [Para 10]

G. G. Das —for Appellants; G. K. Misra —for Respondents.

Ray C. J.—This is an appeal by defendant 2 in a suit for recovery of possession of certain lands appertaining to raiyati holding No. 70 of mouza Sahala, described in all material details in a schedule attached to the plaint.

[2] Defendant 1 was the owner of the said lands. He transferred them on 23-4-1941 by a sale deed to the plaintiff for consideration. The plaintiff stepped into possession of the said lands along with other lands similarly sold to him by defendant 1 aforesaid. Defendant 1 later gave the same lands to defendant 2 who has since taken possession thereof and inspite of repeated demands did not give it up. The suit was contested by both defendants 1 and 2. The present contest mainly centres round the priority of title of either the plaintiff or defendant 2. Defendant 2's case is that defendant 1 and his son surrendered the suit lands to Lambardar Gountia on 30-5-1941 who, in his turn, on 31-5-1941 for consideration settled the suit lands and other lands with this defendant and that ever since, he has been in possession of the same. The trial Court had dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The learned lower appellate Court reversed the trial Court's decree and decreed the suit granting him reliefs of declaration of title and restoration of possession. The alleged deed of surrender is Ex. A and the deed of settlement for the raiyati patta in favour of defendant 2 is Ex. B. The dispute, whether the suit lands form the subject-matter of transfer in the sale deed Ex. 1, has been at rest in the learned lower appellate Court who finds :

"In these circumstances, there cannot be any manner of doubt that suit lands which are known as Pankel At as also as Mahul At had been sold by defendant 1 to plaintiff under Ex. 1, the sale deed."

The contention relating to this has not been reiterated before us in the second appeal.

[3] The fact that the plaintiff got possession in pursuance of the sale deed in his favour, has also been set at rest and has not been agitated at the bar. The learned lower appellate Court observes :

"I find therefore that plaintiff purchased the suit lands and other lands from defendant 1 under Ex. 1, the sale deed and was in possession of the suit lands for about a year and subsequently he was dispossessed from the same by defendant 2."

[4] The next question that remains to be determined is whether the sale performed by execution and delivery of Ex. 1 for consideration accompanied with making over possession to the plaintiff, is binding against the contesting defendants. Admittedly, at the time of this transaction, the law governing was the Rules known as "Sonepur State Code, vol. I. The Bhumi bidhi", (corrected up to August, 1939). The relevant rules or Paras. are 22 and 23. According to R. 22 (b), an occupancy tenant may transfer his holding by a written deed of conveyance to a person who is his next heir according to law. If, however, any transfer, either of the whole or part of his holding, by sale or mortgage, be made for reasonable cause by the occupancy tenant, it shall have to be done by executing a regular deed of conveyance on a properly stamped paper. The deed aforesaid shall not be valid in law if in addition to at least two witnesses to the deed the Gountia does not sign his name by way of giving his consent to the transaction. No transfer by way of gift or dowry is allowed to be made by the occupancy tenant.

Note—(1) The reasonable cause mentioned in the section denotes—need for paying off rightfully incurred debts for reasonable expenditure for household management and for expenses necessary to conduct agricultural operations.

Note—(2) The occupancy tenant desiring to part with a portion of his holding by sale or desiring to mortgage a portion of his holding shall have to obtain the sanction of the Ruler through the Revenue Department that the holding may be sub-divided with separate survey numbers as desired by the tenant.

Note—(3) If the holder of the village declines to sign his name on the deed aforesaid by way of giving consent, the occupancy tenant may move the Ruler through the Revenue Department by showing the reasonableness of the transfer for obtaining the validating signature and the Ruler on being satisfied with the reasonableness of the transaction may pass the order that the deed in question is fit to be validated; the occupancy tenant by obtaining a certified copy thereof may attach the copy to the deed to make the transaction valid.

Note—(4) It has been provided that to make the deed of transfer mentioned in this section valid the signature of the village holder by way of consent is necessary. The village holder shall not demand more than ten per cent. of the consideration money for giving his consent. It is contended that the present deed of conveyance in favour of the plaintiff, which does not contain the signature of the Gountia (the village holder) by way of giving his consent to the transaction, is invalid and confers no title on the plaintiff and that the plaintiff cannot recover possession from the defendant without proving a superior title. The validity of the learned lower appellate Court's judgment is challenged on the ground that he is in error in applying the rule of limitation provided for in S. 23, as such a rule is not available to the plaintiff.

[5] The crux of the question, therefore, is if the sale deed without Gountia's signature or consent is void ab initio or if it is merely a defect, a defect curable by any other means. Note (3) above makes it clear that the consequence of the absence of such a signature can be avoided by moving the Ruler through the Revenue Department and by obtaining a ruling that the transaction was supported by reasonable cause and was a fit one to be validated. Secondly, according to sub-s. (2) of S. 23, any transferee under a transaction which does not fulfil the requirements of s. 22, may apply according to general rules for mutation within six months by serving notices through the Revenue Department on the Gountia, on the transferring occupancy tenant and on such a person who would have been the next successor of the transferring occupancy tenant, for mutation of his name. The initiation of this proceeding shall afford the parties concerned a fresh opportunity for examination of the validity of the transaction in accordance with which a fresh proceeding shall then be drawn up in the Revenue Department. The Revenue authority shall be the final arbiter to decide if the transactjon is illegal. On such finding the person concerned shall be liable to be evicted forthwith and a new occupancy tenant shall be settled on the holding in question with the sanction of the Ruler.

[6] If it was intended by the law-making authority that a transaction of sale gone into in accordance with the formalities prescribed in S. 22 (b), apart from Gountia's signature by way of consent, was void ab initio, nothing should have been simpler for it to say so. That it is not void ab initio, is justified by the fact that the right to avoid the transaction of sale or mortgage on ground of its illegality is limited to either the Gountia or the heir or successor of the occupancy tenant. This right of avoidance is exercisable by a suit within the period of limitation of two years, it having been said in sub-s. (2) of S. 23 that the institution of such a suit (suit for avoiding an illegal transaction) shall be barred by limitation (after two years) even though the person entitled to sue, be a minor at the time fixed for instituting the suit. The words "avoid", "entitled to sue" and a specific and express provision in the body of S. 23 limiting the power of avoidance to the heir or successor of occupancy tenant or the Gountia, make it clear that none of them can take the law into their own hands and forcibly dispossess a person holding under such "an illegal" transaction.

[7] A comprehensive view of the entire law contained in the Bhumi-bidhi' conveys to my mind that occupancy holdings are not inalienable, but are alienable under limited and specified circumstances, namely, for reasonable cause, which according to note (1) to cl. (b) of S. 22, means,

"need for paying off rightfully incurred debts, for reasonable expenditure, for household management and for expenses necessary to conduct agricultural operations."

If such reasonable cause exists, the other deficiencies of validating circumstances, such as, consent signature of Gountia or certificate by the Revenue Department as to its fitness, can be removed on the mere asking for it. On the whole, till the transaction is set aside for absence of such reasonable cause in a suit at the instance of either the Gountia or the successor of an occupancy tenant or till so declared by the Revenue Department in a proceeding specifically drawn up for the purposes and carried on in the presence of the transferor, the transferee and the person entitled to avoid a transfer, the transaction binds the whole world including the parties or privies to it. Gountia cannot avoid the transaction by accepting a surrender from the occupancy tenant and entering upon the land. To permit him to do so would amount to setting the law providing the sole means of avoidance at naught. The Gountia, far less the occupancy tenant's successor cannot be judges of their own cause, until it is declared in Court or by the sole arbiter, namely, the Ruler that reasonable cause did not exist for the sale or mortgage, nor can challenge it and entitle himself on its mere assertion, to dispossess the transferee. Defendant 1, the transferor, having represented to the plaintiff transferee that there was reasonable cause for the sale, he cannot be allowed to avoid it on the ground that he had no right to transfer. His right to transfer is there, but is restricted in the sense that it is exercisable only when reasonable cause defined in note (1) of S. 22 (b) exists. Defendant 2 who derives his title from defendant 1 stands on no better footing. Simply because a process of surrender to the Gountia and settlement by the latter has been gone into, would not improve their position. Gountia too cannot enter into the lands on the mere fact that the recorded tenant has transferred it. He must, in Court, establish that the transfer is voidable at his instance and is avoided. In this view of the matter, I would hold that the learned Subordinate Judge in appeal decided rightly in favour of the plaintiff. It may be noted that for him to say that two years period of limitation having passed, the transaction was not challengeable by the Gountia or the successor of the occupancy tenant, did not amount to grant to the plaintiff a decree by applying the rule of limitation. What he meant to decide was that only persons entitled to avoid and that by a suit to be instituted within two years, having failed to do so, the transaction became binding against them as well. Thus he meets the contention of defendant 2 that he derives his title from the Gountia. It may be noted that under sub-s. (2) of S. 23 the Revenue Department had been made the sole arbiter after the expiry of the period of limitation of two years for avoidance of the transaction by the Gountia or the successor. They are not bound by any rule of limitation. The transferee is, no doubt, required under the said sub-section to apply mutation of his name within six months from the date of the transaction. But that is a matter between him and the Revenue Department. The latter may condone the delay when they are satisfied with the reasons, that the period of six months has passed, does not affect the character and status of the plaintiff's purchase, so far as it governs the relationship between him and the defendants.

[8] Mr. G. G. Das has urged that non-compliance with the forms prescribed for effecting sale of an occupancy holding to a person other than the occupancy tenant's next heir according to law, can be compared to non registration of a compulsorily registrable deed of conveyance for the purpose of determining their consequences on affectation or otherwise of the title by the transfer. I cannot accede to this contention. As I have already shown, by reference to the various provisions in the two Ss. 22 and 23 of the Code of Sonepur, the formalities prescribed there are divided into two classes. The irregularity of not obtaining Gountia's consent as a formality is a curable one. His consent is obtainable on payment of 10 per cent. of the consideration money. On his failure to grant it, a certificate could be granted by the Revenue Department. This cannot be compared with the compulsory nature of registration under the Registration Act I should say that if the deed is not on a properly stamped paper and is not attested by two witnesses, it would be an invalid document which would not effect the transfer of title as between the transferor and the transferee. On the contrary, transfers without Gountia's consent, can be compared to transfers of occupancy holdings, without the consent of the landlord or proprietor under S. 31 of the pre-amendment, Orissa Tenancy Act. Such transfers, though not valid and binding against the landlord for purposes of proceedings for realisation of rent, were always considered to be binding against the transferor and his successors-in-interest. I do not think that in the circumstances of this case a different view can be taken. It is contended by Mr. G. K. Misra, the learned counsel for the respondent that since after the integration of the States including the Sonepur State into the province of Orissa, as it then was, occupancy holdings have become freely transferable. He relies upon S. 10, Administration of Orissa States Order, 1948. The section provides (so much of it as is material for our purposes),

"Notwithstanding anything contained in the Tenancy laws of the States as continued in force under sub-para. (b) of Para. 4 an occupancy tenant shall be entitled—(i) to freely transfer his holding subject to the restriction that no transfer of a holding from a member of an aboriginal tribe to a member of a non-aboriginal tribe shall be valid unless such transfer is made with the previous sanction of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate concerned."

Sub-para. (b) of Para. 4 reads:

"as respects to those matters which are not covered by the enactments applied to the Orissa States under sub-para. (a), all Laws in force in any of the Orissa States prior to the commencement of this Order, whether substantive or procedural and whether based on custom and usage or statutes, shall, subject to the provisions of this Order, continue to remain in force until altered or amended by an Order under the Extra-Provincial Jurisdiction Act, 1947 (XLVII [47] of 1947)."

[9] According to this paragraph, the Bhumibidhi should stand modified by S. 10 of the Order already quoted. While allowing the tenancy laws in force in any of the Orissa States prior to the commencement of the Order to continue, it provides that it shall continue to remain in force subject to the provisions of this Order. Therefore, so much of it as interferes with the very transfer of an occupancy holding is no longer a good law.

[10] The question arises whether it is retrospective in its operation. Regarding that our attention is drawn to the proviso to cl. (c) of S. 12 of the Order. The proviso reads :

"That the law to be followed by such Courts shall be the law applied or continued in force under Para. 4."

The laws applied are those contained in schedule of the Order and dealt with in sub-para. (a) of Para. 4 and the laws continued in force are those referred to in sub-para. (b). As has already been shown, the laws in force either under the statute or under custom or under any rule should continue in force subject to the provisions of the order. Therefore, laws continued in force under Para. 4, within the meaning of the proviso, should be the laws in force prior to the commencement of the Order subject to the variations introduced into it by this Order. Sub-paragraph (c) enumerates the proceedings in which such laws have to be followed. The sub-paragraph says,

"all appeals, revision petitions and other proceedings that were pending before any civil criminal or revenue Court on 31-12-1947, shall be heard and disposed of by the appropriate civil, criminal or revenue Court constituted or continued by or under this Order and exercising jurisdiction which, as far as may be, corresponds to the jurisdiction of the Court before which such appeals and petitions were filed and such proceedings were commenced."

and according to the proviso, such Court in dealing with such appeals or proceedings etc. should follow the laws continued in force under Para. 4. This suit, at some stage or other, was a pending one on 31-12-1947 and it must, therefore, be decided in accordance with the laws continued in force under sub-para. (b) of Para. 4. This means that the occupancy holding which is the subject-matter of this appeal shall be taken to be one free to be transferred in an ordinary manner. The question of registration of the document does not arise as the consideration for the sale is less than Rs. 100 and it was accompanied with delivery of possession.

[11] In the premises aforesaid, I am clear in my mind that the appeal has been rightly decided by the learned lower appellate Court.

[12] I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal and decree the suit with costs throughout.

Anno. C. P. C., Ss. 100 & 101 N. 55.

(c) Houses and Rents — Orissa House Rent Control Act (V [5] of 1947), Ss. 5 and 13—Scope—Permission under S. 13 if should be in addition to exemption order under S. 5.

Per Das and Narsimham JJ., Panigrahi J. dissenting.—The word 'proceeding' in S. 13 is wide enough to cover 'execution proceeding.' [Paras 11, 47]

The use of the word 'tenant' in S. 13 must be meant to refer to an ex-tenant. [Para 13]

An order for exemption under S. 5 cannot obviate the necessity for obtaining permission under S. 13. The requirement of S. 13 is in addition to the exemption contemplated by S. 5 and applies equally to a suit as well as an execution proceeding for eviction of tenant. It applies to month to month tenancies contemplated by S. 5, in respect of which a previous application for exemption would be necessary, that is to say, it does not apply to proceedings for eviction for non-payment of rent or breaches of conditions of tenancy which do not fall within the prohibition of S. 5 (a). [Paras 15 and 49]

Section 13 can be construed as requiring the permission either for a suit or for a proceeding by reading the word 'or' disjunctively and not as necessarily requiring a permission at every stage. [Paras 15, 50]

Per Panigrahi J.—The two sections must be read as mutually exclusive and as applicable to two different sets of circumstances. To hold that an exemption order, as well as a certificate to sue, would be required in the same case would be unreasonable. [Para 34]

The clause beginning with the words "in which the ground specified in the second proviso to cl. (b) of S. 5 has been taken as a ground for such eviction" in S. 13 governs both suit and proceeding, and the application of S. 13 should be restricted only to those proceedings initiated in areas after the Act was subsequently extended to those areas, and not to those areas in which the order or Ordinance had already been applied before. [Para 36]

(d) Houses and Rents—Orissa House Rent Control Act (V [5] of 1947), S. 13—Permission under is condition precedent to institution of proceeding.

Per Das J. — Section 13 is mandatory and it prohibits a Court from entertaining a suit or proceeding unless the conditions are satisfied. The requirement as to permission is a condition precedent for the filing of the suit or proceeding itself and the document constituting the proof of such permission has to be produced along with the institution of proceeding. The word 'entertain' connotes the stage of taking cognizance of the proceeding rather than the stage of granting relief. [Para 16]

(e) Interpretation of Statutes — Retrospective operation.

Per Panigrahi J. — Statutes should be interpreted, if possible, so as to respect vested rights. It is not to be presumed that interference with existing rights is intended by the Legislature, and if a statute be ambiguous the Court should lean to the interpretation which would support existing rights. In the absence of anything in an Act to show that it is to have retrospective operation, it cannot be so construed as to have the effect of altering the law applicable to a claim in litigation at the time when the Act is passed. [Para 24]

Anno. C. P. C., Pre. N. 3.

(f) Houses and Rents—Orissa House Rent Control Act (V [5] of 1947), S. 13—Section if retrospective and applies to pending proceedings — Orissa House Rent Control Ordinance, 1946, S. 13.

Per Panigrahi J. — Neither the Ordinance of 1946 nor the Act of 1947 has any retrospective effect on pending proceedings or on the decree for eviction obtained when the House Rent Control Order of 1942 was in force. The language of S. 13 contemplates suits or proceedings that are to be filed in future and the section is prospective in its operation. It does not require a decree-holder who is proceeding with his execution to withdraw his execution and obtain a certificate and again start execution afresh.

[Paras 24 & 25]

Per Narsimham J: Though the Act cannot be said to apply to pending proceedings it must be held to apply to execution cases filed after its commencement, and thereby affect decrees passed prior to its commencement. By S. 13 the Legislature has deliberately interfered with a decree passed prior to the commencement of the Act. [Para 48]

(g) Interpretation of Statutes — Proviso—Repealing statute.

Per Panigrahi J: A proviso in a repealing statute "except as to acts done under it" will operate to preserve to parties all rights if the action is brought before the repealing statute passes. [Para 27]

Anno. C. P. C., Pre N. 14.

(h) Houses and Rents — Orissa House Rent Control Act (V [5] of 1947), Ss. 13 and 20—Decree for ejectment passed when Orissa House Rent Control Order, 1942 was in force—Execution filed after commencement of 1947 Act without permit required under S. 13—Maintainability—Law applicable—Orissa House Rent Control Ordinance (1946), Ss. 13 and 18.

A decree for ejectment of a tenant was obtained after an exemption order under S. 4 of the Orissa House Rent Control Order, 1942, was obtained. When the execution of the decree was pending the Order of 1942 was repealed and replaced by Ordinance of 1946 which in its turn was repealed and replaced by the Act of 1947 which came into force on 3-5-1947. The execution was dismissed on 7-5-1947 and the decree-holder filed a second execution application on 10-5-1947. The judgment-debtor objected that the execution was not maintainable as the permit required by S. 13 of the Act of 1947 was not obtained:

Held (Per Das and Narsimham JJ., Panigrahi J. dissenting) that the law applicable to the execution application was the Act of 1947 and not the 1942 Order and therefore, the execution was not maintainable for want of permission of the Rent Controller under S. 13 of the Act of 1947. [Para 17]

Per Panigrahi J: That the Act of 1947 did not in any way affect the decree-holder's right to execute the decree which was saved by S 20 of the Act of 1947 and by S. 18 of the Ordinance of 1946. [Para 29]

(i) Houses and Rents—Orissa House Rent Control Act (V [5] of 1947), S. 21—Expiry of Act—Effect on pending proceeding—Liability, meaning of.

Per Das and Narsimham JJ: The Act was purely a temporary Act and the effect of expiry of such temporary Act on pending proceedings is essentially a matter of construction.

The expression 'liability' in S. 21 (b) of the Act must necessarily be other than the penalty contemplated by the Act. It would include the liability to have the execution case dismissed for want of proper permit as required by S. 13 and therefore that liability would continue by virtue of S. 21 notwithstanding the expiry of the Act. [Paras 6, 42]

Per Panigrahi J: After the expiration of a statute, in the absence of a provision to the contrary, no proceedings can be taken on it and proceedings already taken ipso facto determine. Section 21 does not save the expiration of the Act and the only consequence is that the objection proceedings started by the judgment-debtor as to the maintainability of the execution by reason of bar under S. 13 ipso facto terminates with the Act. [Para 37]

(j) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 107 and O. 41, R. 33—Power of appellate Court to take notice of subsequent events.

Per Panigrahi J: The appellate Court is entitled to take into account even acts and events which have come into existence after the decree appealed against and decide the appeal on that basis. [Para 32]

Thus, where an application for execution of a decree for ejectment of a tenant is not maintainable according to S. 13, Orissa House Rent Control Act, 1947, which is the law in force at the time of filing of the execution and the Act has expired and is no longer in force when the appeal in the case is pending, the appellate Court will take notice of this fact and grant relief to the decree-holder irrespective of the fact whether the decision of the trial Court is correct or not. [Para 32]

B. N. Das, M. S. Rao, G. B. Mohanty, S. C. Chakrabarty and R. K. Das—for Appellant; L. K. Das Gupta—for Respondent.

Das J.—This appeal arises in execution of a decree for ejectment obtained by the respondent against the appellant, in respect of a house situated in the town of Cuttack. The respondent is admittedly the owner of the house. The appellant was occupying the house on a monthly tenancy under her. During the time when the House Rent Control Order of 1942 was in force, she obtained from the House Controller, an order dated 15-3-44 exempting her from the operation of S. 4 thereof. On 13-9-44, she gave the tenant a notice, requiring him to vacate the premises by 1-10-44 and also calling upon him to pay up the arrears of rent by then due. She filed a suit for ejectment O. S. No. 71/45 on 26-2-1945 and obtained a decree on 17-12-1945. She proceeded to execute the decree by execution case NO. 230/46 filed on 30-4-1946 which was adjourned from time to time by arrangement between the parties and was ultimately dismissed for default on 7-5-1947. On 10-5-1947, the decree-holder respondent filed a fresh execution case, namely, E. C. NO. 247/47. The judgment-debtor raised the objection that without a permission in writing by the Rent Controller under S. 13, House Rent Control Act of 1947, for the filing of the execution proceedings the same was incompetent. This objection was overruled by both the lower Courts and hence this appeal by the appellant judgment-debtor.

[2] As already mentioned, at the date when the respondent obtained the order of exemption, dated 15-3-1944, and took further steps based thereon, and obtained her decree for ejectment on 17-12-1945, it was the House Rent Control Order of 1942 that was in force. This was superseded by the House Rent Control Ordinance of 1946, which came into operation on 30-9-1946. This, in turn, was repealed by the House Rent Control Act of 1947, which came into operation on 21-3-1947. It is not disputed that these various statutory enactments relating to house rent control were successively in force in the town of Cuttack without a break. The Ordinance and the Act re-enacted all the provisions of the House Rent Control Order with certain additions and modifications. One of such additions is the present S. 13, House Rent Control Act which finds a place in the House Rent Control Ordinance of 1946 as well as in the Act of 1947. This new section was not in operation by the time the 1st E. C. NO. 230/46 was filed on 30-4-1946, but came into operation by the time the second E. C. NO. 247/47, was filed on 10-5-1947. It is accordingly contended by learned counsel for the appellant that the present execution application is incompetent.

[3] In the course of the arguments on this question, it has been brought to our notice that the orginal term of three years of the House Rent Control Act of 1947 had expired by 21-3-1950, and that the life of the Act purports to have been extended for one year with effect from that date by Government Notfn. NO. 2030-Dev., dated 25-2-1950. This notification was issued in exercise of the power of the Provincial Government under sub-s. (4) of S. 1, House Rent Control Act which provides that:

"The Provincial Government may, from time to time, by notification extend the continuance of this Act for a further period or periods not exceeding in the aggregate two years, if in their opinion it is expedient so to do."

The recent decision of the Federal Court reported in Jatindra Nath v. Province of Bihar, 1949 F. L. J. 225 : (A. I. R. (36) 1949 F. C. 175 : 50 Cr. L. J. 897), has been brought to our notice in which it has been held that such a power of extension of the life of an Act by a notification by Government is ultra vires the Provincial Legislature. The question has accordingly been raised that the House Rent Control Act of 1947 is no longer validly in force to enable the appellant to rely on the same. As this raised a serious question relating to the valid continuance in operation of the House Rent Control Act of 1947, we issued notice to the Advocate-General to find out whether the life of the Act had been extended by any fresh Act, or whether it has been purported to be extended only by the notification above-mentioned and if so, how he would maintain the validity of the said notification. The Advocate-General has appeared on notice, and has informed us that the life of the Act has been sought to be extended only by this notification and not by any fresh legislation. He contended, however, that the notification was valid having regard to the terms of sub-s. (4) of S. 1, House Rent Control Act of 1947, and that the decision of the Federal Court above cited in so far as it relates to the validity of such a clause giving power of extension to Government by notification is obiter and not binding on this Court. We have carefully and anxiously considered the matter but it seems to us that in the face of the clear decision of the Federal Court on this question, it is not open to us to treat it as a mere obiter dictum.

[4] In Jatindra Nath v. Province of Bihar, 1949 F. L. J. 225 at p. 227 : (A. I. R. (36) 1949 F. C. 175 : 50 Cr. L. J. 897) the question arose in the following circumstances. The Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act of 1947 came into force on 16-3-1947 by sub-s. (3) of S. 1 thereof. Its operation was limited to one year from the date of its commencement with a proviso that:

"The Provincial Government may by a notification on a resolution passed by the Bihar Legislative Assembly and agreed to by the Bihar Legislative Council direct that the Act shall remain in force for a further period of one year, with such modifications, if any, as may be specified in the notifications."

On 11-3-1948, after the resolution of both the Houses, the Government issued a notification extending the life of the Act for one year from 16-3-1948 to 16-3-1949. By Bihar Act, V [5] of 1949, which came into force on 15-3-1949, in sub-s. (3) of S. 1 of the Act of 1947, for the words "for a period of one year from the date of its commencement" the words and figures "till the 31st March, 1950" were substituted. The point which arose in the case, however, was not with reference to the validity of these various steps in their application to the regular area in the Province of Bihar, but with reference to Chhota Nagpur Division, which is a partially excluded area. The Governor of Bihar by virtue of the powers vested in him under S. 92 (1), Government of India Act, issued a notification on 16-3-1947, directing that the Bihar Act, of 1947, should apply to the Chhota Nagpur Division. On 7-3-1949, the Governor of Bihar issued a further notification in exercise of the same powers, directing that the Bihar Maintenance of Public Order Act of 1947, shall apply and shall always be deemed to have applied to the Chhota Nagpur Division with effect from 16-3-1948. The appellants before the Federal Court were arrested in the Chhota Nagpur Division in January and February of 1949 under the Bihar Act of 1947 as extended to Chhota Nagpur Division by the notification of 16-3-1947 and as prolonged in duration by the notification of 11-3-1948, and the question was whether their arrest and detention were legal. Their Lordships of the Federal Court by majority held that the detention and arrest were illegal, only Fazl Ali J. dissenting. While, no doubt, the validity of the extension of the Bihar Act of 1947 by a notification, in so far as its operation in the regular area of the Province of Bihar was concerned, was not the matter directly in issue in that case, their Lordships had to consider the validity of that extension for the purpose of determining whether in January and February of 1949 ,when the detenus were arrested and on 7-3-1949 when the Governor purported to issue a notification under S. 92 (1), Government of India Act, applying the Bihar Act to Chhota Nagpur Division, the said Bihar Act of 1947 was validly in operation so as to be capable of being applied and invoked. All the four Judges came to the unanimous opinion that the Bihar Act of 1947 was not validly in operation after the expiry of the period of one year, from the date of its commencement, and that the proviso vesting the power in the Provincial Government to extend its operation by a notification was illegal and ultra vires. It is no doubt true that the proviso which was under consideration there, is somewhat different from sub-s. (4) to S. 1 which we are called upon to consider here. Under that proviso, the Provincial Government was given the power by a notification not only to extend the period for which the Act was to remain in force but also the power so to extend, with modifications if any, while under sub-s. (4) to S. 1 with which we are concerned, the power is only the power to extend the duration of the Act. It has been suggested that if what was given was only the power of extension, without the power of modification, the decision of their Lordships might conceivably have been different. I am unable to agree with this contention. It is true that the learned Chief Justice Mukherjea J. and Patanjali Sastri J. lay some stress on the fact that the power given is a power of extension with modifications if any and also that so far as Patanjali Sastri J. is concerned his Lordship specifically left this particular question open, though inclined in favour of the majority view even on this. But it is clear that their Lordships, who were in the majority, expressed an unequivocal and decisive opinion that the power to extend the operation of an Act cannot come within the purview of conditional legislation, and that it amounts to a delegation of legislative power which is invalid. The following passages from the judgment of their Lordships establish this. His Lordship the Chief Justice says at p. 230 :

"The power to extend the operation of the Act beyond the period mentioned in the Act prima facie is a legislative power. It is for the Legislature to state how long a particular legislation will be in operation. That cannot be left to the discretion of some other body."

Again at the same page :

"Even keeping apart the power to modify the Act, I am unable to construe the proviso, worded as it is, as conditional legislation by the Provincial Government. Section 1 (3) and the proviso read together cannot be properly interpreted to mean that the Government of Bihar in the performance of its legislative functions had prescribed the life of the Act beyond one year. For its continued existence beyond the period of one year it had not exercised its volition or judgment, but left the same to another authority, which was not the legislative authority of the Province."

Patanjali Sastri J. says as follows at p. 233 :

"The proviso leaves it to the discretion of the Provincial Government and the two Chambers of the Provincial Legislature, to prolong the duration of the Act for a further period of one year with such modifications as they may think fit. This, in my opinion, is also a legislative power and not a matter of mere administrative discretion."

His Lordship points out later on at p. 234 that in Queen v. Burah, 5 I. A. 178: (4 Cal. 172 P. C.) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the power vested in the Local Government by S. 39 of Act XXIII [23] of 1861 to extend the Code of Civil Procedure of 1859 to certain areas "subject to any restriction, limitation or proviso which the Local Government may think proper," as an instance of valid conditional legislation and that the power of modification may only be a more comprehensive term for the phrase "restriction, limitation or proviso" indicating thereby that his Lordship was inclined to think that if the power of extension of duration was not there, the validity of the proviso may have been supported on the ground that it was a mere conditional legislation. A careful reading of his Lordship's judgment seems to me to show that it was because the power of extension of the duration was specified in the proviso that his Lordship considered that it amounted to a delegation of legislative power. Turning to the judgment of Mahajan J., his Lordship laid down at p. 239 as follows :

"In cases of conditional legislation, on fulfilment of the condition the legislation becomes absolute. But in cases of delegated legislation, the delegate has to take a decision whether that legislation is to continue or has to be modified, amended or varied."

Then again at p. 240 his Lordship says as follows :

"I am further of the opinion that the power given to extend the life of the Act for another year in the context of the language of S. 1 (3) also amounts to an Act of Legislation and does not fall under the rule laid down in Queen v. Burah, 5 I. A. 178 : (4 Cal. 172 P. C.). The Act in a mandatory form stated that it shall be in force for one year only. That being so, the power given in the proviso to re-enact it for another year is legislative power and does not amount to conditional legislation."

Mukherjea J. also has expressed himself in the same unequivocal terms at p. 251 as follows : "The duration of a statute is a matter for determination of the Legislature itself." In the face of these unequivocal pronouncements of their Lordships, it is impossible for us to uphold the contention that the decision of the Federal Court on this matter is merely obiter and not binding on us. Under Art. 141 of the Constitution, the law declared by the Supreme Court is binding on all the Courts within the territory of India. Even if it were possible for us to say that these unequivocal expressions of opinions quoted above are obiter, we are bound to attach the greatest weight to such pronouncements when they directly arose for consideration in the case and we should in any case have followed the same. In my view, therefore, the extension of the House Rent Control Act of 1947 by notification dated 25-2-1950 is ultra vires and it must be held that the said Act is no longer validly in operation.

[5] It has, however, been argued that this does not affect the question that has been raised before us in this case, namely, whether the execution application made by the decree-holder in this case on 10-5-1947 at a time when the Act was undoubtedly in force, was valid, and whether the decree-holder could get an order for delivery on the basis of that application. This raises the question as to the effect of the expiry of a temporary Act.

[6] It was held in some of the old English cases that where an Act expired, or was repealed, it was to be regarded, in the absence of provision to the contrary as having never existed except as to matters or transactions past and closed. (See Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, Edn. 8, p. 347). The rigour of this rule was subsequently modified by S. 38, (English) Interpretation Act of 1889, which provided for the effect of repeal in respect of pre-accrued rights and liabilities and proceedings in respect of the same. Similar provisions have now been made in India by S. 6, Central General Clauses Act (X [10] of 1897). This section, however, applies only to repealed Acts and not to temporary Acts, whose duration expires by lapse of time. The English cases have in later years evolved a different rule as regards the effect of expiry of temporary Acts. In Stevenson v. Oliver, (1841) 151 E. R. 1024 at p. 1027 : (8 M. & W. 225) this distinction has been pointed out by Baron Parke in the following terms :

"There is a difference between temporary statutes which are repealed; the latter (except so far as they relate to transactions already completed under them) become as if they had never existed; but with respect to the former, the extent of the restrictions imposed, and the duration of the provisions, are matters of construction."

In that case the question that arose was the following : By 6 Geo. 4, C. 133, S. 4, it was provided that every person who held or thereafter should hold a commission or warrant as surgeon or assistant surgeon in His Majesty's navy or army, should be entitled to practise as an apothecary in any part of England or Wales without having undergone the examination or received the certificate required by a previous statute. The Act was in terms temporary and was to continue until 1-8-1826. The question arose whether the certificate of the plaintiff who had not passed the requisite examination, but who held a warrant as assistant surgeon in the navy during the period when the expired Act was in force enabling him to practise as an apothecary continued valid after the expiry of the Act and it was held that it did so continue to be valid. In 96 E. R. 259 : (1 Black W. 451) in Note 'B' under Miller's case it is stated as follows :

"A contract declared by statute to be illegal, is not made good by a subsequent repeal of the Statute."

Hvaing regard to these principles, it appears to me in this case that the expiry of the House Rent Control Act of 1947 has no effect on the question we are called upon to consider on the contention of the appellant. What we are asked to say is whether the respondent's application filed on 10.5.47 was not a valid application at the time. This is not the same thing as treating the expired Act as continuing in force for any present purposes. It appears to me also that the fact that the Courts below have not upheld the plaintiff's contention on the construction of S. 13 and that the matter is now pending before us in appeal does not, as has been suggested, alter the situation. For instance, it could not be contended that if the Courts below gave effect to the judgment-debtor's contention and the decree-holder came up in appeal before us, he could invite the Court to say that the application filed by him became validated by the expiry of the Act even though this Court came to the conclusion that the lower Courts were right in the view that they took, with reference to the law as it then stood. The matter is also, I think sufficiently covered by S. 21 of the very Act which has expired. That section provides for the effect of the expiry of the Act and states that

"the expiration of the Act shall not affect any liability incurred under the Act and shall not affect any legal proceeding in respect of any such liability."

If the contention of the appellant as to the scope and effect of S. 13, namely, that the execution proceeding was incompetent without the previous written permit of the House Rent Controller for the same, be correct, it follows that the proceeding was liable to be dismissed on that ground. That liability has not in any way been affected by the expiry of the Act. See Kashmiri Lal v. Kishan Dei, A. I. R. (11) 1924 ALL 563 : (26 Cr. L. J. 90). If the Courts below have not given effect to that liability by a wrong construction of the section, a Court of Appeal which has to pass the order which the lower Courts were bound to pass, has to give effect to that liability and dismiss the execution proceeding and in so doing is giving effect to the expired Act for the limited purpose of determining this liability.

[7] Learned counsel for the respondent urges that S. 13, House Rent Control Act, does not, in any view, affect the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the application for execution, and that it therefore renders an execution application not complying with it, liable to be dismissed. It is urged that what at most can be said is that the permit of the Controller is required, before the relief by way of eviction can be granted. That, however, is a contention which relates to the merits of the construction of S. 13 and has no bearing on the question whether the appellant can urge the points that have been raised before us having regard to the expiry of the Act. The merits of the appellant's contentions based on the House Rent Control Act of 1947, have therefore, to be considered notwithstanding the expiry of the Act.

[8] Before dealing with the question of construction of S. 13, some comparatively minor arguments raised on both sides may be dealt with. The respondent urges that even with reference to the provisions of the House Rent Control Act, his suit for eviction and the subsequent proceedings thereunder are not hit either by S. 5 or S. 13. He points out that the appellant judgment-debtor was in arrears of rent by the date of the filing of the suit and that having regard to the wording of sub-s. (a) of S. 5, the liability for eviction of the tenant on the ground of non-payment of rent under the general law is not affected by any of the provisions of the Act. He relies on certain observations of this Court in Banschhanidhi Samantrai v. Lachmi Narain, I. L. R. (1949) I Cut. 231: (A. I. R. (37) 1950 Orissa 1). This question, however has not been raised in any of the Courts below and has been for the first time raised before us at this late stage. A perusal of the plaint, no doubt, shows that non-payment of rent has been alleged and it would appear from the subsequent proceedings that it was a fact. But a perusal of the written statement gives an indication that there was a dispute between the parties prior to the date of the suit arising out of the demand of the landlord for increased rent, and it appears not unlikely that the rent remained unpaid on account of this dispute. It is not in every case of non-payment of rent under the general law that there is a liability for eviction of the tenant. In order that it may be available as a ground for eviction, it must be a condition of the tenancy. The question as to whether the condition is fulfilled is not concluded by the bare factum of non-payment; but is to be determined with reference to the circumstances attending such non-payment. For instance, if the non-payment is not wilful, but has been brought about by any unreasonable conduct of the landlord, it may not bring about liability for eviction. Whether, therefore, the appellant judgment-debtor in the present case incurred any liability for eviction merely on the ground of non-payment and whether the plaint in the case which was distinctly based on the order for exemption obtained from the Rent Controller, is to be treated as falling outside the scope of the House Rent Control Act, merely because non-payment is also alleged, are matters that must depend upon further investigation of facts, as to circumstances under which the non-payment may have occurred. The contention, therefore, cannot be allowed to be raised at this stage.

[9] The appellant urges that over and above the previous exemption order of the Rent Controller dated 15-3-44 a fresh exemption order was necessary, apart from any permission under S. 13 of the Act. The respondent's advocate on the other hand contends that the previous exemption order gives him a vested right to obtain his remedy by way of eviction of the tenant by taking proceedings for the same and continuing them to their effectual termination. It appears to me that both the contentions are unsustainable. The appellant points out than in S. 5 (a), House Rent Control Act, the phrase "in execution of a decree or otherwise" is an addition, which is not to be found either in S. 5 of the previous Ordinance of 1946 or the corresponding S. 4, House Rent Control Order, 1942. He, therefore, urges that the exemption order already obtained is not effective for purposes of execution. On the other hand the respondent says that having regard to S. 18, House Rent Control Ordinance of 1946, and S. 20, House Rent Control Act of 1947, an order of exemption obtained by him under the provisions of the House Rent Control Order of 1942 must receive its full effect and operation, so as to entitle him to obtain actual eviction through Court on the basis of said exemption order. So far as the appellant's contention in this behalf is concerned, it appears to me to be clear that by virtue of S. 20 of the Act, taken in conjunction with S. 18 of the Ordinance, the previous exemption order must be treated as an exemption order obtained under the corresponding provision of the present Act. There can be no doubt that in spite of the addition of the phrase "in execution of the decree or otherwise," cl. (a) of S. 5 of the Act, corresponds to S. 4 of the Order, at least in so far as suits for eviction filed subsequent to the coming into force of the House Rent Control Order of 1942 are concerned. As regards the respondent's contention, the only effect of S. 20 is that the prior order of exemption is to be treated as one passed under the corresponding provisions of the present Act, and not that it is to have the same operativeness as it had under the prior Act which is quite a different matter. Indeed, this argument proceeds on a misconception of the scope of an exemption order. Such an order merely exempts the landlord from the disability imposed on him by sub-s. (a) of S. 5 and enables him to pursue his remedies under the general law, and relegates the parties to the general law, but cannot have the effect of guaranteeing to the parties that that general law may not once again be altered by a competent Act of the Legislature and a fresh disability imposed. Learned counsel for the respondent also attempted to argue that the exemption order obtained under the House Rent Control Order must be taken to be a combined order under Ss. 5 and 13 of the present Act treating Ss. 5 and 18 together as the provision corresponding to the old S. 4, House Rent Control Order. This argument is clearly without any substance.

[10] The only substantial question on the merits raised in the case is as to the correct interpretation of S. 13, and its applicability to the present case and this remains to be considered. The appellant contends that (1) the requirement under the section is in addition to the requirement under S. 5; (2) the requirement is applicable as much to execution proceedings as to suits; (3) it is a condition precedent to the institution of a suit or execution proceeding. The respondent controverts each and every one of these propositions.

[11] As regards the first two of the above contentions, the respondent points out certain difficulties in the way of adoption of the construction of the section which the appellant urges. The difficulties that he relies on, arise from (a) the use of the word "tenant" in the section and the definition of the word "tenant" as given in S. 2, sub-s. (5) of the Act; (b) the use of the clause

It is urged that when a suit is filed for eviction after obtaining an order of exemption under S. 5 (proviso), the only ground for eviction is that the tenancy has been validly terminated by a notice to quit after the exemption order has been obtained and not any of the grounds referred to in second proviso to cl. (b) of S. 5. Similarly when an execution proceeding is filed to enforce a decree for ejectment already obtained after an exemption order, no ground is or need be specified for the execution excepting the fact of the decree having been obtained. It is therefore urged that the section which, in terms, applies only to suits or proceedings of a particular category, namely, those in which particular grounds are specified as grounds for eviction, is wholly inapplicable to cases where an exemption order has already been obtained. It is, therefore, urged that this section is meant to apply only to the limited class of cases where eviction proceedings have been already initiated without the exemption order either because the Act itself was not in force at the time, or because the Act had not been brought into operation in the particular area. This argument necessarily implies that the section is applicable only to fresh execution proceedings where there has been no exemption obtained prior to the institution of the suit, since every suit to be filed after the Act came into force would be preceded by an exemption order, as a matter of course, at least, in so far as month to month tenancies are concerned. So to limit the construction of the section would, however, make the word "suit" in the section completely devoid of any operation and would also not obviate the objection that no execution proceeding is based on any particular ground excepting the fact that a valid decree for eviction had already been obtained. If the word "suit" is not to be completely obliterated from the section, by difficulties of construction, it must obviously apply to all future suits for eviction which would be preceded, as a matter of course, by an exemption order in respect of month to month tenanciee. It would, therefore, appear to be clear that in respect of, at least, future suits for eviction, as regards month to month tenancies, the permission under S. 13 is over and above and independent of an exemption order. Having regard to the absolute and mandatory language of S. 13 and the opening words of S. 5 which says that that section is "subject to the other provisions of the Act" which of course includes S. 13, it cannot reasonably be contended that an order of exemption under S. 5 obviates the necessity for obtaining the permission under S. 13. It appears to me, therefore, that the limited construction urged for by the appellant's counsel restricting the operation of S. 13 to cases, where an exemption has not already been obtained is not permissible. Whether a suit for eviction can be maintained merely by obtaining a written permission of the Rent Controller without having previously obtained any exemption is different matter and does not arise for decision. I am, however, inclined to think that an order of exemption in the first instance and a distinct order for permission to institute a suit at the time of such institution are both required under the Act. This appears to be a fair inference from the fact that S. 13 is a specific addition by the Ordinance of 1946 and the Act of 1947, to the pre existing corresponding provision under the Order of 1942. The two appear to me to serve two different purposes. As already pointed out above, the exemption order is meant merely to remove the disability relating to the operation of the general law imposed by S. 5 (a). Such a removal of the disability enables the landlord to terminate the tenancy and get possession without having to go to Court if he can, and also absolves him from any penalty for contravention of the provisions of the Act under S. 15 thereof. When, however, the landlord is obliged to seek the help of a Court by instituting proceedings, a fresh permission may well be required to ensure that the circumstances with reference to which exemption has been granted, continue to apply and justify eviction through Court. It is to be remembered that a suit for eviction may be filed long after the tenancy has been terminated and the execution proceedings based on the eviction decree may be kept alive for years. The Act itself was, no doubt, intended to be operative for a temporary period. But having regard to the prevailing conditions relating to pressure for residential house, in urban areas the Legislature might have been anxious to provide an additional safeguard for the tenant and might have well thought that the safeguard against the abuse of exemptions provided under S. 10 (2) read with the proviso to S. 5 was not enough. However this may be, so far as the present argument is concerned, I can see no reason for not giving full effect to the language of S. 13, merely because there is scope for saying that the phrase in the section viz.,

"in which the ground specified in second proviso to cl. (b) of S. 5, has been taken as a ground for such evictions," is inappropriate, if strictly understood. It appears to me that the said phrase is merely intended to be descriptive of the class of cases to which S. 13 applies and not to imply the requirement of any such ground being a necessary part of the allegations on which that proceeding is instituted. Thus, for instance, the section will not apply where the ground for eviction is non-payment of rent or breach of conditions of tenancy, which takes it out of the operation of S. 5, sub-s. (a) itself. To give effect to the contention of the respondent in this behalf, would either make the section completely otiose or at least have the effect of deleting the word "suit" in the section, which is not permissible. It may be mentioned, in connection with this portion of the argument that it has also been urged that the word "proceeding" in the section must apply only to what may be called an "original proceeding" for eviction and not to an execution proceeding, which is merely a proceeding to enforce the decree in a suit already obtained. Such a construction again, however, would make the word "proceeding" absolutely otiose having regard to what is admitted before us, viz., that in the Province of Orissa, no mere original proceeding for eviction of tenants otherwise than by a suit are available under the law. The word "proceeding" in my opinion is wide enough to cover an execution proceeding. See Gurupadapa Basapa v. Virbhadrapa, 7 Bom. 459 and Deb Narain v. Narendra, 16 Cal. 267 (FB) at pp. 279, 280.

[12] The next objection relating to the construction of the section based upon the use of the word "tenant" has to be noticed. "Tenant" has been defined in the Act as

"including a person continuing in possession after the termination of his tenancy otherwise than under the provisions of this Act."

It has been pointed out that when an exemption order has been obtained and a valid notice to quit has been given, the tenancy has been terminated thereby, under the provisions of the Act and, therefore, a person continuing in possession thereafter is not a tenant within the meaning of the Act. In such a case, therefore, neither the suit against him for eviction, nor any execution proceeding taken against him can be said to be against a "tenant." This objection appears at the first sight to have considerable force, but once again the difficulty is that if the word "tenant" used in S. 13 is construed as above, the entire section becomes devoid of any operation and is rendered otiose. To avoid this, it has been suggested on the other side that the phrase "continuing in possession after termination of the tenancy otherwise than under the provisions of this Act" in the definition of the word "tenant" must be taken to mean a person continuing in possession until evicted under the provisions of the Act and that the termination contemplated is only by the actual eviction. I am not prepared to adopt this construction, which appears to me to be a complete substitution of different words in the definition of the word "tenant" for the words actually used. The solution, however, of this difficulty to my mind lies in the fact that the definition in the section, as appears from the opening sentence of S. 2, applies only when there is nothing repugnant in the subject or context. To construe the word "tenant" in the light of the definition, would be repugnant to the subject or context, inasmuch as it renders S. 13 absolutely otiose. On the other hand, there is another way of looking at this matter.

[13] A suit or a proceeding by a landlord against a tenant for eviction is a well-known category of suit. It is obvious that at the date of the institution of such a suit, or proceeding, the person against whom it is instituted, is not strictly in law a tenant, an ex-tenant whose tenancy has already terminated under the law, but it is still permissible to designate it as a suit by a landlord against a tenant. This has been clearly pointed out by their Lordships in Karnani Industrial Bank Ltd. v. Satyaniranjan Shaw, A. I. R. (15) 1928 P. C. 227 : (56 Cal. 80). In that case their Lordships construing S. 15 (1), Calcutta Rent Act, which provides for the Controller granting a certificate as regards the standard rent on the application made to him by any landlord or tenant, held that this provision was not applicable where the application was made by a tenant whose tenancy had expired by forfeiture or efflux of time. Their Lordships held that this was not the correct interpretation and stated as follows:

"Their Lordships are of opinion that this adopts too narrow a construction of the words. In order to give any working effect to the Act it is necessary that the words 'landlord and tenant' must include, as they often do in ordinary parlance, ex-landlord and ex-tenant. An action by ex-landlord against ex-tenant might ordinarily be described as an action of landlord against tenant . . . . . ."

This agrees with the decision of the English Court of Appeal in Remon v. City of London Real Property Co., (1921) 1 K. B. 49 : (89 L. J. K. B. 1105), where with reference to similar words in S. 15 (1), Increase of Rent Act Scrutton L. J. says:

"Whom did they mean to include in the term 'tenant'? if a tenant by agreement whose tenancy had expired was not within those terms, the whole purpose of the Act would have been defeated."

It, therefore, appears to me that the use of the word 'tenant' in S. 13, does not create any serious difficulty and must be meant to refer to an ex-tenant.

[14] Learned counsel for the appellant strongly urges that to give effect to the section by construing the word 'tenant' as 'ex-tenant' and by understanding the clause

"in which the ground specified in the second proviso to cl. (b) of S. 5 has been taken as a ground for such eviction."

As referring to the class of suits or proceedings to which it is intended to apply, is to adopt a strained and forced construction and that there is a way of giving effect to the Act by holding that it applies only to cases where an exemption order has not already been granted so far as month to month tenancies are concerned under S. 5 of the Act, and where an order disallowing extension has not been passed so far as term tenancy is concerned under S. 10 of the Act. It appears to me that to take S. 13 as having so extremely limited an operation cannot be justified on the actual language used by the section.

[15] My conclusion, therefore, on this part of the case is that the requirement of S. 13, is in adddition to the exemption contemplated by S. 5 and applies equally to a suit as well as an execution proceeding for eviction of a tenant and that it applies to month to month tenancies contemplated by S. 5, in respect of which a previous application for exemption would be necessary, that is to say, that it does not apply to proceedings for eviction for non-payment of rent or breaches of conditions of tenancy which do not fall within the prohibition of S. 5 (a). A question might arise whether where a permit has already been taken for the institution of a suit, a fresh permit under S. 13 is required for every succeeding execution proceeding. That question does not directly arise in this case because admittedly no permission under S. 13, has at all been obtained either for the suit or for the first execution petition inasmuch as S. 13 was not then a part of the Rent Control Order. Therefore, it appears to me clear that the permit contemplated by S. 13 was clearly necessary for the execution application filed by the respondent on 10 5-1947. I may add, however, that to construe the section as requiring a permit for each succeeding execution application or indeed for an execution application when the suit itself has been filed after obtaining permission, may be considered unreasonable. It may be possible to interpret the section as requiring such a permission either for a suit or for a proceeding by reading the word 'or' disjunctively and not as necessarily requiring a permission at every stage.

[16] The further question that has yet to be considered is whether the requirement by way of permission is a condition precedent for the filing of the suit or proceeding or is only required before granting of the relief. For, if the latter is the correct interpretation, it would be obvious that since as held above the Act itself has already expired, we cannot now ask that the permit should be obtained before the decree is actually executed by warrant of delivery. Here again, there seems to be no reasonable scope for any doubt on the matter. The section is mandatory. In specific terms it says:

"No suit or proceeding shall be entertained by any Court unless the landlord has been permitted by the controller by an order in writing to institute such a suit or proceeding and has produced before such Court proof that such permission has been granted."

This seems clearly to mean that the permission is required for the institution of the suit or the proceeding itself and that proof of the same should be produced before such Court which seems to imply that the document constituting the proof has to be produced along with the institution of the proceeding. The section prohibits a Court from entertaining a suit or proceeding unless the conditions are satisfied. It is not possible to construe the word 'entertain' merely as meaning the granting of relief at the time of the disposal of the proceeding. The word 'entertain' as appears from the Oxford Dictionary Vol. 11, p. 213 under the alphabet "E" is shown to mean "to admit to consideration." The word connotes, therefore, the stage of taking cognizance of the proceeding rather than the stage of granting relief and thus appears to hit at the power of the Court to admit the proceeding even at the very initial stage. I may also add that no objection can be taken to S. 13 as affecting the normal power or the jurisdiction of the Court under the Civil P. C., because it appears that the Orissa House Rent Control Act of 1947 had received assent of the Governor-General on 8-3-1947, before it was brought into force.

[17] It therefore follows, in my opinion, that the objection of the appellant to the maintainability of execution application filed by the respondent on 10-5-1947 as E. C. No. 247/47 as the law then stood, must succeed and the appeal must accordingly be allowed. I must, however, note that I have come to that conclusion with reluctance, in its application to the facts of the present case. The record clearly shows that from the moment the suit has been instituted and during the pendency of the first execution application, the judgment-debtor has been repeatedly taking extensions of time from the respondent for vacating the premises and has in fact been able to continue in the premises virtually on account of the indulgence of the respondent. He now derives an unexpected and probably unfair advantage by virtue of the provisions of law which have ceased to be operative at any rate for the time being. These considerations, however, are beside the point so far as the issues arising in the appeal are concerned.

[18] The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the E. C. No. 247/47 must be dismissed. In the circumstances the appellant will have no costs at any stage of the proceedings here or in the Courts below.

[19] I may take this opportunity of adding that since in the view we have expressed that the House Rent Control Act is no longer in force fresh legislation is almost inevitable. The Legislature may well take that opportunity to make its intention clear on the matters debated in this case without leaving room for difficulty of construction.

[20] Panigrahi J.—Two points arise on this appeal: first, what is the law in force at the time of the filing of E. C. No. 247 of 1947; and secondly, what is the law applicable now, when the appeal arising out of that execution is being heard.

[21] A few facts are necessary to be stated in order to elucidate the first point. Under Para. 4 of the Orissa House Control Order of 1942, the decree-holder (respondent) obtained an order of exemption from the Controller on 15-3-44 and terminated the tenancy of the appellant by a notice to quit issued on 13-9-44. Suit No. 75 of 1945 was thereafter filed on 26-2-45 and a decree in ejectment was obtained by him on 17-12-45. In pursuance of this decree the first E.C. No. 230 of 1946 was filed on 30-4 46. While that execution case was pending the House Rent Control Ordinance of 1946 was published in the Orissa Gazette Extraordinary on 1-10-46. The Ordinance introduced a new clause which was not to be found in the House Rent Control Order of 1942 which it replaced. Clause 13 of the Ordinance enacted that no suit or proceeding by a landlord against a tenant for eviction from a house, in which the ground specified in the second proviso to cl. (b) of S. 5 thereof has been taken as a ground for such eviction, shall be entertained by any Court unless the landlord has been permitted by the Controller by an order in writing to institute such suit or proceeding and has produced before such Court evidence that such permission has been granted. There was a saving clause in the Ordinance which enacted that :

"Notwithstanding the expiry of the Orissa House Rent Control Order 1942, all orders passed and other things done in pursuance of the said order, shall be deemed to have been validly passed and done under the corresponding provisions of this ordinance."

On 1-11-1946, the judgment-debtor filed a petition, Ex. A, for granting him time till 21-12-46 to vacate the house and stated therein that :

"The petitioner has agreed to vacate the house on or before 1-1-47 failing which writ of possession will issue without further reference."

By a similar petition dated 13-2-47, Ex. A 1, the appellant stated that the decree-holder accepted the amount of compensation decreed against him upto the end of February, and agreed to allow the appellant to remain in the house till the end of February and deliver vacant possession of the house on 1-3-1947. The appellant further agreed that if he failed to vacate the house on 1st March the writ of possession would issue. The writ was actually issued on 11-3-47 but was returned unexecuted for want of identification. The execution case was dismissed, on part satisfaction, on 7-5-47.

[22] On 21-3-1947 the Orissa House Rent Control Act (V [5] of 1947) was first published in the Orissa Gazette. Sub-s. (3) of S. 1 of the Act enacted that it shall come into force in such areas, and on such dates, as the Provincial Government may by notification appoint and different dates may be so appointed for different areas. The Provincial Government did not notify the application of the Act to Cuttack till 3-5-1947 on which date Notfn. No. 5177-D dated 3-5-1947 was published in an Extraordinary issue of the Orissa Gazette. The notification reads:

"In exercise of the powers conferred by sub-s. (3) of S. 1, Orissa House Rent Control Act 1947 (Act V [5] of 1947), the Governor of Orissa is pleased to direct that it shall come into force in the areas specified in the schedule annexed hereto on the date of this notification."

Item 3 of the schedule annexed to the notification mentions Cuttack municipal area including the adjoining villages of Khannagar, Sankarpur, etc. Meanwhile the authorities have taken action under the Act as if it had been in force from 21-3-1947. It was, therefore, felt necessary to validate all such actions purporting to have been taken under the Act and accordingly Orissa Act XXI [21] of 1947, the Orissa House Rent Control (Amendment and Validation) Act was passed and published in an Extraordinary Gazette issued on 12-7-1947. This Act amended sub-s. (3) of S. 1, House Rent Control Act (V [5] of 1947) by providing therein that it shall come into force at once in the towns and areas specified in the schedule; and the schedule attached to the notification of 3-5-1947 was carried into this Act.

[23] Three days after the dismissal of the E. C. No. 230/46, that is on 10-5-1947, the decree-holder filed a second E. C. No. 247 of 1947. On 16-7-1947, that is four days after the Validation Act was passed, the judgment-debtor filed a miscellaneous case under S. 47, Civil P. C. objecting to the maintainability of the execution petition on the ground that S. 13, House Rent Control Act was a bar. It will be noticed that the notification extending the application of the House Rent Control Act to the town of Cuttack was published at a time when the first E. C. No. 230/1946 was pending in the Court and the Validating Act was passed at a time when the second E. C. No. 247 of 1947 was pending. The question for decision, therefore, is whether the notification dated 3-5-1947 or the Validating Act of 12-7-1947 would affect pending proceedings or render the institution of the execution case invalid retrospectively.

[24] It is a well-recognised rule of construction that statutes should be interpreted, if possible, so as to respect vested rights.—Hough v. Windus, (1881) 12 Q. B. D. 224 at p. 237—and such a construction should never be adopted if the words are open to another construction. It is not to be presumed that interference with existing rights is intended by the Legislature, and if a statute be ambiguous the Court should lean to the interpretation which would support existing rights. In the absence of anything in an Act to show that it is to have retrospective operation, it cannot be so construed as to have the effect of altering the law applicable to a claim in litigation at the time when the Act is passed, Leeds and County Bank v. Walker, (1883) 11 Q. B. D. 84 at p. 91: (52 L. J. Q. B. 590). So careful are the Courts in endeavouring to protect vested rights that we find that in several cases Judges have refused to allow statutes to have retrospective operation although their language seemed to imply that such was the intention, of the Legislature, because if the statutes had been so construed, vested rights would have been defeated. See Craies, p. 335 and the cases cited therein.

"It is a general rule', said Jessel M. R. in In re Joseph Suche & Co., Ltd, (1875) 1 Ch. D. 50, "that when the Legislature alters the rights of parties by taking away or conferring any right of action, its enactments, unless in express terms they applied to pending actions, do not affect them."

In accordance with this principle it was held in Ex parte Pratt, (1884) 12 Q. B. D. 331 that proceedings pending during an earlier Act were saved. In Delhi Cloth & General Mills v. Income-tax Commissioner, A. I. R. (14) 1927 P. C. 242:

(9 Lah. 284), the same rule was applied to Indian cases and the Judicial Committee held:

"Provisions which touch a right in existence at the passing of a statute are not to be applied retrospectively in the absence of express enactment or necessary intendment. Provisions which if applied retrospectively would deprive of their existing finality orders which, when the statute came into force were final, are provisions which touch existing rights."

In United Provinces v. Mt. Atika Begum, A. I. R. (28) 1941 F. C. 16 : (I. L. R. (1941) Kar. F. C. 72), it was laid down that if there are two possible interpretations it is the duty of the Court to accept that one which is more reasonable, more consistent with ordinary practice, and less likely to produce impracticable results. Sulaiman J. observed at p. 37 as follows :

"Undoubtedly an Act in its operation may be retrospective and yet the extent of its retrospective character need not extend so far as to affect pending suits. Courts have undoubtedly leaned very strongly against applying a new Act to a pending action, when the language of the statute does not compel them to do so. It is a well recognised rule that the statutes should, as far as possible, be so interpreted as not to affect vested rights adversely, particularly when they are being litigated. When a statute deprives a person of his right to sue or takes out the power or jurisdiction of a Court in enforcing the law, as it stands, its retrospective character must be clearly expressed. Ambiguities in it should not be removed by Courts nor gaps filled up in order to widen its applicability."

An exception is made in cases of provisions dealing with matters of procedure which may properly be retrospective in effect, but even here an exception is made in cases where such construction would be textually inadmissible: Delhi Cloth & General Mills v. Income-tax Commissioner, A. I. R. (14) 1927 P. C. 242 : (9 Lah. 284). All these cases are based on the leading case of Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irwing, (1905) A. C. 369 : (74 L. J. P. C. 77). In that case the creation of the High Court of Australia by the Australian Commonwealth Judiciary Act of 1903 took away the right of appeal from the Supreme Court of Queensland to His Majesty in Council. The question that fell to be considered was whether such right of appeal in a pending action which the party had before the Act was passed, could be deemed to have been taken away by the new Judicature Act, in other words, whether a litigant could be deprived of a vested right of appeal by a new enactment which withdrew such right and whether the statute was to be construed so as to operate retrospectively. Lord Macnaughten laid down the two following propositions in this connection; (1) if it was a matter which was more than one relating to procedure, that is if it touched a right in existence at the passing of the Act, it could not be deemed to be retrospective in its effect according to a long line of decisions extending from Coke; and (2) to deprive a suitor in a pending action of a right of appeal to a superior Court which belonged to him, was a very different thing from one regulating procedure In Pannirselvam v. Veeriah Vandayar, 54 Mad. 627 : (A. I. R. (18) 1931 Mad. 83) the contention that Act XI [11] of 1930 amending the Madras Local Boards Act ousted the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge who had entertained an election petition before the Act had come into force, was negatived on the general ground that it was a fundamental rule of interpretation that a statute, other than one dealing with procedure, should not be construed so as to have retrospective effect. In Makar Ali v. Sarfaddia, A. I. R. (10) 1923 Cal. 85: (50 Cal. 115) the question was whether an auction-purchaser at a court sale held under the old Civil Procedure Code of 1882 who discovered after the sale that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest, could proceed only by an application under O. 21, R. 93, Civil P. C. of 1908 or could file either a suit or an application which were both available to him under the old Code. It was held that the auction-purchaser had, on the date of the sale which was held under the old Code, a vested right to secure a refund of the purchase money by a suit as well and the same could in no way be deemed to have been extinguished by the Code of 1908. It was pointed out in that case that if the new Code were held applicable the remedy under the old Code might be barred by limitation and in such a case the enactment could not be given a retrospective operation so as to impose an impossible condition on pain of forfeiture of a vested right. It was similarly held in Promotha Nath v. Mohini Mohan Pal, 47 Cal. 1108 : (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Cal. 435) that the old Code governed a suit for declaration of title against a purchaser at an execution sale which took place before 1.1.1909 after the new Civil Procedure Code came into force though the sale certificate was issued later. It was held in Ajit Singh v. Bhagabati Charan, A. I. R. (9) 1922 Cal. 491 : (70 I. C. 370) that if the application of the provisions of an amending Act makes it impossible to exercise a vested right of suit, the Act should be construed as not being applicable to such cases. In Punyabrata Das v. Monmohan Ray, A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 427 (153 I. C. 520), the Patna High Court refused to give retrospective effect to Bihar Act XXX [30] of 1923 which affected rights to property, as it was pointed out that the consequences of so holding would be disastrous. In Gursaran Das v. Parmeshwari Charan, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Pat. 203 : (6 Pat. 296), a suit for possession which was instituted after the amendment of Bengal Act VI [6] of 1908 in its application to Chhota-Nagpur had come into play, but where the cause of action arose before that amendment had come into operation was held to lie in a civil Court as the plaintiff had acquired a vested right in regard to the same, and the summary procedure as provided in the Amending Act was not the only remedy open to him. Section 26-C, Bihar Tenancy Act (VIII [8] of 1934) was held not to take away the right which had vested in a party under a decree passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction on the ground that a new law should be so construed as to interfere as little as possible with vested rights as, otherwise, a valid decree would automatically become invalid which consequence could not be supported on general principles of justice : Shiva Janaki v. Kirtanand, A. I. R. (23) 1936 Pat. 173: (160 I. C. 606). The right of treating a judgment as final and conclusive is a vested right, and the right to enforce it is equally a right conferred by law, as proceedings in execution are but a continuation of the suit. I have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that neither the Ordinance of 1916 nor the Act of 1947 had any retrospective effect on pending proceedings or on the decree that had been obtained by the respondent.

[25] Although by the Validating Act passed in July 1947 the Legislature regularised certain actions and proceedings taken in purported exercise of authority under the Act, it did not, in express terms, apply to pending proceedings. In my opinion, therefore, E. C. No. 247 of 1947 filed by the landlord decree-holder is not affected by the House Rent Control Act having been applied to Cuttack town retrospectively, by the Validating Act passed in July 1947. Section 13 of the Act says that no suit or proceeding shall be entertained unless the landlord has been permitted by the Controller by an order in writing to institute such a suit or proceeding. The language contemplates suits or proceedings that are to be filed in future and the section is prospective in its operation. It does not require a decree-holder who is proceeding with his execution, as in the present case, to withdraw his execution and obtain a certificate and again start execution afresh.

[26] The word 'proceeding' has not been defined in the Act, but it has received judicial interpretation. In Ratanchand v. Hanmantrav, 6 Bom. H. C. A. C. 166, Coutts C. J. and three other Judges of the Bombay High Court held that a suit is a judicial proceeding and that the word 'proceeding' should be taken to include all the proceedings in the suit, from the date of its institution to the date of its final disposal and would, therefore, include proceedings in appeal. In Deb Narain v. Narendra, 16 Cal. 267 (F.B.), Wilson J. delivering the judgment of the Court held that an appeal is a part of the same proceedings as the thing appealed against and that therefore if the thing appealed against is a decree in a suit, the appeal is a part of the same proceeding as the earlier steps in the suit. In Mungul Pershad v. Grija Kant Lahiri, 8 I. A. 123 : (8 Cal. 51 P. C.), their Lordships of the Privy Council held that "an application for the execution of a decree is an application in the suit in which the decree was obtained"; and execution proceedings are merely a continuation of the suit: 14 I. A. 37, Ram v. Roop,* Section 5, Orissa General Clauses Act says that "when any Orissa Act repeals any enactment hitherto made, or hereafter to be made, then unless a different intention appears the repeal shall not . . . . . (e) affect any investigation, legal proceeding or remedy in respect of such right, privilege, obligation, liability, penalty, forfeiture, or punishment, as aforesaid, and any such investigation, legal proceeding, or remedy may be instituted, continued, or enforced, and any such penalty, forfeiture or punishment may be imposed as if the repealing Act had not been passed."

This provision is made applicable to the interpretation of Ordinances as well by S. 32 of the Act. In Ismail v. Leslie, 24 Cal. 399: (1 C. W. N. 188), the plaintiff filed a suit in the High Court for the recovery of a sum of over Rs. 2000 which before the hearing was reduced to a sum of less than Rs. 2000 and therefore below the limit for suits cognizable by Small Cause Courts. Section 22 of Act XV [15] of 1882 deprived the plaintiff in a suit cognizable by a Small Cause Court of his costs, if he obtained a decree "for less than Rs. 2000" unless the Judge certified, it was a fit case to be tried in the High Court. The suit was decided after the passing of Act I [1] of 1895, viz., the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, which deprived the plaintiff of costs in cases in which he obtained a decree for less than Rs. 1000. The Judge allowed the plaintiff costs of the suit without certifying that the case was fit one to be brought to the High Court: It was held that the amending Act did not govern the case. Maclean C. J. observed that the new Act did not relate to procedure only and that it was retrospective. The Court adopted the dictum of Wilson J. in an earlier case which was as follows :

"The third class of cases consists of those in which the law is changed by a mere repeal of a previously existing law and the repealing enactment contains no special rule for its own interpretation. Such cases are governed by S. 6, General Clauses Act."

Trevelyan J. observed:

"The matter is, I think, concluded by S. 6, General Clauses Act, and the English Acts as to the effect of an alteration in the law of procedure upon pending proceedings have no application."

Even assuming that the word 'proceeding' occurring in S. 13, Orissa Rent Control Act, refers to an execution proceeding, it cannot affect pending execution proceedings.

[27] I arrive at the same conclusion by a reference to S. 20 (1) of the Act, which is a repealing and saving clause. It reads as follows:

"(1) The Orissa House Rent Control Ordinance, 1946 is hereby repealed.

(2) Any order made or deemed to be made and anything done or deemed to be done under the said Ordinance and in force immediately before the commencement of this Act, shall continue in force and be deemed to be made or done under the corresponding provisions of this Act."

The Ordinance of 1946 had a similar savings clause, in cl. 18 which says:

"Notwithstanding the expiry of the House Rent Control Order 1942, all orders passed and other things done in pursuance of the said order, shall be deemed to have been validly passed and done under the corresponding provisions of this Ordinance."

I have already pointed out that the Ordinance was not in force when the first execution case was filed and had expired when the second execution case was filed. Section 20 of the Act validates all actions taken under the Ordinance and S. 18 of the Ordinance in its turn validated all actions taken under the Order of 1942. The Act as well as the Ordinance lay dawn that anything done or deemed to be done and in force immediately before the commencement of the Ordinance or the Act, as the case may be shall continue in force and be deemed to be made or done under the corresponding provisions of the Act or the Ordinance. A proviso in a repealing statute "except as to acts done under it" will operate to preserve to parties all rights if the action is brought before the repealing statute passes. In Foster v. Pritchard, (1857) 26 L. J. Ex. 215 (5 W. R 610) an action for trespass had been brought against the bailiff of a county Court while 9 and 10 Victoria Chap. 95 was in operation. Section 139 of this Act enacted that no costs shall be awarded to the plaintiff unless the Judge so certified. This Act was repealed by 19 and 20 Victoria, Chap. 108 when the litigation was pending. Section 2 of the repealing Act runs: "The enactments specified are repealed except as to acts done under them". It was argued in that case that the words, "acts done under" meant "acts done in pursuance of the repealed statutes." Bramwell B., pointed out during arguments in that case that the expression may be read thus:

"except as to acts for which actions were brought while the repealed statute was in operation."

The words "done under" may mean "done while the statute was in operation." Martin B observed:

"A fair meaning of the provision is—except as to acts done 'under the protection of the former statutes'."

Pollock C. B., said:

"The object of such a proviso is to prevent the hardship which might arise if parties were left without protection for acts done under a statute which is afterwards repealed. The proviso is a common one being introduced into most repealing statutes and it is important to give it a liberal construction so as to carry out its object."

The rule of construction in such a case, therefore, is that if a right has been once acquired it will not be taken away again by the repeal of the statute under which it was acquired. The words of S. 20 are large enough to save vested rights both against the operation of repeal clause itself and also against the previous clauses of the Act. This was the construction put upon the repeal and saving clauses in Hough v. Windus, (1882) 12 Q. B. D. 224 at p. 236; (53 L. J. Q. B. 165), cited above.

[28] It was pointed out that there might be some difficulty in giving effect to the words 'corresponding provisions' as there was no provision in the Order of 1942 corresponding to S. 13 of the Act. The Legislature intended that the repealed Order should be harmonised with the repealing Ordinance and 'correspond' means 'suitable to' as laid down in Sackville West v. Holmesdale, (1870) 39 L. J. Ch. 505 at p. 520: (L. R. 4 H. L. 543). If, therefore, there was no provision corresponding to S. 13 in the Control Order of 1942, it would not apply. Nor would it render invalid what was valid under the repealed Order as the saving clause expressly says that it "shall continue in force and be deemed to be done under the Act" It is by a legal fiction that anything done under a prior statute is deemed to be done under a later statute; and it is by just another legal fiction that we have to hold that although a provision corresponding to S. 13 was not to be found in the earlier Order any action validly taken under the earlier Order should be deemed to have been validly done under the later one. It could not have been the intention of Legislature that immediately the Act come into force, all suits and proceedings which arose under the provisions of the earlier Order and which were pending should be withdrawn and the conditions laid down in S. 13 should be complied with. A saving clause —unlike exceptions from an enacting clause—is liberally construed; See Halsbury, Vol. 31, p. 485. The effect of the saving clause is that those provisions of the House Rent Control Order which did not deter the plaintiff from executing his decree remained in force as if the succeeding Ordinance and Act had not been passed.

[29] I have, therefore, arrived at the conclusion that the Orissa House Rent Control Act of 1947 does not in any way affect the plaintiff-decree-holder's right to execute his decree as that right was still being litigated, and that the law applicable at the time when the execution was filed is the House Rent Control Order of 1942.

Under that Order, the judgment-creditor had acquired the right to get delivery of his property and the duty was imposed on the Court to deliver it to him. That right and that duty are expressly saved.

[30] The second question posed at the beginning of this judgment is—what is the law applicable now to the appeal that is before us?

[31] Sub-section (4) of S. 1, Orissa House Rent Control Act, says:

"It shall remain in force for three years but the Provincial Government may from time to time by notification extend the continuance of this Act for a further period or periods not exceeding in the aggregate two years."

The period of three years fixed by the Act expired on 21-3-1950 and the Provincial Government issued a notification extending the life of the Act for one year. This notification is dated 21-2-1950. The case reported in Jatindranath v. Province of Bihar, 1949 F.L.J. 225 : (A.I.R. (36) 1949 F. C. 175: 50 Cr. L. J. 897) is clear authority for the position that the extension of an Act by notification is ultra vires and is of no effect. The position, therefore, is that there is no House Rent Control Act now in force in the State. We are bound to take notice of this fact and decide the appeal accordingly.

[32] It is well established that an appeal is a re-hearing. The adjudication of the rights of the parties is not yet final. Courts have, in numerous cases, recognised that in respect of any relief to be granted in a case on appeal, the Court of Appeal is entitled to take into account even facts and events which have come into existence after the decree appealed against. In K. C. Mukherji v. Mt. Ramrattan Kuer, 63 I. A. 47 : (A. I. R. (23) 1936 P. C. 49), Lord Thankerton in the course of arguments observed that the duty of a Court is to administer the law of the land at the date when the Court is administering it. In Lachmeshwar Prasad v. Keshwarlal, A. I. R. (23) 1941 F. C. 5 : (20 Pat. 429) it was held that the appellate Court is competent to take into account the legislative changes since the decision under appeal was given and its powers are not confined only to see whether the lower Court's decision was correct according to the law as it stood at the time when that decision was given. To the same effect are the cases reported in Shyamkanta v. Rambhajan, A.I.R. (26) 1939 F.C. 74 : (I.L.R. (1939) Kar. F.C. 165), where the following observation is made at p. 77 : "There is no doubt that a High Court possesses such power in dealing with appeals from Courts subordinate to it." See S. 107 and O. 41, R. 33, Civil P. C. I have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that whatever be the law applicable at the time the execution case was filed and irrespective of whether the decision of the Court below is correct or not, there is no restraint now on the decree-holder to evict his tenant. The appeal is, therefore, liable to be dismissed on this ground alone.

[33] As much discussion centred round the construction of Ss. 5 and 13 of the Act, I should like to place my views on these sections. It may be remembered that the House Rent Control Order, 1942 was applied only to a few municipal areas in the province. But the House Rent Control Act of 1947 was applied to a number of other Union Board areas in addition to the areas to which the House Rent Control Order had been applied. Section 13 applies only to such other areas as had been brought under the operation of the Act in March 1947. It, therefore, says that no suit or proceeding shall be entertained by a Court without a permission being granted by the Controller to institute such a suit. Section 5 is restricted to tenancies from month to month and says that a tenant shall not be liable to be ejected whether in execution of a decree or otherwise, except for non-payment of rent or breach of the conditions of the tenancy, and provides that the Controller may grant exemption from this provision in certain circumstances. This section opens with the words "Subject to the Provisions of this Act" and is, therefore, undoubtedly subject to the provisions of S. 13. It is clear that S. 5 is to be read as subordinate to S. 13. The effect of this would be that if a landlord obtains a decree in compliance with S. 13, S. 5 (a) will not apply and he can straightway proceed to execute his decree and obtain possession. The two sections are mutually exclusive. Otherwise there would be an apparent inconsistency between the two. It cannot be supposed that after the landlord has filed a suit with the permission of the Controller, under S. 13 and obtained a decree, the tenant shall not be liable to be evicted in execution of that decree unless a further permission is obtained from the Controller under S. 5. Conversely, if the landlord obtained an exemption order from the Controller under proviso 2 to sub-s. (b) of S. 5, he will be at liberty to execute his decree obtained subsequent to this exemption, though the requirements of S. 13 with regard to the institution of a suit or proceeding may not have been complied with. The words "whether in execution of a decree or otherwise" occurring in cl. (a) of S. 5 should, in my opinion, be restricted to those decrees which had been obtained in areas prior to the extension of the Act to those areas.

[34] The next question is whether both an exemption and a permission are required before a landlord can evict his tenant. When an exemption order is obtained under proviso 2 to cl. (b) of S. 5, the bar created by S. 5 (a) is removed and it would be unreasonable to hold that the landlord should again apply to the Controller for permission to sue. I can see no purpose in such a course. The object of the exemption is to enable the landlord to get back possession of his house howsoever he can, whether by a suit or otherwise. If the Controller does not grant him exemption under proviso 2 to cl. (b) of S. 5, he has to give him a certificate as required in S. 13, permitting him to file a suit and satisfy the Court that the house is reasonably and in good faith required for his own occupation, or that he has any other good and sufficient reason for ejecting his tenant, as laid down in proviso 2 to S. 5 (b). I am, therefore, inclined to read the two sections as mutually exclusive and as applicable to two different sets of circumstances. To hold that an exemption order, as well as a certificate to sue, would be required in the same case would be unreasonable, besides involving inconvenience to the landlord and waste of public time of the authorities concerned. The Legislature could not have intended such an unreasonable course.

[35] A literal reading of S. 13 would mean that every time a proceeding is instituted a permission from the Controller for the institution of such proceeding would be necessary. An order of dismissal of a suit for default, a petition for attachment before judgment, for discovery or inspection, would all be proceedings in the suit. Is it expected that the landlord should obtain a permission every time such proceeding is instituted? That would be a futile and absurd course. The Legislature does not intend to enact any provision or law which, in its application, would lead to an absurdity, nor does the law require a man to do that which is futile or fruitless. To get over this difficulty, it is suggested that the words "in which the ground specified in proviso 2 to cl. (b) of S. 5" occurring S. 13, should be read as governing only the words "no suit" and that the words "or proceeding" occurring after "no suit" may be read disjunctively. If the suit has been filed on the ground specified in proviso 2 to cl. (b) of S. 5 and a decree obtained, after complying with the requirement of permission laid down in S. 13, a further permission for execution of that decree would be superfluous. The Civil Procedure Code does not contemplate any grounds to be given in a petition for execution. Why then did the Legislature prescribe in S. 13, that a proceeding shall not be entertained by any Court without a permission from the Controller? I can think of two possible explanations. It may be that the words "on proceedings" have been used ex abundanti cautela so as to include every proceeding in the nature of a suit. It may also be, which I think is more likely, that in respect of decrees for eviction which had been obtained on grounds other than those specified in proviso 2 to cl. (b) of S. 5, the Legislature intended that the decree-holder should not be entitled to evict unless he satisfied the executing Court that the house is reasonably and in good faith required for his own occupation or that he has any other good and sufficient cause. In such a case, the Controller's permission would be required. It is open to the landlord to terminate his lease on any of the grounds mentioned in S. 111, T. P. Act, but these grounds would not be enough to justify the eviction of a tenant because S. 5 (a) is a bar and the decree-holder should obtain a permission in writing from the Controller and satisfy the Court that the conditions mentioned in proviso 2 to cl. (b) of S. 5, are also complied with. In my judgment, therefore, the expression "or proceeding" applies to a case where a suit has been decreed on grounds other than those mentioned in S. 5 (b), proviso 2 and such a suit could be filed in areas to which the rent control enactment did not apply. Executions filed after the extension of the Act to such areas will not be entertained unless the decree-holder obtains the permission in writing from the Controller and satisfies the Court that the grounds specified in proviso 2, cl. (b) of S. 5, are also present. I fail to understand how the principle of distributive construction can be applied in the present case. The maxim reddendo singula singulis applies where a sentence contains several antecedents and several consequents and they are to be read distributively each phrase being referred to its particular subject. If that principle were to be applied to the language of S. 13, it would read as follows:

"in which the ground specified in proviso 2 to cl. (b) of S. 5 has been taken as a ground for such eviction,"

"No suit .... by a landlord against a tenant .... in which the ground specified in the second proviso to cl. (b) of S. 5 has been taken as a ground for such eviction, shall be entertained by any Court, etc."

"No proceeding .... shall be entertained by any Court ...," which would be absurd.

[36] In my opinion, the clause beginning with the words

"In which the ground specified in the second proviso to cl. (b) of S. 5 has been taken as a ground for such eviction"

governs both suit and proceeding, and the application of S. 13 should be restricted only to those proceedings initiated in areas after the Act was subsequently extended to those areas, and not to those areas in which the order or Ordinance had already been applied before.

[37] The last argument that remains to be noticed is whether on the expiry of the Act any action can be taken under the provisions of the expired Act. The rule is that, after the expiration of a statute, in the absence of a provision to the contrary, no proceedings can be taken on it and proceedings already taken ipso facto determine. See Halsbury, vol. 31, p. 512. It is suggested, however, that the proceedings are kept alive by virtue of the provision in S. 21. Sub-section (b) of S. 21 says :

"The expiration of this Act shall not .....

(b) affect any liability incurred under this Act or any punishment incurred in respect of any contravention of this Act or any rule or order made thereunder."

It is said that the liability incurred in the present case is the liability of the execution petition to be dismissed and this liability is kept alive by S. 21 (b) The section says 'liability incurred under this Act or any punishment incurred in respect of any contravention of this Act." Liability is that condition of affairs which gives rise to an obligation to do particular thing to be enforced by action. It applies to a person who incurs an obligation which can be enforced by law. The question is: did the decree-holder in this case incur any such liability ? The word 'incur' means 'to become liable by act or operation of law'. In Waghela Rajsanji v. Shekh Masludin, 14 I. A. 89 : (11 Bom. 551 P. C.) the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council observed at p. 100 :

"'Incur' means 'to run into', but it is constantly used in the sense of 'meeting with,' 'of being exposed to,' 'of being liable to'."

A person incurs a liability under the Act to be punished if he contravenes any of its provisions, and the punishment follows the liability. If he incurs the liability to be prosecuted he may incur the punishment prescribed by the Act. I cannot persuade myself to agree with the contention that the words 'liability incurred' should be understood as referring to the petition having incurred the liability to be dismissed. That would be straining the expression from its ordinary meaning. If anybody incurred any liability it was the Court which entertained the execution without the Controller's permission. In my judgment, therefore, S. 21 does not save the expiration of the Act, and the only consequence is that the miscellaneous case started by the appellant under S. 47, Civil P. C., objecting to the maintainability of the execution on the ground that S. 13 of the Act was a bar, ipso facto terminated along with the Act.

[38] To put my views in a nut shell, the Act has expired, and with it the objection raised by the judgment-debtor also fails. With all deference to my learned brothers, who take the contrary view, I am bound to dissent. I am in favour of giving a construction which will harmonise all the sections which appear to be repugnant to each other, without doing violence to the language employed by the Legislature. In this case, but for the leniency shown by the decree-holder in granting time to the judgment-debtor to vacate the house, the writ of delivery which was first issued on 18-9-46 would have been executed. But the judgment-debtor took time again and again till 7-5-1947 when the execution petition was dismissed on part satisfaction. He represented to the Controller that he had no objection to vacate the house provided he was given time till 30-4-44 and he represented to the Court more than once that he would vacate the house. In these circumstances, to hold that the language of the Act justifies the Court in arriving at the conclusion that the execution petition is untenable for want of a permission from the Controller cannot be a true construction of the Act or the intention of the Legislature underlying it. I trust I have correctly interpreted the intention of the Legislature and if I am wrong in my interpretation, I have erred in the company of the great masters of Law.

[39] In the result the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

[40] Narasimham J.—Having given my anxious consideration to the differing judgments of my learned brothers, Das and Panigrahi JJ., I have come to the conclusion that the appeal must be allowed and E. C. No. 247 of 1947 dismissed with costs.

[41] All the three of us are agreed that the House Rent Control Act, 1947 expired on 21-3-1950 and that the notification of the Government of Orissa (No. 2280-Dev. dated 25-2-1950) extending the said Act for one year more is invalid in view of the recent decision of the Federal Court in Jatindra Nath v. Province of Bihar, 1949 F. L. J. 225 : (A. I. R. (36) 1949 F. C. 175 : 50 Cr. L. J. 897) to the effect that the extension of the life of an Act by a notification of the Executive Government would amount to exercise of delegated legislative power and as such invalid. Therefore it may be taken as well established that the House Rent Control Act, 1947 (hereinafter referred to as the Act) is no longer in force in the State of Orissa.

[42] The difference, however, between my learned brothers is mainly on the question as to whether this execution case (No. 247 of 1947) which was filed on 10-5-1947 when the Act was in force should be disposed of in this appeal on the basis of the law as it stood at the time of the filing of the execution case or else on the basis of the law as it stands now at the time of the hearing of the appeal. The Act was a purely temporary Act and the effect of the expiry of such an Act on pending proceedings is essentially a matter of construction: R. v. Wicks, (1946) 2 ALL E. R. 529. Section 21 expressly says that the expiration of the Act shall not affect any liability incurred under the Act. One view is that the word 'liability' occurring in S. 21 (b) means liability for punishment under the penal provisions of that Act (See S. 14). This construction not only narrows very much the meaning of the expression 'liability' but it overlooks the fact that cl. (b) of S. 21 also refers to punishment incurred in respect of any contravention of the Act. The 'liability incurred under the Act' and 'any punishment in respect of any contravention of the Act,' have both been expressly stated in that clause and consequently the 'liability' must necessarily be other than the penalty contemplated by the Act. I would agree with my learned brother Das J. that 'liability' would include the liability to have the execution case dismissed for want of proper permit as required by S. 13 and that liability would, therefore, continue by virtue of S. 21 alone notwithstanding the expiry of the Act.

[43] Out of respect for my learned brother Panigrahi J., I think it necessary to briefly give my reasons for my inability to agree with the other views expressed by him in his judgment. In Paras. 4 and 5 (Paras. 23 and 24 of this report) of the judgment he has pointed that an Act should not be so construed as to affect pending proceedings in the absence of any express provision to that effect and that consequently E. C. No. 247 of 1947 (out of which the present appeal arises) would not be in any way affected by any of the provisions of the Act. If I may say so with respect, the initial assumption that the said execution case was a 'pending proceeding' at the time of the commencement of the Act is incorrect. The Act was published in the Gazette on 21-3-1947. It was brought into force in the town of Cuttack by a notification dated 3-5-1947. Therefore after that day the Act validly came into force in the town of Cuttack. Execution Case No. 247 of 1947 was actually filed before the executing Court on 10-5-1947, seven days after coming into force of the Act. How can it be said that the said execution case was 'pending' on the date of the coming into force of the Act in Cuttack town? It is true that there was a previous execution case (No. 130 of 1946) filed on 30-4-1946; but that was ultimately dismissed for default on 7-5 1947. Execution Case No. 247 of 1947 is a separate case filed three days later and it was never contended even by the learned counsel for the respondent that the second execution case is a mere continuation of the first execution case. Such a contention cannot be seriously advanced because the first one was clearly dismissed for default on 7-5-1947 and limitation for filing a fresh execution case commenced from that date. If a second petition for execution of a decree after dismissal of the first execution petition is considered to be a mere continuation of the first petition cl. (5) of Art. 182, Limitation Act, would be meaningless.

[44] Presumably my learned brother Panigrahi J., considers that E. C. No. 247 of 1947 should also be held to be a 'pending proceeding' because the Legislature passed a Validating Act (Orissa Act XXI [21] of 1947) on 12-7-1947 more than two months after filing of that execution petition. But if the provisions of that Validating Act are carefully scrutinised it will be found that they deal with acts done from 21-3-1947 till 3-5-1947 and validated the same by giving retrospective effect to the aforesaid notification dated 3 5-1947 from 21-3-1947 itself. But as regards any action taken under the Act after 3-5-1947, no validation was necessary at all and Orissa Act XXI [21] of 1947 does not either expressly or by implication deal with those acts. Therefore, with great respect, I feel constrained to dissent from the view that E. C. No. 247 of 47 was a 'pending proceeding' when the Act was brought into force in Cuttack town on 3-5-1947.

[45] I entirely agree with my learned brother Panigrahi J's observations regarding the effect of a new Act on a 'pending proceeding'. But any discussion about it is beside the scope of the present case.

[46] The limited question for consideration is whether the Act would operate so as to deprive a decree-holder of a right which accrued to him prior to its commencement. It is true that ordinarily retrospective effect should not be given to an Act so as to affect vested rights which might have accrued to a decree-holder. But if there are express provisions in the Act which indicate that the Legislature deliberately interfered with decrees obtained prior to its commencement, the Court is bound to give such retrospective effect. The jurisdiction of the Orissa Legislature to legislate even in respect of decrees cannot be seriously questioned. The subject 'Civil Procedure' is an item in the Concurrent Legislative List (Item 4 of Part I of List III) and the Act was assented to by the Governor-General. Consequently sub-s. (2), S. 107, Government of India Act 1935 would apply and even if there is any repugnancy between any provision of the Act on the one hand and any provision of the Civil Procedure Code directing an executing Court to execute a decree without any modification or restriction the former would prevail.

[47] An examination of some of the provisions of the Act shows that the Legislature clearly intended that the Act should apply to decrees passed prior to its commencement. In cl. (a) of S. 5 are the words 'whether in execution of a decree or otherwise'. These words were not found in the original House Rent Control Order, 1942. They indicate unmistakably that notwithstanding any decree for ejectment passed prior to the coming into force of the Act such a decree cannot be executed except in accordance with the provisions of S. 5. Similarly in S. 13 both the words 'suit' and 'proceeding' have been used. I entirely agree with my learned brother Das J. that a proceeding must include an execution proceeding. As an execution proceeding must be preceded by a decree and as S. 13 expressly forbids such a proceeding to be entertained in the absence of permit by a Controller it follows that in S. 13 also the Legislature deliberately interfered with a decree prior to the commencement of the Act.

[48] Therefore though the Act cannot be said to apply to pending proceedings it must be held to apply to new execution cases filed after its commencement, and thereby affect decrees passed prior to its commencement.

[49] As regards the construction of Ss. 5 and 13 and the necessity of harmonising the two, I am in entire agreement with my learned brother Das J. Section 13 was newly inserted by the House Rent Control Ordinance, 1946 and it was not found in the original House Rent Control Order which remained in force from 1942 to 1946. Simultaneously with the insertion of S. 13 in the Ordinance a restriction was put on S. 5 by the opening words 'subject to the provisions of the Act'. There can be no doubt, therefore, that S. 5 is subject to S. 13, and an exemption obtained under proviso 2 to S. 5 cannot dispense with the necessity of obtaining a permit under S. 13. I am, therefore, unable to accept the view that the two sections should be read "as mutually exclusive and as applicable to two different sets of circumstances". When a new section (S. 13) was deliberately inserted in the Ordinance of 1946 and in the Act of 1947 though there was then in existence S. 5 requiring the obtaining of an exemption from a Controller and simultaneously with such insertion S. 5 was made 'subject to the other provisions of the Act' it will be against all well-established rules of statutory construction to say that Ss. 5 and 13 are two independent sections mutually exclusive. It may be that as a matter of policy the Legislature wanted such double check on the eviction of a tenant—a first check at the time of obtaining an exemption under S. 5 and a second check at the time of either instituting a suit for ejectment or filing an application for execution of an ejectment decree already obtained, under S. 13. However, unreasonable such double check may be it is not the function of the Court to question the wisdom of the Legislature.

[50] It has been pointed out that if S. 13 is literally considered it will lead to 'a fatal and absurd course,' inasmuch as every time a proceeding is instituted permission from the Controller for the institution of such a proceeding will be necessary. It is further said that an order of dismissal of a suit for default, a petition for attachment before judgment, for discovery or inspection, would all be proceedings in the suit. I am, however, unable to accept the view that the expression 'proceeding' in S. 13 should be so widely construed as to include every proceeding after the filing of the execution petition or the suit as the case may be. The word 'or' which connects the two words 'suit' and 'proceeding' is ordinarily disjunctive and it cannot be construed in a conjunctive sense unless there are compelling reasons for taking that view. As pointed out by Lord Atkin in Brown & Co. v. V. T. J. Harrison, (1927) 96 L. J. K. B. 1025 : (137 L. T. 549),

"it is generally disjunctive, but it may be plain from the collocation of the words that it is meant in a conjunctive sense, and certainly where the use of the word as a disjunctive leads to repugnance or absurdity it is quite plain within the ordinary principles of construction adopted by the Court to give the word a conjunctive use."

It will be reversing the process to give the expression 'or' a conjunctive meaning and then inferring an absurdity by such construction. If the normal rule of disjunctive construction of the word 'or' is adopted it seems plain that a permit under S. 13 is required only at one stage; that is to say either at the stage of the institution of the suit for eviction or at the stage of filing a petition for executing of a decree for eviction already obtained. This aspect of the case has been fully discussed in the judgment of my learned brother Das J. with whom I am in entire agreement. But as on this point he has given his views in a somewhat guarded manner I would emphasise that a reasonable construction of S. 13 by interpreting the word 'or' in a disjunctive sense would lead to no absurdity and would be in consonance with the true intention of the Legislature.

[51] In para. 14 (Para. 35 of this report) of the judgment of my learned brother Panigrahi J. occur the following passages:

"In my judgment, therefore, the expression 'or proceeding' applies to a case where a suit has been decreed on grounds other than those mentioned in S. 5 (b), second proviso, such a suit could be filed in areas to which the Rent Control enactment did not apply. But executions filed after the extension of the Act to such areas will not be entertained unless the decree-holder obtains the permission in writing from the Controller and satisfied the Court that the grounds specified in proviso 2, cl. (b) of S. 5 are also present."

* * * * *

"The application of S. 13 should be restricted only to those proceedings initiated in areas after the Act was subsequently extended to those areas, and not to those areas in which the Order or Ordinance had already been applied before."

[52] These passages clearly indicate that inspite of his strongly expressed views against construing S. 13 so as to interfere with vested rights already obtained under a decree and against construing the expression 'proceeding' as including an 'execution proceeding' my learned brother himself has been obliged to construe S. 13 as applying to some execution proceeding and as interfering with vested rights under some decrees. Thus, when it is conceded that S. 13 must apply to some execution proceedings and would also affect vested rights under a decree there seems to be no logical reason for restricting it to those areas where the Order and the Ordinance were not in force and the Act was brought into force for the first time. With great respect to my learned brother, I may say that there is no justification in the language of S. 13 or of S. 5 to support such a narrow construction. My learned brother would perhaps strain the language of the sections in view of the supposed unreasonableness and hardship. But with respect, I consider that the primary rule of construction is to gather the intention of the Legislature from the language used and give full effect to it irrespective of the supposed consequences.

[53] In other respects, I am in entire agreement with the judgment of my learned brother Das J. and therefore, think it unnecessary to discuss the other points raised in this appeal.

[54] By the Court. — In accordance with the majority view, the order of the Court is that the appeal is allowed and E. C. No. 247/47 is dismissed. In the circumstances, the appellant will have no costs at any stage of the proceedings, here or in the Courts below.

JAGANNADHADAS AND PANIGRAHI JJ.

Chairman, District Board, Puri and others —Defendants-Appellants v. C. H. Achaya — Plaintiff-Respondent.

A. F. A. D. No. 179 and 180 of 1948, D/-10-10 1950.

(a) Bihar and Orissa Local Self-Government Act (III [3] of 1885), Ss. 73 to 76 — Road — Nature of property of District Board in road—Road-side land, if held in any different manner—Highway.

The vesting of a road in a local authority vests no property beyond a special property in the surface of the road and such portion above and below the surface as may be necessarily incidental to the use of the surface as a road and for its proper upkeep and management. It does not vest the soil or the land in the local body or its owner so as to enable it to treat the soil as its private property and to put it to any use it likes. In respect of roads which are not vested in the District Board, but which are merely under the administration and control of the District Board, the nature of the property is obviously much more limited. [Para 4]

Road-side lands are prima facie part of the road and are vested in the local authority in the same way as the roads and subject to the same kind of use thereof and subject to the same rights and incidents as the road except in so far as any specific statutory provision provides to the contrary expressly or by necessary implication. [Para 7]

(b) Bihar and Orissa Local Self-Government Act (III [3] of 1885), S. 139 — By-laws framed under (Notfn. No. 3438-S. G.-(8)/34 dated 29-8-1944)—Right of access — Substantial interference—Leasing of road-side land by District Board — Bihar and Orissa Local Self-Government Act (III [3] of 1885), S. 138—Rules under—Rr. 94 and 97—Highway.

An abutting owner of a road, including therein the road-side lands which form part of the road, has the undoubted right of access to the road from all points of his property but the right cannot be construed as entitling him to insist upon leaving the road absolutely free from any other kind of use than for mere passing and repassing of the members of the public. If such a use is otherwise reasonable and is within the scope of the purposes of the Local Self Government Act, an abutting owner has an actionable right (unless such right is taken away by the Statute) only when his right of access has been substantially interfered with and whether that is so or not is a question of fact to be determined having regard to all the circumstances of the case. On a question whether any particular use of the road-side land amounts to a substantial interference with the right of access of an abutting private owner, the fact that it is a road-side land and not the regular road carrying the traffic may conceivably make a difference on a consideration of the question as one of fact, and on the question whether there has been any unreasonable conduct on the part of the local authority and whether, in any case, the abutting owner is entitled to an injunction for the removal of the interference or obstruction. [Para 8]

Held on facts of the case that the leasing of a portion of a road-side land by the District Board and the actual use to which the lessees put it and were contemplating to put it amounted to substantial interference with the plaintiff's right of access from his adjoining land to the land leased and to the road. [Para 11]

(c) Bihar and Orissa Local Self-Government Act (III [3] of 1885), S. 139 — By-laws framed under (Notfn. No. 3438-S. G. (8)/34 dated 29-8-1944)—By-laws are not ultra vires. [Para 10]

S. N. Sengupta and S. Misra—for Appellants; H. Sen—for Respondent.

Das J.—The defendants are the appellants in these two second appeals. They arise out of two suits O. S. 11/46 and O. S. 32/46 on the file of the District Munsif of Puri tried analogously (simultaneously?). The plaintiff and the defendants are the same in both the suits and they relate substantially to the same matter. There was a common judgment in both the suits and the appeals therefrom to the lower appellate Court were also heard analogously (simultaneously?) and dealt with by a common judgment. The suits had been decreed by the trial Court and the said decrees were confirmed in appeal. Defendant 1 in both the suits who is appellant in these appeals is the Chairman, District Board of Puri. Defendants 2 and 3 in both the suits who are appellants 2 and 3 before us are lessees from the District Board of a portion of plot No. 736 in Mouza Kudiarai. Defendant 2 is a minor represented by his mother and guardian, defendant 3. That plot is a road side land abutting on the District Board road running from Pipli to Khurda. The plaintiff (respondent in both the appeals) is the present owner as has been found by the Courts below—of plot No. 737. He has started constructing a house on his plot which he was entitled to do. His case is that defendants 2 and 3 have some time ago put up another structure on the portion of plot No. 736 leased to them and that this interferes with his right of access from all points of his plot to all points of the Khurda Pipli road through every part of the road side plot No. 737. He accordingly brought the suits for a declaration, (1) that the action of defendant 1 in leasing out the road-side land to defendants 2 and 3 is without jurisdiction and ultra vires; (2) that the lease is void; (3) that the plaintiff has got right of access and view to the District Board road to every part of the road side which abuts his land; (4) for the requisite mandatory and permanent injunctions against defendants 2 and 3 in respect of the structure already put up and contemplated to be put up. It may be mentioned that O. S. 11/46 related only to the fresh structure intended to be put up by defendants 2 and 3 and that O. S. 32/46, which was filed later, relates to the pre-existing structure already put up by defendants 2 and 3. Both the suits, however, raise the same questions. The defence of the defendants in both the suits are, (1) that the plaintiff has no such right as claimed of access to the road from all points of the road-side land; (2) that the District Board had the right to lease out the road-side land and the said leasing is not ultra vires; and (3) that as a fact the plaintiff and his predecessors were all along having access to the road from plot No. 737 only through a portion of plot No. 736 and that in any case the right of access has not been substantially interfered with. The Courts below have concurrently held that the plaintiff is entitled to the same right of access in respect of road-side lands as to the road and to right of access to the road through road-side land and that the leasing by defendant 1 of plot No. 736 to defendants 2 and 3 is invalid and that certain by-laws framed by the District Board with the sanction of the Government authorising such leases are ultra vires, inasmuch as the leasing and the by-laws are in derogation to the right of access of the abutting owners. Hence these two second appeals by defendant 3 which have been heard analogously (simultaneously.?)

[2] The main contention of learned counsel for the appellants is that road-side lands are not part of the road and that the plaintiff whose plot does not abut the road has not got any such private right of access either to the road or to the road-side land which he claims and that in any case the leasing of the road-side land was authorised by by-laws which have a statutory force and that the view taken by the Courts below that the said by-laws are ultra vires and that the leasing by the District Board in pursuance thereof is invalid is erroneous.

[3] The questions, therefore, that arise in the case are (1) whether road-side lands form part of the road for purposes of the Local Self Government Act and are subject to the same rights and incidents as regards members of public and abutting private owners and if so, whether the road-side lands can be put to any use in derogation of such rights. It may be mentioned at the outset that there is no allegation of plaintiff in this case that the particular road-side land in question is owned and possessed by the District Board as ordinary private property distinct from the road. For instance, if the road-side land in question had been purchased by the District Board from private owners, or acquired for the District Board at its cost by the Government or obtained in some other way as ordinary private property, which it might well do under S. 29, Bihar and Orissa Local Self-Government Act, the considerations and legal implications applicable to roads as such may not be applicable to the road-side. But the plaint and the written statement do not give any indication that the road-side land in the present case is owned as such private land or indeed in a manner different from the road. D. W. I. says: "The road and the road-side land belong to the District Board" giving no indication that they are owned in different ways and implying in fact the contrary. The word "road" is not defined in the Act, nor is there any reference therein to "road-side lands". In order, therefore, to determine whether there is any difference between "road" and "road-side land" as regards the rights and incidents to which they are subject to, it is necessary to consider what the nature of the property of the District Board in a road is and whether a road-side land is held in any different manner.

[4] It is well settled that so far as a road is concerned, the District Board is not in any sense the owner of the soil of the road to enable it to treat it as its own private property and to put it to any use it likes. The ownership of the road by the District Board arises under Ss. 73, 74, 75 and 76, Bihar and Orissa Local Self-Government Act. Under Ss. 75 and 76, Local Self Government Act, roads constructed by the District Board from the District Board Funds or roads belonging to private parties and transferred to District Board are vested in the District Board. Under Ss. 73 and 74, roads vested in the Government or roads previously under the control and administration of the District Road Committee or Branch Committee may be placed under the control and administration of the District Board. Both in English as well as in Indian law, which, in this respect follows the English law, it is now settled by a series of decisions of the highest authority that the vesting of a road in a local authority vests no property beyond a special property in the surface of the road and such portion above and below the surface as may be necessarily incidental to the use of the surface as a road and for its proper upkeep and management. It has been held that it does not vest the soil or the land in the local body as its owner. (See Sydney Municipal Council v. Young, 1898 A. C. 457 at p. 459: (67 L. J. P. C. 40) and Man Singh v. Arjunlal, A. I. R. (24) 1937 P. C. 299 : (I.L.R. (1937) ALL 901)) In respect of roads which are not vested in the District Board, but which are merely under the administration and control of the District Board, the nature of the property is obviously much more limited.

[5] This leads us to a consideration as to what, in a road-side land, (not being the private property of the District Board) is the nature of the property of the District Board and whether it is in any way higher than that in the roads. There are no specific provisions in the Act indicating an answer to this in terms. The only provisions, if at all they may be applicable, are Ss. 73 and 74; but that would be so, only if road-side lands are part of the road. On this question, a consideration of some of the English cases is instructive. The English law shows that prima facie the lands on either side of the road, which are not the private property of the abutting owners, are held by the local authority as part of the road itself. The question has arisen with reference to the determination of what are the limits of a road and whether the road is confined to the portion actually and normally used as highway for the passing and repassing of the public, or extends also to the waste lands on either side. In King v. Wright, (1832) 110 E. R. 248 : (3 B. & AD. 681), it was laid down that:

"When a road runs through a space of fifty or sixty feet between enclosures set out by an Act of Parliament, it is public though it may not all be used or kept in repair as a road. (See headnote)."

In Elwood v. Bullock (1844) 115 E. R. 147 at p. 156: (6 Q. B. 383) it is stated that:

"Where a highway passes through an inclosed country it is not the formed road merely, but the whole space from fence to fence is the highway. The extent of a highway where it passes over a common, is frequently still more indefinite to the right and left of what may be the ordinary passage."

In Turner v. Ringwood Highway Board, (1879) 9 E. Q. 418 at p. 422: (21 L. T. 745), it is stated as follows:

"The right of the public is to have the whole width of the road, preserved free from obstructions and is not confined to that part which was used as the via trita."

In Harvey v. Truro Rural Council, (1903) 2 Ch. 638 at p. 643: (72 L. J. Ch. 705), dealing with the question of the right of the public over the road-side waste, it was laid down as follows:

"In the case of an ordinary highway running between fences, although it may be of varying and unequal width, the right of passage or way prima facie, and unless there be evidence to the contrary, extends to the whole space between the fences and the public are entitled to the entire of it as the highway, and are not confined to the part which may be metalled or kept in order for the more convenient use of carriages and foot-passengers."

This position is also affirmed in Office v. Rochford Rural Council, (1906) 1 Ch. 342: (75 L. J. Ch. 348) and Rowley v. Tottanham Urban District Council, (1914) A. C. 95: (83 L. J. Ch. 411). Thus, it appears to be well settled in English law that prima facie and in the absence of any specific evidence to the contrary, road-side waste land is part of the road and is vested in the local authority in the same way. The limit of the road, as so extended by the abutting waste, is the entire width between the fences or the enclosures, which in terms of the corresponding conditions in this country, may be taken to mean the boundaries of the next adjoining private land or property on either side. So far as it has been brought to my notice, there is no specific case in the Indian Courts deciding what exactly are the limits of a road, apart from any statutory definition of that word in certain enactments. But the position as above indicated from the English law is assumed in Nihal Chand v. Azmat Ali Khan, 7 ALL. 362: (1885 A. W. N. 56), Municipal Board, Agra v. Sudarshan Das, A. I. R. (1) 1914 ALL. 341: (37 ALL. 9), District Board of Manbhum v. B. N. Rly. Co., A. I. R. (32) 1945 Pat. 200; (23 Pat. 931) and in Peacock on

"Law of Easements" 3rd Edn. p. 240. Since the Indian law follows the English law in respect of roads, it is reasonable to hope that "road" even in Indian law is not confined to that portion of it which is the frequented solum of the highway, used for passing and repassing of the public, but includes also the wastes lands on either side of the road belonging to the local authority, (otherwise than as absolute private property), and extending to the boundary limits of the properties of private owners on either side. This is the view that has been adopted for the definition of the word "road" in the Bihar and Orissa Municipal Act of 1922, and in other Municipal Acts of various provinces and also in some Local Self-Government Acts of other provinces. (See Madras Local Boards Act).

[6] That the property in a road-side land follows the property in the road and is therefore of the same nature, also appears from the English cases. The question in English Courts has arisen in a form rather different from what we are concerned with in the present case, but the principle thereof is instructive and strengthens the above conclusion. It is well-settled in English law that, subject to the limited kind of property in the local authority in respect of the road connoted by the word 'vesting', the soil of the road usque ad medium filum viae is in the abutting owners on the two sides. With reference to this principle, the question has arisen as to who is the owner of any adjoining waste land in between the formed road and the boundary of the adjoining owner, that is to say, whether the soil belongs to the Lord of the Manor in which the road and the adjoining waste land are situated or to the private owner of the abutting property. It has been held that since the soil in the road up to the middle belongs to the abutting owners and to the Lord of the Manor, the intermediate waste land also belongs to the same private owner. This has been laid down in Doe v. Pearsey, (1827) 108 E. R. 737: (7 B. &. C. 304) as follows: (See head-note)

"The presumption is that waste land which adjoins the road, belongs to the owner of the adjoining enclosed land, whether he be a free-holder, or lease-holder or copy-holder, and not to the Lord of the Manor."

Similarly it has been held in Steel v. Prickett, (1819) 171 E. R. 706: (2 Stark 463), that the presumption is that the waste lands which adjoin road belong to the owner of the adjoining freehold and not to the Lord of the Manor. These propositions must be understood in the sense, not that the surface belongs to them, but only the sub-soil. This position, which is well-established, in English law, therefore, implies clearly that the surface, both in respect of the road and the road-side waste, is vested in the Local authority in exactly the same manner. This is another reason for saying that the road-side land forms part of the road. It is unnecessary to discuss here, for the purpose of the present case, whether in Indian law as in English law, the soil of the road or the road-side land belongs to the abutting owners usque ad medium filum viae. The position may conceivably be different in view of the fact that lands abutting roads are generally held only by tenants or ryots under the Government or a proprietor and it may well be that the sub-soil of the roads and road-side lands may be vested either in the Government or the proprietor and not in the abutting tenant. See Nihalchand v. Azmat Ali Khan, 7 ALL. 362: (1885 A.W N. 56); 30 Cal. 17(?); 26 Cal. 732 (?) Sundaram Aiyar v. Municipal Council, Madura, 25 Mad. 625 at p. 648: (12 M. L. J. 37) and Munisami Chetty v. Rajah of Karvetnagar, 30 Mad. 193 at p. 199: which all assume that the soil is vested either in the Government or in the Zamindar, though the question of the right of the tenant has not been in terms raised.

[7] The above considerations establish that road-side lands are prima facie part of the road and are vested in the local authority in the same way as the roads and subject to the same kind of use thereof and subject to the same rights and incidents as the road, except in so far as any specific statutory provision provides to the contrary expressly or by necessary implication. The only statutory provisions having a bearing that have been brought to my notice are the statutory rules, relating to the power of the local authority to transfer property belonging to it, framed by Government under S. 138, Bihar and Orissa Local Self-Government Act. (See Bihar and Orissa Local Self-Government Reference Book, by Rohini Kumar Roy Chowdhury, 2nd Edn., p. 242). These rules have statutory force by virtue of the express terms of S. 138. Rules 91 to 97 have a bearing on the matter. Rule 91 shows that for the purpose of transfer of property the property is divided into two categories, namely, (1) that which is vested in the Board, and (2) that which is under the control and administration of the Board. Amongst other matters, the Board is given the power to lease both kinds of properties subject to certain conditions. Rules 94 and 97 show that in respect of the latter category of properties, the lease is normally not beyond one year, while in respect of the former for a term not exceeding five years. But it is obvious that the lease-making power is intended to be exercised in a manner which will not in any way hamper the primary purpose for which the property in question is intended under the Act. The word "property" in the rules may be wide enough to include roads and road-side lands, see Patna City Municipality v. Dwarka Prasad, A I.R. (26) 1939 Pat. 683 at p. 685, Col. 1: (18 Pat. 735), as regards the similar word "land" in S. 62 of the Municipal Act. These rules, however, in their application to roads or road-side must be so construed as not to substantially interfere with the rights, either of the public or of private abutting owners, with reference to roads or road-side lands which, on the above view, form part of the road. It has also to be mentioned that defendant 1, the District Board of Puri, has framed certain by-laws relating to these matters with the sanction of the Local Government under the powers vested in the Board by virtue of S. 139, Local Self-Government Act, and such by-laws have also statutory force. These by-laws which have been published at p. 224, Part III of the Orissa Gazette, dated 8-9 1944, under Notfn. No. 3438 S. G. (8)/34, dated 29-8-1944, in specific terms, authorise the leasing of road-side lands. It is obvious that these by-laws also if they are to be valid, must be such as not to interfere substantially with the rights of the public or of the abutting private owners in respect of the road or road-side lands. This leads us to a consideration of what such rights are.

[S] A road is a highway for the passing of all the members of the public. The public have a right of passing and repassing therein and can exercise that right in a reasonable way without transgressing the usual mode in which such right is normally exercised, (See Smith's Leading Cases, Vol. II, 13th Edn., p. 166). A road is also meant to provide access to and from the tenements which abut on it on either side. For the purposes of this case, it is this latter right that has to be considered. That right has been generally laid down in the following terms:

"An owner of lands adjoining a highway is entitled to access to the highway at all points where his land adjoins the highway, whether or not the soil of the highway be his.' (See Smith's Leading Cases, Vol. II, 13th Edn. 172.)

This right of immediate access from private property to a public highway is a private right distinct from the right of the owner of that property to use the highway as one of the public, as has been pointed out in William Lyon v. The Wardens & Co., of the Fish Monger's Co., etc. (1875-76) A. C., p. 662 (?), a case relating to the rights of an owner of a wharf on the bank of a navigable river which in this respect are the same as those of an owner of land abutting a public highway. Such a right of access belongs to the proprietor of the adjoining land as a natural incident to the right to the soil itself of such adjoining lands and he is entitled to the benefit of it as he is to all the other natural advantages belonging to the land of which he is the owner. (See p. 74 of the report of the above-mentioned case). In Marshall v. Blackpool Corporation, 1935 A. C. 16 at p. 22 (103 L. J. K. B. 566), the House of Lords has explained that right in the following terms:

"The owner of land adjoining a highway has a right of access to the highway from any part of his premises. This is so whether he or his predecessors originally dedicated the highway or part of it and whether he is entitled to the whole or some interest in the ground subjacent to the highway or not. The rights of the public to pass along the highway are subject to this right of access just as the right of access is subject to the rights of the public and must be exercised subject to the general obligations as to nuisance and the like imposed upon a person using the highway. Apart from any statutory provision, there is no obligation upon an adjoining owner to fence his property from the highway."

This right of access has also been recognised in the Indian law as appears from the following decisions: Dwarka Prasad v. Patna City Municipality, A. I. R. (25) 1938 Pat 423: (177 I. C. 315), Municipal Committee Delhi v. Mahomed Ibrahim, A. I. R. (22) 1935 Lah. 196: (16 Lah. 517) and Patna City Municipality v. Dwarka Prasad, A. I. R. (26) 1939 Pat. 683: (18 Pat. 735) this has been referred to as a right of road frontage and it has been said that

"the right of road frontage no less than right of access, is implicit in the position of the land."

It is unnecessary to discuss for the purpose of this case whether the right of frontage is or is not wider than the right of access and whether such right also arises with reference to the position of the land. There can, however, be no doubt that the owner of the abutting land has an actionable right if his right of access to the frontage is infringed. But as has been laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bell v. Quebec Corporation, (1879) 5 A. C. 84 at p. 100: (49 L. J. P. C. 1.)

"whether an obstruction amounts to an interference with the access to frontage would be a question of fact to be determined by the circumstances of each particular case."

It is also well settled that while the abutting owner has the right of access it is not in the case of every interference with such a right that is actionable or that he is entitled to obtain a remedy by way of injunction. In Sellors v. Local Board of Health for Matlock Bath, (1885) 14 Q. B. 928 at p. 934: (52 L. T. 762) the plaintiff who was an abutting owner, claimed injunction in respect of two matters (1) the erection and continuance of a public urinal adjacent to his property and alleged to be a nuisance; (2) the placing and continuing of kerb stones in front of plaintiff's property so as to prevent her access by carriages to that property. An injunction was granted in respect of the first, but was refused with reference to the second with the following observations:

"As to the rest of the plaintiff's claim, I think it is much less substantial. Besides the triangular piece of land, she has some land and buildings abutting upon the same high road consisting of an inn and some stables. These stand back from the road and in front of them is a space which has been left open to, and on a level with, the road until recently, when the defendants made a foot-path on the road outside the plaintiff's land with raised kerb stones, but left openings so that carriages can still go in from, and out into, the road, but not at every part of the boundary as heretofore. The plaintiff contended that this was interference with her right to have access for all purposes to every portion of the highway adjoining her property.

** ** **

I think it cannot be contended that wherever any person has land adjoining the road which has remained undistinguished from the road, ... he can as a matter of course restrain the local authorities from making raised foot-path for the accommodation of the public on a part of the road, which is vested in them merely because by so doing they may render it impossible, for the time, for the owner of the land to draw up a carriage close to the exact boundary of his land or to enter his land, at every inch of the boundary. ** ** **

I am of opinion that this is a case in which the land owner's remedy at all events in the absence of any unreasonable conduct on the part of the local authority is, to claim compensation."

In 1901 A. C. 329(?) the owner of an abutting premises, brought an action for injunction to restrain a local authority from putting certain lamp-posts in the road near their premises on the ground that it interfered with and obstructed the business, they were carrying on these premises. The Court in dismissing the action said :

"The plaintiffs set up a right to have a particular portion of the highway so kept that they shall be in a position to exercise an alleged right of using it to the maximum of their own convenience. It does not seem to (me ?, that they have any such right."

It would therefore seem to follow from these cases that an abutting owner of a road, including therein the road-side lands which form part of the road, has the undoubted right of access to the road from all points of his property but the right cannot be construed as entitling him to insist upon leaving the road absolutely free from any other kind of use than for mere passing and repassing of the members of the public. If such a use is otherwise reasonable and is within the scope of the purposes of the Local Self-Government Act, an abutting owner has an actionable right (unless such right is taken away by the Statute) only when his right of access has been substantially interfered with and whether that is so or not is a question of fact to be determined having regard to all the circumstances of the case. It appears to me also that on a question whether any particular use of the road-side land amounts to a substantial interference with the right of access of an abutting private owner, the fact that it is a road-side land and not the regular road carrying the traffic may conceivably make a difference on a consideration of the question as one of fact, and on the question whether there has been any unreasonable conduct on the part of the local authority and whether, in any case, the abutting owner is entitled to an injunction for the removal of the interference or obstruction.

[9] It is in the light of these principles, that the claim of the plaintiff in the present case has to be considered, and that the legality of the action of the defendants as well as of the validity of the by-laws under which they purport to have acted has to be judged.

[10] Both the Courts below have come to a conclusion that the by-laws above referred to are ultra vires and invalid. Their reason for saying so is that the by laws authorise leasing which is an interference with the right of access. As has already been noticed, these by-laws were framed by virtue of the powers vested in the District Board under S. 139, Bihar and Orissa Local Self-Government Act, with the sanction of the Local Government. The by-laws only purport to regulate the conditions on which leases of land vested in or under the control and administration of the District Board, are to be granted. The power of leasing itself as already pointed out is derived from the statutory Rr. 94 and 97 made by the Government under S. 138 of the Act. The by-laws define the phrase "road-side lands" as including "all lands attached to a road as vested in or under the control and administration of the District Board". A by-law framed under statutory power has, by the very terms of that power in S. 179, the force of law. But such by-laws, must be consistent with, and be framed for the purposes of the Act and can be pronounced to be ultra vires only if they transgress these limits or if they unreasonably interfere with the recognised rights of the members of the public or private owners which the Statute itself does not take away expressly or by necessary implication. In a consideration as to the validity of such by-laws, it is well to remember the principle laid down in Kruse v. Johnson, (1898) 2 Q. B. 91 : (67 L. J. Q. B. 782) that where the power to make by-laws is vested in public representative bodies "they ought to be supported if possible and benevolently interpreted." (See p. 99 of the report). The lease authorised under the rules and by-laws referred to above, cannot be said to be necessarily inconsistent with the rights of private persons as above indicated. Rules 94 and 97, Statutory Government Rules, authorise only leasing for short periods. The by-laws relating to leasing in specific terms provide, that the lease shall not be for more than a year, that no permission for erection of permanent structures will be granted under the leases, and that if the land be required for the use of the District Board before the expiry of the term on the lease, the lessee should, on one month's notice, surrender the land without any claim for compensation. These clearly show that the leasing contemplated is only for very temporary and short-living non-permanent purposes. The rules and by-laws themselves are of general application to all lands to be vested in the District Board and cannot be declared to be ultra vires merely because in their application to roads or road-side lands any particular lease granted thereunder might affect the rights of a private individual. All that can be said is that in their application to road-side lands the actual leasing under the by-laws must be subject to the limitations arising from the nature and use of the property leased. Any lease which constitutes a substantial interference with such rights is invalid and will constitute an actionable wrong. This would imply that the leasing power under the rules and the by-laws cannot be used for putting up any permanent or substantial structures, nor for putting the land to any use which would have the effect of materially altering the nature of the land as one intended for use as a road, or substantially affecting the natural advantages of access and frontage which the abutting owner has got. But I am not prepared to agree with the view expressed in the judgments of the Courts below that the by-laws in themselves are ultra vires. What has to be considered is whether the actual use that the property, is put to or is likely to be put to by virtue of a lease granted in exercise of the power under the by-laws is an infringement of the private or public rights. The facts of the present case now remain to be considered. The plaintiff's land is plot No. 737 in Khata No. 726 and the disputed road-side land is plot No. 736 in Khata No. 1129, both in Mouza Kudiari. The road-side plot No. 736 abuts the Pipli-Khurda road which runs at this place from east to west. Plot No. 736 abuts just to the north of it and plot No. 737 abuts plot No. 736 to its north. It is in the evidence of the District Board clerk, D. W. 1, that both the plots Nos. 736 and 737, are 130 feet in length running side by side. A sketch indicating the positions of the road and the two plots have been filed as part of the plaint, and its correctness has not been disputed. The sketch shows that plots Nos. 736 and 737 virtually form a rectangle abutting north of the road, the southern portion of which is plot No. 736 and the northern portion is plot No. 737. It is in the evidence of D. W. 1, that plot No. 736 has a width of 25 feet. As appears from the sketch plot No. 737 has a much larger width, but the exact measurement is not in evidence. It further appears from the evidence of D. W. 1 that what has been leased out to defendants 2 and 3 is the eastern portion of plot No. 736 covering a length of 60 feet, from the extreme extremity of that plot and that the western portion of the plot of the length of 70 feet is not the subject-matter of any lease and is vacant. The defendant appears to have held under two leases. The first is the lease deed, Ex. B, dated 24-6-42, for a period of five years and covering an extent of two decimals out of plot No. 736. The second is stated to be of the date 8-1-46 as appears from the allegations in the plaint. The lease itself is not in evidence and has not been filed by the defendant. The lease Ex. B has already expired and there is no clear evidence whether the defendants 2 and 3 hold under a renewal thereof. The fact, however, that defendants 2 and 3 continue to hold the disputed portion of plot No. 737 from the District Board as its lessees, is the common case of defendants 2 and 3 as well as of the District Board. It must, therefore, be taken that they are lessees under the District Board of the eastern portion of plot No. 736, 60 feet × 25 feet under a lease whose duration and terms are not in evidence. The admitted case is that on the portion of plot No. 736 covered by Ex. B, defendant 3 had constructed a house during the currency of that lease and sometime prior to the institution of the suits. That house is admittedly still standing on the plot. In the rest of the plot under the occupation of defendant 3 as the lessee, she recently dug foundations for the construction of a building according to the allegations of the plaintiff. Defendant 3, however, denies this. In view of the principles of law indicated above, the question for consideration is whether the leasing of the portion of plot No. 736 by defendant 1 to defendants 2 and 3 and the actual use to which defendants 2 and 3 have put it and are contemplating to put it, is an actionable infringement of the plaintiff's right of access from his plot No. 737 to plot No. 736 and to the road.

[11] So far as the lease is concerned since, as above stated, there is no evidence of the duration of the terms of the lease under which defendants are at present in occupation, it is not possible to say whether the lease itself is invalid or not and no declaration to that effect can be given. As regards the actual use to which the defendants have put the lands or are proposing to put it, the Courts below have not given any definite finding on the matter.

[After considering the evidence his Lordship continued.] It is clear, therefore, on the evidence, that the existing structure as well as the contemplated structure on plot No. 736 must be taken to interfere with the right of access of the plaintff and that the whole of plot No. 736 would remain water-logged at least for some time on account of these constructions. This undoubtedly amounts to substantial interference with the plaintiff's right of access.

[12] In the trial Court, the plaintiff asserted that there was previously a house on his plot No. 737, which he had demolished for constructing a new house and that he was accustomed to use whole of plot No. 736 for access to and from that house. The defendants denied it and gave evidence that plot No. 737 was only a paddy field with a temporary hut thereon, for some time, for watching of crops. It was also the case of the defendants that there was a thorny fence all along between plots Nos. 737 and 736 and that the owner of plot No. 737 used to pass by a Tati gate on the southern side, at the south-western corner of plot No. 737, and also that they were passing through the western plot No. 736 which is just to the south of the Tati gate, in coming from and going to the District Board road. The trial Court has accepted the case of the defendants on this part of the case. It is accordingly urged that, in view of the fact that even at present as much as 70 feet length of plot No. 736 is still available to the plaintiff for passing on to the District Board road, the plaintiff can have no grievance and therefore has no actionable right. This contention cannot be accepted. The right of access does not depend upon, whether there has been previously on plot No. 737 any a structure at all. The plaintiff is entitled to the beneficial enjoyment of his plot in any manner he pleases and to access therefrom. Neither the fact that there may have been a fence between the two plots Nos. 736 an 737, nor the fact that the previous owner of plot No. 737 was actually using only a restricted portion of plot No. 736 for his access, can take away the plaintiff's right of access in its full measure in Dwarka Prasad v. Patna City Municipality, A. I. R. (25) 1938 Pat. 423 : (177 I.C. 815) the fact of the existence of a compound wall was held insufficient to restrict the right of access. The only question in such a case is whether the right of access has been substantially interfered with. Though no doubt in the present case, as much as half of plot No. 736 is open, still in view of the evidence, that even that portion would at least for some time in the year get water-logged on account of the defendant's construction, and that the structures actually put up, or to be put up, would completely block access to plaintiff's house property to be constructed, and in view of the claim of the defendants by way of having a fence in between the two plots, it is quite clear that there has been a substantial interference with the plaintiff's right of access. The plaintiff is accordingly entitled to a mandatory injunction as regards the existing structure and a permanent injunction restraining defendants 2 and 3 from putting up a substantial building on the plot in his occupation as a lessee of the Board.

[13] The Court below have in addition to these two above injunctions, also granted declarations that the action of defendant 1, the District Board, in leasing out to defendants 2 and 3 is invalid and that the plaintiff has got the right of access to the Khurda Pipli road through plot No. 736 from every point of his plot No. 737 and that the defendants are restrained from interfering with that right of the plaintiff. It appears to me that in the circumstances of this case no declaration regarding the lease which is not in evidence before the Court can be given, nor can it be generally declared that the District Board has no right to lease the land for any purposes. It is also unnecessary to make any declaration about the right of access to the road in the terms in which the Courts below have done since it is too vague to be enforceable. The plaintiff can always vindicate his right of access, if he proves at any time that the same has been substantially interfered with and infringed and no declaration is required for that purpose. It is also unnecessary to say whether the defendants as lessees can use the land under their occupation in any way other than by putting up a substantial structure thereon so as not to interfere with the right of access of the plaintiff.

[14] In the result therefore, in substitution for the decrees passed by the trial Court and confirmed by the lower appellate Court, fresh decrees will be passed on the following terms.

[15] In O. S. No. 11 of 1946:

"That the suit be decreed on contest with costs and pleader's fee at 5 per cent. The defendants are hereby restrained from interfering with the right of access of the plaintiff to plot No. 736 and to the Khurda-Pipli road by putting up or allowing the putting up of any permanent substantial structure on plot No. 736"

[16] In O. S. No. 32 of 1946:

"That the suit be decreed on contest against the defendants with costs and pleader's fee at 5 per cent. Defendants 2 and 3 are hereby ordered to remove the structure raised by them on the disputed land, before 15-1-51. In default the plaintiff shall get the structures removed by application through Court, and realise the costs thereof from defendants 2 and 3 in execution."

[17] Subject to the above modification regarding the terms of the decrees, the appeals are dismissed with costs throughout.

[18] It may be mentioned that before hearing the appeals we gave notice to the Advocate-General, on behalf of Government, with a view to get his assistance in the shape of any other rules, by-laws, or notifications that may be relevant and may have a bearing on the consideration of the questions involved. But nothing beyond what is mentioned above has been brought to our notice.

A. F. O. D. No. 16 of 1946 and Misc. Appeal No. 76 of 1948, D/- 11-5-1949.

(a) Trust—Constitution of—Trust, if fails for want of trustee—Test of completeness—Voluntary declaration of trust when binding.

Where the settlor constitutes himself the trustee, the question of acceptance of the position of a trustee does not arise. A trust may be constituted without communication to a trustee and a trust is not affected by the fact that the trustee is unable or unwilling to act. A trust does not fail for want of a trustee, and if a trustee refuses to accept before the trust takes effect, the person in possession becomes a constructive trustee. Even a disclaimer by a trustee does not avoid a trust. If the settlor has done everything that is required to be done under the law the trust takes effect at once, the test of completeness being whether anything, in fact, remains to be done on the part of the donor. A trust in the accepted sense of the word is the creation of an obligation by the owner to the intent that he may hold the property for the benefit of some other person or object. As soon as the trust is declared according to the requirements of the law, the legal ownership passes to the trustee and he is bound to apply the income arising out of the property to the use and benefit of the cestui que trust. As a general rule, in order to make a voluntary declaration of trust binding upon the author of the trust, he must have completely parted with all his interest in the property to the trustee or declared himself to be a trustee of the property for the benefit of the cestui que trust. [Para 6]

(b) Trust — Charitable purpose — Study of karmakanda.

A gift to a general public use which extends to the poor as well as to the rich is a charitable gift. Even a gift for a religious purpose is a good charitable gift, if it involves religious instruction or edification of the public. Hence the study of Karmakanda is as much a charitable purpose as the study of physical science. [Para 7]

(c) Trust — One of conditions not executed — Validity of trust.

A trust is none the less a trust though one of its conditions is not executed. [Para 8]

(d) Trust—Person, if may both be trustee and cestui que trust.

A person may both be a trustee and a cestui que trust or one of the trustees and one of the cestui que trusts. [Para 9]

(e) Trust—Constitution of—Communication to trustee—Trust, if affected by trustee's refusal or inability to act.

A trust may be constituted without communication thereof to the trustee or to the cestui quo trust and a trust is not affected by the fact that no trustee is named or by the fact that the trustee who is named either refuses or is unable, through death or otherwise, to act. A trust of the property does not depend on the immediate existence of a legal estate in a trustee to support it. [Para 10]

(f) Trust—Revocability.

A trust is generally irrevocable unless a power of revocation is expressly reserved. [Para 10]

(g) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 126 — Revocation of gift—Mistake of law.

A mere mistake of law would not be sufficient to revoke a deed of gift. [Para 10]

Anno. T. P. Act, S. 126 N. 11.

(h) Trust—Charitable gift — Particular application of, postponed—Failure of purpose—Doctrine of cypres.

The fact that the particular application of a charitable gift is postponed does not render the gift void where the gift as distinguished from its application is immediate. If the purpose itself were to fail, the Court may none the less apply the cypres doctrine and give effect to the object of the trust. The settled principle is that if the donor declares his intention in favour of a defined object which happens to fail from whatever cause, yet the general purpose being charity, such purpose will, notwithstanding the indefiniteness or failure of its immediate object, be carried into effect. [Paras 12 and 15]

(i) Trust—Property capable of being ascertained.

If the property is capable of being reasonably ascertained or is sufficiently clearly designated a trust will be raised. [Para 17]

(j) Trust—Validity and completeness—Question of intention.

Per Ray C.J.—In the case of a trust which is the result of a series of negotiations between two parties, the question of intention and common understanding between them that might go to determine the nature and extent of the trust is not entirely foreign to the consideration of its validity and completeness. [Para 21]

PANIGRAHI J.— These two appeals arise out of proceedings in a suit filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. Cuttack, by one Radhakanta Mohapatra, son of the appellant, Choudhury Narasingh Charan Mohapatra, for a partition of the joint family properties belonging to himself and his father. The suit was registered as O. S. No. 9 of 1945 and was ultimately compromised on 18-1-1946 by a deed of compromise the parties agreeing to have the partition of their properties in equal shares through the mediation of Bhadraloks and undertaking to file allotment lists in Court within one month from the date of compromise. The allotment, however, did not materialise for some reason or other and the plaintiff thereupon filed a petition praying for the appointment of a commissioner. The learned Subordinate Judge, by his order dated 23-4-46, overruled the objection raised on behalf of the defendant-appellant that the comprosmise decree was in the nature of a final decree and directed the preparation of a preliminary decree. It is against this order of the Subordinate Judge that the No. 1 6 of 1946 has been preferred.

(2) On 21-5-1946 the defendant addressed a letter to the Vice-Chancellor of the Utkal University proposing to "place his share of whole estate' at the disposal of the University for the purpose of establishing a Sanskrit College at Jaipur where Ayurved, Jyotish, Karma Kanda, Vyakarna and Sahitya, and such other similar subjects as the University may think fit may be taught. The defendant also undertook to give Rs. 20,000/- for the putting up of buildings and for acquiring lands for the purpose. In his letter dated 21-5-1946 (Ex. 2) he wanted the approval of the Syndicate for giving effect to his proposal and desired that he may be informed immediately and the sowrk may be undertaken without delay". The Syndicate, by its resolution dated 22-5-46 (Ex. 7) resolved to accept "the generous offer" made by Rai Bahadur Narsingh Charan Mohapatra for the establishment of a Sanskrit College at Jaipur in accordance with his wishes and recommend to the Senate to approve the specific purpose for which the offer was made. The Syndicate also appointed a committee to settle the details of the gift and to have a proper transfer deed executed. On 2-7-46 the defendant wrote a letter (Ex. 3-A) to Mr. C. M. Acharya requesting him to have a draft deed of gift prepared. Mr. Acharya appears to have prepared a draft which was submitted to the committee appointed by the Syndicate and the Registrar of the Utkal University by his letter dated 16-7-1946 (Ex. 8-A) requested the defendant to attend the meeting of the Committee that was summoned to discuss the terms of the draft gift deed. As the defendant could not be present on 26-7-46 which was the date fixed for the meeting, the meeting was adjourned to 14-8-46, to enable Choudhury Nursing Charan to put forward a new proposal suggesting the creation of a trust of his properties for the benefit of the University instead of conveying them by a deed of gift. The reason for the suggested new proposal is given in his letter dated 20-8-46 (Ex-4) wherein he says:

"I now find that there are certain difficulties by a deed of gift. In a deed of gift I have to deliver present possession to the University but in a partition suit between me and my son, though the preliminary decree has been passed on 18-1-46, the final decree has not been passed as yet, as you know the Law's delay; and I do not like to involve the University into a litigation.....So I propose as follows, to the acceptance of the University authorities....."

Briefly stated the proposal made is that (1) He will create a trust and execute and register a deed of trust in respect of his immovable properties in favour of the University, as the 'cestui que trust', shall be the sole-owner and take possession of the properties. (2) During his lifetime the defendant shall pay Rs. 5000/- annually to the University from out of the lands conveyed to the University, the first instalment being payable after the Sunia day of 1947. (3) The defendant shall pay a sum of Rs. 25,000/- to the University in cash, Rs. 10000/- being payable on 23-8-46 and the remaining Rs. 15000/- in two instalments by the end of December 1946.

(3) Finally, the letter says:

"As soon as the University accepts the above proposal in its meeting of the Syndicate, I will execute and register a deed of trust and make it over to you".

(4) The proceedings of the Committee of the Syndicate which met to consider the above proposals are exhibited as Ex. P and show that the discussion took place in the presence of the defendant, Narasingh Charan Mohapatra and Rai Sahib Bemdev Misra, who was taking great interest in the matter on behalf of the defendant. The Committese accepted the various suggestions made in the new proposal and resolved to recommend the same to the Syndicate provided the defendant deposited Rs. 10,000/- by 23-8-1946. In pursuance of this resolution the defendant paid a sum of Rs. 10,000 on 23-8-1946 and a draft trust deed prepared by the defendant's lawyer was placed before the Syndicate and and the terms were settled by its resolution No. 164 of 12-9-1946, exhibited as Ex. Q. The deed of trust was thereafter actually executed by the defendant and registered on 14-10-1946. Thereafter there was an exchange of letters between the defendant and the University on account of the defendant's failure to pay the balance of Rs. 15000/- out of the promised donation of Rs. 25,000/- and on account of his failure to hand over the deed of trust after its registration. After much unnecessary correspondence the defendant wrote a letter to the Registrar of the Utkal University on 8-1-47 (Ex. 3-H) proposing some changes in the objects of the trust and suggesting that the gift of his landed properties and cash might be bettdr utilised if an institution for imparting technical and vocational training were started. He also suggested that in lieu of the landed property which he had settled with the University he would contribute such amount in cash as may be reasonably required for starting the aforesaid technical institution. By a subsequent letter dated 10-2-1947 (Ex. 1-F) addressed to the Vice-Chancellor he expressed the same desire to divert the purpose of the trust to the establishment of a technical and vocational training school while protesting that he is "not at all unwilling to establish an Ayurvedic College at Jaipur as contemplated by me". Finally he sent a registered letter, dated 6-5-47 (Ex. 1) to the Vice-Chancesllor intimating to him that he revoked the proposal for the establishment of the proposed College and calling upon the University to refuud the sum of Rs. 10,000/- deposited by him on 23-8-46 "for utilizing the same for other educational purposes". A few months later, by another registered letter Ex. J dated 5-9-47 the defendant made a new proposal to the effect that in lieu of immovable property he would pay Rs. 50,000 to establish an Ayurvedic College in 1948. The Syndicate by its proceedings dated 1-10-47 decided to take up the matter to Court and to enforce the terms of the trust deed that had already been executed by the defendant. On 15-10-1947 the University put in a petition under O. 22, 10, Civil . C. to be substituted in place of the defendant in O. S. No. 9/1945 and this petition having been dismissed by the Additional Subordinate Judge, by his order dated 31-8-48, Mis. A. No. 76 of 1948 has been filed by the Utkal University challenging the correctness of the order of the Subordinate Judge. The University had also filed a similar petition in F. A. No. 16 of 1946 much to the same effect. These two appeals were heard together and lengthy arguments were addressed to us by Mr. S. K. De appearing for the defendant-appellant, Narasingh Charan and Mr. M. S. Rao appearing for the Utkal University. At the conclusion of the arguments we intimated to the parties that the petition of the Utkal University would be allowed and that the appellant should be described as defendant 2, Narsingh Charan, Trustee for the Utkal University and that the University should be added as defendant 3 in the suit. We now proceed to give the reassons for our decision.

(5) Mr. De's contention in First Appeal is that the Order No. 56, dated 23-4-46 of the learned Subordinate Judge and his subsequent order, dated 30-4-46, signing the decree, amount to the passing of a final decree and he submits that the Court had no jurisdiction to pass a fresh decree after the recording of the compromise on 18-1-46 which terminated in a decree which was itself final in all respects. It was however conceded by him that the compromise decree passed on 18-1-46 contemplated further proceedings to be taken by the Court after the filing of allotment lists prepared by Bhadraloks. There was also something more to be done by the Court, namely, the actual allotment of the properties according to the lists prepared by the Bhadraloks, drawing up of the final decree and putting each of the parties in possession of his share. It cannot, therefore, be contended that the decree passed on 18-1-46 was anything other than a preliminary decree and that further proceedings had to be taken by the Court in order to give effect to the intention of the parties. In fact, Mr. De abandoned this contention and conceded that First Appeal may be treated as a civil revision. The Subordinate Judge's order in appointing a commissioner is not open to challenge on any other ground.

(6) The main controversy between the parties, however, centers round the competency of the Utkal University to be brought on the record in pursuance of the terms of the trust deed and the liability of the appellant, Narasingh Charan, to be described as a trustee in view of his express revocation of the trust deed. The points urged bq Mr. De may be briefly summarised as follows: (1) There is no valid trust created as the defendant has not acecpted the position of a trustee. (2) The University is incompetent to accept a religious trust, as the teaching of Karma Kanda contemplated by the settlor is a religious purpose and the endowment amounts to a religious endowment. (3) The contemplated trust has not been accepted by the Senate and the promised donation has not been fully paid. (4) There is no devolution of interest 'in praesenti' and so the settlor could revoke the trust which in fact he has done. (5) Since the University is not a party to the deed there is no valid creation of the trust. (6) The property which is the subject-matter of the trust is not ascertainable and an undivided interest cannot be the subject-matter of a gift. The trust is, therefore, invalid for uncertainty. It is well-settled that where the settlor constitutes himself the trustee the question of acceptance of the position of a trustee does not arise. A trust may be constituted without communication to a trustee and a trust is not affected by the fact that the trustee is unable or unwilling to act. A trust does not fail for want of a trustee, and if a trustee refuses to accept before the trust takes effect, the person in possession becomes a constructive trustee. Even a disclaimer by a trustee does not avoid a trust. If the settlor has done everything that is required to be done under the law the trust takes effect at once, the test of completeness being whether anything, fact, remains to be done on the part of the donor. A trust in the accepted sense of the word is the creation of an obligation by the owner to the intent that he may hold the property for the benefit of some other person or object. As soon as the trust is declared according to the requirements of the law, the legal ownership passes to the trustee and he is bound to apply the income arising out of the property to the use and benefit of 'cestui que trust'. As a general rule, it may be laid down that in order to make a voluntary declaration of trust binding upon the author of the trust he must have completely parted with all his interest in the property to the trustee or declared himself to be a trustee of the property for the benefit of the 'cestui que trust'—See 'Agnew's Trusts, p. 53'. It follows from the above that if the defendant was legally constituted a trustee by his being designated as such by the instrument of the trust, and if he did, in fact, act in the execution of the trust, there was no further need for anything more to be done by him. The evidence shows that the defendant paid Rs. 10,000/- in execution of the trust he created and that in his subsequent letters (Ex. 3-H and -J) he only suggests an alteration in the scheme for carrying out the trust and does not allege that there was no trust already. Mr. De's contention that the appellant did not accept the position of a trustee is, therefore, legally untenable ansd is unsound in fact.

(7) The next contention is that the teaching of Karma Kanda being one of the objects of the trust, the whole endowment fails as the University is incapable of accepting or administering a religious endowment. This argument involves two assumptions neither of which is correct. The teaching of Karma Kanda is a charitable purpose and it is intended to impart education and advance knowledge. It is not for the performance of any particular ritual that the gift is made. Knowledge of Karma Kanda is altogether different from the performance of certain ceremonies or rituals, and I have no doubt in my mind that the study of Karma Kanda is as much a charitable purpose as the study of physical sciences. A gift to a general public use which extends to the poor as well as to the rich is a charitable gift. Even a gift for a religious purpose has been held to be a good charitable gift, if it involves religious instruction or edification of the public. In 'Dunne v. Byrne'—(1912) Ac. 407: (81 LJPC). Lord Machaughten delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee stated that charity in its legal sense comprises, among other trusts, trusts for the advancement of religion. But the trusts must be such as tend either directly or indirectly towards benefiting the public. It was next urged that the trust was not completed as the proposal of the donor did not receive the sanction of the Senate and the payment of the sum of Rs. 15,000/- (the balance out of the Rs. 25000/- promised by the appellant) contemplated in the deed of trust was not carried out. The settlor did not stipulate that the trust should fail in case of non-acceptance by the Senate when he made his proposal. In his first letter to the University he solicited the approval of the Syndicate and expressly stated in his letter (Ex. 2) that in case the Syndicate approves he may be informed immediately and the work map be undertaken without delay. In his letter Ee. 4 suggesting the creation of a trust he reiterated his earlier proposal and said

"As soon as the University accepts the above proposal in its meeting of the Syndicate I wills execute and register a deed of trust and make it over to you".

It is therefore idle to contend that the acceptance of the proposal by the Senate was a condition precedent to the commencement of the trust. Nor is it necessary under the Utkal University Act that the University should accept the endowment through the Senate. Section 9, Subs (6), Utkal University Act lays down that

"The Syndicate shall on behalf of and subject to the control of the Senate manage the funds, concerns, property and affairs of the University" and S. 8 sub- (5) lays down

"Subject to the provisions of this Act and the Statutes, the Senate shall be the supreme Governing Body of the University, shall have power to review the actions of the Syndicate and of the Academic Council and shall exercise control over the Syndicate in its management of the funds, concerns, property and affairs of the University".

The Senate is empowered to make statutes and in exercise of this power has framed Chapter IX of the Statutes defining the powers of the Syndicate. 2(2) sub-clause (g) expressly provides that the Syndicate shall have power "to accept endowments, bequests, donations and transfer of any moveable property to the University on its behalf, subject to a report being made at the next meeting of the Senate".

It is therefore the Syndicate that is the proper authority to accept the endowment and the Syndicate did, in fact, accept the appellant's proposal at its meeting as evidenced by Ex. 7 and Q. The action of the Syndicate was later reported to the Senate which, by its meeting held on 25-10-48, approved of the action of the Syndicate.

(8) I am also not convinced that the payment of Rs. 15,000 was a condition precedant to the creation of the trsust, the non-performance of which would invalidate the gift. Paragraph 2 of the trust deed recites that the settlor has already paid to the Utkal University Rs. 10,000/- and shall pay Rs. 15,000/- by 31-12-1946. The non-payment of Rs. 15,000/- would make the appellant and his estate liable for its payment and would not affect the creation of the trust. A trust is none the less a trust merely because one of its conditions is not executed. Mr. De's contention therefore fails.

(9) It was next pointed out that there was no devolution of interest 'in praesenti' and that, therefore, its was open to the settlor to revoke, Reliance was placed in para 10 and 14 of the trust-deed in support of this contention. Para 10 says that after payment of the sum of Rs. 5000/- annually out of the income of the immovable properties which constitute the subject-matter of the trust, the balance of the income shall be retained by the settlor or shall be paid to him during his lifetime for his maintenance. Mr. De argues from this that as a substantial portion of the income is retained by the donor and as the donor is referred to as the "Settlor" instead of as "Trustee" there is no vesting of interest in the University by the execution of the trust deed. A person may both be a trustee and a 'cestui que trust' or one of the trustees and one of the 'cestui que trusts'. Under the terms of the deed both the University and the appellant are constituted trustees, the defendant being the trustee in charge of the management of the immovable properties and the University being the trustee for carrying out the object of the trust. The defendant is also the 'cestui que trust' in respect of the balance of the income arising out of the properties after payment of Rs. 5000/- annually during his lifetime. The use of the expression 'settlor' is not only appropriate but any other expression would be inconsistent with the creation of the trust. Mr. De argues that if the defendant became a trustee under the deed, the use of the word 'settlor' would negative any such intention. But if the word 'trustee' were used in place of the word 'settlor' the balance of the income would go to the trustee, whoever he might be, and would not be available to the donor for his his lifetime, as it was the donor's express intention that he should enjoy only for his lifetime the balance of the income. Para 14 says that the settlor and the University agree to carry out the terms and conditions set forth above. That the University did agree to accept the proposal and establish a College, as desired by the donor, is proved by the proceedings of the Syndicate and para 14 merely recites what had already been done towards the carrying out of the trust. I am, therefore, unable to appreciate the contention of Mr. De that the University should have been one of the executants of the trust deed.

(10) The trust is created by the defendant in favour of the University and para 14 of the deed of trust merely recites that the University had already accepted the proposal to discharge the functions of a trustee. A trust may be constituted without communication thereof to the trustee or to the 'cestui que trust' and a trust is not affected by the fact that no trustee is named or by the fact that the trustee who is named either refuses or is unable, through death or otherwise, to act. A trust of the property does not depend on the immediate existence of a legal estate in a trustee to support it. See Halsbury's Laws of England Vol. 33. p. 103.

A trust is generally irrevocable unless a power of revocation is expressly reserved. If a man executes a voluntary conveyance and does not reserve a liberty to himself by a power of revocatsion the, Court will not loose the fetters he has put upon himself—See Villers v. Beaumont, (1682) 1 Vern 100. The presumption is that a charity is charitable and not fraudulent. Section 126, Transfer of Property Act lays down that a gift cannot be revoked except under circumstances in which, if it were a contract, it might be rescined—such as fraud, undue influence, coercion, etc. It cannot be stated, in fact it is not even suggested, that the defendant was the victim of any fraud or undue influence or coercion such as would vitiate a contract. Nor would a mere mistake of law be sufficient to revoke a deed of gift, for Courts of Equity strongly incline against remedying mere mistakes of law. In 'Abhayachari v. Ramachandrayya', 1 Mad H C R 393 the settlor brought a suit to cancel an instrument of gift executed by him in favour of the defendant, on the ground that the deed of gift was invalid under the Hindu the donee could perform his obsequies. The Law and that he had erred in supposing that Court held that even where the deed is voidable on the ground of fraud or mistake it is always a question for the discretion of the Court whether cancellation and delivery up of a deed are to be ordered. The case is simply one of the plaintiff's choosing to alter his mind, and the Court refuses to remedy a mere mistake of law. A similar case where all the authorities are discussed is reported in Raja-Ram v. Khandu Balu, (15 I C 529.) In Pullayya v. Vedachala, 1911-2 M W N 376: (11 I C 24) one L executed a registered trust deed intending title to pass thereby and it was held that the subsequent destruction and non-delivery of the deed to the trustees did not prevent the passing of the title to them. In another case reportd ein the same volume at p. 382 'Mahadeva v. Sankara, 1911-2 M W N 382 (12 I C 546) certain immoveable properties were settled on charitable trusts by a registered deed and the settlor appointed himself as Hukdar for life and provided that, after his death, his grandson should succeed him as Hukdar. It was held that the acquired under the deed a vested right to the trusteeship which took effect in possession at the death of the settlor and the settlor had no power to revoke the appointment of the grandson before his death. In 'Krishnaswamy v. Kothandarama Naiken, 27 M L J p. 582 (A I R 12) 1915 Mad 380, the donor executed a deed of trust by which she settled certain properties on a temple. She constituted herself trustee during her lifetime and provided in the said deed for the carrying out of the trust by ecrtain individuals after her death. On the day previous to her death she executed a will by which she purported to revoke the trust and to make a new disposition of her properties. The dispositions themselves were in favour of the temple to which she had given the properties comprised in the trust deed. The trustees appointed under the earlier trust deed filed a suit for a declaration that the subsequent will was inoperative and had not the effect of revoking the trust. The document was all along with the settlor as, under the terms of the trust, she was herself to be the trustee during her lifetime and the Court held that the fact that the deed of trust was not handed over was no indication of the terms of the trust not having been given effect to. It was also held that, as there was a complete dedication of the property to the temple on the execution of the deed of trust, it was not open to the settlor to revoke the dedication by the will which she executed immediately prior to her death.

(11) Mr De's justification for revoking the gift is based on what he considers to be the inactivity of the University in giving effect to the object of the trust and an apprehension that the University may not carry out the purpose of the trust at all. This apprehension is hardly justified. The defendant promised to pay Rs. 15,000/- before December 1946 so that the building of the College amy be started. Actually, however, the document was not handed over for one reason or another, after its execution in October 1946. When the University demanded delivery of the payment of Rs. 15,000/- which was required for starting construction of the building the defendant proposed a change in the objects of the trust. In the middle of the year 1947 he expressed his desire to revoke and in September of that year the Syndicate rejected the proposal of the defendant in which he wanted to bring about a change in the terms of the trust deed. In October 1947 the petition out of which this appeal arises was actually filed challenging the action of the defendant in attempting to wriggle out of the terms of the trust deed. There was no validly constituted Senate during this period and when the newly-constituted Senate met the Syndicate reported its action for approval. It is thus celar that the delay in giving effect to the object of the trust is attributable to the defendant alone, and even assuming that the University was guilty of laches I am unable to see how the trust, as such would be affected.

(12) The fact that the particular application of a charitable gift is postponed does not render the gift void where the gift, as distinguished from its application, is immediate. The Charitable purpose is the donee, the establish-pious purpose is to be effected. If the purpose itself were to fail, the Court may none the less apply the 'cypres' doctrine and give effect to the object of the trust. In 'Chamberlayne v. Brockett, (1872) 8 Ch. A 206 the settlor bequeathed her personal property to trustees upon trust to invest in consols and to make out of the dividends certain fixed annual payments, for charitable purposes. She further directed that when and so soon as the lands should at any time be given for the purposes as thereinafter mentioned almhouses should be built and that the surplus remaining after building alm-houses should be appropriated to making allowances to the inmates. It was held that there was an immediate gift to charity ,the mode of execution being only dependent upon further events and an enquiry directed as in 'Sinnet v. Herbert, (1872) Ch A 232. Lord Selborne LC held:

"If the gift in trust for charity is itself conditional upon a future and uncertain event, it is subject in our judgement to the same rules and principles of any other estate dependent for its coming into existence upon a condition preceednt. If the condition is never fulfilled the estate never arises.'

On a construction of the deed it was held that "there was nothing undisposed of and there was no resulting trust for the next of kind. The intention in favour of the charity is absolute. The gift and the constitution of the trust is immediate. The only thing which is postponed or made dependent for its execution upon future and uncertain events, is the particular form or mode of charity to which the testatrix wished her property to be applied".

Similarly in Attorney General v. Craven (1856) 21 Beav 392, it was held that when lands are given to charity on the happening of a particular event, there is a resulting trust in the meanwhile, but where real estate was vested in trust out of the rents, to keep it ready for the reception of plague patients during their sickness, it was held that this was a present gift to charitable purposes and not merely a gift contingent upon the re-apperaance of the plague; and secondly that there was no resulting trust in the meanwhile for the donor or his heirs though the plague had not re-appeared for more than 180 years.

(13) In Edwards v. Hall, (1855) 43 E R 1158: (6 D C G M L G 74) it was held that a gift applicable to churches to be hereafter created is good. The word "endow" means giving a benefit to some existing thing; it supposes something to exist either at the time when the gift is made or when the endowment is to take place

(14) A gift is not bad because it may be applied not only to cha.pels that already exist but also to chapels that may come in esse afterwards. By the endowment of a school or chapel is only understood not the building or purchasing of a site for a school or chapel, but the providing of a fixed revenue for the support of those institutions. The word "endow" was construed as not meaning to purchase or build.

(15) The settled principle is that if the donor declares his intention in favour of a defined object which happens to fail from whatever cause, yet the general purpose being charity, such purpose will, notwithstanding the indefiniteness or failure of its immediate object, be carried into effect. For instances where the gift was held to be impracticable see 'Hayter v. Thego' (1830) 5 R M S 113: (38 E-R 970) and Loscombe v. Solicitor-General for New Zealand, 1903 A C 173: (72 L J P C 37) the very same contention was put forward by the Solicitor-General as is now made by Mr. De, that upon failure of the object and purposes of the grant the property would revert to the donor and it was negatived by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. In this case certain Maori Chiefs, who were in possession of certain lands called "Witeria", gave up possesion for the use of the place as a college for the Bishop of the Church of England. The grant was made in 1859. No school or college had been erected till 1898 when the suit was filed by the trustees. The rents and profits of the land were being accumulated. The Solicitor-General contended that the funds and lands had reverted to the Crown either absolutely or as trustee upon failure of the objects and purposes of the Crown grants and are not subject to administration by or under the direction of the Court 'cypres'. It was held that an expres gift of land and money for charitable purposes is not invalidated by the fact that the particular obligation directed cannot immediately take effect or will not of necessity take effect within any definite limit of time and may never take effect at all and that the doctrine of 'cypres' was applicable.

(17) The last contention of Mr. De is that the subject-matter of the trust is not capable of being ascertained as it is an undivided interest in joint property and that the trust is accordingly void for uncertainty . If the property is capable of being reasonably ascertained or is sufficiently clearly designated a trust will be raised. The settlor in this case transferred absolutely the properties set forth in the schedule atached to the deed of trust and describes the properties as those in which he owns an eight-annas interest after the preliminary decree. He further says:

"After the final allotment of the properties which will come to the settlor's share shall form the subject-matter of the trust".

It is, therefore, clear that the interest in the property conveyed is specifically designated and the half-share of the properties that will be allotted to the donor after the final decree, is equally capable of specific ascertainment.

(18) All the contentions raised by the defendant are, therefore, overruled and as we have already intimated at the conclusion of the hearing, the defendant shall be added in the suit in his capacity of trustee as defendant 2 . The University is also a joint trustee under the terms of the deed and is entitled to be brought on the record. Even if the properties were to vest in the University, subsequent to hte death of the settlor, the University has a present vested right and is entitled to be represented in the suit. Even otherwise, we would have held that having regard to the facts disclosed during arguments the University should properly be represented in the proceedings as a relator.

(19) It is much to be regretted that unnecessary controversy should have arisen between the settlor and the University so soon after the execution of the trust deed. It is not for this Court to apportion the blame and determine as to who is responsible for this state of affairs. Much may be said on both sides. The University was unnecessarily insistent on the delivery up of the deed of trust which, under the terms of the trust, should be with trustee, voz: Narsingh Charan. The settlor, it appears to us, is also unnecessarily apprehensive that the University will not carry out the purpose of the trust. There was undoubtedly some delay in giving effect to the Resolution of the Syndicate owing to the non-existence of a legally constituted Senate. The University had to make certain arrangements for holding the elections for the first elected Senate and the delay is perfectly understandable. We can only hope that the cloud of distrust and suspicion which has been generated by circumstances for which neither party in particular is responsible, will soon be dispelled and the object of the trust carried into effect.

(20) The petition filed by the University in No. 16 of 1946 and the Misc. No. 76 of 1948 are allowed. The First Appeal filed by the defendant, which is treated as Civil Revision, is dismissed, but in the circumstances there will be no order as to costs.

(21) RAY C. J. I agree with the broad outlines of the reasons as formulated by my learned brother. As the order passed by us is an interlocutory one as between the parties, I refrain from adding my own reasons 'in extenso' as they might embarrass one party or the other in the likely future litigation between them. I should, however, add that in the case of a trust which is the result of a series of negotiations between two parties, the question of intention and common understanding between them that might go to determine the nature and extent of the trust is not entirely foreign to the consideration of its validity and completeness.

Government Appeal No. 6 of 1949, D/- 27-7-1950.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 195 (a) — S. 188, Penal Code, made cognizable and non-bailable — Effect.

A Court cannot take cognizance of an offence under S. 188, Penal Code except upon the complaint in writing of the public servant concerned or of some other public servant concerned or of some other public servant concerned or of some other public servant to whom he is subordinate and the fact that by a notification of the State Government S. 188, Pena Code is mads cognizable and non-bailable under S. 10, Criminal Law Amendment Act 1932, does not, in any way, affect the operation of S. 195, Criminal P. C. [Paras 4, 5]

Anno. Cr, P. C., S. 195 N. 3.

B. M. Patnaik — for Appellant; G. G. Das — for Reepondent.

PANIGRAHI, J. This is an appeal by the State of Orissa Against an order of acquittal recorded by the Learned Sessions Judge, Mayurbhanj, in a case arising under S. 188 Penal Code.

(2) The case for the prosecution is that the accused Oriya Sama Majhi disobeyed an order under S. 144 criminal P. C. promulgated on 5-2-49, in the Bamangati Subdivision of Mayurbhanj District, prohibiting the residents therein from carrying bows and arrows or any deadly weapons. It is alleged that the accused was moving about on 31-3-49 in his village, Maranda, with a bow, arrows, and a sword shouting that he would kill his enemies with these weapons. The order under S. 144 was duly promulgated on 5-2-49, and it is proved that the accused had knowledge of the ban imposed under this order. The trying magistrate recorded a finding that the accused intentionally disobeyed the order and that the disobedience caused danger to human life and safety.

He accordingly convicted the accused of an offence under S. 188, Penal Code and sentenced him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for four mon.ths and to pay a fine of Rs. 100/-, in default, to undergo r.gorous imprisonment for one month more. The learned Sessions Judge, Mayurbhanj, who heard the appeal against this conviction, while agreeing with the trial Court on his finding of facts held that the prosecution was defective and that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of an offence under S. 188, Penal Code without a complaint in writing by the Subdivisional Magistrat.e who passed the order under S. 144 Criminal P.C. as required by Section 195 (1) (c), He accordingly directed the accused to be acquitted on the ground that prosecution was incompetent.

(3) The question that falls to be determined is whether S. 195 (1) (a) applies to the facts of this case. An offence under S. 188 Penal Code was non-cognizable and non-bailable by a notification of the State Government in exercise of the powers conferred on them by S. 10 (1), Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1932 (XXIII (23) of 1932). Section 10(1) provides:

"The provincial Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, declare that any offence punishable under S. 186., 188 and 189.. of the Indian Penal Code when committed in any area specified in the notification, shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal procedure, 1898, shall, while such notification remains in force, be deemed to be amended accordingly".

(2) The provincial Government may,in like manner and subject to like conditions and conditions and with like effect, declare that an offence punishable under section 188 on section 506 Indian Penal Code shall be nonbailable".

Acting under this section, the State Government in the Home Department issued a notification, dated 14-8-48 (No. 2946-C) which reads as under:

"In exercise of the powers conferred by sub-section (1) of section 10 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act 1932 (XXIII(23 of 1932) as applied to theOrissa States by Notification of the Government of Orissa in the Home Department No. 2-A dated 1-1-1948, as subsequently amended, the Governor of Orissa is pleased to declare that any offence punishable under section 188 of the Indian Penal Code when committed in any part of the Orissa States, shall, notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure 1893 (V of 1898) be cognizable". :

By another notification of the same date, Viz.,No. 2 948-C., dated 14-8-48,the offence was made non-bailable also. When the State of Mayurbhanj was merged with Orissa, the Criminal Law Amendment Act 1932 and the notifications thereunder were extended to that State by the Administration of Mayurbhanj State Order, 1949 on 1-1-1949. The prosecution, therefore, contends that as the offence under S. 188, Penal Code has been made cognizable, cognizance can be taken of it by a Magistrate on a report in writing of such facts made by the Police Officer, as provided in S. 190 (1) (b), Criminal P.C. It is accordingly urged that S. 195 (1) (a) stands amended by implication by reason of S. 10, Criminal Law Amendment Act read with the notification issued by the State Government. On the other hand, it is urged for the accused that the requirement that a prosecution for an offence under S. 188, Penal Code should be initiated by the officer — whose order has been disobeyed — by a complaint in writing, is not inconsistent with the police being invested with power to investigate and arrest without warrant.

(4) Chapter XV of the Code of Criminal Procedure deals generally with the jurisdiction of the criminal Courts in enquiries and trials and is divided into two parts. Part A deals with the place of enquiry or trial while Part B lays down the conditions requisite for initiation of proceedings. The group of sections commencing with S. 190 is dealt with in Part B. This section lays down in what circumstances a Magistrate can take cognisance of an offence. Section 193 deals with the procedure relating to the cognisance of an offence by Courts of Session and S. 194 by the High Court. Section 195 prescribes the procedure to be adopted in prosecutions for contempt of lawful authority of public servants, of certain offences relating to documents given in evidence . Section 196 and S. 196-A deal respectively with the procedure for prosecution, for offences against the State and for certain classes of criminal conspiracy. Section 197 deals with the prosecution of Judges and public servants and S. 198 and 199 deal with prosecutions for offences against marriage. In the case of these latter offences, dealt iwth in S. 195 to 199, the Code lays down an additional requisite to the initiation of proceedings in the form of a complaint in writing by the public servant concerned or the previous sanction of the Court or the Local Government. Section 910 prescribes the three modes in which cognizance may be taken by a Magistrate and says:

"190 (1) 'Except as hereinafter provided' any Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Sub-divisional Magistrate or any other Magistrate specially empowered in this behalf, may take cognisance of any offence —

(a) upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitute such offence;

(b) upon a report in writing of such facts made by any police officer; and

(c) upon information received from any person other than a police officer or upon his own knowledge or suspicion that such offence has been committed.

Thus, complaint, report and information are cognizance of an offence. In the present case the three modes in which a Magistrate can take the prosecution commenced with a report in writing by the police officer and the Magistrate purported to take cognizance under S. 190 (1)(b).

The opening words of S. 190 (1) "except as hereinafter provided" indicate that this section is to be read subject to the other sections of the Code and is controlled by S. 195. Section 195 (1) (a) however lays down that no Court shall take cognizance of any offence punishable under S. 172 to 188, Penal Code except on "a complaint in writing of the public servant concerned or of some other public servant to whom he is subordinate".

Cognizance of an offence under S. 172 to 188 has, therefore, been regarded as an exception to the general powers of cognizance vested under S. 190 (1). It may also be noticed that while S. 190 (1) makes a distinction between a "complaint' and a 'report in writing' of a police officer the expression used in S. 195 (1) is 'complaint' only. 'Complaint' is defined in S. 4 (1) (h), Criminal P.C. as follows:

"'Complaint' means the allegation made orally or in writing to a Magistrate, with a view to taking action under this Code, that some other person, whether known or unknown, has committed an offence, but it 'does not include the report of a police officer".

The word 'complaint' used in S. 195 (1) and 190 (1) (a) must be presumed to have been used in the sense in which that owrd is defined in S. 4 (1) (h) and, therefore, should be held to exclude the report of a police officer. On a plain reading of different provisions I arrive at the conclusion that a Court cannot take cognizance of an offence under S. 188, Penal Code except on a complaint in writing of the public servant concerned or of some other public servant to whom he is subordinate.

(5) The next question is whether by reason of the notification of the State Government declaring S. 188, Penal Code to be a cognizable and non-bailable offence, the operation of S. 195 has in any way been affected. It is pointed out by the learned Government Advocate that the notification expressly says that an offence punishable under S. 188, Penal Code shall notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, be cognizable and that as S. 10(1), Criminal Law Amendment Act 1932 expressly provides that on the issue of the notification the Code of Criminal Procedure 1898 shall while such notification remains in force, be "deemed to be amended accordingly", S. 195 (1), Criminal P.C. has been impliedly amended by this provision and that consequently a prosecution for an offence under S. 188 Penal Code need not fulfil the condition laid down in S. 195. It is further alleged that if the offence becomes cognisable and non-bailable the police can investigate the offence under S. 156, and exercise all the powers vested in the police officer under Chapter XIV of the Code. If they can investigate under S .156, they would be entitled to send up a report containing the result of their investigation under S. 173 and the Magistrate is thereupon bound to take cognisance under S. 190 (1) (b). I need not pause to examine the flaws in this syllogism. Assuming it to be correct, I do not agree with the conclusion. The power of the police to investigate and send up a report is not inconsistent with the additional requisite of a complaint in writing of the public servant concerned whose order has been violated. The Notification of the Govt. merely empowers the police to arrest without warrant and to conduct an investigation. After the investigation is completed it is open to the police to refer the matter to the public servant whose order has been disobeyed and leave it to him to decide whether prosecution should be started. It is for the public servant concerned to make up his mind whether in the public interest the offender should be brought to trial. It is in order to prevent vexations prosecutions that the bunch of sections beginning with S. 195 have been incorporated in the Code. The propriety of prosecution is guaranteed by the Legislature in requiring the public servant or Court to make themselves the complaint. Whether the offence is cognizable or non-cognizable is beside the point and has no relevancy to the policy of the Code in requiring the complaint of the public servant concerned of the Court. That this is the idea underlying this group of Sections in the Code will be clear from a reference to the following sections. Section 196 deals with offences against the State and offences relating to elections. It cannot be said that these offences are less serious than an offence under S. 188, Penal Code. Yet the Code requires that the complaint should be made by an order of or under the authority of the State Government or by some officer empowered by the State Government in this behalf. The policy of the Code is that a prosecution for such serious offences should not be initiated without due deliberation and consideration about its expediency by the State Government itself. But the weakness of this argument, advanced on behalf of the State, will be palpable when we refer to S. 196 (A) which deals with prosecutions for the offence of criminal conspiracy under E. 120 B, Penal Code. If the object of the conspiracy is to commit a cognizable offence, then the conspiracy itself becomes cognizable by the police and yet 196-A would require a complaint in writing to be made by an order of or under the authority of the Provincial Government. Section 197 makes the point even clearer. If the cognizable offence is committed by a Judge or a public servant (who is not removable from his office except by or with the sanction of Government) in the discharge of his official duties, cognizance could be taken by the Court only with the previous sanction of the Governor-General or the Governor of the province as the case may be. It does not, therefore ,follow that in each and every cognizable case, cognizance could be taken if there is a report in writing by a police officer. In all these sections, the word 'complaint' is used designedly but nowhere is a reference made to "a report in writing by a police officer". There is therefore no conflict between S. 190 and S. 195 even after the issue of the notification by the State Government. The words in S. 10 Criminal Law Amendment Act 1932 that the Code of Criminal Procedure" shall be deemed to be amended accordingly" can have reference only to those provisions which indicated that S. 188, Penal Code was non-cognizable and bailable before the notification. These words occur in S. II of the Code. Section 188, Penal Code was, before the notification, shown as non-cognizable and bailable and the offence under that section was deemed to .have become cognisable and non-bailable by reason of the notification read with S 10, Criminal Law Amendment Act. It may well be that a particular offence may be non-cognisable and yet non-bailable. See for instance S. 194, 195 and 476, Penal Code which are dealt with in S. 195 (b) and 195 (c), Criminal P. C. and for which a complaint in writing is required by the Court. Section 195 therefore requires a complaint in writing in respect of some non-bailable offences as well. The argument that cognizable and non-bailable offences are wholly excluded from the operation of S. 195 therefore stands on a week crutch.

A police officer making an arrest without warrant is obliged under S. 60, Criminal P C to take or send the person arrested before a Magistrate having Jurisdiction in the case. It is contended that if the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to try the case, unless the complaint in writing is made by the public servant concerned, then the accused is liable to be detained in police custody indefinitely. This argument proceeds upon a wrong reading of the provisions of the Code relating to the jurisdiction of a Magistrate and his powers. The word 'jurisdiction' is used throughout the Code as defining a local area within which a Magistrate may exercise any of the powers with which he may be invested. Sections 10 and 12 lay down the respective jurisdictions of the District Magistrate and the Subordinate Magistrates. The powers of Court are defined in Chap III and are divided into ordinary and additional powers which are given in greater detail in S. III and IV. Section 190 refers to a Magistrate who is "empowered" to take cognizance. On receiving a complaint a Magistrate does not automatically take cognizance, but if he does choose to take cognizance, he has to follow the procedure laid down in Chap. XVI. When, however, he receives a complaint by a Court of a public servant, S. 200 (a) dispenses with the examination of the complainant. He can thereafter either choose to issue process or dismiss the complaint. Taking cognisance does not involve any formal action, but occurs as soon as the Magistrate takes legal notice of the commission of an offence with a view to decide whether he can take judicial action. by issuing or refusing process. The power to take cognisance therefore is not the same thing as the power to enquire into or try, for a Magistrate may be empowered to take cognisance of, but not to enquire into and try offences. Similarly, a Court is not empowered to take cognisance may try a case if it is transferred to its file. Under S. 201 if the Court is not empowered to take cognisance he returns the complaint for presentation to the proper Court. Taking cognisance therefore may be either in the form of initiating or refusing to initiate proceedings as the Magistrate thinks proper. The expansion 'taking cognisance' is however often times confused with 'cognisable offence' and 'cognisable case'. 'Cognizable offence' is defined as an offence in which a police officer may arrest without warrant and is described in S. II. While therefore an offence may be cognizable by the police the Magistrate, within whose jurisdiction the offence is committed, may not be empowered to tak.e cognizance of the same. I do not, therefore, see any inconsistency between the police officer being enabled to conduct investigation into an offence under S. 188, Penal Code and the Magistrate not being competent to take cog.nizance of the case until some other formality is complied with. It was open to the investigating officer to place the result of his investigation before the public servant concerned and request him to file a complaint in writing.

Our attention has been drawn to the cases reported in 'Emp v. Ganesh Vasudev 55 Bom 322: (AIR (18) 1931 Bom 135: and 'Latchmi Devi v. Emp 58 Cal 971: (AIR (18) 1931 Cal 122. Both these cases arose under ordinance V (5) of 1930 which was the precursor of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1932. Section 10, Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1932 merely reproduces the language of S. 11 of that Ordinance word for word. Both these cases lay down that an offence being cognisable by the police does not 'ipso facto' make it cognisable by a Magistrate. I have no doubt, in my mind, on a plain reading of the Sections of the Code, that S. 190 is controlled by S. 195 and a search for an exact precedent is a sterile pursuit.

(8) I would only refer to one other instance where the powers of the police to investigate and the power of the Magistrate to try are kept separate and are not necessarily interdependent. Section 3 of Prevention of Corruption Act (XI (11) of 1947) makes an offence under S. 161 or S. 165, Penal Code a cognisable offence for the purposes of the Code of Criminal Procedure. But Section 6 of the same Act lays down that no Court shall take cognizance of such offences except with the previous sanction of the Government servant concerned. It would therefore be an idle parade of familiar learning to investigate all the cases which lay down that where a statute prescribes a condition precedent such as a complaint or sanction of an authority ,any prosecution launched without fulfilling the requisite condition is incom.petent. I cannot therefore persuade myself to treat the police charge-sheet as a complaint within the meaning of S. 190 (1) (a). The officer hwo promulgated the order under S. 144 in this case is the Sub-divisional Magistrate and he has not made any complaint. I have, therefore, no hesitation in accepting the view of the learned Sessions Judge as corre.ct and in holding that the accused has been rightly acquitted. This appeal is dismissed.

Constitution of India, Arts. 133, 135 — Applicability — Retrospective operation — Civil P. C. (1908), S. 110 (Supreme Court — Leave to appeal).

Article 133 has no retrospective effect. Where an application for leave to appeal had been filed long before the Constitution came into force and the decree involved a claim with respect to property of the value of Rs. 10,000 or upwards, Art. 135 and not Art 133 applies and the certificate giving leave to appeal to the Supreme Court must be granted. Order.—This is an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court against the judgment of this Court in Bira Naik v. Sidha Kamal Nayan S A. NO. 172 of 1945 : (I. L. R. (1949) 1 Cut. 121).

[2] On the filing of the application, we sent for a finding of the valuation of the property in suit. The trial Court returned a finding opining that the landed property in dispute is valued at a figure more than Rs. 5,000 Besides, the plaintiff-respondent had been given a decree for recovery of mesne profits to the extent of Rs. 5,000 and odd The decree, therefore, involves rather directly some claim or question with respect to the property of the value of Rs. 10,000 or upwards within the meaning of para 2 of S. 110, Civil P. C. As this is a decree which reverses the judgments of the Courts below, the appellant has an unrestricted right of appeal to the Supreme Court. The question whether it involves any substantial question of law within the meaning of para 3 of S. 110 of the Code does not arise in this case The only difficulty that presented to us in course of hearing was that according to Art. 133 of the Constitution the right of appeal to the Supreme Court is restricted to cases in which property in dispute is of the value of Rs. 20,000 or upwards. The question that emerged was whether this article should govern the present appeal. On very high authorities it has been held that the right to appeal is a vested right which vests in the litigant at the time the suit is instituted. By subsequent alteration of the law, either relating to the form or to the other limitations to the right of appeal, it cannot be taken away, unless the law purporting to take it away is, either expressly, or by necessary intendment, given a retrospective operation. We have no doubt that Art. 133 has no retrospective operation. The only point that has to be clarified is whether this fixation of higher valuation relates to a matter of procedure or a question of substantive right. If it is the latter, it should be governed by the law pre-existing the Indian Constitution. We have been referred to a decision of a Special Bench of the Calcutta High Court, in the case of Sadar Ali v. Dolimuddin, 56 Cal. 512 : (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 610 F. B.). In that case, the Letters Patent of the Calcutta High Court was amended, and the amendment came into effect on 14-1-1928. The amendment made it a condition precedent that no appeal from a decision of a Single Judge of the High Court should lie except with his leave. In that particular case, it so happened that the Single Judge's decision had been passed before the amendment took effect. In pursuance of the amended provision of the Letters Patent, an application was filed to the Single Judge concerned to give a leave to appeal. The learned Single Judge refused it. Notwithstanding the refusal, an appeal was filed and the question arose whether the appeal was competent. By the Special Bench of which Sir George Rankin C. J. was a party, it was held that

"the legal pursuit of a remedy, suit, appeal and second appeal are really but steps in a series of proceedings connected by an intrinsic unity..... The date of presentation of second appeal to the High Court is not the date which determines the applicability of the amended Clause of the Letters Patent and as the matter now stands, the date of institution of the suit in each case is the determining factor."

This decision has been followed by the Full Bench of the Patna High Court* to which Fazl Ali J. of that Court (as he then was) was a party and delivered the leading judgment. There, the question arose if a criminal case which was instituted before an Ordinance known as Special Criminal Courts Ordinance (II [2] of 1942) could attract the provisions of the Ordinance either in the matter of trial or in the matter of competency of the High Court in its revisional or other like jurisdiction. Following the Calcutta case already cited, his Lordship held that the jurisdiction of the High Court must be taken to have been left in tact notwithstanding the Ordinance and so also of the Magistrate who had taken cognisance of the case inasmuch as the criminal proceeding had started before the Ordinance was made. They, therefore, held that the trial by the special Magistrate under the Ordinance amounted to no trial, and their Lordships exercised their power under S. 491, Criminal P. C. and came to a decision that the accused was being detained without a trial. They, therefore, ordered his release forthwith.

[3] Similar view repelling retrospectivity of laws in relation to its interference with the pre-existing right of appeal has been taken by a Special Bench case of the High Court of Allahabad, in the case of Ram Singh v. Shankar Dayal, 111 I. C. 6 : (A. I. R, (15) 1928 ALL. 437 F. B.)

[4] I think the question is put beyond any doubt by Art. 135 of the Constitution. It reads: "Until the Parliament by law otherwise provides, the Supreme Court shall also have jurisdiction and powers with respect to any matter to which the provisions of Art. 133 or Art 134 do not apply if jurisdiction and powers in relation to that matter were exercisable by the Federal Court immediately before the commencement of this Constitution under any existing law." As I have already said, Art. 133 does not apply to the facts of this case. In the circumstances, Art. 135 must govern, that is the law that defines the jurisdiction of the Federal Court should apply.

[5] It may also be noted that this application for leave to appeal had been filed long before the Constitution came into force. We should therefore, grant the petitioner the necessary certificate giving leave to appeal to the Supreme Court. The learned counsel for the opposite parties has behaved before us in an ideal manner and invited our attention to the most of the authorities on which we have acted. Under the circumstances, we make no order for costs of this proceeding. Each party should bear its own costs.

[6] The prayer for stay of execution is rejected. The opposite parties shall be entitled to take out execution on furnishing security to the satisfaction of the Court below so as to safeguard restitution by the petitioner in case he succeeds in the Supreme Court.

(a) Penal Code (1860), S. 366 — Intention of compulsion to marry.

Even repeated requests to a girl who knew her limitations, namely, that she was completely within the grip of the requester where she was imprisoned and was given no food and drink, certainly amounts to forcing her to consent. Even if consent in such circumstances would have been given, that would not amount to consent in law. This is hardly anything less than what can be called 'force' in law. Requisite intention that she may be compelled to marry is present in such a case. [Para 6]

* Reported in A. I. R. (30) 1943 Pat. 245—Ed.

Ray C. J.—The appellant has been convicted under Ss. 366 and 342, Penal Code, and has been sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three years and pay a fine of Rs. 100/- for the first offence and six months rigorous imprisonment for the second.

[2] The prosecution case is that the appellant abducted the girl (P. W. 1) while she was on her way back after purchase of paddy in Nuapali village in company with about 9 or 10 others each of whom had a bag load of paddy on the head. The accused happened to be by the side of the road when Chandramma and party were proceeding to the aforesaid village for purchase of paddy. He also was found loitering on the road near a tank while they were returning. He came with a stick from behind the girl and pushed down the bag load of paddy from her head and forcibly carried her away in his arms—lifting her body by putting one hand under the knees and another around the neck. In this condition, he took her to some distance and then dragged her to his house through the back door and bolted the same. First of all, he took her to the house by back door then to the middle house which was then closed. Certain outsiders, being informed of the occurrence by P. Ws. 3 and 4, wanted to intercede on her behalf and presuade the appellant to let her go but to no effect. Later, the village Karji was informed, who also came on the scene and repeated the same request but in vain. He then submitted his report to the Police on which the First Information Report was recorded. Before the Karji sent his report, the father of the girl had also come to the place on getting information from somebody whom he could not name. The girl was brought into the room at about 10.30 A.M. and was kept confined till 5 P.M. of the day when, only on the appearance of the Sub-Inspector on the spot, the door was opened and she had to come away. At the time when she was released, she was found to be perspiring, weeping and almost run down; for sometime she fainted, but her mother took her up into a relation's house where she was given some food. Later, she conducted the Sub-Inspector to the place from where she was forcibly carried away, and the paddy bag, that she had been carrying at the time, was identified, out of several other such bags belonging to her companions and was seized. The Sub-Inspector made an investigation and submitted charge-sheet. Ultimately, the appellant was put on trial and has been convicted and sentenced as above.

[3] The evidence consists of that of the girl and her two companions, P. Ws. 3 and 4. These are the eye-witnesses. P. W. 2 is the father who came to the scene after hearing about abduction. The only inmate in the house of the accused on the date of the occurrence was his mother who has not been examined either by the prosecution or by the defence nor is it known under what circumstances she was left out. The learned Sessions Judge has believed the evidence of P. Ws. 1, 3 and 4 on the point of actual occurrence, namely, carrying and dragging the girl inside the house and putting her in confinement. He has believed P. W. 1 with regard to her story that this confinement and abduction was with the object of compelling her to marry. The evidence of witnesses, other than those mentioned above, is more or less corroborative proving the antecedent and subsequent facts which strongly probabilise the prosecution story. Mr. P. V. Rao, the learned counsel for the appellant, except raising certain points, does not seriously dispute the story in its broad outlines nor has he indulged, and that I think rightly, in dealing with immaterial discrepancies in the statements of the different witnesses deposing on an identical point. The points of dispute are: (i) that the girl had come to the accused's house voluntarily; (ii) assuming that she was dragged, it does not amount to an offence under S. 366, as the prosecution has failed to establish from the facts and circumstances proved that the abduction was with the intent that she may be compelled to marry the appellant against her will; it is not the prosecution case that the intention of the appellant in abducting her (P. W. 1) was that she may be forced or induced to have illicit connexion; (iii) assuming her story—her being lodged in a room which was bolted—to be true, it does not amount to an offence of wrongful confinement.

[4] I shall deal with these points seriatim in the order in which I have referred to them.

[5] That the girl came of her own accord to the accused's house is urged on the basis of a few statements on record, namely, that she was in the habit of coming to the accused's house now and then, both during when her eldest sister, the lawful married wife of the appellant, was in the place and also when she was absent. It is urged that had she been forcibly dragged in the manner alleged by the prosecution, she must have sustained certain injuries, in view of the fact that she was dragged for some distance over the field on which there were shrubs, and bushes here and there; and, further, that it would be impossible to believe that she, when carried against her will, would not struggle and would inflict injury on the body of the appellant. As to her coming of her own accord to the house of the accused, there is no evidence in support of it except the statement of the accused. The circumstances are militant against the theory as according to the evidence of P. W. 2 and P.W 1 herself the appellant was not on good terms with his first wife (Chandramma's eldest sister) and the latter had left her husband's place and come to reside with her father. The difference between them was due to the fact that all her children so far born, about five in number, died premature deaths and the appellant wanted to marry afresh. There is some difference of version as to whether she gave her consent to such marriage. But from the statement of the accused in his examination under S. 342, Criminal P. C., it appears that she gave up taking her meals for three days when her husband (the appellant) had gone out to Ganjam to seek for a marriageable girl and that she had to be sent away to her father's place. Chandramma is a girl of 17 and it is inconceivable that she should take this difference between her sister and her husband in lighter spirit. Under the circumstances, after her eldest sister came over to live in her father's house, the younger should (not?) like to go there of her own accord. With regard to the absence of the injuries likely to be caused by the forcible dragging there is no evidence either way. Unfortunately, the Sub-Inspector did not send up the girl for medical examination for that purpose. According to his statement, he had sent up the girl to the doctor for examination of her age. There is no dispute that she has reached 17. Therefore, non-examination of the doctor leads to no point in favour of the defence. Under the circumstance in the absence of any evidence as to presence or absence of injuries, it is difficult to speculate. Even if such injuries are to be expected, they should be merely slight scratches. In view of the fact that the girl belongs to a labour class and is accustomed to walk on such rugged and bushy grounds, it is likely she may not incur any such injuries by such forcible dragging. Lastly, with regard to whether she would struggle and, in course of that, would inflict injuries on the body of the appellant, there is no likelihood, because as the learned Judge observed "the appellant is a strong and a robust man of 30 while the girl though 17 is lean and thin."Besides, they were previously known to each other, being very near relations. Under the circumstances, it is difficult to believe that the girl would struggle and that seriously. Under the circumstances, I would accept the finding recorded by the trial Court that the girl was, in fact, forcibly carried. The two eye-witnesses, P. Ws. 3 and 4, have given their evidence without any serious contradiction, nor is there anything to suggest that they had been tutored. There was suggestion to P. W. 3 in cross-examination whether she was a servant under P. W. 2, the appellant's father-in law. She repelled that suggestion as untrue. Mr. Rao relies upon this suggestion with great emphasis. That this suggestion was an after-thought is clear from the fact that it was never made to P. W. 2 while it was known P.W. 3 was going to be examined as a prosecution witness. With regard to P.W. 4. it is contended that her name was not mentioned as one of the members of the party that proceeded in company with Chandramma for purchase of paddy and in this connexion he further argues that on her own statement she was not examined by the Sub-Inspector during the investigation. In the First Information Report, it is written that "ten Mailpila had accompanied Chandramma for purchasing paddy." It is urged that they should not exclude P. W. 4 who was a boy. In the list of ten persons appended to the report, the name of the 4th man is Pirinti Ramayya which is admittedly a male name. P. W. 4 was in fact, examined by the Police on the very first day. Therefore, I would read the word "Maipila" to mean "to both women and children". So there is no substance in this point. The evidence of P. Ws. 3 and 4 is, therefore, quite convincing and there is no reason to disbelieve any one of them. The next contention of Mr. Rao is that at any rate the requisite intention for the offence has not been established. He argues this on the strength of statement made by P. W. 1, which reads: "the accused was all along requesting me to marry him." His submission is that mere request and keeping her sometime in his house in order to get an opportunity to request repeatedly and in an impressive manner will not make out an intention that she may be compelled to marry. This statement, however, carries a different meaning from what it is sought to attribute to it in view of the context in which it stands. The passage, of which the expression referred to is the last sentence, reads:

"It is not a fact that I used to go to the house of the accused very often. Nor is it a fact that he and I are friends. I never went to his house with my sister. During my childhood, I might have gone there once or twice with my mother. I was not afraid of the Police on seeing the Police on that day. The accused was all along requesting me to marry him."

It is admitted that the appellant had been requesting his father-in-law, P. W. 2 (who is also his maternal uncle) to give Chandramma in marriage to him on account of failure of issue by his first wife and that P. W. 2 used always to refuse. It is also admitted that the appellant was on frequently visiting terms to Chandramma's house. The meaning of this passage is, therefore, clear that while requesting the father to give his daughter in marriage, the daughter was also being requested from time to time to agree. This statement is in reference to what happened inside the room where she was confined.

As to what happened there is deposed to by Chandramma as follows:

"Some outsiders asked the accused to open the doors, but he refused to open it. The accused asked me to stay there as he would marry me. I refused to stay there and marry him, as he had turned out my sister. Inside the room, I was standing and crying."

[6] This is the evidence from which the intention has to be judged. If this evidence is believed, as it is believed, it is clear that the accused's intention was not only to persuade her to change her mind to accept him as her groom but also to marry her, her refusal notwithstanding, that he kept her confined from 10 30 A. M. to 5 P. M. while the girl was standing and crying and refused to stay and marry and gave out her reasons which were very convincing. There can be no other conclusion than that his intention was to compel her to marry or, if opportunity permitted, to marry her forcibly. Even repeated requests to one who knew her limitations, namely, that she was completely within the grip of the requester where she was imprisoned and was given no food and drink, certainly amounted to forcing her to consent. Even if consent in such circumstances would have been given, that would not amount to consent in law. This is hardly anything less than what can be called 'force' in law. I have, therefore, no hesitation in concluding that the requisite intention was there, and the offence under S 366 as charged, has been committed and the appellant has been rightly found guilty under the section.

[7] With regard to the finding of wrongful confinement, Mr. Rao controverts whether the middle room in which she was lodged was chained from outside or bolted from inside. His submission that if it was bolted from inside, it was quite open to her to open the door and come out. As she did not do so, there seems to be no desire in her to go out. The evidence on this point consists only that of the statement of P. W. 1 (Chandramma). The evidence of P. Ws. 3 and 4 must, from its very nature, be confined to bolting of the back door of the house. They do not say that they passed through back door or front door of the appellant's house and came near the middle room. Confining ourselves to the evidence of P. W. 1 on this point, she says that she was taken to the middle room and it was closed. Then follows her statement that in that room she was all along standing and crying and the appellant was asking her to marry. Mr. Rao is willing to take it as a fact that on the evidence, the appellant was in the same room as the girl. If that be so, the fact that the girl did not make an attempt to open the door would make no difference. She knew that she was hardly a match for a robust man like the appellant and that any attempt either to open the door or to run away would be completely fruitless. Let us take it to be a fact that he was not all the while in the room but the room was closed. In that case, it would mean closing it from outside. On that hypothesis, Mr. Rao is agreeable to accept that wrongful confinement is complete. Let us further assume that the middle room was not closed at all but the back door and the front door of the house were closed and admittedly the accused was inside. The result will be same. Absence of a desire to move on the part of the person confined no doubt, detracts from it being an offence under S. 342; but mere omission of an attempt to run away when there is a watch, does not mean absence of a desire. Mr. Rao has referred to us a passage from the Mayne's Commentary on Criminal Law to the effect that, if escape is open to a person and if he wished to avail himself of it, his confinement will not mean wrongful confinement. The question, therefore, is whether an escape was open to Chandramma. That an escape is open will not depend upon whether she could open the door herself if she wished, but upon whether she would be feeling confident that she should be able to extricate herself from the confinement notwithstanding the presence of the confiner, who was able-bodied, robust and strong man, as against a lean and thin girl who was confined. In this case it cannot be said that an escape was open to her. I should quote a passage from Ratnalal's Law of Crimes which seems to be based upon a decision of the Bombay High Court with which, with great respect, I agree. The passage is at p. 839 :

"Proof of actual physical obstruction is not essential to support a charge of wrongful confinement. It must in each case, be proved that there was at least such an impression produced in the mind of the person detained as to lead him reasonably to believe that he was not free to depart and that he would be forthwith restrained if attempted to do so. The mere threat of some future harm in case of departure would not suffice if he knew that it was open to him to go away and refrained from doing so lest he should suffer such harm. But if the circumstances were such as to justify and to create the belief that he could not depart without being seized immediately, then it would be proper to hold that he was obstructed and confined."

[8] In this case, I have already demonstrated from the circumstances proved and admitted, that Chandramma would have no other belief than that she could not depart without being seized immediately. In this view of the matter, I cannot accept the contention and shall hold, agreeing with the learned Sessions Judge, that the offence of wrongful confinement has also been established. In the result, the appellant's conviction under this section must stand.

[9] Mr. Rao has appealed to us in the circumstances of the present case as to severity of the sentence. The circumstances are as follows.

[10] The appellant's first wife is the eldest sister of Chandramma. The appellant was brought up in her father's family, the latter being his maternal uncle. That on account of failure of issues, as already referred to, he was intent upon and had expressed his desire to marry Chandramma. He had been bold enough to advance his proposals to Chandramma directly. There is nothing to show that if her father agreed to the marriage she would be an unwilling agent. The circumstances were different, however, when she was abducted, wrongfully confined and then asked to agree to the marriage. All the while, there are reasons for the appellant to believe that if he could have the girl in his house, the latter would agree and the father-in-law would reconcile himself to the position. As a matter of fact, he has used no voilence to the girl nor has made any effort to outrage her modesty. Under the circumstances, rigorous imprisonment for one year would meet the ends of justice. According to the judgment of the Court below, both the sentences should run concurrently. It will be so in this Court also. The sentence of fine does not seem to be severe and must stand.

[11] In this result, the sentence of three years rigorous imprisonment under S. 366, Penal Code, shall be reduced to one year. Subject to this modification in the sentence, the appeal is dismissed.

Shri R. K. Das for Petitioners, — Government Advocate, for Opposite Party.

ORDER: The petitioners four in number are the marfatdars of Sri Kasi Baijunath Mahadev Temple at Majhika in Angul and have been convicted under section 6 of the Orissa Temple Entry Act of 1946 and sentenced each to a fine of Rs. 50/-. The case against them is that on 8-9-48 they obstructed certain worshippers belonging to the "Excluded Classes" from entering into the temple. Previous to the date of the occurrence there had been some meetings to consider whether "Excluded Classes" would be permitted to enter into the temple. But it does not appear from the evidence if any definite decision was arrived at. On the day of occurrence certain members of the "Excluded Classes" tried to get admission into the temple and being frustrated in their attempt complained to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate who deputed P. W. 1 to see that no breach of the peace occurred and that the members of the "Excluded Classes" gained entrance into the temple. P. W. 1 on arrival at the spot asked Budhia Mahapatra, one of the Petitioners to hand over the key as the temple had been locked up at the time P. W. 1 arrived. Persuasions having failed, a formal complaint was lodged to the police at about 1 p.m. against the Petitioners and the complaint is that the Petitioners refused to open the temple to the 'Harijans'.

(2) A number of points were raised in the trial court as well as here. But those questions such as the public or private character of the temple, whether the Petitioners were observing pollution and for the time being were not acting as worshippers, whether the members who wanted admission into the temple do satisfy the definition of the "Excluded Classes" were not pressed. The substantial point on which argument has been addressed to me is whether on the facts deposed to by the P. W.s any offence under section 6 had been committed at all. The case does not relate to the incident prior to the arrival of P. W. 1 at the spot. The offence charged against the petitioners is that they refused to open the doors of the temple after P. W. 1 arrived. It must be admitted that the Marfatdars or the Shebaits who are in actual management of the temple and its rituals are the persons entitled to prescribe the hours for the purpose of the rituals. If therefore on the day of occurrence the Pujari, for the time being, performed the bhog at an hour earlier than usual it was perfectly within his power to do so. It may be and I have no doubt that it probably was so done with the intention of averting an unpleasant incident. But whatever may be the motive of the Pujaris their rights to regulate the hours of Puja cannot be questioned. If therefore by 10 a.m. the Puja had been performed, the bhog had been offered and the deity had been sent to sleep, it would not be open to any member of the general public whether belonging to the "Excluded Classes" or the "Highest Classes" to insist upon the doors being opened and the 'pahar' of the God being disturbed. Section 3 (i) of the Act lays down that persons belonging to the "Excluded Classes" shall be entitled to enter any temple and to offer worship therein "in the same manner and to the same extent as Hindus in general." The right to have the door opened and offer bhog at an odd hour is not one of the general rights of worship belonging to the Hindu Community nor can a member of the "Excluded Classes" acquire any such right under the Act. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the prosecution was misconceived and that no offence has been committed under section 6 of the Orissa Temple Entry Act. The Rule is made absolute. The convictions are set aside and the fines, if paid, shall be refunded.

M. S. Rao For Appellants, — M. M. Das For Respondent.

JUDGMENT: The plaintiff raised the suit for the recovery of mortgage moneys advanced under two mortgage deeds, viz. Ex. 2 dated 12-5-23 and Ex. 1 dated 1-4-30 executed by the defendant, for Rs. 25/- and Rs. 100/- respectively. The lands mortgaged were plot No. 230 and plots Nos. 1016 to 1018. The documents describe themselves as Dakhal Bandak and recite that the properties are put in possession of the mortgagee in lieu of interest and that the mortgagor shall not claim an account of the rents and profits issuing out of the lands, nor shall the mortgagee demand any interest for the sum lent. They further recite that if the principal amount is paid within the period fixed for redemption, the mortgaged properties shall stand redeemed. Under the first document the period fixed for redemption was nine years, while under the other document it was one year. The recital on which there has been controversy between the parties is as follows:

"If you are dispossessed you can file a suit for the principal amount, together with interest at Rs. 3-2-0 per cent per month and in execution of the decree, bring the mortgage properties to sale. If that is insufficient you will realize the same by attachment and sale of my other immoveable and moveable properties".

(2) It is admitted that the mortgagee was in possession under these two deeds till he was dispossessed by the defendants in 1946. This suit was, therefore, filed for recovery of the principal amount, together with interest.

(3) The learned Munsif granted a simple money decree to the plaintiff for Rs. 122/- with proportionate costs. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge, while upholding the findings of the Munsif reduced the amount which the plaintiff was entitled to, to Rs. 91-6-6. In the view of the Courts below the plaintiff was not entitled to a mortgage decree.

(4) In second appeal, the point that has very strenuously been urged before me by Mr. Rao, on behalf of the appellant, is that the documents (Exs. 1 and 2) are usufructuary mortgage bonds and are statutorily discharged under S. 17, Orissa Moneylenders Act. This section provides:

"Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any other law or anything having the force of law or in any contract, an usufructuary mortgage executed before or after the commencement of this Act shall, unless discharged previously, be deemed to stand discharged after the expiration of 15 years from the date of the mortgage".

In this case the mortgagee has admittedly been in possession for more than 15 years. If therefore, on a proper interpretation of the contents, the documents are held to be usufructuary mortgages, there can be no doubt that the mortage debt shall be deemed to have been discharged by reason of the plaintiff's possession for 15 years. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, held that the documents were anomalous mortgages and not usufructuary mortgages pure and simple. In both the documents there is a personal covenant to pay the mortgage amount by which the mortgagors undertook to pay the amount through the sale of their other properties. In both the documents, again, the mortgagor says that the mortgagor shall be primarily liable for the mortgage debt. In a usufructuary mortgage, as defined in S. 58(d) T.P. Act, all that the mortgagor does is to authorize the mortgagee to take possession of the mortgaged properties until the entire amount of mortgage is paid off and to receive the rents and profits accruing from the land either in lieu of interest or in payment of the mortgage money. The expression 'usufructuary mortgage' used in S. 17 is to be understood in the light of the definition of that expression occurring in S. 58 (d), T. P. Act. There can be no doubt that the deeds in question contain something more than what is required to create a usufructuary mortgage. Mr. Rao, however, contends that the documents are substantially usufructuary mortgages though they contain some additional provisions and that the insertion of these additional provisions does not detract from the character of the documents as usufructuary mortgages. This argument, however attractive, is not tenable in view of the classification of the various kinds of mortgages made in S. 58. A simple mortgage, for instance, is defined as a mortgage in which the mortgagor binds himself personally to pay the mortgage money and agrees to have the mortgaged property sold for realisation of the mortgage amount. If the provision relating to the delivery of possession of the properties were absent from these two documents, it may well be that they will satisfy all the requirements of a simple mortgage. The Act further defines 'anomalous mortgage' as a mortgage which is neither a simple mortgage nor a usufructuary mortgage. In the case before me I find that the documents are a combination of the requirements of a simple mortgage as well as an usufructuary mortgage and, in these circumstances, they must be held to be composite documents, that is to say, they are neither simple mortgages nor usufructuary mortgages pure and simple. The learned Subordinate Judge was therefore right in holding that Exs. 1 and 2 can only be described as anomalous mortgages and, as such they are outside the purview of S. 17, Orissa Moneylenders Act. In using the expression "usufructuary mortgage" in S. 17 the Legislature must be taken to have intended that other kinds of possession of a mortgagee were not going to be affected. If mere possession were to be the test then a mortgage by conditional sale or even an English mortgage would equally be affected by S. 17, Orissa Moneylenders' Act. It does not, in my opinion, stand to reason that the Legislature should use an expression to denote a particular kind of mortgage with possession, when the meaning of that very expression is well understood as covering other kinds of mortgages with possession. Nothing would have been simpler for the Legisature than to say that a mortgage with possession would be discharged after fifteen years of continuous possession by the mortgagee. As at present advised, I am unable to accede to the contention of Mr. Rao that all kinds of mortgages with possession are governed by S. 17, Orissa Moneylenders Act.

(5) The judgment under appeal is therefore confirmed and the appeal dismissed. There shall be no order as to costs.

Where property is sold in execution of an 'ex-parte' decree and purchased 'bona fide' by a third party for value and the 'ex parte' decree is subsequently set aside, restitution will not ordinarily be granted against such stranger auction-purchaser, who is not bound to make any enquiry into the correctness of the order for execution. B. K. Pal, for Petitioner; — L. K. Dasgupta, for Opposite Party.

NARASIMHAM J: This revision petition is against the appellate order of the Additional District Magistrate of Cuttack exercising the powers of a Collector under the Orissa Tenancy Act dismissing an appeal filed by the petitioner against the order of the Rent-Suit Deputy Collector, Jaipur, rejecting his petition for restitution.

(2) The material facts are as follows: The petitioner was a tenure-holder (Madhyasatwadhikari) in respect of 12 acres 50 decimals of rent-free 'Lakhraj Bahel' lands in mouza, Barunia, khata No. 12 appertaining to touzi No. 18. Only cess was payable in respect of the property amounting to Rs. 6-3-0 per annum to the zamindar Pandit Shyamsundar Nath Satho (opposite party 2). The zamindar obtained an ex-parte decree for arrear cess against the petitioner on 22-2-43 and in execution of the same put the property to sale. On 4-6-43 the entire property was purchased by opposite party 1 for a paltry sum of Rs .45/- and the sale was confirmed on 12-7-43 and delivery of possession was also effected on or before 26-11-43.

(3) In the meantime as early as 15-3-43 the petitioner had applied for setting aside the ex-parte decree and on 2-4-43 deposited a portion of the claim in Court. On 25-7-45 the 'ex-parte' decree was set aside and after revival of the rent suit it was dismissed on full satisfaction. In the execution proceeding the petitioner-judgment-debtor on 10-1-44 filed an objection under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C. for setting aside the sale on the gronud of fraud and material irregularity. The auction-purchaser (opposite party 1) filed an objection. The execution Court on 23-6-47 passed the following order.

"Suit has been dismissed as is seen from the certified copy of the order. Order 21, R. 90 application has been stayed. It is dismissed as the whole proceedings in the execution proceeding are null and void".

The aforesaid order of the rent-suit Deputy Collector is clearly wrong. If the entire execution proceeding became null and void in consequence of the setting aside of the 'ex-parte decree and the original suit after revival was dismissed on full satisfaction the executing Court should not have dismissed the application under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C. but may have recorded a note to the effect that it had become infructuous. Perhaps this is what the Court meant though the use of the expression "dismissed" has led to some argument at the Bar before us.

(4) The petitioner then applied for restitution of the entire property basing his claim mainly on the fact that as the whole suit had been dismissed on full satisfaction the sale in execution of the 'ex-parte' decree should not stand. In that restitution he specifically alleged that opposite party 1 was not a stranger but a creature of the 'zamindar' (opposite party 2) and that valuable property had been sold for a paltry sum. Thus his clear case was that opposite party 1 was not a 'bona fide' purchaser for value but was a creature of the decree-holder himself. On this allegation the executing Court ought to have allowed the parties to lead evidence and then come to a clear decision as to whether the acution-purchaser (opposite party 1) was or was not a 'bona fide' purchaser for value. Instead of determining this question the Court rejected the restitution petition on the ground that it was not maintainable. On appeal the learned Additional District Magistrate maintained the order chiefly on the ground that opposite party 1 was a stranger auction-purchaser and that restitution cannot be ordered against him.

(5) Both the Courts have completely misconceived the law on the subject and have failed to exercise their jurisdiction properly. The law on the subject is clear. Where property is sold in execution of an 'ex-parte' decree and purchased 'bona fide' by a third party for value and the 'ex-parte' decree is subsequently set aside, restitution will not ordinarily be granted against such stranger auction-purchaser. This principle was laid down by Privy Council as early as 1886 in the well-known case of 'Rewa Mahton v. Ram Krishen 13 I. A. 106: (14 Cal 18 P. C.)'. Their Lordships particularly emphasised that a person purchasing 'bona fide', and for a fair value, property exposed for sale under an execution issued by a Court of competent jurisdiction was not bound to make any enquiry into the correctness of the order for execution. The same principle was reiterated in 'Zainul-Abdin Khan v. Muhammad Asghar Ali Khan', 15 I. A. 12: (10 All 166 P. C.) where restitution was refused as against third party auction-purchasers. Similarly in 'Janukdhari Lal v. Gossain Lal, 11 C. L. J. 254: (37 Cal 107)' the Calcutta High Court relying on the aforesaid decisions of the Privy Council pointed out that a 'bona fide' purchaser for value without notice in execution of an 'ex-parte' decree could not be put on the same category as the decree-holder auction-purchaser and that restitution may not be available as against him. Again in 'Parsh Nath v. Haricharan', 38 Cal 622: (10 I C 361) it was held that the purchase made by an innocent purchaser for value" in execution of an 'ex-parte' decree should not be disturbed even though the 'ex-parte' decree might have been subsequently set aside. To a similar effect are the observations of the Allahabad High Court in 'Peary Lal v. Hanifunnissa Bibi', A I R (3) 1916 All 159: (38 All 240) and the observations of the Patna High Court in 'Chota Nagpur Banking Association v. C. T. M.Smith', A I R (30) 1943 Pat 325: 22 Pat 315).

(6) The reason for thus making an exception in favour of a 'bona fide' purchaser for value is clear. Ordinarily when the decree on which the execution sale takes place is set aside the Court should restore the parties to the position which they originally held so that the action of the Court may not prejudice either party. But on some occasions this equitable principle may conflict with another rule of equity to the effect that a 'bona fide' purchaser for value should not be allowed to suffer for the mistake of the Court. To quote Jenkins, C. J. (Paresh Nath v. Haricharan, 38 Cal 622 at P 627: (10 I C 361).

"At the same time it is the policy of the Court and a very wise policy to protect its purchasers, for although in an individual case there may be some hardship, it would be far more prejudicial to the general body of judgment-debtors that any doubt should be thrown upon titles acquired by purchasers in execution under decrees which are to all appearances in order and free from objection".

But this rule is not an inflexible rule and even against 'bona fide' purchasers for value restitution has been allowed in exceptional circumstances such as where the sale itself was without jurisdiction (see 'Janukdharilal v. Gossain Lal', 11 C. L. J. p. 254: (37 Cal 107) or there has been a mistake or material irregularity of the Court) (Radha Bai v. Jagannadha Naidu, A I R (24) 1937 Mad 694: (169 I C 783).).

(7) In the present case it is unnecessary to consider whether S. 144 Civil P. C. will in terms apply where restitution is asked for on the basis of the reversal of the decree by the very same Court and not by any superior Court. There is doubtless some conflict of judicial decisions on this question. But it is now well-settled since the decision of the Privy Council in 'Jai Berham v. Kedar Nath, 49 I A 351: (A I R (9) 1922 P C 269) that:

"It is inherent in the general jurisdiction of the Court to act rightly and fairly according to the circumstances towards all parties involved".

Thus even if S. 144, Civil P. C. may not in terms apply the Court has inherent powers under S. 151 Civil P. C. to grant restitution.

(8) It is thus clear that restitution in favour of the petitioner can be refused only if opposite party 1 can show that he is a 'bona fide' purchaser for value. If the allegations made by the petitioner in his restitution petition are believed it is clear that opposite party 1 being a creature of the decree-holder was not a 'bona fide' purchaser at all. The property has been sold for a grossly inadequate price of Rs. 45/-. Valuable rent-free property of 12 acres 50 decimals would surely have fetched several thousands of rupees as fair price. In fact I notice that the record contains a mortgage bond dated 29-1-20 from which it appears that the previous owner of the property mortgaged 5 acres 19 decimals of the property with the petitioner for Rs. 300/- in 1920. It will be idle to contend that when the entire property was purchased in 1943 for Rs. 45/- the "purchase was for fair value". For some reason or other, evidence was not taken by trial court on the question of 'bona fide' of opposite party 1 and the fair value of the property. This is perhaps because the lower court was in some confusion as to the principle underlying restitution petitions and thought that it had no jurisdiction to grant restitution in cases of this type. I am however unable to dispose of this revision petition in the absence of a clear finding as to whether opposite party 1 is really a 'bona fide' purchaser for value or not.

(9) The petition is allowed, the orders of the lower courts are set aside and the trial court is directed to give both parties an opportunity to lead evidence on the limited question as to whether opposite party 1 is a 'bona fide' purchaser for fair value and then dispose of the restitution petition in accordance with law bearing in mind the legal position explained above.

Costs will abide the result.

Where there have been gross irregularities in the service of processes and the judgment-debtor did not know of the existence of the decree against him or of the subsequent stages of execution but there is no reliable evidence to attribute any specific act to the decree-holder designed to keep the judgment-debtor from knowledge of the proceedings, still if the price fetched at the Court sale is a gross undervaluation this must be attributed to the irregularity in the service of notices. ORDER: The petitioner is the transferee from the auction-purchaser at a rent sale held on 15-7-43 of lands measuring 2.8 acres in holding No. 402 in Mouza Gopalpur. The petitioner purchased the property from the auction-purchaser on 17-5-46 and took delivery through Court on 19-11-46. The judgment-debtor opposite party filed an application under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., read with S. 18, Limitation Act, for setting aside the sale. This application was made on 13-12-46. The Deputy Collector who had seisin of the case found that there were several irregularities in the service of the sale proclamation and attachment order; that the sale notice was not properly proclaimed; and that the sale proclamation and attachment order were not served in the presence of either the president or the Tahsil punchayat. In his opinion these irregularities "kept the door wide open for fraud in this respect" and his ultimate finding is that there were gross irregularities in serving processes. Having regard to the fact that the suit property measured over 2½ acres and had been knocked down at the sale for a sum of Rs. 30/- and that the transferee purchased it later from the auction-purchaser for Rs. 200/-, the Trial Court was justified in holding that in order to secure the suit lands for a low price, the decree-holder:

"fraudulently manoeuvred with regard to the service of the necessary sale proclamation and attachment notices".

The Trial Court has further observed that he would have set aside the sale if the application had been filed within 30 days of the sale. The decree had been passed 'ex-parte' and so far as the judgment-debtor's knowledge is concerned, none of the execution notices appears to have been served upon him. In view of his finding that there were irregularities in the service of processes and that the sale-price was very low, the Trial Court was justified in inferring that the decree-holder (who was the sole bidder at the auction sale) was himself responsible for manoeuvring the sale and that he was guilty of fraud.

(2) The Trial Court, however, refused to set aside the sale as, in his view, the decree-holder was not responsible for the ignorance of the judgment-debtor with regard to the attachment and he was not actively responsible for any act which might have kept the judgment-debtor out of knowledge. The Appellate Court held that in view of the finding with regard to the conduct of the sale it was upon the decree-holder to prove that the judgment-debtor knew of the sale. It is urged in revision that this view of the appellate court is erroneous, and Mr. Pal appearing for the transferee from the auction-purchaser rightly points out the distinction between fraud arising from irregularities in the conduct of the sale and fraud as contemplated under S. 18, Limitation Act. Section 18 says that if a person had been kept from his knowledge of the rights by means of fraud limitation will run from the date of knowledge. The question therefore is: is there any material on the record to impute any act to the decree-holder which would amount to keeping the judgment-debtor from the necessary knowledge? It appears to me that the fraud envisaged in S. 18, Limitation Act, contemplates some definite act committed by the decree-holder. But it may well be that a concealment of facts which would otherwise amount to notice or bring the same to the knowledge of the judgment-debtor would equally be an act of fraud. If, for instance, the decree-holder takes steps not only to see that the requisite notices do not reach the judgment-debtor but also to see that the sale is made to take place in circumstances which do not attract sufficient number of bidders, so that the property may fetch a reasonable price, then I would be inclined to hold that there had been a concealment of facts or circumstances amounting to fraud which has kept the judgment-debtor out of the knowledge of his right. Where a person gets property by committing fraud of this sort, it is for him to show that the person injured by his act and suing to recover the property, has had clear and definite knowledge of those facts which constitute fraud at a time which is too remote to allow him to bring the suit. This was the dictum of Lord Hobhouse in (Rahimbhoy v. Turner), 17 Bom 341: 20 I.A 1 (PC) The true position then is, as Mookerji J points out in (Biman Chandra v. Promothonath Ghose), 49 Cal 886 at p. 891: (A I R (9) 1922 Cal 157), that where a suit is, on the face of it, barred, it is for the plaintiff to prove, in the first instance, the circumstances which would prevent the statute from having its ordinary effect. A person, who, in such circumstances, desires to invoke the aid of S. 18, Limitation Act, must establish that there had been fraud and that by means of such fraud he has been kept from his knowledge of his right to sue or of the title whereon it is founded. Once this is established, the burden is shifted on to the other side to show that the plaintiff had knowledge of the transaction beyond the period of limitation. In cases where the property has changed hands on account of any act committed by the party accused of fraud, or if there be circumstances which would reasonably lead to the inference that the opposite party had been deprived of knowledge, the Courts are more astute in applying the test. In a recent case, brought to my notice, reported in (Marudanayagam v. Manickavasagam), 49 CWN 292: (AIR (32) 1945 P. C. 67) — the Privy Council laid down that where a sale takes place at a serious under-valuation occasioned by failure on the part of the Court and of the decree-holder to carry out the obligations laid down under the Civil Procedure Code, the case falls within the language of O. 21, R. 90 and the sale must be set aside when the judgment-debtor has suffered injury thereby, although the decree-holder may not have been guilty of fraud, and however dilatory the judgment debtor may have been provided there has been nothing on his part to constitute a waiver. Applying this rule of law to the facts of the case before me, I find that there have been gross irregularities in the service of processes, that the judgment-debtor did not know of the existence of the decree against him or of the subsequent stages of the execution, though there is no reliable evidence to attribute any specific act to the decree-holder, designed to keep the judgment-debtor from knowledge of the proceedings. Even in such a case, if the price fetched at the sale is a gross under-valuation, this must be attributed to the irregularity in the service of the notices In such cases, the decree-holder cannot escape the charge of fraud, nor can the judgment-debtor be deprived of the benefit of the provisions of S. 18, Limitation Act.

(3) The sale has, therefore, to be set aside as the judgment-debtor has suffered injury on account of the circumstances created by the decree-holder in irregularly publishing and conducting the sale. I am satisfied that the order of the lower appellate court in this case is correct, though his reasoning is somewhat defective. I see no reason to interfere in revision. This revision is dismissed.

JUDGMENT: These matters come up before me as the Taxing Judge as a result of the decision of the Bench in these appeals that it has no jurisdiction to deal with the matter. Acting on the suggestion made in the order of the Bench and with a view to avoid any further delay in this long pending matter, I propose to treat the reference by the Registrar as a reference by the Taxing Officer to me, the Registrar himself being under the rules of this Court, also the Taxing Officer. These four appeals arise out of three suits which along with four other suits were filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sambalpur by various rival claimants to the Barpalli Zamindary which were all tried analogously and were disposed of by a common judgment of the Subordinate Judge. Appeal No. 45 is by the plaintiff in T. S. No. 11/49. Appeal No. 48 is by the plaintiff in T. S. No. 8/39. Both these suits were filed as mere declaratory suits and court-fee on the two appeals therefrom was filed on the footing of mere declaration. Appeals Nos. 46 and 47 are against the decree in T. S. No. 10/39 by two of the defendants therein who are respectively the plaintiffs in T. S. Nos. 11 and 8 of 1939. T. S. No. 10 of 39 was filed as a suit for declaration and possession and treating this as a prayer for declaration and consequential relief, 'ad valorem' court-fee was paid in the trial Court on the plaint in that suit. When it came to a question of appeal against it in this Court, the appellant in F. A. No. 46 paid the 'ad valorem' court-fee while the appellant in F. A. No. 47, treating the prayer for possession in the Plaint in O. S. 10 of 39 as mere surplusage, in the circumstances to be set out later, paid on his appeal memorandum only the declaratory Court-fee.

(2) The court-fee originally paid on the appeal memoranda in F. A. Nos. 45, 46 and 48 was considered as sufficient by the Stamp Reporter and on his reports the three appeals were admitted by the Registrar by his order dated 8-3-49. In Appeal No. 47 however, the Stamp Reporter noticing the fact that on the plaint in the suit out of which that appeal arose 'ad valorem' court-fee was paid, was of the opinion that in the appeal also 'ad valorem court-fee was payable and not merely a declaratory court-fee, which was all that was paid by the appellant. He accordingly placed the matter before the Registrar for orders. When the matter came up before the Registrar on 9-5-49, he directed that it should be posted before him along with F. A. Nos. 45, 46 and 48 relating to the matter of court-fees (though he had already admitted those three by his prior order dated 8-3-49). As appears from his subsequent orders he adopted this course presumably because he had the impression that the valuation of the suit-property given in all these four appeals was abnormally low. It may be mentioned that in the trial Court, the valuation of the suit-property for purposes of jurisdiction and court-fee was fixed at Rs. 25,000/- by the learned Subordinate Judge by his order in T. S. No. 19 of '39 which is one of the batch of suits. That valuation has been adopted for all the suits. The appellants in these four appeals have also adopted that valuation for their appeal memoranda. It may also be noticed that in the trial Court, the actual valuation did not matter so far as the suits in which only a declaratory relief was prayed for, but even in the appeals against those suits, the correct valuation is of some consequence since by virtue of the Orissa Court-fees Act, V (5) of 1939 which came into force subsequent to the institution of the suits, a court-fee is payable in respect of declaratory relief, dependant on valuation and based on the slab system. In view of the fresh importance which the valuation of the suit-property has thus acquired, the Taxing Officer called upon the appellants in the four appeals by his order dated 10-9-1949 to furnish statements showing (a) market value of the property in dispute; (b) annual net profits thereof in the year next preceding the institution of the suit. These statements not having been filed within the time granted by the Registrar, all the four appeals were placed before the Bench for orders. The statements were filed on 23-11-49 and a Bench of this Court by its order dated 28-11-49, in all these four appeals, remitted the matter back to the office directing the office to ascertain the market value on the basis of those statements. The appeals thereupon went back to the Stamp Reporter who on 29-11-1949 made a report that the value of the suit property is Rs. 48,000/-, calculating the same at eight times the net annual profits of Rs. 6,000/- as shown by the statements filed on 23-11-49 and that court-fee in all the appeals was payable on the basis of the revised valuation. The matter came up again before the Registrar, who while accepting the statements filed, relating to the net annual profits did not accept the valuation reported by the Stamp Reporter. He was of the view that both the valuation of Rs. 25,000/- as originally fixed by the trial Court as also the valuation of Rs. 48,000/- reported by the Stamp Reporter were low. He therefore fixed the valuation at Rs. 1,20,000/- being twenty times the net profits. He was of the opinion that the court-fee in all the four appeals has had to be paid on the basis of that valuation. He was further of the opinion that in respect of Appeal No. 47, the appellant was not entitled to treat the appeal as involving only a declaratory relief but should ask both declaration and possession and pay 'ad valorem' court-fee on the value as fixed by him. It is in these circumstances that the matter comes to me for a decision on the question of the court-fee payable.

(3) Questions of some importance relating to the practice in such matters have been raised: (1) It is said that so far as the Apps. Nos. 45, 46 and 48 are concerned, the court-fee originally paid thereon having been accepted as sufficient and the appeals having been filed and admitted, the Registrar as the Taxing Officer had no power to reopen the same. It has been pointed out that under the terms of S. 5, Court-fees Act, the Taxing Officer has the power to deal with such a matter only if any difference arises between the party concerned and the Stamp Reporter and not when the Stamp Reporter has accepted the court-fee paid as sufficient; (2) The second point that is raised is that the valuation of the suit-property having been fixed by the trial Court, the Taxing Officer cannot reopen the same and determine the value afresh, and thereby constitute himself into an appellate Court against the decision of the lower Court. (3) It is also urged that the Taxing Officer has no power to call for any fresh evidence for the ascertainment of the value, and (4) that in any case, the Taxing Officer has no power to fix the value over and above what the Stamp Reporter has fixed.

(4) It would appear from R. 14, Chap. VII of the Rules of this High Court that the Stamp Reporter is an officer charged with the duty of examining whether the court-fee on the appeal memorandum is sufficient, and it appears to be arguable that the Taxing Officer's jurisdiction arises only when there is a difference between the Stamp Reporter and the party concerned as to the proper court-fee payable. In 'Bhubaneswar Trigunait, In the goods of, AIR (12) 1925 Cal 1201: (52 Cal 871), Rankin J. seems to have been of the view that such a difference between the Stamp Reporter and the litigant is not necessary in order to give jurisdiction to the Taxing Officer. His Lordship was of the opinion that the difference between a Court clerk and a suitor and on some sort of formal reference to decide that dispute and that the intention of S. 5 is merely to ensure that the question should be raised before the Taxing Officer and that he should bring his mind to bear on it and decide it." See contra per Jwala Prasad J., 'Krishna Mohan v. Raghunandan Pandey, A I R (12) 1925 Pat, 392 at 402: (4 Pat 336 F B).

"the jurisdiction of the Taxing Officer does not arise like the jurisdiction of an arbitrator upon

It is unnecessary for me to express any final opinion on this matter because the Taxing Officer in this case is the Registrar of the Court and there can be no doubt that the Registrar as the Head of the High Court Office by virtue of S. 28, Court-fees Act has the power to collect the proper court-fee in respect of an appeal memorandum which through mistake or inadvertence has been filed already and accepted as having been sufficiently stamped. Once the matter has been reopened by the Registrar under S. 28, the question very properly goes back to the Stamp Reporter and comes up again to him as the Taxing Officer and thence to the Taxing Judge on a proper reference. Further in the present case, it is the Stamp Reporter that has in fact reopened the valuation under orders of Court dated 28-11-49. The Stamp Reporter has been vested with the power to reopen the valuation under R. 18 of Chap. VII of the High Court Rules which apparently is auxiliary to the power vested in the Court under S. 28, Court-fees Act.

(5) I am satisfied also that there is no substance in the contention that the Taxing Officer has no power to fix a valuation over and above what the Stamp Reporter reports to be the correct valuation. Under the terms of S. 5, the Taxing Officer is not in the nature of an appellate Court against the decision of the Stamp Reporter so as to give room for any possible argument that his decision cannot go beyond what the Stamp Reporter has decided. Indeed it is to be noticed that under S. 5, the Stamp Reporter is not even called upon to give a decision but his duty is to refer the matter to the Taxing Officer when any difference arises between him and the party. Of course he may indicate his views for the guidance of the Taxing Officer, but that in no sense is a decision.

(6) As regards the argument that the Taxing Officer cannot constitute himself into a Court of appeal against the decision of the trial Court on the question of valuation and that he cannot call for any fresh evidence on that matter, I am unable to agree with the same. The power of the Taxing Officer under S. 5, Court-fees Act or of the Registrar as the Head of the High Court Office under S. 28, are vested in him for the purpose of the protection of the proper stamp-revenue payable to the Government and no limitations are indicated in the exercise of those powers. Section 12 (2), Court-fees Act indicates that though the decision of the lower Court on the question of court-fee is final as regards that Court, it is also liable to be corrected by the superior Court without there being a specific appeal against the decision on the particular issue. Though it may be, that the Taxing Officer in reopening the question of valuation already settled by the trial Court, pronounces indirectly against the correctness of the decision of the lower Court, he is not in any sense sitting in appeal against it because his decision is not for the purpose of collecting the deficit Court-fee of the lower Court, but only for the collection of the proper court-fee in the High Court itself which is exclusively within his jurisdiction. I have therefore no doubt that the Taxing Officer has the power to reopen the question of valuation determined by the lower Court if it is necessary for the determination of the proper court-fee payable on the appeal memorandum to the High Court. This view is supported by the decision of the Full Bench in 'Krishna Mohan v. Raghunandan Pandey, A I R (12) 1925 Pat p. 392: (4 Pat 336 F B)'. While upholding the power of the Taxing Officer in this behalf, I would only add by way of caution that the decision of the lower Courts regarding valuation should receive due weight and respect and should not be lightly departed from excepting where the lower Court appears to have committed a gross error and the interests of the Government in the matter of court-fees have seriously suffered thereby.

(7) It cannot also be maintained that in exercising the power to reopen the question of valuation the Taxing Officer is confined to material already on record and available to the Court below. There is nothing in S. 5 or S. 28, Court-fees Act to limit the power in any such way. I think that it is permissible to call for additional evidence . I find support also for this view in the judgment of the Full Bench in 'Krishna Mohan v. Raghunandan Pandey,' A I R (12) 1925 Pat p. 392 at p. 396: (4 Pat 336 F B), where it has been stated by the learned Chief Justice as follows:

"Once it is determined that the power of the High Courts to decide the amount of the fee payable on the memorandum of appeal presented in those Courts is delegated to the Taxing Officer and to the Taxing Judge under S. 5, those officers should always, if need be, require evidence to be produced before them and to hold an investigation as to the value of the subject-matter for they would have all the powers incidental to the discharge of those duties which the High Court itself possesses."

Das J. who expressed the minority view held that the Taxing Officer had no such power. Of course, this power of the Taxing Officer to reopen the valuation and call for fresh evidence is one that ought to be exercised with moderation and caution, and should be used so as not to become a source of harrassment to the litigant. While undoubtedly the Court and its officers are charged with the duty of safeguarding the legitimate interests of the Government for the realisation of proper court-fees, the litigant is also reasonably entitled to expect that the decision of the Courts below on the question of valuation and court-fees would not be lightly ignored and reopened every time that a matter goes up to the higher Court. In this connection it must also be remembered that in cases falling under S. 7, Sub-S. (4) Cl. (C), Court-fees Act, the Legislature gives the litigant choice to put his value on the relief. The ascertainment of the market value by the Court is only to prevent gross undervaluation and not to substitute its own valuation for that by the party. The normal principle should be that the party's valuation should not be interfered with unless it appears to be grossly low.

(8) I, therefore, overrule all the above contentions raised on behalf of the appellants and now proceed to determine what is the correct court-fee payable in all the appeals. The proper court-fee depends in the present cases, on the valuation of the suit-property. The trial court in fixing the valuation at Rs. 25,000/- was largely influenced by the fact that the Barpalli Zamindary is held under a special kind of tenure under which the Zamindary descends to a single heir and is not alienable. The property not being heritable and alienable, the trial Court was of the view that its market value cannot be computed in the ordinary way and therefore fixed the value at Rs. 25,000/-. This however works out at only about four times the net annual profits, of Rs. 6,000/-. I agree therefore with the Taxing Officer that this is grossly inadequate. I am not however prepared to agree with the estimate of the Taxing Officer either when he fixes the valuation at 20 times the net profits. This would be a fair standard only if the estate was ordinary heritable and transferable property, which, as pointed out by the trial Court, it is not, on account of its special tenure. In the absence of any other satisfactory material, I would, in this case, adopt ten times the 'Takoli' payable on the estate as a fair estimate of the value of the subject-matter of the suit. That is the standard adopted by the Court-fees Act itself with reference to cases that fall under S. 7, Cl 5, Court-fees Act in respect of temporarily settled Zamindaries, which I understand Barapalli Zamindary to be. No doubt the cases before me fall not under Cl. 5 of S. 7, but under Cl. 4 of the said section and it very often happens that the statutory valuation in Cl. 5 differs substantially from the market value in respect of ordinary property. But in view of the special circumstances and in the absence of any other material for guidance I consider that this would be only a fair method of disposing of this matter. I may also add that whenever there is any reasonable doubt or difficulty in ascertaining the valuation of immovable property, it is legitimate to apply the statutory valuation in S. 7, Cl 5 by way of analogy if it is applicable. See 'Venkata Narasimha Raju v. Chandrayya, AIR (14) 1927 Mad 825: (105 I C 171) and P. K. Nainar Rowther v. Kuppai Pichai Rowther, AIR (16) 1929 Mad 609 at p. 611 : (120 I C 889). It appears from the finding of the trial Court on the question of valuation that the 'Tokali' payable in respect of this estate is slightly less than Rs. 6,900/-. I would accordingly fix the value of the subject-matter of the appeal at Rs. 69,000/- for purposes of court-fees. Declaratory fee with reference to this valuation has to be paid in App. Nos. 45 and 48 and the deficit court-fee payable on that footing will have to be paid by the appellants in these two appeals.

(9) As regards Apps. Nos. 46 and 47, a further point raised by the respective appellants therein has to be noticed. It may be recalled that these two appeals are against the decree against the appellants therein passed in T. S. No. 10 of 39 in which the plaint was for declaration and recovery of possession and a decree also was given in favour of the plaintiff in the suit for both the reliefs. The Taxing Officer is of the opinion that 'ad valorem' court-fee is payable by the appellants in these appeals on the footing of declaration and consequential reliefs. Counsel for appellants do not dispute that according to the Patna practice, the court-fee payable would be 'ad valorem' if they are driven to include the relief by way of possession in the appeal memorandum. But they contend that the plaintiff in T. S. No. 10 of 39 in asking for relief by way of possession has asked for an unnecessary relief and that therefore they could ignore it. It is admitted that when T. S. No. 10/39 and the other connected suits were filed the estate was in charge of the Court of Wards who were in possession of the same during the lifetime of the previous female owner and who happened to have continued in charge under S. 33, Central Provinces Court of Wards Act. That section provides that the Court of Wards can retain its superintendence "until one of the claimants (to the succession) has established his claim in a competent civil Court". In view of this provision, I agree with the contention of the appellants in these two appeals that the plaintiff in T. S. No. 10/39 need not have asked for relief by way of recovery of possession and that relief so far as the plaint therein is concerned is a surplusage. The position however may conceivably be different at the appellate stage since a relief for possession has been given in favour of the plaintiff therein. These appellants may have to get rid of it. It may be that if the appeal does not comprise that relief also the matter may become 'res judicata' so far as that relief is concerned. The appeals if confined only to the declaratory reliefs may not be maintainable. See 'Narendra Nath v. Ganesh Prasad', AIR (33) 1946 Pat 408: (227 I C 172). This however is an objection to the maintainability of the appeals and is not a matter which determines the court-fee payable. The court-fee payable depends on the appeal memorandum as it is framed. The Court has no doubt power to insist on a plaint or an appeal memorandum being framed in a proper manner so as not to give room for any device to escape payment of proper court-fee. But in view of the fact that the relief by way of possession was a surplusage in the appeal without asking for relief to get rid of that relief in the appeal memorandum may be arguable, I see no objection to the court-fee being collected in respect of both these appeals (that is, Nos. 46 and 47 of 1948), on the footing of declaratory relief only if the respective appellants therein are prepared to take their risk at the final hearing as regards the maintainability of these appeals. They are therefore directed to pay D. C. F., if any, on the basis of the revised valuation on the footing of the declaratory relief. Appellant in F. A. No. 48 will have to amend his appeal memorandum accordingly.

(10) The deficit court-fees in all these appeals will be payable by the appellants within two weeks of the reopening of the High Court after the summer recess.

(11) The office will intimate to the appellants' counsel the actual deficit court-fee payable in pursuance of the above order before the Court closes for summer recess. If the appellants in F. A. Nos. 46 and 47 do not want to take the risk and want to pay court-fee on the footing of relief for possession also, they will be permitted to do so, but within the time above fixed after necessary amendments.

(12) After the deficit court-fees in Apps. 46 and 47 are paid and the appeals are admitted, the question as to whether the respondent therein who is the plaintiff in T. S. No. 10/39 is to be called upon to pay deficit court-fee on his plaint and given an opportunity to prove the valuation will be considered by the Registrar in due course.

Abdul Hamid, Appellant v. Bora Tataya and others, Respondents.

Second Appeal No 105 of 1948, D/- 3-11-1950.

(a) Tenancy Laws — Orissa Tenancy Act II (2) of 1913, S. 236 — Dar-Chandnadari right — Transferability.

(Per Das and Narasimham JJ, Panigrahi J. Contra) — Apart from proof of custom in any particular case a 'Dar-Chandnadari' right is not transferable and there is no general and well-recognised custom in this behalf. (Para 3)

(b) Interpretation of Statutes — Retrospective operation.

Per Das J. — Every Act is 'prima facie' prospective in its operation, and unless the language used by the Legislature is clear and unequivocal, retrospective operation is not to be inferred. (Para 8)

Anno: C. P. C., Pre. N. 3.

(c) Interpretation of Statutes — Retrospective operation — Remedial Statute.

Per Das J. — The principle that a remedial Statute must be construed so as to advance the purpose of the Act and to suppress the mischief intended to be prevented thereby can be invoked for retrospective operation only when the language is reasonably susceptible of the same. (Para 9)

Anno: C. P. C., Pre. N. 3.

(d) Tenancy Laws — Orissa Tenancy (Amendment) Act X (10) of 1946, S. 3.

(Per Das and Narsimham JJ, Panigrahi J. Contra) — Section 3 has no retrospective operation. (Para 9)

(e) Tenancy Laws — Orissa Tenancy (Amendment) Act X (10) of 1946, S. 4 — Scope of — Retrospective operation.

(Per Das and Narasimham JJ., Panigrahi J. Contra) — The effect of S. 4 is to give retrospective operation only from the moment of the institution of the suit as regards pending suits for ejectment against tenants, and not to attach all the incidents of an occupancy right to such a tenant from any prior point of time.

Where a Dar-Chandnadar transfers his homestead land with the superstructure before the coming into force of the Amendment Act, the transfer itself not being valid and binding against the Chandnadar the transferee cannot be said to be a 'tenant' within the meaning of S. 4 on the date of the institution of the suit. (Para 10)

(f) Tenancy Laws — Orissa Tenancy (Amendment) Act X (10) of 1946, S. 4 — Scope of.

Per Das, J. — There is no warrant for reading S. 4 as though it said not that the Act was to be taken to be in force from the time of the institution of the suit, but that the issues in suit were to be disposed of on the footing that the tenant always had all the incidents of an occupancy raiyat (Para 10)

(g) Tenancy Laws — Orissa Tenancy (Amendment) Act X (10) of 1946, S. 3 — Scope of — Retrospective operation.

(Per Das, J. and Narasimham JJ, Panigrahi J. Contra) — Even in a case where the intention of the Legislature may have been to explain the pre-existing law, that intention, to make it retrospective, must be expressed in clear and apt language to bring about that result. In S. 3 not only is there no such language, but there was no scope for any ambiguity as to what the previous law was which required to be cleared up by a declaratory Act. (Para 8)

(h) Tenancy Laws — Orissa Tenancy (Amendment) Act X (10) of 1946, Ss. 3, 4 — Applicability of Act to Dar-Chandna lease — T. P. Act (1882), S. 117.

(Obiter — Per Das and Narasimham JJ; Panigrahi J. Contra); If a tenancy including a Dar-Chandna lease is for a residential purpose, it cannot attract the applicability of the Amending Act X (10) of 1946, but must be regulated by the T. P. Act.

Even if the Legislature in amending S. 236, Orissa Tenancy Act purported to include leases of non-agricultural lands the Amending Acts X (10) of 1946 and XXXII (32) of 1947 cannot prevail over the provisions of Chap. V, T. P. Act so far as leases for non-agricultural purposes are concerned since the Amending Acts did not receive the assent of the Governor-General. (Para 13)

P. Sen and L. K. Dasgupta, for Appellant — N. Mukherji, for Respondents.

DAS, J: Defendant 1 is the applt in this 2nd appeal. The appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment filed by the pltf against defts 1 and 2 in respect of a homestead land, .015 acre in extent and appertaining to plot 236 in Cuttack town. Plot 236 out of which the suit-plot has been carved out is a homestead plot in respect of which the pltfs have been recorded in the settlement records as Chandnadars. Deft 2 obtained a lease of the suit-plot from the pltfs and has been in possession thereof for a considerable period of time, for over 20 years according to the pltf, but according to deft for over 40 years. Deft 2 had admittedly erected a house on it & has been recorded in the current settlement record-of-rights as a Dar-Chandnadar. On 30-6-45, deft 2 sold the land with the superstructure thereon to deft 1. Pltf accordingly filed the suit for ejectment against both defts 1 & 2 on 5-9-45. It is the pltf's case that deft 2 was a mere tenant-at-will under him, & that he had no right to make any transfer without his consent. Such consent for the transfer in favour of deft 2 not having been obtained, he was entitled to evict the defts & re-enter on the land. Deft 2 was 'ex parte'. Deft 1 alleged that deft 2 was not a mere tenant-at-will under the pltf, but that he was a permanent tenant or acquired permanency rights. He denied that deft 2's rights were not transferable without the consent of the pltf. The Cts below have concurrently held that the pltf is entitled to a decree for ejectment. Hence the 2nd appeal by deft 1.

(2) In the trial Ct, the contesting deft set up that deft 2 was admitted to the tenancy under a document giving him a permanent right of occupancy & also alleged that the ejectment suit was not maintainable as there was no proper notice to quit. The alleged written lease was found against & the notice to quit has been found to be sufficient in law. These questions have not been reagitated before us, but it is necessary to note that the deft has not set up the existence of any custom by which deft 2 had permanency rights in his tenancy or a right to transfer his interest in the land without the consent of the pltf. The lower appellate Ct in confirming the decree granted by the trial Ct, stated as follows:

"A Dar-Chandnadar is a mere tenant-at-will and it is the settled principle of law that a Dar-Chandnadari right is not either transferable or heritable".

& based its decision on this view of the law. The point raised in this appeal is that this assumption of the learned Judge is erroneous & that in any case the Orissa Tenancy Amendment Act of 1946, i.e., Act X (10) of 1946 which came into force when that appeal was pending taken with the Orissa Act XXXII (32) of 1947 has made a change of the Law in this respect & that the lower appellate Ct has not noticed this change.

(3) In 'Dulai Dei v. Chema Das', S. A. 156/37 (8 Cut. L. Notes 6), his Lordship Fazl Ali J. stated as follows:

"It is now well-settled that a Chandnadar himself has only a non-transferable interest & it follows that a Dar-Chandnadar also cannot transfer his right".

This appears to justify fully the assumption made by the learned Judge of the lower appellate Ct in the passage above extracted from his judgment. It is true that there is no discussion of this question in the judgment of Fazl Ali, J., but this was so presumably because the legal position was considered so well established that it could not admit of a contrary argument. It has no doubt been held in 'Johabaj Khan v. Sri Krishna De', A I R (23) 1936 Pat, 29: (15 Pat 187 F B) that the burden lies upon the landlord to prove usage or custom in proof of his right to eject a Chandnadari tenant if he wants to maintain ejectment against him. But so far as transferability of the Chandnadari right or the Dar-Chandnadari right is concerned, no case has been brought to my notice which conflicts with the view above stated by his Lordship as being the settled law. On the other hand, cases in 'Chintamani Raut v. Sri Ram Chandrakar', A I R (21) 1934 Pat 422: (149 I C 805); 'Mt Haliman Bibi v. Mohd. Tajamul Hussain', A I R (26) 1939 Pat 504: (185 I C 250) and 'Safiruddin v. Tarak Nath', A I R (36) 1949 Pat 180: (14 Cut L T 12) establish the correctness of the proposition so far as the Chandnadars are concerned, & it would follow 'prima facie' that the same is the law as regards Dar-Chandnadars who are merely under-tenants of Chandnadars. In fact, & in fairness to Mr. Das Gupta, learned counsel for the applt, it must be said that he did not seriously maintain that, apart from proof of custom in any particular case, there are any reported decisions showing that a Chandnadari or Dar-Chandnadari right is transferable or that there is any general & well-recognised custom in this behalf.

(4) What however is maintained seriously is that the two Acts above mentioned have made a change. There can be no doubt that so far as the Chandnadar is concerned, the law has made a change. There appears to have been some doubt as to the effect of Orissa Act X (10) of 1946 in relation to its application to the case of a Chandnadar. In 'Safiuddin v. Tarak Nath', A I R (36) 1949 Pat 180: (14 Cut L T 12). Iyer J. appears to have held that Act X (10) of 1946 did not make any change as regards the transferability of the holding by a Chandnadar which in his opinion, still continued to be regulated by local custom & usage under S. 236, Orissa Tenancy Act. It is in view of this decision, that Act XXXII (32) of 1947 appears to have been passed making the 1946 amendment specifically applicable to Chandnadars with retrospective operation from the commencement of 1946 Act.

(5) Appellant's counsel contends that amending Act of 1946 renders the Dar-Chandnadari right in the homestead also transferable & that the effect of the 1946 Act is to confer the transferability retrospectively both in respect of the Chandnadars & Dar-Chandnadars. It has to be noticed that 1946 Act itself came into operation on 20-11-1946, that is, after the disposal of the present suit by the trial Ct and also that the transfer in favour of deft 2 was more than 2 months, prior to the institution of the suit itself. The two questions that arise for consideration are (1) whether the Orissa Act X (10) of 1946 is retrospective in operation & if so to what extent; (2) whether the Act applies to a Dar-Chandnadar.

(6) It is contended that S. 3, Orissa Tenancy Amendment Act of 1946, which is the operative section, applies to every person who is a "tenant" falling within the definition thereof of the Orissa Tenancy Act & that a Dar-Chandnadar falls within the definition & gets the benefit of the Amendment Act. This is the question raised in point 2 above which I shall deal with later.

(7) For the purpose of consideration of point 1, I shall assume, without deciding, that a Dar-Chandnadar is a tenant within the meaning of the Orissa Tenancy Act. It is contended that deft 2 who is recorded as a Dar-Chandnadar is entitled to the benefits of the Act & that therefore the transfer by him in favour of deft 1 is a valid transfer & makes him also a Dar-Chandnadar entitled to the benefits of the Act. In view of the fact that the transfer by deft 2 to deft 1 was as stated above, prior to the coming into force of the amendment Act of 1946, it is clear that deft 1 cannot get the benefit of the Act in any case, unless it is retrospective in operation. The argument about retrospectivity, therefore, is pressed & is put in two ways. (a) It is said that S. 3 is declaratory in character & therefore retrospective; (b) It is said that since S. 4 applies to all pending proceedings, deft 2, & therefore deft 1, come within the purview of the same.

(8) Section 3, Orissa Act X (10) of 1946 is in the following terms:

"For sub-s. (1) of S. 236, Orissa Tenancy Act, 1913 the following sub-section shall be substituted, namely: Notwithstanding anything in this Act the incidents of tenancy of any tenant, including the holder of a service tenure, in respect of the homestead in which such tenant ordinarily resides, shall be regulated by the provisions of this Act, applicable to land held by an occupancy raiyat".

Section 236 (1) as it previously stood was:

"When a raiyat holds his homestead otherwise than as a part of his holding as a raiyat, the incidents of his tenancy of his homestead shall be regulated by local custom, or usage & subject to local custom or usage, by the provisions of this Act applicable to lands held by a raiyat".

The argument is that since the section comes in by way of substitution for a pre-existing section of the Orissa Tenancy Act of 1913, it must be taken as though it was part of the Orissa Tenancy Act of 1913, from its commencement & was meant to be declaratory of the law in this behalf from the outset. To enforce this argument, stress is laid upon the use of the phrase "incidents of tenancy.....shall be regulated by the provisions of this Act", etc, which, it is said, means that it shall be taken as though those incidents had always attached to it. It appears to me that this argument is untenable. The Act itself purports to be an amending Act as recited in the preamble: "Where as it is expedient to amend the Orissa Tenancy Act, 1913, in the manner hereinafter appearing". Further S. 3 says "shall be substituted" & does not say "shall be deemed to have been always substituted". For instance, when this Amending Act of 1946 was further amended by Act XXXII (32) of 1947, & was intended to give retrospective operation from the date of the prior Act of 1946, the wording used is:

"for sub-s. (2), the following sub-section shall be substituted & shall be deemed always to have been substituted".

Clearly the Orissa Legislature was using an appropriate & unambiguous set of words when it meant to convey the idea of retrospective operation. The inference is implicit that when those or similar words were not used, no retrospective operation was meant. It is a well-established canon of construction that every Act is 'prima facie' prospective in its operation, & that unless the language used by the Legislature is clear & unequivocal, retrospective operation is not to be inferred. This proposition has been clearly laid down by the House of Lords in 'James Gardner v. Edward A Lucas', (1878) 3 A C 582. It has been urged that the section is & was intended to be declaratory & that therefore it must be taken to be retrospective in operation. It appears to me that there is absolutely no foundation for this suggestion. It does sometimes happen that if the Legislature meant to convey a particular meaning by the use of particular language & the Cts have construed it differently or a conflict has arisen with reference to the interpretation thereof, the Legislature intervenes by a subsequent enactment to explain or declare what it meant to be the law. There may be room for contention in such cases that the fresh enactment is declaratory & is meant to be retrospective. But even in such cases the retrospective operation is not a matter of course, but is one to be gathered from the clear wording of the amending Act. For instance, the P. C. in 'Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir', 35 Mad 607: (39 I A 218 P C) (reiterated in 'Mt. Hirabibi v. Ram Harilal', 5 Pat 58: (A I R (12) 1925 P C 203) construed the word "attestor" in T. P. Act to be a person who was present at the time of the execution & saw the executant signing. The Legislature amended the T. P. Act by introducing a definition of the word "attest" into it, by Act XXVII (27) of 1926 which purported to be 'explanatory' of the meaning of the word "attest" & defined the word "attest" as meaning something different from what the P. C. laid down. This was held by the Cts not to be enough to give retrospective operation to the meaning of the word "attest" (See 'Netra v. Sajer Pramanik', A I R (14) 1927 Cal 763: (55 Cal 67) & the Legislature consequently once again came up with a further amendment by Act X (10) of 1927 whereby it said that the word "attest" means & "shall be deemed always to have meant" in the particular way. It is therefore clear that even in a case where the intention of the Legislature may have been to explain the pre-existing law, that intention, to make it retrospective, must be expressed in clear & apt language to bring about that result. In the present case, however, not only is there no such language, but there was no scope for any ambiguity as to what the previous law was which required to be cleared up by a declaratory Act. The previous law under S. 236 (1) as it stood was very clear, without ambiguity & applied only to raiyats, but the substituted sub-section applies to tenants, a wholly different and enlarged category. There was no previous recognition of any customary law in this behalf applicable to all classes of tenants, & indeed the law appears to have been clear the other way.

(9) It has been strenuously argued that the Amending Act is of a remedial nature, that the Legislature was anxious to protect the position of all agricultural tenants in relation to their homestead & that being a remedial statute, full effect must be given to it by giving retrospective operation. I am unable, with respect, to follow this argument. It may be perfectly true that the Legislature wanted to protect the tenants with respect to their homestead by giving them larger rights, but it does not follow that it intended to change the situation retrospectively. The principle that a remedial statute must be construed as to advance the purpose of the Act & to suppress the mischief intended to be prevented thereby, is a well-known principle, but can be invoked for retrospective operation only when the language is reasonably susceptible of the same. I am not aware of any principle laying down that merely because a statute is remedial, it must 'prima facie' be presumed to be retrospective irrespective of the language used. For instance, as pointed out at p. 196 of "Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes" 8th Edn. the Wine & Beer House Amendment Act of 1817 which enacted that was held to include a man who had been convicted of felony before & had obtained a licence after the Act was passed, relying on the principle of construction in favour of advancing the remedy & suppressing the mischief. But this construction was possible only because the phrase "convicted of felony" might equally apply to a future conviction as well to a past conviction. It is, therefore, clear to my mind that since there is nothing in the language of S. 3, Amending Act, which is ambiguous or comprehensive enough to bring about the past operativeness of the benefits of the Act to all classes of tenants there can be no justification for construing S. 3 as having retrospective operation. This conclusion to my mind is strengthened by the fact that the Amending Act itself has in terms prescribed & provided for a limited retrospective operation as regards pending proceedings by S. 4.

"every person convicted of felony should for ever be disqualified from selling spirits by retail & that if any such person should take or has taken out a licence for that purpose, it should be void",

(10) The question has therefore next to be considered as to what is the effect of S. 4 & whether that can be evoked in aid of deft 1 in this case to protect him from ejectment. Section 4, Orissa Act X (10) of 1946 runs as follows:

"Any suit for the ejectment of any tenant, including the holder of a service tenure, instituted before the commencement of this Act, or any execution proceeding arising therefrom, shall be disposed of as if S. 236, Orissa Tenancy Act, 1913 as amended, by this Act, had been in force at the time of the institution of the said suit in the Ct of the first instance".

The argument was that in respect of pending suits, the benefit of the Act is given to the tenant, though the Act was not in force by the date of the institution of the suit. It is argued therefore that as a result of it deft 2 is to be treated as an occupancy raiyat & that it follows that deft 1 who derives title by a transfer under him must also be treated as an occupancy raiyat not liable to ejectment. It may be conceded at once that if the ejectment suit were only against deft 2 & if it appeared on the facts that deft 2 was ordinarily a resident in the suit homestead by the date of the institution of the suit, S 4 would clearly protect him from ejectment. But that question does not require consideration now, since the trial Ct passed a decree for ejectment against both the defts & there has been no appeal therefrom by deft 2 either in the lower appellate Ct or here. The decree for ejectment having become final as against him, the question as to whether that decree is correct, does not call for any consideration or for fresh investigation of facts so far as he is concerned . So far however as deft 1 is concerned, the flaw in the applt's argument is the untenable assumption that because deft 2 would not have been liable for ejectment by virtue of S. 4, deft 1 who purports to derive title from him would also not be liable for ejectment. This however, depends upon whether deft 1 can also be said to be a "tenant" within the meaning of S. 4 by the date of the institution of the suit. That would be so only if the transfer, under which he claims, of the date 30-6-45 long prior to the coming into force of the Amending Act of 1946 & some months prior to the institution of the present suit, can be said to be valid so as to have vested legally the Dar-Chandna right in him as against the pltf-Chandnadar. It appears to me to be clear that S. 4 cannot have that effect. The effect of S. 4 is to give retrospective operation only from the moment of the institution of the suit as regards pending suits for ejectment against tenants, & not to attach all the incidents of an occupancy right to such a tenant from any prior point of time. Learned counsel for the applt points out and stresses that the section says:

"the suit shall be disposed of as if S. 236 as amended had been in force at the time of the institution of the suit."

He points out that by the use of the phrase "had been in force" the retrospective operation is not intended to commence from the point of time when the suit was instituted, but from such earlier point of time as may be necessary for the disposal of any relevant issue arising in the case. He urges that so taken, since one of the issues arising in the case is whether the transfer by deft 1 to deft 2 is valid the retrospective operation is available for the decision of that issue also. It appears to me that this argument, though ingenious, cannot be upheld. The use of the past perfect "had been" instead of the past tense "was" is easily explicable in view of the fact that in relation to the disposal of the suit, the section contemplates past events namely, the coming into force of the Act & the institution of the suit. It may also have been thought necessary to provide for the difficulties of construction that might arise if both the past events were stated to be simultaneous occurrences giving rise to difficult questions as to whether, if the operation of the Act was simultaneous with the institution of the suit, it could be said that the Act was ineffective prior to operation so as to govern the suit. It appears to me therefore that there is no warrant for reading S. 4 as though it said not that the Act was to be taken to be in force from the time of the institution of the suit, but that the issues in the suit were to be disposed of on the footing that the tenant always had all the incidents of an occupancy raiyat. The anomaly of such a construction would be patent if a case is assumed, where, as in this very case, a transfer had been made prior to the coming into force of the Act, but no suit had been filed at all for ejectment until after 1947. It is obvious that S. 4 could not possibly be made to apply to such a subsequent suit and accordingly the transferee in that hypothetical case cannot be protected from ejectment. There can absolutely be no reason for this distinction. It would mean that if the landlord was diligent he is to suffer, but that if he was lax, he was to get an advantage. It is, therefore, clear to my mind that S. 4 cannot bear the interpretation that the learned counsel sought to put on it, neither can it be said that deft 1 can by any stretch of imagination be said to fill the category connoted by the word "tenant" in S. 4 on the date of the institution of the suit, since the transfer itself when made, cannot be said to be valid & binding as against the pltf landlord.

(11) It is next argued for the applt that whatever the anomaly of the above construction the effect of S. 4 in respect of pending suits would be to validate a prior transfer in another view of the matter. It is pointed out that under the section "pending suits should be disposed of as if the amended S. 236 had been in force at the time of the institution of the suit".

Even conceding that this indicates a point of time almost simultaneous with the institution of the suit, it would follow from S. 3, Orissa Act X (10) of 1946 that the "incidents of tenancy" attach to the holding in the hands of deft 2. It has been suggested that the reference in the section by use of the phrase "incidents of the tenancy" must have been to the group of Ss. 27 to 31 (B), Orissa Tenancy Act, all of which appear under the heading "Incidents Of Occupancy Right". It is therefore urged that S. 31 (B), Orissa Tenancy Act which relates to pre-amendment transfers is thereby attracted. This again, is an ingenious argument, but without any susbtance. Apart from the very doubtful question whether "the incidents of tenancy" which are to be regulated by the provisions applicable to an occupancy raiyat connote the whole group of Ss. 27 to 31 (B), it is clear that the phrase "shall be regulated" shows that only such of them as can be made applicable shall apply. A bare reading of S. 31 (B) shows clearly that it cannot be made to apply, because it applies in terms to a transfer of an occupancy holding made before the commencement of the Orissa Tenancy Amendment Act of 1938 which is not the present case. I have therefore no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that no provision of the Orissa Tenancy Amendment Act of 1946 can be invoked for the benefit of deft applt in this case.

(12) This is enough to dispose of the appeal & to entail its dismissal. It is, therefore, not necessary to express any final opinion on the larger question that has been raised before us, namely, whether the word "tenant" in the Amendment Act of 1946 includes a Dar-Chandnadar and whether the benefits of the Act can be extended to him.

(13) Since, however, that question has been mooted before us, I shall very briefly deal with the matter. The word "tenant" has been defined in the Orissa Tenancy Act as meaning

"a person who holds land under another person & is or but for a special contract would be liable to pay rent for that land to that person".

A Dar-Chandnadar who holds homestead land under a Chandnadar on condition of paying rent to him for the same, appears to be comprehended by this definition. No doubt, the various classes of tenants for the purposes of the Act have been specified in S. 4. But it has been held with reference to the corresponding section of the Bengal Tenancy Act that this classification is not exhaustive & that there may be classes of tenants governed by the Tenancy Act and outside these categories, for instance, a tenant of a private land (See 'Janki Singh v. Jagannath Das', AIR (4) 1917 Pat 305: (42 IC 177 FB). But the question still is whether having regard to the scope of the Orissa Tenancy Act, it was meant to apply to a Dar-Chandnadar who is a mere under-tenant of a Chandnadar of a homestead land essentially meant for residential purposes. It has been argued, on the side of the applt, that once a Chandnadar has been given the status of an occupancy raiyat in respect of the homestead, it follows that the under-tenure created by him is regulated by the same incidents & is not in any way affected by the purpose for which the under-tenancy lease is created. In support of this, cases in 'Babu Ram v. Hemendra Nath', 8 CWN 454, & 'Krishna Kanta Ghose v. Jadukasya', 21 CLJ 475: (AIR (3) 1916 Cal 32) have been relied upon. On the other hand it has been urged that those are cases which are specifically covered by S. 182, Bengal Tenancy Act corresponding to S. 236, Orissa Tenancy Act as it stood before the 1946 Amendment. It is urged that the Orissa Tenancy Act applies only to tenancies for agricultural purposes & that where the tenancy is not for agricultural purposes, it is the T. P. Act which must govern the rights of the parties & that therefore such an under-tenant cannot be held to fall within the definition of the word "tenant" in the Orissa Tenancy Act. In support of this position, cases in 'Radhamohan v. Kasinath Das', 1 Cut LT 28 & 'Hadumaharana v. Ram Dulal", 9 Cut LT 27: (AIR (31) 1944 Pat 35) & 'Syed Husain Ali v. Gobinda Lal', 9 Cal WN 141 have been relied upon. See also 'Rakhal Das v. Danomoyi Debi', 16 Cal 652. It appears to me that the question is not altogether free from difficulty. The proposition that the Orissa Tenancy Act applies only to agricultural leases, relying on the decisions under the Bengal Act, is one that can only be accepted with some reservation, because the Orissa Tenancy Act has specifically included Chandnadars within the class of tenants. Though there is no clear definition of the word "Chandnadar" in the Orissa Tenancy Act excepting that it means "persons holding land recorded, as Chandnadar in the course of the settlement",. it would appear from the settlement report of Maddox at p. 222, para 327 that:

"Shopkeepers, artisans & labouring classes having no arable lands in the village but holding only homestead lands and paying rent therefor are called Chandnadars".

Hence Chandnadari tenancy appears to be residential tenancy of the homestead & it may be argued that the Orissa Tenancy Act is not confined to agricultural tenancies. It is possible however that the inclusion of such tenants within the scope of the Orissa Tenancy Act which no doubt is mainly concerned with cultivating tenancies, as appears from the definition of words "tenure-holders & raiyats" may have been justified on the ground that such persons were an essential & component part of the agricultural economy of the village. It may be therefore debatable whether the somewhat wide definition of the word "tenant" in the Tenancy Act should be held also to include merely residential under-tenancies of homestead lands unless the Act definitely says so. In this context, it would be relevant to notice that by virtue of S. 117, T. P. Act, leases for agricultural purposes are exempted from the operation of the said Act implying thereby that unless the lease is for agricultural purposes, T. P. Act would govern. While it may be that a Chandna lease may be held not to be governed by the T. P. Act, by virtue of the specific inclusion of it under the Orissa Tenancy Act the validity of which has not been challenged, it may be questioned whether a Dar-Chandna lease is to be held to fall outside the T. P. Act as a matter of course. Whether the Dar-Chandnadari-under-tenancy is to be regulated by the T. P. Act or the Orissa Tenancy Act may be a question of fact to be determined in each case having regard to the essential purpose of the particular underlease. The fact that a settlement officer has recorded a particular holding as Dar-Chandna holding in a settlement may, if at all, be some evidence in this connection that it was meant to be agricultural. It would not probably be entitled, however, to any statutory weight since under S. 113, Orissa Tenancy Act, a Dar-Chandnadari right is not one of the items to be recorded by a settlement officer. The use of the terms "Dar-Chandnadari" appears to have come into vogue during the current settlement operations (1922-32), see 'Dalziel Report', P 44, & the difficulty of dealing with non-agricultural residential leases or underleases as within the purview of settlement operations appears from a perusal of the said report, p. 159 & Pp 22, 23. It appears to me, however, that if a tenancy including a Dar-Chandna lease is clearly for a residential purpose, it cannot attract the applicability of the Amending Act X (10) of 1946, but must be regulated by the T. P. Act, since the Amending Act has not received the assent of the Governor-General & in a conflict between the two Acts, the Central Act must prevail, in the absence of the assent of the Governor-General. (See S. 107, Govt of India Act, 1935). But in view of the opinion that I have come to on the question of the retrospective operation of the Amending Act of 1946, it is, as already stated, unnecessary for me to express any final opinion on this matter.

(14) In the result, therefore ,the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

(15) PANIGRAHI J : This appeal arises out of a suit in ejectment filed by resps 1 to 3 against the applt & resp 4 who were respectively defts 1 & 2 in the suit.

(16) The pltfs are the chandnadars of a holding measuring .015 of an acre in plot 236 of Bakhrabad in Cuttack town, appertaining to touzi 2498 of which the proprietor is one Ganeshlal Pandit. The pltfs were recorded at the last settlement as raiyat in respect of three plots belonging to this touzi & as 'Madhyasatvadhikaris' in respect of 10 plots — the suit plot being one of them which were actually in the occupation of other raiyats. The first 3 plots were recorded in the name of the pltfs as 'Nijdakhal' & the other 10 were recorded as 'Praja Dakhal' — Ex. 5. The status of deft 2 was recorded in khatian 1098 as 'Dar-Chandnadar' while that of the pltfs was recorded as 'Madhyasatvadhikari'. The annual rent for the holding in the occupation of deft 2 was Re. 1/- before the settlement, but it was enhanced at the settlement to Rs. 1-8-0, the rent being payable on the 30th of Aswin every year — Ex. B. The status of deft 2, as 'Dar-Chandnadari' is also recorded in the khewat of the holder of the touzi in respect of this holding — Ex. 5/a. Defendant 2 was in possession of the plot & had put up a dwelling house thereon for at least 20 yrs according to the pltfs, & for over 40 yrs according to the defts. Deft 2 sold the house on 30-6-45 by a registered sale deed (Ex. A) to deft 1. The pltfs thereupon immediately issued a notice to quit on 10-7-45, & filed the suit out of which this appeal arises, on 5-9-45. The 3rd Additional Munsiff granted a decree in favour of the pltfs on 11-9-46 holding that deft 2 had no permanent right in the land & could not, therefore, transfer it to deft 1. Against this decision deft 1 preferred an appeal in the Ct of Dist J, in Munsifi App. No. 207 of 1946, & the learned Judge agreed with the finding of the Munsif and dismissed the appeal on 10-12-47. Hence this 2nd appeal by deft 1.

(17) Both the Cts below have found that the lease in favour of deft 2 being subsequent to the passing of the T. P. Act, was void as there was no registered document creating the lease & that the status of deft 2 was therefore that of a tenant-at-will who was liable to be evicted on a mere notice to quit. The appellate Ct also assumed that it is a settled principle of law that a darchandnadari right is neither transferable nor heritable.

(18) During the pendency of the appeal in the Ct of the Dist J the law relating to homesteads underwent a change. The Orissa Tenancy (Amendment) Act 1946 X (10) of 1946 was passed on 20-11-46 &. was later amended by .the Orissa Tenancy Second (Amendment) Act, XXXII (32) of 1947 on 10-12-47. The decision of the appeal depends upon the effect to be given to the Amending Acts passed by Orissa Legislature. It is contended for the applt that (1) a dar-chandnadar is not a mere tenant-at-will & that he has an interest in the property, the other incidents of his tenure being similar to those of a chandnadar himself; & (2) irrespective of the fact whether the interest of a dar-chandnadar was transferable or not before 1946, the Amendment Act X (10) of 1946 confers that right of transferability retrospectively upon the tenant of a homestead such as a dar-chandnadar. It is on the other hand contended for the resps that (i) the Amendment Act X (10) of 1946 in so far as it affects non-agricultural holdings is 'ultra vires' the Provincial Legislature; (ii) the Orissa Tenancy Act does not govern leases of homesteads not connected with agriculture; & (iii) the Amendment Act X (10) of 1946 is not retrospective.

(19) The law relating to the homestead of a raiyat holding it otherwise than as a part of his agricultural holding is laid down in S. 256 (1) (sic), Orissa Tenancy Act. The incidents of such tenancy are declared to be regulated by custom or usage, & where no such custom or usage is established, by the provisions of the Act applicable to lands held by a raiyat. Sub-section (2) of S. 236 similarly declares the law applicable to the class of tenants known as chandnadars who were in occupation of homestead lands & had put up dwelling houses thereon. This class of tenants had nothing to do with agriculture & consisted mostly of shop-keepers, artisans, tradesmen, & the like. The Orissa Tenancy Act treated them as tenants & put them on the same footing as agricultural tenants in 1913 as, it is said, they formed an integral part of the agricultural economy of the village.

(20) In order to appreciate the merits of the rival contentions it is necessary to ascertain the existing law which was sought to be 'amended' & to see how the Legislature did it. Chandna holdings had been in existence long prior to the first Provincial Settlement of the Province & their status is to be determined by the land laws then in force in the Province. Regulation 44 of 1793 which applied to a few parganas in the Orissa Division, exempted from its operation the grant of leases of pattas for periods exceeding 10 years for the erection of dwelling houses or buildings though, in respect of leases of other lands, the proprietor was prohibited. Bengal Act X (10) of 1859 which conferred the right of occupancy on every raiyat who held land for a period of 12 yrs, did not define the word 'raiyat'. Bengal Act XI (11) of 1856 (Sale of Land for Arrears of Land Revenue Act) exempted the vesting of leases of lands, whereon dwelling house had been erected, in the purchaser of an estate, whether permanently settled or not, by Ss 37 & 52 of that Act. Section 52 says that the purchaser of an estate not permanently settled & sold for recovery of arrears of rent due on account of the same, shall "acquire the estate free of all encumbrances except leases of lands whereon gardens, plantations, tanks, wells, cannals, places of worship, or burying grounds have been made, or wherein mines have been sunk, which leases shall, so long as the land is duly appropriated to such purpose & the stipulated rent paid, continue in force & effect".

When the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 was passed tenants were classified as 'tenureholders', 'raiyats' and 'under-raiyats'. The word 'raiyat' was, for the first time, defined as denoting "primarily a person who has acquired a right to hold land for the purpose of cultivating it by himself or by members of his family etc. etc."

In determining whether a tenant is a raiyat the Ct is to have regard to the local custom & the purpose for which the right of tenancy had been originally acquired. Section 160 (c) protects a lease of land whereon dwelling houses have been erected by declaring it to be a 'protected interest' & the purchaser of the holding sold in execution of a decree for arrears due in respect thereof, acquires the holding subject to the interest defined as "protected interest". Chapter XIV in which S. 160 occurs was extended to Orissa by a Govt. Notn. It would thus appear that leases of land for building houses thereon were one of the 'protected interests' & treated as leases for agricultural purposes. All such lessees were treated as agricultural tenants till the passing of the Orissa Tenancy Act in 1913. But Chap. XV, Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885, dealing with Contract & Custom, had not been extended to Orissa; & Ss 181, 182 & 183 relating to service-tenures ,homesteads & customs were not in force in Orissa till the passing of the Orissa Tenancy Act in 1913.

(21) In the earliest settlement of the Orissa Province between the yrs 1834 & 1843 mention was made of the existence of Chandna holdings. At that settlement, known as the Bhauria settlement, a rent roll for each estate or a portion of the estate was made out, showing in detail the lands held & the rents payable by what were known as thani or resident-raiyats, chandnadars, & all tenure-holders & owners of resumed lands, but giving any a lump sum assessment on lands in occupation of the proprietors or of pahi-raiyats. At the Provincial Settlement an investigation into the existence of all the tenures then prevailing in Orissa was undertaken by Govt & the characteristics of a chandna tenure are described by Maddox in para 327 of his Report, Vol I, at p. 222.

"Shopkeepers, artisans, & labouring classes who, having no arable land in the village pay rent for homesteads only, are called chandinadars and their tenure chandina. Pahi-raiyats also, who having their home in one village, hold also a house or homestead in the other, are sometimes known as 'chandinadars' of the latter village.....The word 'chandina' has come to be used for all homestead land paying rent separately from arable land. At the last settlement chandinadars were given leases securing to them fixity of rent for the term of the settlement, & the incidents of the tenure do not materially differ from those of thani raiyats except that they are governed by the Contract Act & not by Act X (10) of 1859. Chandina tenures have, to a great extent, merged in pahi, &, on the other hand, new chandina tenancies have been recognised, especially in patnas or villages consisting solely of homestead, & in the suburbs of towns".

It will be noticed that no distinction is made between pahi-raiyats and chandnadars or between agricultural holdings & homesteads. The word was used for all kinds of chandnadari tenures & new chandnas consisting solely of homesteads were being created in the suburbs of towns. It may also be noted that the incidents of this tenure were very similar to those of thani raiyats. One of the incidents of thani tenure was that it was not transferable by sale or gift, but in practice it was found that thani was being freely sold both by voluntary & involuntary transfers. There were many cases of thani holdings having been sold by Civil Cts in execution of decrees & the new tenant having been recognised by the zamindar. In case of voluntary sale the zamindar usually demanded rusum. After discussing the rights of thani raiyats Mr. Maddox remarks at p. 218 of his Report as follows:

"In conclusion we may say that thani is now-a-days transferred, but that the zamindar does not record the transferee in his sherista as a thani raiyat without a fee".

Thani raiyats were those who had homes in the village &, from the earliest times, had been conferred protection against ejectment. All those who could prove that they had held thani lands by inheritance or purchase from the holders at the last settlement, were recorded as thani, so that thani lands were sometimes in the possession of non-resident raiyats. In places thani rights had been recognised by the zamindars by allowing their raiyats their homestead free of rent, the rest of their holding being assessed to rent or revenue. The homesteads which were not assessed to rent were known as 'minha' or 'deducted' from the assessed lands. These minha lands were being freely bought & sold by custom; & sometimes the minhas were found in possession of a person possessing no other lands in the village — See p. (sic) of Maddox's Report. The under-tenants of such raiyats & the under-tenants of those under-tenants were all styled under-tenants, with all the rights attaching to that status, by the extension of the application of Chap VII, Bengal Tenancy Act to Orissa. Not only raiyats but the proprietors & the sub-proprietors used to hold their houses free of rent & revenue & their houses & homesteads were known as 'khanabari'. The Orissa Tenancy Act recognised the holders of all these homestead tenancies as a class of tenants governed by the provisions of the Act & defined Chandnadar as "any person holding land which had been recorded as chandna in the course of a settlement & for which a rent has been fixed for the term of that settlement".

(22) At the settlement of 1922 by Mr. Dalziel homesteads of agriculturists were recorded as stitiban & those of non-agriculturists as chandna if they had been so recorded at the previous settlement or if they were not on lease for a fixed period, or had been described as chandnadar either in a lease or in the landlord's papers. If no such evidence was available they were recorded as pattadars. The homestead of a non-agricluturist in a permanently settled estate was recorded as 'ghar-bari' as the status of chandna could not be given to a tenant in the permanently settled area even when so recorded at the previous settlement, in view of the definition in the Tenancy Act.

"Some chandna holdings were recorded as 'Isthamarari' chandna but the mere fact that the word 'isthamarari' is not found in the entry of a chadnadar's status, should not be taken to imply that he is a mere tenant at will". P. 23 of Mr. Dalziel's Report.) "In recording tenants in the town of Cuttack care was taken to distinguish mere renters of houses from parties who held an interest in the land. The former who are known as 'bharadars' have not been recorded at all as the record prepared under the Tenancy Act is only concerned with rights in land."

Enquiry during the settlement disclosed that most of the urban tenants were really chandnadars.

"A few tenants, even in the urban area, were found with the status of 'stitiban' & under-tenants in various degrees were recorded as dar-pattadars, dar-dar-pattadars, dar-chandnadars — P. 44 of Dalziel's Report".

Even in the case of leases of town Khasmahal lands transfer of which without the permission of the Collector is expressly prohibited, it was found that transfers were as a matter of fact taking place in evasion of the prohibition. The position of non-agricultural holdings is discussed at para 451 of the Report at p. 156. The Report says:

"It is both (sic) clear that in any area which has not been excluded from the Act, all occupants of land who are 'tenants' under the Act are liable to have their rents settled by the revenue officers. Some tenants in Cuttack town tried to impugn the validity of the settlement of rents of chandnadars and bajiaftidars in the urban area, & referred to H. C. rulings on the point. These rulings, however were under the Bengal Tenancy Act, whereas chandnadars & bajiaftidars are peculiar to Orissa & are specifically recognised by the Orissa Tenancy Act. Moreover, the area in question is temporarily settled. Section 119, Tenancy Act, requires that the rents of all tenants who should be re-settled at the time of re-settlement of revenue & the expression 'all tenants' must include chandnadars & bajiaftidars. Chandnadars are, of course, essentially non-agricultural tenants & bajiaftidars also, by their definition under the Act, are not precluded from being non-agricultural. It is clearly desirable that in temporarily settled areas the revenue authorities at the time of revenue settlement should have power to re-settle rents under their proprietors & some inconvenience is caused by the fact that many tenants in urban areas are pattadars, whose rents cannot be touched by the revenue authorities. From this point of view, it would be convenient if chandna status could be given to all non-agricultural tenants in temporarily settled estates & their rents fixed at the time of revenue settlement.....I think that some sort of chandna status should be open to non-agricultural tenants in the permanently settled estates, as to their counterparts in the temporarily-settled estates ,not of course as implying that the rents should be settled at the time of the revenue settlement, but that they should be recognised as tenants under the Act, & their rents be liable to be dealt with under S. 123".

(23) I have quoted these extracts from Settlement Reports in order to show that lease of homestead lands, both in urban & rural areas was a fairly common practice & that the tenants of homestead lands were a special class, treated as agricultural tenants by the Orissa Tenancy Act, irrespective of whether such tenants held their homesteads as raiyats or otherwise. These tenants in their turn, created under-tenants by sub-leasing their homesteads or otherwise parting with a part of their leasehold. It was necessary, as, in fact, it was recommended by the settlement officer, that some sort of chandna status should be given to those tenants so that they may be protected from arbitrary eviction, and their rights in respect of their holdings may be more precisely defined.

(24) On the other hand, there were decisions of the highest Cts regarding the nature of these tenancies which were neither uniform nor consistent. In 'Chintamoni v. Sriram Chandrakar', AIR (21) 1934 Pat 422: (149 IC 805), it was held that a chandna right is not transferable except on proof of local custom or usage. The suit was filed for ejecting a purchaser from a chandnadar & the ground for ejectment was that the chandnadar had abandoned his tenancy. But it was laid down that if the person who has acquired by purchase is described in the Record-of-Rights as a chandnadar, the onus is cast on the person who attempts to eject him, of proving local usage which rebuts the entry in the Record-of-Rights. It would appear therefore that if the Settlement Record registered a transferee from a chandnadar as a chandnadar, the onus would be on the pltf seeking to eject him to rebut the correctness of that entry. In S. A No 156 of 1937 it was assumed that a darchandna is not transferable as a chandna is not. This case has not been reported but a short note of the decision appears in 'Dulai Dei v. Chema Das', the Notes portion of 8 Cut L. T. 6. In 'Surya Mal v. Sriram Naidu', AIR (26) 1939 Pat 158: (180 IC 298), it was held that a darchandnadar is not an under-raiyat within the meaning of the Orissa Tenancy Act. In 'Sarat Chandra v. Jamuna Prasad', AIR (32) 1945 Pat 289: (24 Pat 263), it was held that a suit for rent against a chandnadar would lie in the Revenue Ct only. It would therefore appear that while Govt regarded all persons in occupation of homesteads as 'tenants' within the meaning of the Orissa Tenancy Act & settled their rents accordingly, the course of judicial decisions indicates that the incidents of chandna tenancy were indefinite & precarious. In none of the reported cases was custom or usage proved. The time was ripe for the Legislature to step in in order to define the law applicable to homesteads, and rescue those tenures from the obscurities of custom & usage.

(25) The Legislature therefore amended S. 236 so as to secure all tenants in occupation of homesteads & declared that the incidents of their tenancy shall be 'regulated by the provisions of the Act applicable to occupancy raiyats'. The Legislature thereby engrafted upon existing leases an enactment the object of which was to confer occupancy status on all tenants of homestead & do away with proof of custom. It has to be remembered that in 1938 occupancy holdings had been made transferable by legislation. In Bengal the law had been amended in 1928 by enacting that "an under-raiyat is not liable to be ejected if he is in possession of his land for a continuous period of 12 yrs, or had a homestead thereon. "See proviso to S. 48 C."

The object of the Orissa Legislature was also to achieve the same result, viz., to prohibit the ejectment of a tenant from a homestead. It is the function of the interpreter to ascertain the legislative intent & see whether the language employed is sufficiently expressive of it. Sub-section (1) of S. 236 as amended by Act X (10) of 1946 reads as follows:

"(1) Notwithstanding anything in this Act the incidents of tenancy of any tenant, including the holder of a service tenure, in respect of the homestead in which such tenant ordinarily resides, shall be regulated by the provisions of this Act applicable to land held by an occupancy raiyat. Provided that if his homestead is held as a service tenure or part thereof & the holder of such tenure ceases to perform the service, he shall be liable to pay such rent for the occupation of the homestead as may be determined by the Collector on an application filed either by the landlord or by the holder of such tenure".

Explanation: A chandnadar is also a 'tenant within the meaning of this section". Orissa Act XXXII (32) of 1947."

The difference between a 'tenant' & a 'raiyat' is that the former holds lands while the latter holds lands for cultivation. A person who holds land for building houses thereon is therefore a 'tenant' under the Act. The expression 'any tenant' quoted above is a catch-all phrase & takes in all tenants of homestead lands. The incidents of tenancy of such tenants are declared to be regulated by the provisions of the Act applicable to land held by an occupancy raiyat. A phrase may be known by the company it keeps. The expression 'incidents of tenancy' is to be found in the previous Tenancy Acts & in the Settlement Reports. The same expression is used in Chap III dealing with tenures & in Chap V dealing with occupancy-raiyats which is divided into several parts with distinct headings such as 'General' Incidents of Occupancy Right', 'Enhancement of Rent', Reduction of Rent' & 'Commutation'. The fascicule of Ss 27 to 31 B appear under the heading 'Incidents of Occupancy Right' which may be regarded as a preamble to these Sections. Section 30 A which deals with transfer of Occupancy holdings was in force at the time of the amendment of S. 236. On a plain reading of S. 236, therefore, I am of opinion that one of the incidents of tenancy of any tenant in respect of the homestead in which such tenant ordinarily resides, is the incident of transferability conferred by S. 30 A. This right of transfer was, however, expressly negatived in the case of a service tenureholder as S. 235 was amended by the same Amending Act, & the restriction on the right to transfer or bequeath was retained, as before, though the protection against ejectment was conferred by S. 236 (1) by the use of the words "including the holder of a service tenure". The resultant effect of the amendment of these two sections is that any tenant, including the holder of a service tenure, is immune from ejectment from his homestead, & the incidents of his tenancy shall be regulated by the law applicable to an occupancy raiyat. Sections 29 & 57 lay down the grounds on which an occupancy raiyat & an underraiyat respectively may be ejected. A tenant other than a chandnadar or an occupancy raiyat, & some other classes of tenants mentioned in S. 75 could be ejected by a suit for arrears of rent. It was argued that all the provisions applicable to an occupancy raiyat such as enhancement of rent, reduction of rent, communication etc. cannot apply to the tenant of a homestead, & consequently the right of transfer cannot attach to a homestead tenure. That is precisely the reason why the Legislature has deliberately used the expression "Notwithstanding anything in this Act" in the opening portion of the amended S. 236 (1) & also the word "regulate" in delimiting the extent of the applicability of the provisions. To regulate is to adjust; to direct by rule or restriction; to subject to governing principles or laws — (Bouvier). In other words, the tenant & undertenant of a homestead can be ejected hereafter only on grounds on which raiyats & underraiyats could be ejected before the amendment. I am, therefore, unable to accede to this contention & regard the amendment as unworkable.

(26) It was next argued that as a dar-chandnadari right is not transferable, deft 1 cannot be regarded as a tenant, & that as deft 2 had transferred his right to deft 1 before the amendment of S. 236, he ceased to be a tenant, & that therefore both are no better than trespassers. This argument involves a doubtful assumption & a wrong conception.

(27) The assumption that a darchandnadari whether it is so or not would depend upon whether the chandna right itself is transferable or not. It is well settled that the incidents of such subtenancy would depend upon the nature of the original tenancy — See 'Abdul Karim v. Abdul Rahman', 15 C L J 672: (13 I C 364); 'Babu Rama Roy v. Mohendranath', 8 C W N 454; Ramapada v. Atore Dome', A I R (12) 1925 Cal 202: (84 I C 743); 'Krishnakanta v. Jadu Kasya', 28 I C 839: (A I R (3) 1916 Cal 32). An under-tenant of the homestead of a raiyat has therefore been held not liable to be evicted & is protected by S. 236 — 'Kandhuri v. Arjun', 1 Pat 161: (A I R (9) 1922 Pat 416). As early as 1869 Sir Barnes Peacock C. J. held that a tenure granted for building purposes is transferable in the absence of any evidence to the contrary . The learned C. J. observed:

"I know of no law which prohibits a man who gets land for the purpose of building from assigning his interest in it to another. By assigning his interest he does not necessarily get (sic) of his liability to pay rent. The tenant who assigns his interest does not in my opinion commit such forfeiture of his rights as to entitle the lessor to treat such rights as altogether non-existent & to turn him out of possession" — Banee Madhub v. Joykishen, 12 W R 495".

A lease is normally assignable, in the absence of a custom or usage to the contrary. The fact that in ordinary leases of agricultural land the right of occupancy or non-occupancy right is not transferable by law, leads people to believe that leases of homesteads are also non-transferable. Though a chandna holding is treated as a lease for agricultural purposes, the right of a chandnadar to transfer was not specifically provided for by the Orissa Tenancy Act. A chandnadar is defined as including also the successor in interest of such a person. Succession to a person is not the same thing as the successor in interest of that person. The latter expression would include an heir as well as a transferee. I am therefore inclined to think that a chandna right is transferable & a darchandna right is equally so in the absence of proof of a custom or usage or contract to the contrary. Deft 1 became a tenant by virtue of the assignment in his favour by deft 2. The word 'tenant' is to be understood in its generic sense as including any person who is liable to pay rent & who holds land under another person. This in fact is the definition of the word 'tenant' as given in the Act.

(28) The answer to this argument is also to be found in S. 4 of the Amendment Act X (10) of 1946 which is headed "Application to pending suits & proceedings" & which reads as follows:

This section is retrospective in its operation & affects all pending suits & proceedings in execution. The suit, in the present case, was laid for the ejectment of deft 2 on the ground that he had transferred the holding without the consent of the landlord. Although he had transferred the holding, it cannot be said that he ceased to be a tenant from that very moment, until he was actually evicted in execution of a decree in ejectment his tenancy continues. As a result of the transfer, the privity of estate between him & the landlord is assigned. The transferee becomes liable for the rent by reason of his getting possession of the estate. Section 100, Tenancy Act says that "no tenant shall be ejected from his tenure or holding except in execution of a decree". To regard a tenant who has transferred his holding — assuming it to be non-transferable — as a trespasser from the date of his transfer would be to put restrained construction & the reverse of a liebral one. All that can be said in such a case is that he incurs forfeiture for breach of a condition of the tenancy but if the breach is capable of being remedied the forfeiture can be relieved against. I can find no support either in the T. P. Act or in the Tenancy Act itself for the proposition that the moment the lessee violates a provision of the lease he becomes a trespasser & ceases to be a tenant. I cannot conceive of any suit for ejectment of a tenant unless he has violated some condition of the tenancy. To read the clause "any suit for the ejectment of a tenant" occurring in S. 4 as being applicable only to a person who was a tenant complying with all the conditions of the tenancy would be to confine to the letter of the enactment and not to the spirit, & would be sacrificing good sense to technicality.

(29) The Act, as a whole, is declaratory & remedial. It declares the law applicable to homesteads in S. 3 as the law that was then applicable to occupancy raiyats . It is remedial in the sense that it removes uncertainties in the tenure of homestead tenants & declares the law that has to be applied in future. It does not purport to reopen proceedings that had already been closed but has been specifically made applicable to pending proceedings. It undoubtedly affects the existing rights of persons & is retroactive in its scope. The Act should therefore, be so construed as to extend the provisions to all cases within the reason of the rule. The repeated use of the words 'any tenant' in both S. 3 (sic) leads me to think that the words are large enough to embrace such cases as the present & are within the mischief intended to be dealt with in the Act. It is by no means unusual, in construing a remedial statute, to extend enacting words beyond their natural import & effect in order to include cases within the mischief — See 'Dean and Chapter of York v. Middleborough', (1827) 148 E R 888: (2 Y & J 196). In 'Wright v. Person', (1869) 4 Q B 582: (38 L J Q B 312), a case under the Dogs Act of 1869, the word 'cattle' was interpreted to include horses, pigs & mares as they could also be bitten by dogs. The Act, in my opinion, embraces not only tenants but also their assignees & protects them from eviction provided ejectment has not been carried out & a suit or execution proceeding for such eviction is still pending on the day the Act came into force. Such a provision was necessary to quiet titles which had been made insecure, as a result of diversities in judicial decisions & the changes in law relating to homesteads that were taking place with the growth of the community & its concerns. There is no rule that when a person has commenced an action he has a vested right in the then state of the law — 'Hurst v. Hurst', (1882) 21 Ch D 278: (51 L J C H 729) & 'A. G. v. Thobald', (1890) 24 Q B D 557 at p. 560: (62 L T 768). In 'Quilter v. Mapleson', (1882) 9 Q B D 672: (52 L J Q B 44), relief against forfeiture in an action in ejectment was sanctioned by the Ct of Appeal although, when the action was before the Ct of the first instance ,the new statute had not come into operation. Great weight is to be attached to the fact that the Act was designed to protect the public interest & was remedial in its object. As was observed in 'Pardo v. Bingham', (1869) 4 Ch 735: (20 L T 464), we must look to the general scope and purview of the statute & the remedy sought to be applied, & consider what was the former state of the law & what it was that the Legislature contemplated. But quite apart from interpretation the language of S. 4 clearly affects the existing rights of landlords. It necessarily follows that the existing breaches of covenants & existing obligations incurred thereby are also affected by the Act. If the landlord had the right to eject he cannot enforce it. If deft 1 had committed a breach of any of the covenants of the lease, he does not incur the liability of forfeiture or eviction. The Act applies to leases made before the Act. Can it be said that it does not apply to breaches committed before the Act? It applies to all breaches so long as the landlord has not obtained possession. The Legislature did not want to discriminate between tenants whose rights were under challenge at the time the Act was passed & those whose rights may thereafter be challenged. I see no reason why the interpretation of the Act should be confined to breaches committed after the Act — See 'Raghu Raj Singh v. Harikishen', A I R (31) 1944 P C 35: (I L R (1944) Kar P C 199) and 'Syamakanta v. Ram Bhajan', A I R (26) 1939 F C 74: (I L R (1939) Kar 165). Supposing deft 2 had transferred his interest one day after the Act. He or his assignee would clearly be protected against eviction. If he had done it a day before the Act, could it be said that the Legislature intended to exclude him from the protection? If, again, deft 2 had transferred only a portion of his interest he would nonetheless continue to be tenant, but according to the argument of the resp if he had transferred the whole of his interest he becomes a trespasser. Section 4 means that all the proceedings which were pending on the day the Act came into operation are to be treated as having been commenced after the Act came into force. That is the only meaning that can be attached to the expression

"as if it had been in force at the time of the institution of the suit in the Ct of the first instance".

The Legislature intended to remove difficulties of proof, no less than to introduce a law intrinsically better. If the pltf had filed his suit one day after the Act, he would be clearly hit by the Act: if he had filed it one day before the Act, S. 4 would apply & he would be equally hit by the Act. The same view has been adopted by D.B. of the Patna H. C. in 'Brajsundar Deb v. Giridhari Behera', 13 Cut L T 66.

(30) It was argued, however, that the Orissa Tenancy Act itself does not apply to a lease like the one which is the subject-matter of the present suit. As I have already pointed out, leases of homestead lands have been a peculiar feature of the tenancy law of Orissa, & the interest created in land on which dwelling houses stand, known as the chandna right, has been the subject-matter of tenancy legislation. Leases of such land are, in my opinion, excluded from the operation of the T. P. Act being leases for an agricultural purpose. Agriculture should not be confounded with cultivation. Land, though not cultivated, may yet be the subject-matter of agriculture when held by a tenant. Such leases may be made orally & in the absence of proof of custom or usage to the contrary, the English rule based on natural justice, equity and good conscience, that every lease is assignable, will apply. I am, therefore, unable to accede to the argument of Mr. Mukherji, learned counsel for the resp, that the Amendment Act X (10) of 1946 is 'ultra vires' the Provincial Legislature as it affects transfer of non-agricultural lands. Learned counsel had ultimately to concede that, having regard to item 21 in the Provincial List of the Government of India Act, the Provincial Legislature was competent to regulate the relations between landlord and tenant and S. 236 did not affect transfer of land as such.

(31) Even if the majority view in this case were to prevail the pltf cannot succeed in the absence of proof of custom or usage that he is entitled to evict. It is the admitted case of both parties that deft 2 could transfer with the consent of the landlord. Whether a violation of this covenant would entail eviction is a matter for proof. The pltfs have adduced no evidence to show that by the mere act of transfer by deft 2, they acquired the right to evict. Irrespective of the provisions of the Amendment Act X (10 of 1946, I am therefore, of the view that the pltf's suit should be dismissed. I would accordingly allow the appeal with costs.

(32) NARASIMHAM J: I have read with great care the judgments of my learned brothers Das J. and Panigrahi J. & I am of the opinion that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

(33) The dispute here is between the transferee of the Darchandnadar on the one hand & the Chandnadar on the other. The Darchandnadar was also impleaded as deft 2; but he allowed the suit to proceed 'ex parte' & did not contest the judgment of the trial Ct either before the lower appellate Ct or before this Ct in second appeal. Consequently so far as the Darchandnadar is concerned, the decree of the two subordinate Cts is final. It is necessary to emphasise this aspect of the case in dealing with the various questions of law that were argued at great length before us.

(34) The transfer by the Darchandnadar in favour of the applt took place on 30-6-45. As the law then stood, even a Chandnadar had no transferable interest in his chandna holding except by custom (See 'Chintamoni v. Sri Ram Chandra Kar', A I R (21) 1934 Pat 422: (149 I C 805) and 'Mt Haliman Bibi v. Mohd. Tajamul Hussain', A I R (26) 1939 Pat 504: (185 I C 250). The position of a Darchandnadar was no better and in 'Dulai Dei v. Chema Das', S. A. 155/37 (8 Cut L. T., notes 6) Fazl Ali J. (as he then was) pointed out that a Darchandnadar cannot transfer his right. The lower appellate Ct, therefore observed "it is a settled principle of law that a Darchandnadari right is neither transferable nor heritable". In the grounds of appeal before this H. C. this view of the law of the lower appellate Ct was not expressly challenged & the main ground taken was that whatever might have been the law formerly, a Darchandnadar or his transferee could not be evicted from his homestead where he ordinarily resides by virtue of the amendments made to S. 236, Orissa Tenancy Act by Orissa Acts X (10) of 1946 & XXXII (32) of 1947. It may therefore be taken as well established that on 30-6-45 when the Darchandnadar (deft 2) transferred his right to the applt he had no transferable interest in the land & consequently such a transfer would not bind the landlord, namely, the resp Chandnadar who was entitled to treat the transferee as a trespasser & the tenancy land as having been abandoned.

(35) Therefore the sole point for consideration is whether by the two amendments made to S. 236, O. T. Act the applt can claim occupancy rights including the right of non-evictability. For the purpose of the present discussion it may be assumed that the applt ordinarily resides in the disputed land which is admittedly a homestead containing a residential house. The texts of the two amendments made to the O. T. Act in 1946 & 1947 have been quoted in the judgment of my learned brother Das J. & I need not therefore quote them once again. By those amendments the Legislature conferred on any tenant the same rights in that portion of his homestead in which he ordinarily resides as are conferred by the O. T. Act on an occupancy raiyat in his holding. The expression 'tenant' has been defined in S. 3 (23) as below:

" 'tenant' means a person who holds land under another person & is or but for a special contract would be liable to pay rent for that land to that person."

The word 'holds' occurring in that section is very important. Every person whether a trespasser or not in possession of the land belonging to a landlord would not necessarily become his tenant merely because he is willing to pay rent on his part, conveys an idea that there must be either a contract of tenancy, express or implied or relationship of landlord & tenant brought about by the operation of law. I have already shown that a Darchandnadar had no transferable interest in 1945 in his land & consequently any transfer made by him would not be binding on the landlord who was entitled to treat him as a trespasser. In the present case it is not alleged that the resp landlord gave his consent to the transfer nor is there any material on record for holding that there was any such implied consent by the resp to the applt becoming his tenant. Consequently the transferee of a non-transferable interest cannot by any stretch of imagination be said to 'hold' land under the landlord of the transferor. Therefore the applt not being a 'tenant' within the meaning of the O. T. Act cannot claim the benefit of S. 3, Orissa Tenancy (Amendment) Act, X (10) of 1946.

(36) The next question is regarding the precise extent of the retrospective effect given to the Amending Act X (10) of 1946 by S. 4 of that Act. My learned brother Panigrahi J. seems to have taken the view that that Act is declaratory & remedial in nature & that it should be given full retrospective effect so as to apply to a transfer made by a Darchandnadar prior to the commencement of that Act. He has relied on certain observations contained in Maddox settlement Report at pp 222, 218 & 311 & also on the observations of Mr. Dalziel in his Settlement Report at pp 23, 44 & 159. From these observations he seems to have drawn the inference that all lessees or underlessees of homestead lands whether in urban or rural areas were treated as tenants & that the Settlement authorities recommended that they should be given some sort of chandna status so that they may be protected from arbitrary eviction (para 9 of his judgment). (Para 23 of this report). He had then referred to the various decisions of the Patna H. C. reported in 'Suryamal v. Sriram Naidu', A I R (26) 1939 Pat 158: (180 I C 298) and 'Sarat Chandra v. Jamuna Prasad', A I R (32) 1945 Pat 289: (24 Pat 263) dealing with nature of chandna tenancies & drawn the inference that those decisions were neither uniform nor consistent. He then concludes:

"It would therefore appear that while Govt regarded all persons in occupation of homesteads as 'tenants' within the meaning of the O. T. Act & settled their rents accordingly, the course of judicial decisions indicates that the incidents of chandna tenancy were indefinite & precarious." (Para 10). (Para 24 of this report).

With great respect I must point out that a close scrutiny of the extracts from the two Settlement Reports would not support the view that the Govt regarded all persons in occupation of homesteads as 'tenants' within the meaning of the O. T. Act. In Dalziel's Settlement Report the position of homestead tenants in urban areas was fully discussed in para 451 at p. 159 & it was recommended that the O. T. Act may be applied to them & chandna status conferred on such tenants. But he was obviously considering the case of tenants under proprietors as will be clear from the following passage:

"It is clearly desirable that in temporarily-settled areas the revenue authorities at the time of revenue settlement should have power to resettle the rents of the 'tenants under the proprietors' & some inconvenience is caused by the fact that many tenants in urban areas are pattadars, whose rents cannot be touched by the revenue authorities."

The words underlined (here in inverted commas) are very significant. The settlement authorities were considering the status of lessees under proprietors in urban areas & they were not at all concerned with under-lessees in general or the limited question which arises in this case, namely, lessees under Chandnadars. The position of a lessee under a Chandnadar was not discussed in any of the Settlement Reports & apart from a mere statement to the effect (at p. 44 of Dalziel's Settlement Report) that they were recorded as Darchandnadar & Dar-darchandnadar there is absolutely no observation about their status or their incidents of tenancy. The observations of Mr. Dalziel at p. 159 have therefore absolutely no bearing on the present case. He was concerned with the position of some homestead tenants in urban areas who were recognised as Chandnadars on the one hand & some other lessees from the proprietors who were recorded as pattadars & who were governed by the T. P. Act. He clearly recognised that even in urban areas the T. P. Act would apply in respect of some homestead leases & he pointed out the confusion that arose by the application of two different Acts to two different types of homestead leases in urban areas.

"By the application of the Act to Cuttack town the statuses in the urban area are somewhat confused. Some tenants are pattadars or lease-holders, governed by the T. P. Act, while others have various statuses under the Tenancy Act — chandnadars, bajiaftidars or settled raiyats".

The report of Mr. Dalziel was submitted to his superior, namely, the Govt & his recommendation about conferment of chandna status to all non-agricultural tenants in temporarily settled estates was based on the fact that the definition of the word 'chandnadar' as given in S. 3 (3) practically left it entirely to the discretion of the Settlement Officer to confer chandna status on any such tenant. Therefore whatever might be the origin of the tenancy, if a Settlement Officer in the course of settlement of revenue, records a person as a chandnadar he gets the chandna status & the Settlement Officer was anxious to justify his action before his superior so that it may not be criticised as being purely arbitrary. But his report has nothing to do with the status of sub-lessees under chandnadars & the Tenancy Act did not confer on a Settlement Officer any discretion to confer chandna status on such sub-lessees.

(37) Similarly the various Patna decisions cited in the judgment of my learned brother Panigrahi J. if carefully scrutinised will show that there was nothing indefinite or precarious as regards the incidents of chandna tenancy. It is true that in 'Chintamoni v. Sriramachandra Kar' A I R (21) 1934 Pat 422: (149 I C 805) & 'Mt. Haliman Bibi v. Mohd. Tajamul Hussain', A I R (26) 1939 Pat 504: (185 I C 250), it was held that a chandna tenancy is not transferable except by custom. But in 'Johabaj v. Sri Krishna', 1936 Pat 29: (15 Pat 187 F B), a Full Bench made it absolutely clear that a chandna tenant was not a mere tenant-at-will & that if his landlord claimed the right to eject him the burden of proving such right by local usage or custom rested on the landlord & not on the chandna tenant. Thus these decisions recognised some sort of permanent right in a chandnadar and shifted on his landlord the burden of proving the customary right to evict him. Doubtless all the decisions assumed that a chandna tenancy was not transferable except by custom. But this view does not in any way make the incidents of chandna tenancy indefinite or precarious because even occupancy raiyats prior to 1939 had no unrestricted right of transfer. I am therefore unable to understand how it can be held that there was, as it were, a conflict between revenue authorities who wanted to confer permanent status on all tenants of homestead lands & the decisions of the Patna H. C. which made such tenancies indefinite or precarious. The law was well-settled & clear.

(38) When the Legislature passed the Amending Act of 1946 it deliberately changed the law & conferred occupancy rights in the homestead of all tenants under the O. T. Act by S. 3 of that Act. There was no question of passing any declaratory Act with a view to remove any ambiguity as regards the incidents of chandna tenancy as has been thought by my learned brother Panigrahi J. The Legislature fully knew the existing law regarding the rights of a chandna tenant & deliberately made a change affecting vested rights in their future operation & conferring occupancy rights in the homestead of all tenants. This was done in pursuance of a well declared policy & I fail to see how S. 3 of the Amending Act of 1946 can ever be said to be of a declaratory nature so as to have retrospective effect by its own force. On the other hand, as it affects vested rights prima facie, it would be prospective in nature. Doubtless some limited retrospective effect was given to that Act by S. 4 in respect of pending proceedings but the opening words of that section are "in a suit for the ejectment of any 'tenant'.....instituted before the commencement of this Act". The word underlined (here in inverted commas) shows that the limited retrospective effect given by that section was restricted only to those persons who were 'tenants' within the meaning of the O. T. Act at the time of the institution of suits for their ejectment. In the present case the suit was brought on 5-9-45. Deft 1 was then a mere trespasser in the eye of the landlord (pltf) because he was a transferee of a non-transferable holding. It is true that deft 2 was also impleaded as a party in that suit & he being the Darchandnadar of the pltf may under some circumstances claim to be a 'tenant' within the meaning of the O. T. Act. But no relief was claimed against him & in fact he allowed the suit to proceed 'ex parte'. Consequently so far as deft 1 is concerned the suit was against a trespasser & it is difficult to see how S. 4 of Act X (10) of 1946 could help him. In the judgment of my learned brother Panigrahi J. (if I may say so with great respect) the fundamental distinction between a suit brought by a Chandnadar against a Darchandnadar on the one hand & a suit brought by a Chandnadar against a transferee of a Darchandnadar (the transfer having taken place prior to the commencement of Orissa Act X (10) of 1946) has been overlooked.

(39) There is no doubt, as pointed out by my learned brother Das J., that the expression 'tenant' as defined in S. 3 (23), O. T. Act is more comprehensive than the expression 'classes of tenants' which classes have been enumerated in S. 4, O. T. Act. For instance, it may include a 'bhagchasi' of the 'nijchas' or 'nijjot' lands of a proprietor & if such a tenant has his residential house in a small plot of homestead he may get the benefit of the Amending Act of 1946. But a prior transferee of a non-transferable right was & continues to be merely a trespasser. Doubtless after the coming into force of the 1946 Act there can be no question of any non-transferable right so far as the homesteads of the tenants under the O. T. Act are concerned & any transfer made after that date might give the transferee also the same occupancy rights as the transferor was given by that Act. My learned brother Panigrahi J. seems to consider this to be an anomaly (see the last part of para 15 of his judgment, Para 29 of this report). But it is difficult to conceive of any anomaly when an Amending remedial Act confers new rights as respects transfers made after the coming into force of that Act & does not confer such right on transfers which took place prior to its commencement. But in giving retrospective effect to that Act Ct cannot go beyond the limits prescribed by S. 4.

(40) For the purpose of deciding this appeal it is unnecessary to consider whether a Darchandnadar is also a 'tenant' within the meaning of the O. T. Act. But as this question has been argued at great length I think it advisable to give my views. Chandna holdings are undoubtedly non-agricultural holdings as will be clear from a scrutiny of the relevant passages of Maddox's Settlement Report & Dalziel's Settlement Report which have been quoted at some length in the judgment of my learned brother Panigrahi J. But a Chandnadar may sub-let his chandna holding either for agricultural or horticultural purposes or for building purposes. In the former case the Darchandnadar may become a 'tenant' within the meaning of the O. T. Act. But if the Chandnadar sublets his chandna holding or a portion thereof for purely non-agricultural purposes such a Darchandnadar cannot be a 'tenant' within the meaning of the O. T. Act. The reason is obvious. Prior to 1913 most of the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act were in force in Orissa & the provisions of the T. P. Act were also in force. Chapter V, T. P. Act while dealing with the law relating to landlord & tenant expressly excluded leases for agricultural purposes from the provisions of that chapter (See S. 117). So far as the Bengal Tenancy Act is concerned, it is now well settled that it does not apply to lands let out for non-agricultural purposes (See 'Judoonath v. Schoene Kilburn & Co', 9 Cal 671: (12 C L R 343); 'Umarao Bibi v. Mohd Rojabi', 27 Cal 205: (4 C W N 76). The O. T. Act which was passed in 1913 is merely a re-enactment of most of the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act with slight modifications here & there to suit the peculiar conditions prevailing in Orissa. New classes of tenants such as Chandnadar & Bajiaftidar were undoubtedly included in the O. T. Act & to the limited extent of such inclusion the Orissa Act expressly embraces within its scope purely non-agricultural tenancies. The O. T. Act received the sanction of the Governor-General in Council under S. 5, Indian Councils Act of 1892 & consequently to the extent of the express provisions contained therein it would override the provisions of Chap V, T. P. Act. But there seems to be absolutely no basis for further extending the O. T. Act to leases for non-agricultural purposes. If a Chandnadar sublets his holding for a non-agricultural purpose to a Darchandnadar the relationship between him & the Darchandnadar must be regulated by the T. P. Act in view of S. 117 of that Act. It is true that after the passing of the Government of India Act, 1935 even the Provincial Legislature has the power to make laws regulating leases of non-agricultural lands. This is a subject in the concurrent Legislative List (Item 8 of Part I of List III). But if such a law is inconsistent with any provision of the T. P. Act then unless it is assented to by the Governor-General under S. 107 (2), Government of India Act 1935, it would be void to that extent. In the present case neither the Orissa Act X (10) of 1946 nor the subsequent Amending Act XXXII (32) of 1947 received the assent of the Governor-General. This indicates unmistakably that when the Legislature made the amendments to S. 236, O. T. Act it was confining itself to leases of agricultural land. Even if it purported to include leases of non-agricultural lands the Amending Act cannot prevail over the provisions of Chap. V, T. P. Act so far as leases for non-agricultural purposes are concerned.

(41) Therefore, I would take the view that if a Darchandnadar lease was made for agricultural purposes such a Darchandnadar may be a tenant within the meaning of the O. T. Act but if such lease is purely for non-agricultural purposes the Darchandnadar will not be a tenant under the O. T. Act & consequently will not be entitled to the special protection conferred by the two Amending Acts of 1946 & 1947.

(42) I have already referred to some passages in the judgment of my learned brother Panigrahi J. with which with great respect, I am unable to agree. There are also some other passages with which I am constrained to express dissent though with great respect. In para 14 (Para 28 of this report) he has observed:

"I can find no support either in the T. P. Act or in the Tenancy Act itself for the proposition that the moment the lessee violates a provision of the lease he becomes a trespasser and ceases to be a tenant".

So far as the tenants under the O. T .Act were concerned, there was no doubt about the proposition that if a tenant of a non-transferable holding transfers his holding without the consent of the landlord the transferee is a mere trespasser & the landlord could proceed to take possession of the holding as if it had been abandoned. This proposition was well established by the various decisions under the old Bengal Tenancy Act & the O. T. Act & it is too late to doubt it. It would only quote the observations in 'Chintamoni v. Sriramchandra Kar', AIR (21) 1934 Pat 422: (149 IC 805).

"But in this suit the landlord is not ejecting the chandnadar, but the purchasers who are trespassers. The ground of the suit is that the chandnadar has abandoned his tenancy, & that since his tenancy was not transferable no tenancy now intervenes to prevent the landlord from re-entering into direct occupation of the land".

That the Legislature was fully aware of this right of the landlord to evict the transferee of a non-transferable holding will be clear from a scrutiny of S. 31 B (1), O. T. Act as Amending Act of 1938. Prior to that amendment even occupancy holdings were not freely transferable unless the landlord's consent was obtained by payment of mutation-fee. That Act doubtless abolished the payment of mutation-fee & dispensed with the consent of the landlord. By S. 31 B the Legislature gave retrospective effect to that amendment in respect of unrecognised transfers that had taken place prior to the coming into force of that Act. In sub-s. (1) of S. 31 B the Legislature took away the right of the landlord to eject the pre-1938 transferee on the ground that he had not given his consent to the transfer. The implication of this section is obvious. But for the express provision contained therein the landlord could have successfully instituted a suit for ejecting a pre-1938 transferee on the ground that he had not given his consent to such transfer. Thus apart from judicial decisions, there is a clear statutory recognition of the position that in the eye of a landlord the transferee of a non-transferable tenancy under the O. T. Act is a mere trespasser & the landlord could successfully bring a suit for his eviction unless of course it is barred by express satutory provisions or by custom.

(43) At the end of para 13 (Para 27 of this report) of the judgment of my learned brother Panigrahi J. he has observed:

"A Chandnadar is defined as including also the successor-in-interest of such a person. Succession to a person is not the same thing as the successor-in-interest of that person. The latter expression would include an heir as well as a transferee. I am therefore inclined to think that a chandna right is transferable & a darchandna right is equally so in the absence of proof of a custom or usage or contract to the contrary".

Even if it be assumed that the expression 'successor-in-interest' would include a transferee, the mere definition of a Chandnadar in S. 3 (3) as including his successor-in-interest does not necessarily make such a tenancy transferable. The transferability must depend on the other provisions of the O. T. Act & so far as a Chandnadar is concerned the only other relevant provision is sub-s. (2) of S. 236 which expressly says that incidents of tenancy of a Chandnadar shall be regulated by local custom & usage. My learned brother Panigrahi J. has himself recognised transferability to be an incident of tenancy (Para 11, Para 25 of this report) & consequently the right of a Chandnadar to transfer his holding can arise only by proof of local custom or usage & it cannot be inferred from the definition contained in S. 3 (3). The danger of inferring transferability from the mere fact that the definition of a particular class of tenants is inclusive of his successor-in-interest will be apparent if the definition of the expression 'raiyat' in S. 5 (2), O. T. Act is scrutinised. In that sub-section a raiyat has been defined as including his successor-in-interest. But merely because of this definition it was never contended at any time that a raiyati interest was necessarily transferable. Such transferability was conferred only by the other sections of the Act such as Ss. 30 A & 31. The Legislature found it necessary to insert those sections by the Amending Act of 1938 (Orissa Act VIII (8) of 1938) because prior to the passing of that Act a raiyati interest was not freely transferable notwithstanding the definition given in S. 5 (2). A similar definition of the word 'raiyat' was given in the Bengal Tenancy Act when it was enacted in 1885. But it was never disputed that till the passing of the Amending Act of 1928 & the insertion of new sections (Ss. 26 to 26 J.) to that Act a raiyati interest was not transferable except on proof of custom. I must therefore with great respect, dissent from the view that merely because the definition of a Chandnadar includes his successor-in-interest a chandna tenancy must be held to be transferable.

(44) In para 17 (Para 31 of this report) of his judgment, my learned brother Panigrahi J. seems to have cast on the pltf the burden of proving custom or usage entitling him to evict the applt. There is however no authority for such a proposition. The pltf is the Chandnadar landlord & it is well settled that in any suit brought by a landlord for eviction the burden, in the first instance rests on the landlord to prove his title as landlord but once this is either proved or admitted the burden shifts on the deft to show that his tenancy is not precarious but that it entitles him to continue in occupation. This principle is based on several English decisions & also on 'Nainapillai v. Ramanathan', 47 Mad 337: (A I R (11) 1924 P C 65) which have been referred to in the F. B. decision of the Patna H. C. reported in 'Johabaj Khan v. Sri Krishna De', A I R (23) 1936 Pat 29: (15 Pat 187 F B). In the present case the pltf's position as Chandnadar is unchallenged. The plea taken by deft 1 was that the Darchandnadar (deft 2) had a permanent right by virtue of long possession of over 40 yrs. No question of any transferable right of a Darchandnadar by custom or usage was even alleged. The trial Ct disbelieved the deft's story of possession for more than 40 yrs. The burden of proving non-evictability either on the ground of acquisition of permanent tenancy through possession over a long period or on the ground of custom or usage must obviously lie on the deft. It is true that in 'Johab v. Sri Krishna', 1936 Pat 29: (15 Pat 187 F B), the Full Bench held that so far as chandna tenancy was concerned the burden of proof of custom of evictability would shift on the landlord by virtue of the special implications arising out of S. 74, O. T. Act. But there is absolutely no justification or authority for extending this principle to a Darchandnadar much less to the lessee of a Darchandnadar.

(By the Court): In accordance with the majority view the order of the Ct is that the 2nd appeal is dismissed with costs.

FULL BENCH

RAY C. J., JAGANNADHADAS AND NARASIMHAM JJ.

Bala Majhi, Appellant v. The State of Orissa, Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 26 of 1950, D/- 22-1-1951.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 164 — Non-compliance with requirements laid down in I. L. R. 1 Cuttack p. 207 at p. 218 — Effect.

Per Full Bench. — The requirements of I. L. R. 1 Cuttack, p. 207 at p. 218 are not intended to be mandatory statutory requirements the non-observance of which would by itself without more, vitiate the admissibility of a confession. The said requirements are wholesome and valuable principles to be observed by a Mag recording a confession under S. 164, Cr. P. C. and a trial Ct which is called upon to decide whether the confession has been voluntarily made in order that it may be admissible, may consider the omission to put any of the questions indicated in that decision as relevant either on the admissibility of the confession or the weight to be attached to it. Moreover, the model questions suggested in that decision are only illustrative and by no means exhaustive and it is always open to a Mag to put such further questions as the circumstances of each case may require so as to satisfy himself about the voluntariness of the confession. (Paras 1, 19, 32)

Anno: Cr. P. C., S. 164, N. 13.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 164 and 533 — Confession — Mode of recording — Failure to record questions and answers — Effect.

Per Full Bench. — The Mag recording a confession is bound to record every question put by him to the accused and every answer given by the accused to the same in order to satisfy himself that the confession to be made is voluntary. If the questions have been put and answered but no record of it has been made, evidence can be given both of the factum of the questions and answers and of the contents of the same under S. 533, Cr. P. C. If the substance of the actual questions and answers can be supplied by such evidence, that cures the defect completely. (Paras 1, 21, 22, 32)

Anno: Cr. P. C., S. 164, N. 11; S. 533, N. 2 and 9.

(c) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 164 (3) — Substantial non-compliance of — Effect — Evidence Act, (1872), S. 26.

Per Full Bench. — Where the requirements of S. 164 (3) have not been substantially complied with, what purports to be the confessional statement, cannot be treated as a validly recorded confession under S. 164 which could be brought in under S. 26, Evidence Act, and it must, therefore, be disregarded. (Para 24)

Where in fact there has been no adequate explanation or questioning by the Mag of the nature prescribed in S. 164 (3) before he starts recording the confession, his record of the confession cannot be said to be in substantial compliance with the requirements of S. 164 (3) and no evidence 'aliunde' that the confession was in fact voluntarily made would be admissible. Such a confession vitiated by substantial non-compliance, with the provisions of S. 164 (3) is not a valid record of the confession and cannot, therefore, be made use of under S. 26, Evidence Act. There is thus no scope for invoking the aid either of S. 29, Evidence Act or S. 533, Cri. P. C. to cure such defect.

(Paras 1, 26, 32)

Anno: Cr. P. C., S. 164, N. 13, 14 and 15.

(d) Criminal P. C. (1898) Ss. 164 and 533 — Confession — Admissibility — Test — Evidence Act (1872) S. 24.

Dicta (per Ray C. J.). — In considering the admissibility of a confession, there is a simple test which can always be employed. The Ct will address itself to the question "Is it proved affirmatively by the prosecution that the confession was free and voluntary?" that it was not preceded by any inducement, threat, or promise held out by a person in authority; if so, whether the effect of such inducement, threat, or promise had clearly been removed before the statement was made. In that case and that case alone, the evidence of that statement is admissible. The burden of proof always lies upon the prosecution. It is a mistaken notion to hold that confessions are received in evidence or rejected as inadmissible upon consideration whether they are or are not entitled to credit. A free and voluntary confession deserves the highest credit, because it is presumed to flow from the strongest sense of guut. It is, therefore, that a confession forced from the mind by flattery of hope, or torture of fear comes in so questionable shape, when it is to be considered as an evidence of guilt, that no credit ought to be given to it; and, therefore, it is rejected. (Paras 6 and 7)

..Dicta (Per Das J.). — Section 164, Cr. P. C. cannot, be read as though the Magistrate's jurisdiction to record a confession depends on positive proof before him of its voluntary character. The Mag, in the circumstances in which he would at the time be placed, can only make a reasonable enquiry, but must come to a well-grounded belief judicially and on a judicial approach. The Legislature has provided that and alone as sufficient for initial admissibility of a judicial confession trusting to experienced Mag to whom alone the function is by law entrusted to discharge their prescribed duty in this behalf properly and responsibly. But this is not to say that the trial Ct is relieved of its duty under S. 24, Evidence Act to exclude the confession if it finds it irrelevant even after it is allowed to go in under S. 164, Cr P. C.

(Para 35)

(e) Criminal P. C. (1898) S. 164 — Scope and object.

Dicta (Per Ray C. J.). — The language of S. 164 leaves it optional to the Mag to record the confession or not as he thinks fit; but if he proceeds to record, he is bound to do so in the manner laid down in the section in as faithful a manner as possible so as to guarantee the result aimed at by such record, viz. (i) fidelity of faithful reproduction of the statement, (ii) spontaneity of the making thereof; (iii) awareness in the accused's mind of the risk that he has to incur in case he makes a confessional statement in relation to the charge in which he has been arraigned and lastly, (iv) a sense of safety from the risk, physical or mental, if any, consequent upon his refusal to make one. The intendment of the requirement under S. 164, Cr. P. C. is clearly for the removal of the impressions referred to in S. 24, Evidence Act. (Para 9)

Anno: Cr. P. C., S. 164, N. 2.

(f) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 533 — "Notwithstanding anything contained in S. 91, Evidence Act."

Dicta (Per Ray C. J.). — Section 533, Cr. P. C. furnishes an exception to S. 91, Evidence Act, in allowing oral evidence to prove that the accused person duly made the statement recorded. The words "duly made" correlates to "duly taken" in the latter part of S. 80, Evidence Act. A confession is presumed under S. 80, to have been duly taken when it appears from the document produced in proof that it was taken in accordance with law. The statement therefore is said to be duly made or duly taken provided the state of things insisted upon in S. 164, Cr. P. C. as conditions precedent and subsequent to its recording was brought into existence; or, in other words, the fit state of the accused's mind was either produced or assured by the questioning. The oral evidence that is permissible in S. 533 is exclusively confined to the proof thereof.

Hence any evidence other than the evidence of strict and substantial compliance with the provisions of S. 164 shall not make the recorded statement admissible in evidence.

U. C. Misra, for Applt — Govt Advocate, for Resp; M. S. Mohanty as amicus curide.

RAY, C. J: I have had the opportunity & privilege of reading the judgment prepared by my learned brother Narasimham, J. I am in entire agreement with him as to the answers proposed therein & associate myself with all the reasons adduced in support thereof. I also agree with the order of conviction & sentence proposed.

(2) In view, however, of the practical importance of the question posed to standardisation & stabilisation of this branch of law in this State, I propose to add, as given below, some further reasons for my agreement with him. I have, since, seen the judgment proposed by my learned brother Das, J. He agrees with answers proposed. He, however, has added some further reasons not for the purpose of reinforcing the correctness of the answers but for a different purpose. It seems he should approach the question with a leaning towards admissibility of a confession as a rule leaving it to the accused to be bound thereby to establish the exception by proof of circumstances that would impair its testimonial trustworthiness. This approach, if correct, (with which I do not agree) will seldom make any difference in the practical application thereof, provided the legal safeguards are not disregarded. In criminal law, the accused is entitled to keep mum casting the entire burden on the prosecution to prove his guilt, & that by legally admissible mode of proof. The further reasons that I wish to add will appear from the following paras:

(3) Before grappling with the problem, in its direct bearing on the section, I should like to treat the following as the background in which the proposition has to be considered. "Judicial confession" have been authoritatively defined to mean "pleas of guilt on arraignment if made freely by a person in a fit state to plead". The emphasis is on the words underlined (here in inverted commas). These epithets refer to the state of mind of the accused.

(4) "Extra-judicial confessions" have also similarly been defined to mean

"a free & voluntary confession of guilt made by a person accused of a crime, in the course of conversation with persons other than a Judge or Mag seised of the charge against him".

"The testimonial trustworthiness of the confession" in one case, or, the other, is based upon the presumption that, as a free agent, no man would make a confession against himself if the facts confessed were not true. The law, in all ages, & all times, makes a discrimination in favour of judicial confessions as against extra-judicial ones. With regard to extra-judiical confessions, Blackstone, J. observed:

"Even in cases of felony at common law, they are the weakest & most suspicious of all testimony, very liable to be obtained by artifice, false hopes, promises of favour, or menaces, seldom remembered accurately, or reported with precision, & incapable in their nature of being disproved by other negative evidence".

In this view of the matter, more reliance has always been placed upon a confession reduced into writing either by the prisoner or by someone else & read over to him if it be clearly shown that the confession was a spontaneous & voluntary act of the prisoner. Such a record of confession is always entitled to great weight & consideration. When a confession is proved by a witness, it rests upon his capability of understanding what was said by the prisoner, his competency to remember the very words used, & his fidelity & accuracy in relating them to Ct, & should all be received with very great caution; because, besides the danger of mistake, from the misapprehension of witnesses, the misuse of words, the failure of the party to express his own meaning, & the infirmity of memory, it should be borne in mind that the mind of the accused is oppressed by the calamity of his situation & that he is often influenced by motives of hope, or fear to make an untrue confession. It should always be borne in mind that the zeal, which generally prevails to detect offenders, & the strong disposition in the person engaged in the pursuit of evidence to rely on slight grounds of suspicion, all tend to impair the value of such confessions.

(5) Baron Parke said:

"Too great a weight ought not to be attached to evidence of what a party has been supposed to have said; as it very frequently happens, not only that the witness has misunderstood what the party has said, but that by unintentionally altering a few of the expressions really used, he gives an effect to the statement completely at variance with what the party really did say".

The emphasis is upon the words underlined (here in inverted commas).

(6) In considering the admissibility of a confession, there is a simple test which can always be employed. The Ct will address itself to the question "Is it proved affirmatively by the prosecution that the confession was free & voluntary?", that it was not preceded by any inducement, threat ,or promise held out by a person in authority: if so, whether the effect of such inducement, threat, or promise had clearly been removed before the settlement was made. In that case & that case alone, the evidence of that statement is admissible. The burden of proof always lies upon the prosecution.

(7) It is a mistaken notion to hold that confessions are received in evidence or rejected as inadmissible upon consideration whether they are or are not entitled to credit. A free & voluntary confession deserves the highest credit, because it is presumed to flow from the strongest sense of guilt. It is, therefore, that a confession forced from the mind by flattery of hope, or torture of fear comes in so questionable shape, when it is to be considered as an evidence of guilt, that no credit ought to be given to it; &, therefore, it is, rejected. — ('R. V. Warickshall', (1783) I Leach 263: (168 E R (234).

(8) Spontaneity & faithful reproduction are the two vital needs in determination of admissibility of confession, & they have been sufficiently well-impressed upon the statutory provisions in relation to them. Section 24, Evidence Act, rules out confessions caused by inducement, threat, or promise as irrelevant in a Cri proceeding. Section 25 rules it out on the simple ground that it is made to a police officer by a person accused of any offence. The police officer is a person in authority within the meaning of S. 24 & he is the person to whom is attributed the greatest zeal to detect the offence, & who is likely to exaggerate every ground of suspicion into proof. It is not so much from consideration of credit as from consideration of public policy that law declares a confession made to a police officer as irrelevant. Section 26 deals with confession made not to police officer but to any other person including a Mag when made while the person making it is in the custody of a police officer. This provision is based upon a consideration of abundant caution. Its enactment proceeds from a well conjectured suspicion that a confession made in those circumstances if not made in the immediate presence of a Mag, have flowed either from the flattery of hope, or torture of any fear. In such cases, the presumption that a free & voluntary confession flows from the strongest sense of guilt is ruled out. The exceptional factor of the presence of a Mag, while a person confessing is in police custody ,is insisted upon for the reason that it may dispel the extraneous influence that might be otherwise conjectured to haye overcome his mind. This section, at any rate, is clear that it may cover a case of confessional statement being made to a Mag or any other person in the immediate presence of Mag. We are here concerned with a confession made to Mag. Section 26, standing by itself, would not require the Mag referred to therein being one specially authorised in that behalf nor that he should record it. But this section, however, cannot be stripped off from the context of S. 28, which insists upon the freedom of the accused's mind from the impressions caused by any such inducement, threat, or promise, as are referred to in S. 24. Suppose there is a case in which, a man in police custody making a confession in the immediate presence of a Mag & to the Mag is considered to have been still under the impressions that invalidate a confession within the purview of S. 24; it cannot be held relevant notwithstanding the provisions of S. 28. In Cri P. C., therefore, a machinery has been provided for the recording of such confession by a Mag in a particular manner. To a keen observer, it will be clear that all the requirements, the performance whereof, or the compliance wherewith have been provided for in the matter of recording, are intended to secure (i) spontaneous & voluntary character of the statement, that is, freedom from impressions supposed to have been caused in the prisoner's mind due to inducement, threat, or promise; (ii) faithful recording of the statement actually made by him — in this connection, I should advert to the caution given by some eminent Judges that any unintentional alteration of the words used by the prisoner may make the statement mean variantly from what was actually said; & (iii) that, besides the impressions caused by threat, inducement, or promise from a person in authority, the prisoner should not also be overcome with any influence on his mind flowing from a consideration that he can with immunity make a statement in order to escape from the irksome custody or from the constant annoyance of interrogators or from any other similar cause. Hence the requirement of cautioning the accused before he is asked to make a statement. This cautioning may, be & probably is, a matter of public policy when a man in authority is responsible for taking the confession for the purpose of recording. Section 29 provides that a confession does not become irrelevant merely because, 'inter alia', he was not warned that he was not bound to make such confession & that evidence of it might be given against him. Even if S. 29, Evidence Act & S. 164 Cr. P. C. are deemed to be covering the selfsame field, there is no direct impact of one against the other in relation to this point; but however, the Legislature intends, & that in the plainest possible expression, that when a Mag proceeds to record a confession he must observe this mandatory provision for the purpose of having a valid record.

(9) I consider it a tragic ingenuity that it should at all be advanced seriously as a contention that in view of S. 29, Evidence Act, a Mag can deliberately infract the caution provision in S. 164 & the questioning provision in the selfsame section & leave a bare & nude record for the purpose of being used against the accused as a binding proof of a character deserving the highest credit. A case may happen when an accused is produced before a Mag who may ask him to make his statement & listen to what he says & omit to make a record. It appears from S. 164 (1) that a Mag has a discretion to record the statement. He may exercise his discretion at his option. The language of the section leaves it optional to the Mag to record the confession or not as he thinks fit; but if he proceeds to record, he is bound to do so in the manner laid down in the section. It is clear, therefore, that in the situation envisaged in the section, that is, when a confession is made to him in the course of an investigation under Chap. XIV, Cr. P. C., or at any time before the commencement of an enquiry, or trial, he is bound to observe the provisions of the section in as faithful a manner as possible so as to guarantee the result aimed at by such record, viz., (i) fidelity of faithful reproduction of the statement, (ii) spontaneity of the making thereof; (iii) awareness in the accused's mind of the risk that he has to incur in case he makes a confessional statement in relation to the charge in which he has been arraigned, & lastly, (iv) a sense of safety from the risk, physical or mental, if any, consequent upon his refusal to make one. The law requires the duties cast upon a Mag to be performed in a judicial manner, & that is why it picks & chooses particular classes of Mags for the task. The strictness or the laxity with which the provisions of the section should be observed must be commensurate with the achievement of the result aimed at. The intendment of the requirement under S. 164, Cr. P. C. is clearly for the removal of the impressions referred to in S. 24, Evidence Act. I would quote a passage from Woodroffe's Law of Evidence (commentary to S. 28). The learned author says:

"This section forms an exception to the law provided by the twenty-fourth section, & as a qualification of that section should be read together with it. The impression caused by the inducement may have been removed by mere lapse of time, or by an intervening act, such as, a caution given by some person of superior authority, to the person holding out the inducement. An inducement may continue to operate on a man's mind for a considerable time after it was uttered; but, on the other hand ,it may be altogether removed by subsequent statements which precede the confession, & which clearly inform the deft that he must expect no temporal advantage from making one. Thus where a Mag had told a prisoner that if the latter would confess he would use his influence to obtain a pardon for him, & had afterwards received a letter from the Secretary of State refusing the pardon, which letter the Mag communicated to the prisoner; a confession subsequently made was held to be admissible. It is for the Ct to decide under all the circumstances of the particular case whether the improper influence was totally done away with before the confession was made".

From this follows the necessity of giving the prisoner sufficient time for reflection & guarding against his being influenced by the police so as to ensure that no police was present at the time of taking the confession though according to S. 26, the Mag's immediate presence is enough to destroy the polluting effect of the presence of a police officer.

(10) Section 533, Cr. P. C., on its very face, bears the impress that the defects, that are cured by compliance with its provisions, are not matters of substance but of form. If the matters of substance were to be cured, S. 164 will be reduced to nothingness. The section, broadly speaking, may be divided into two material parts — one defines its field of operation, that is, in what circumstances it comes into play, & the other prescribes what is the achievement it aims at.

(11) It comes into operation or application when a confession recorded or purported to be recorded under S. 164 read with S. 364 is tendered or has been received in evidence. The result intended for is that the recorded statement or confession shall be admitted into evidence notwithstanding anything contained in the Evidence Act, 1872, (S. 91), but always subject to the consideration that the error, if any, has not injured the accused in his defence on the merits. "Notwithstanding anything contained in S. 91, Evidence Act" is the key to its interpretation. According to S. 91, in all cases in which any matter is required by law to be reduced to the form of document, no evidence shall be given in proof of such matter except the document itself or the 'secondary evidence' of its contents. The law that requires that the matter, namely, confession or other statement of an accused made in specified circumstances shall be reduced to the form of a document is contained in Ss. 164 & 364, Cr. P. C. Reading the two sections together, it is clear that whatever is to precede & to succeed the actual recording of the confessional statement are also to be incorporated in the document. According to S. 364, whenever the accused is examined by any Mag,....the whole of such examination including every question put to him & every answer given by him shall be recorded in full in the language in which he is examined. According to S. 164, the accused's confessions shall be recorded & signed in the manner provided for in S. 364. Before the confession is recorded the Mag shall caution him & shall question him in order to satisfy himself that the confessions were made voluntarily. The questioning amounts to examining the accused. This examination too shall be recorded in the form of questions & answers in the language in which they are put & given. With regard to cautioning, the Mag has to say in his memorandum, that he has complied with it. Addressing oneself to S. 91, it would be plain that the record should be received as the sole evidence in proof of the confession. The requirements that would make the confession trustworthy & receivable are of as much importance as the actual confessional statement itself. Both are required to be proved & must be proved by production of the record. Section 533, as to its bearing, has to be understood in this setting. That section furnishes an exception to S. 91 in allowing oral evidence to prove that the accused person duly made the statement recorded. The words "duly made" correlates to "duly taken" in the latter part of S. 80, Evidence Act. A confession is presumed under S. 80, to have been duly taken when it appears from the document produced in proof that it was taken in accordance with law. The statement therefore is said to be duly made or duly taken provided the state of things insisted upon in S. 164 as conditions precedent & subsequent to its recording was brought into existence; or, in other words, the fit state of the accused's mind was either produced or assured by the questioning. The oral evidence that is permissible in S. 533 is exclusively confined to the proof thereof. The section provides:

"....it (the Court before which the confession recorded or purported to be recorded under S. 164 or S. 364 is tendered in evidence or has been received in evidence) shall take evidence that such person 'duly made' the statement recorded.....".

The evidence, therefore, will be, by way of supplementing the deficient record, that all the mandatory provisions of S. 164, such as, cautioning, questioning, making of the statement in the Mag's immediate presence, & its having been read out or explained to him & his acknowledging the same to be the faithful record of the statement made, have in fact, been complied with though there may be some lacuna in their incorporation into the document. This leaves no manner of doubt that the oral evidence should be addressed to prove what should otherwise have been proved by the record had the provisions of either of the Ss. 164 & 364 been fully complied with. This could never be a matter of substance, but must be a matter of form, viz., that there has been actual compliance with the provisions in the Mag's performance of his duty, but there are deficiencies or non-observance in relation to reducing the same into writing.

(12) It is sought to be contended that S. 533 will permit production of oral evidence in proof of voluntary making of the statement independently of or otherwise than by compliance with the provisions of S. 164. This contention tantamounts to say that suppose a Mag has not cautioned nor questioned nor taken any steps to see that the impression of undue influences on the accused's mind have fully been removed at the time the accused made the statement, the recorded confession shall still be admitted into evidence if the Ct, before whom it is tendered, is otherwise satisfied by evidence adduced before it that the accused made the statement voluntarily. This sort of satisfaction, to my mind, appears to be physically incapable of production. The law requires that at the particular moment when the accused made the statement he should be free from the bias of any undue influence & inducement on his mind by extraneous agencies, such as, inducement, threat, or promise from a person in authority. How could any evidence as to his previous state of mind replace the evidence as to his state of mind at the time he made the statement ? Such evidence should be simply irrelevant for the purpose. Hence it is my conclusion that any evidence other than the evidence of strict & substantial compliance with the provisions of S. 164 shall not make the recorded statement admissible in evidence. Of the confession made to a Mag in the course of investigation or thereafter before the commencement of enquiry or trial, the record by the Mag under S. 164 is the sole evidence. The question 3, in my judgment, has to be answered accordingly. This view is sufficiently borne out by the 'dicta' in the decision in 'Nazir Ahmed v. King Emperor', A I R (23) 1936 P C 253: (37 Cr L J 897) being pushed to its logical deductions. Section 29 contains a residuary provision of negative character. It is codification of English law instances of what do not amount to inducement, threat, or promise though they appear to be on its border land. It does not touch the fringe of the question what polluted a confession. It is dangerous to admit into evidence confessions about which you are not sure of their freedom from such pollution as affects their spontaneity I would here quote a passage from Greenleaf on Evidence P. 256 (borrowed from Russel on Crime, p. 1999):

"The difficulty experienced in this matter seems to have arisen from the endeavour to define & settle, as a rule of law, the facts & circumstances which shall be deemed in all cases to have influenced the mind of the prisoner in making the confession. In regard to persons in authority there is not much room to doubt public policy, also, requires the exclusion of confession obtained by means of inducements held out by such persons. Yet even here the age, experience, intelligence & constitution, both physical & mental of prisoners are so various, & the power of performance so different in the different persons promising, and under different circumstances of the prosecution, that the rule will necessarily sometimes fail of meeting the truth of the case. But as it is thought to succeed in a large majority of cases, it is wisely adopted, as a rule of law applicable to them all. Promises & threats by private persons, however, not being found so uniform in their operation, perhaps may, with more propriety, be treated as mixed questions of law & fact; the principle of law that the confession must be voluntary being strictly adhered to, & the question whether the promises or threats of the private individuals who employed them were sufficient to overcome the mind of the prisoner, being left in the discretion of the Judge under the circumstances of the case".

This passage would, I think, go a great length to bring into relief & help clear visualisation of the meaning of S. 29. It can have no reference to the act or omission of a person in authority in the matter of extracting admission of guilt from a person arraigned in a criminal charge. Accused's pleading in a trial stands on a different footing, viz., his statement under S. 342 examination. It is the pleading of a party, & distinct from his previous statement tendered in evidence against him & his plea of innocence if taken, during trial.

(13) Section 29, Evidence Act does not, in its practical application, come in conflict with the operation of S. 164, Cr. P. C. In this connection, I would invite attention to two very recent judgments of the Madras & Bombay H. Cs. viz., 'Karunathambi Subramania Goundar v. State', (1950 1 M L J 659 at p. 662: (A I R (37) 1950 Mad 579: 51 Cr L J 1047) & 'Bhimappa Saibanna v. Emperor', A I R (32) 1945 Bom 484: (47 Cr L J 252) respectively. With great respect, I am in perfect agreement with them.

(14) Mr. M. S. Mohanty, a learned counsel of this Bar, took leave of the Ct to make some submissions in view of the public importance of the question. In his illuminating arguments, he traced the genesis of the principle governing the admissibility & user of confessions or confessional statements of an accused. He invited our attention to the former Criminal Procedure Codes of 1872 & 1882 for the purpose of comparing or contrasting the language employed in the corresponding sections thereof, viz., Ss. 122 & 164 respectively with that of S. 164 of the present Code. He also invited our attention to the dispatch of the Govt of India to the Secretary of State, dated, 24-7-1913, reproduced in the Gazette of India, dated, 7-2-1914, for the purpose of emphasising that the basic requirement of the voluntary character of the confession had international importance & had reference to the fundamental human right — that an accused should be tried in an atmosphere free from prejudice & should not be put under compulsion of any form whatsoever to make statements incriminating himself. He also referred to Stephen's Digest-Arts. 24 & 27; Taylor's Evidence, Wigmore on Evidence Vol. III, Arts. 816, 822, 825, 826, 842 & 843; Willis on Constitutional Law pp. 515 & 521; Stone's Province & Function of Law, p. 510 dealing with immunity of will & function of mind; & Cooley's Constitutional Limitations Vol. I. I have carefully considered all these references, & I am fully satisfied that even the slightest stress of compulsion, exercised in any of the remotest possible manner continuing working upon the mind of the prisoner would vitiate the testimonial trustworthiness of his confession, & that in every civilised country freedom from compulsion on the accused's mind has always been insisted upon as the basic requirement, before it could be thought of as evidence to implicate the accused. I would rest content with referring to a few passages cited by him from Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 8th Edn., Vol. I., Chap X, "Protection to Personal Liberty", P. 651 et seq.,

"It is the law in same States (United States of America), when a person is charged with crime & is brought before an examining Mag .....he may also make a statement concerning the transaction charged against him, & that this may be used against him on the trial if supposed to have a tendency to establish guilt. But the prisoner is to be first cautioned that he is under no obligation to answer any question put to him unless he chooses & that whatever he says & does must be entirely voluntary. 'He is also to be allowed the presence & advice of counsel & if that privilege is denied to him it may be sufficient reason for discrediting any damaging statement he may have made' — (652). The portions underlined (here in inverted commas) have no counterpart in the law of this country.....But to make it admissible in any case it ought to appear that it was made voluntarily, & that no motives of hope or fear were employed to induce the accused to confess — (652)..... Under the excitement of a charge of crime, coolness & self-possession are to be looked for in very few persons; & however strongly we may reason with ourselves that no one will confess a heinous offence of which he is not guilty, the records of Cr Cts bear abundant testimony to the contrary — (653)".

He also referred to Arts 20 & 21, Const Ind. These Articles cannot be ruled out as wholly irrelevant to the question, at issue. As at present advised, I would refrain from expressing any opinion whatsoever in relation thereto. In my individual judgment, the Ct's time has been very usefully employed in listening to his arguments. To me personally, it has been reassuring as to such of my views on the subject as have been elaborately exposed in my judgment, as a Judge of the Patna H. C., reported in Emperor v. Jamuna Singh', A I R (34) 1947 Pat 305: (25 Pat 612).

(15) The learned Govt Advocate, unaffected by any consideration of sponsoring one view or the contrary placed all the authorities of the Indian H. Cts bearing upon the subject upto-date. The cases of particular importance, with reference to the question before us, the difficulty wherein arose from the apparently conflicting provisions of S. 29, Evidence Act, & S. 164, Cr. P. C., were the very recent decisions of both Madras & Bombay H. Cts, already referred to.

(16) I will close, after observing a few words, with regard to what 'substantial compliance with the provisions of' S. 164, Cr. P. C., as is insisted upon in the judgment of my learned brother Narasimham, J., means. By citing an illustration as to how, without any direct efforts of tampering, proceeding from the investigating police officer, or any other person in authority, sufficient affectation can be caused, proceeding as it were from inducement, threat, or promise. In the case of 'Amons v. State', (80 Miss 592) S. C. of Mississippi, 1902 (vide Wigmore on Select Cases on Evidence, p. 392), the Chief of police testified that the accused made to him a free & voluntary statement (for the purpose of receiving or recording a confessional statement — the police of that country enjoys the same privileges as a Mag does under the Indian Evidence Act or Cri. P. C.). The circumstances under which he made it were these:

"There was what was known as a 'sweat-box' in the place of confinement. This was an apartment about five or six feet one way & about eight feet another.....The prisoner was allowed no communication whatever with human beings. Occasionally the officer, who had put him there, would appear, & interrogate him about the crime charged against him. To the credit of our advanced civilisation & humanity it must be said that neither the thumbscrew nor the wooden boot was used to extort a confession. The efficacy of the sweat-box was the sole reliance.....This circumstance, even after several days of obstinate denial, makes the prisoner make a confession. The officer, to his credit, says he did not threaten his prisoner, that he held out no reward to him, & did not coerce him. Everything was 'free & voluntary. He was perfectly honest & frank in his testimony, (sic) this officer was. He was intelligent, & well up in the law as applied to such cases, & nothing would have tempted him, we assume, to violate any technical requirement of a valid confession on threats, no hope of reward, no assurance that it would be better for the prisoner to confess. He did tell him, however, 'that it would be best for him to do what was right', & that it 'would be better for him to tell the truth'. In fact, this was the general custom in the moral treatment of these sweat-box patients, since this officer says, 'I always tell them it would be better for them to tell the truth, but never hold out any inducement to them'. He says, in regard to the patient, Ammons, "went to see this boy every day, & talked to him about the case, & told him it would be better for him to tell the truth; tell everything he knew about the case."

Per Calhoon, J. — held:

"The confession was not competent to be received as evidence. Defendant, unless demented, understood that the statement wanted was confession, & that this only meant release from this 'black hole of Calcutta'. Such proceedings as this record discloses, cannot be too strongly denounced. They violate every principle of law, reason, humanity, & personal right. They restore the barbarity of ancient and medieval methods. They obstruct, instead of advance, the proper ascertainment of truth. It is far from the duty of an officer to extort confession by punishment. On the contrary, he should warn his prisoner that every statement he may choose to make may be used against him on his trial."

(17) Though we have not sweat-boxes literally for the use of the police, but the practice of hand-cuffing, roping, & chaining them, making them walk from place to place, confining them in the police lock-ups, & interrogating them from time to time without either threatening, or inducing, or promising any favour for extraction of confession would amount to imposition of sufficient pressure to impair the mental equilibrium of the prisoner. Instances are ample that the prisoner, anticipating what was wanted of him, would make a confession in order to escape from the torture. The Mag who has the judicial task of recording the confession should keep this in mind & see that he, by his questioning, cautioning, & otherwise fulfilling the conditions prerequisite to such recording under the law, has assured himself that he has been able to obliterate the effects thereof from the prisoner's mind so that the statement made by him can deserve the name of 'a free & voluntary confessional statement'.

(18) NARASIMHAM J: The three questions of law referred for the decision of the Full Bench are:

(1) Is the confession of an accused taken under S. 164, Cr. P. C. to be ruled out as not being voluntary & therefore inadmissible merely for non-compliance with any of the requirements laid down in (iv) & (v) at p. 218 of I L R (1949) 1 Cut 207: (A I R (36) 1949 Orissa 67: 51 Cr L J 72, Guru Baru Praja v. The King).

(2) Is the Mag recording a confessional statement under S. 164, Cr. P. C. bound to record all the questions put by him to the accused & the answers given, to satisfy himself that the confession to be made is voluntary &, if so, what is the effect of the non-recording of the same?

(3) Does non-compliance with the provisions of S. 164 (3), Cr. P. C. by the Mag when recording a confessional statement render the same a nullity or inadmissible, if there is satisfactory evidence, 'aliunde', before the Ct that the confessional statement was voluntarily made?

(19) As regards question (1), there can be no doubt that the requirements of 'Guru Baru Praja v. The King', I L R (1949) 1 Cut 207 at p. 218: (A I R (36) 1949 Orissa 67: 51 Cr L J 72) are not intended to be mandatory statutory requirements the non-observance of which would by itself without more vitiate the admissibility of a confession. The said requirements are wholesome & valuable principles to be observed by a Mag recording a confession under S. 164, Cr. P. C. & a trial Ct which is called upon to decide whether the confession has been voluntarily made in order that it may be admissible may consider the omission to put any of the questions indicated in that decision as relevant either on the admissibility of the confession or the weight to be attached to it.

Moreover, the model questions suggested in that decision are only illustrative & by no means exhaustive & it is always open to a Mag to put such further questions as the circumstances of each case may require so as to satisfy himself about the voluntariness of the confession.

(20) As regards question (2), S. 164 (2), Cr. P. C. says that a confession shall be recorded & signed in the manner provided in S. 364, Cr. P. C. Section 364 says:

"Whenever the accused is examined by any Magistrate, the whole of such examination, including every question put to him and every answer given by him, shall be recorded in full."

Section 164 (3) says that:

"No Magistrate shall record any such confession unless, upon questioning the person making it, he has reason to believe that it was made voluntarily".

It is certainly arguable that the word 'confession' occurring in sub-ss (2) & (3) of S. 164 should be restricted to that portion of the Mag's record which contains the statement of the accused relating to the offence under investigation & not the preliminary questioning of the Mag for the purpose of satisfying himself about the voluntary character of the confession. On that footing, it is arguable that the statutory obligation to record every question & every answer, imposed under S. 364 does not attach to the preliminary questioning. It appears to me however that this could not be a reasonable construction of the relevant provision. The idea underlying S. 364 clearly appears to be that whenever an accused is examined by a Mag all the questions & answers should be on the record in order that every Mag who records it or any trial or appellate Ct that will be called upon to deal with the matter may have the whole of what the accused says in his own words in the setting in which he gave the answers. When therefore the requirements of S. 364 for the recording were extended to the confessions to be recorded under S. 164, the statutory requirement under S. 364 may reasonably be taken to refer not merely to what the accused states relating to the offence, which alone, strictly speaking, is the confession but also to everything stated by him in that connection. Ordinarily, there may not be any substantial questioning so far as the strict confessional portion is concerned & therefore if the statutory obligation under S. 364 to record every question & answer is to apply to the recording of a confession, it must apply mainly to the preliminary questioning. I am therefore of the opinion that the Mag recording a confession is bound to record every question put by him to the accused & every answer given by the accused to the same in order to satisfy himself that the confession to be made is voluntary.

(22) The further question that has been raised under this heading is what is the effect of non-recording of the questions & answers. Section 533, Cr. P. C. provides as follows:

"If any Court, before which a confession or other statement of an accused person recorded or purporting to be recorded under section 164 or section 364 is tendered or has been received in evidence, finds that any of the provisions of either of such sections have not been complied with by the Magistrate recording the statement, it shall take evidence that such person duly made the statement recorded."

It would therefore follow from this section that if the questions have been put & answered but no record of it has been made, evidence can be given both of the factum of the questions & answers & of the contents of the same. If the substance of the actual questions & answers can be supplied by such evidence, that cures the defect completely. As has been repeatedly pointed out in several decisions, S. 533, Cr. P. C. can cure errors of form & not of substance.

(23) As regards question (3), it is necessary to point out that the question itself related to non-compliance with the requisites of S. 164 (3). Those requisites are the following: (1) The Mag should explain to the accused — (a) that he is not bound to make a confession; (b) that if he makes a confession, it may be used as evidence against him. (2) The Mag should question the accused with a view to ascertain whether the accused is making the confession voluntarily & on such questioning should have reason to believe that the confession is being made voluntarily. (3) He must append a certificate to the following effect:

"I have explained to.....that he is not bound to make a confession & that, if he does so, any confession he may make may be used as evidence against him & I believe that this confession was voluntarily made. It was taken in my presence & hearing, & was read over to the person making it & admitted by him to be correct, & it contains a full & true account of the statement made by him".

It may be noticed in this context that the Cr. Rules of Practice, Vol I, R. 11 requires that to the certificate under S. 164 the Mag should add a statement in his own hand of the grounds on which he believes that the confession is genuine.

(24) There can be no doubt that the above three requirements which are statutory, must be substantially complied with by every Mag who records a confession, under S. 164, Cr. P. C. A confession to a Mag under S. 164 is one that is generally made while accused is in police custody during the investigation or thereafter before the trial, & would therefore be available as evidence at the trial only under S. 26, Evidence Act. It has been authoritatively held by P. C. in 'Nazir Ahmed v. King Emperor', AIR (23) 1936 P. C. 253: (37 Cr L J 897) that where a confession made to the Mag in the course of the investigation is sought to be brought in under S. 26, Evidence Act, it cannot be admitted if it is one which is wholly outside the requirements of S. 164, Cr. P. C. Though the actual decision in 'Nazir Ahmed's case, (AIR (23) 1936 P C 253: 37 Cr L J 897) related to a confession which did not purport to be under S. 164 the reasoning of the decision equally applies to a case where the confession purports to be taken under S. 164, but is not in substantial compliance with it, for it can equally be said that where the provisions of S. 164 have not been complied with in substance & in spirit, it is legally as bad as a confession outside S. 164. My answer therefore to the question would be that where the requirements of S. 164 (3) have not been substantially complied with, what purports to be the confessional statement, cannot be treated as a validly recorded confession under S. 164 which could be brought in under S. 26, Evidence Act & that it must therefore be disregarded.

(25) The difficulty, however, consists in deciding what amounts to such a substantial non-compliance as to render the record of a confession totally invalid. Of the three requirements specified above as arising under S. 164 (3) the requirement as to the certificate is essentially one of form & the non-compliance with it is obviously one that can be cured under S. 533, Cr. P. C. if as a fact the other two requisites have been substantially complied with, though of course the absence of such a certificate may raise serious doubts as to whether the other two requirements have been intelligently & consciously complied with at all.

(26) As regards (1) & (2), if the requisite explanation & questioning have in fact been done, the non-compliance with the recording thereof, is again a defect of form that can be remedied under S. 533. It would also follow from S. 80, Evidence Act, that where any document is produced before a Ct purporting to be a statement made by a prisoner or accused person, in accordance with law & purporting to be signed by the Mag the Ct shall presume that any statement as to circumstances under which it was taken purporting to be made by the person signing it is true & that the confession was duly taken. From this it would follow that if the certificate contemplated by S. 164 (3) is found in a confessional statement as recorded & if by evidence taken under S. 533 the factum of the explanation & of the questioning as required under S. 164 (3) is satisfactorily made out, a presumption would arise that the confession was duly taken, that is to say, after such sufficient explanation & such sufficient questioning as satisfied the recording Mag that the confession was being voluntarily made. If therefore a trial Ct finds no material which would conflict with that presumption the statement would be admissible & the weight to be attached must depend on circumstances. The essence of the requirements of sub-s (3) of S. 164 is that before the Mag records the confession he must have reasons to believe that confession to be made is voluntary. That emphatic language which the sub-section uses, namely, "no Magistrate shall record any such confession unless he has reason to believe that it was made voluntarily" is itself sufficient to show that his power to record the confession is conditional upon the pre-existence of his belief. It is also clear from that sub-section that belief in this behalf must be based upon his questioning the accused after a prior explanation to him that he is not bound to make a confession & that if he does so it will be used as evidence against him. In entertaining the belief under this sub-section, the Mag is acting judicially & therefore the belief itself must be based upon the materials indicated in the section. It follows therefore that where in fact there has been no adequate explanation or questioning by the Mag of the nature prescribed before he starts recording the confession, his record of the confession cannot be said to be in substantial compliance with the requirements of sub-s (3) of S. 164 & no evidence 'aliunde' that the confession was in fact voluntarily made would be admissible. This is in accord with the cardinal principle laid down by P. C. in 'Nazir Ahmed's case' AIR (23) 1936 P. C., 253: (37 Cr L J 897) that when power is given to a certain thing in a certain way, the thing must be done in that way or not at all. Such a confession vitiated by substantial non-compliance, as indicated above, with the provisions of sub-s (3) of S. 164 is not a valid record of the confession & cannot, therefore, be made use of under S. 26, Evidence Act. There is thus no scope for invoking the aid either of S. 29, Evidence Act or S. 533, Cr. P. C. to cure such defect. It is therefore unnecessary in this reference to discuss elaborately the various decisions cited at the Bar regarding the construction & applicability of the aforesaid two sections.

(27) Now I take up the facts of the case. The applt was charged with the murder of one Sana Nimulia who along with several other villagers had accompanied him to the weekly Hat at Majhiguda & who on the return journey had slept along with the applt & other companions in a room in the liquor shop at Ghantidare. There was ample evidence on the record to show that in the liquor shop the applt quarrelled with his brother Arjun Majhi (P. W. 2) (who was also one of the companions who accompanied the party to the Hat & on the return journey) because the latter refused to give him two annas for purchasing some more liquor. The other companions pacified the two brothers & they all went to sleep thinking that nothing serious would happen. In the middle of the night however they all awoke when Sana Nimulia while struggling at the point of death kicked Khaga Dandsana (P. W. 1) who was sleeping by his side. They all found Sana Nimulia lying dead with a bleeding out injury on the left side of his head. Appellant Bala Majhi was sitting in the same room & when questioned by the companions admitted having killed Sana Nimulia mistaking him for his own brother Arjun Majhi whom he wanted to kill because of the quarrel over the giving of two annas for purchasing more liquor. The liquor vendor named Sagar Sahu (P. W. 11) came there soon afterwards & the applt was said to have admitted before him also that he killed Sana Nimulia mistaking him for his brother. A bloodstained tangia was found close-by & the stains on it have been certified by the Imperial Serologist to be caused by human blood. The applt also made a judicial confession before a Mag named Mohini Mohan Mukherji (P. W. 4) on 21-6-1949. The learned lower Ct rejected the judicial confession chiefly because: (i) the applt was not warned by the Mag that even if he retracted his confession subsequently it would still be evidence against him; & (ii) the applt was not assured of protection from any apprehended torture or pressure from police if he declined to make any confession. Apparently the learned Ses J. relied on certain observations in 'Guru Baru Praja v. The King', I L R (1949) 1 Cut 207: (A I R (36) 1949 Orissa 67: 51 Cr L J 72). I have already observed that the model questions suggested in the aforesaid decision are meant to be illustrative & should not be taken as mandatory statutory requirements. The learned lower Ct should therefore have carefully considered the other circumstances under which the confession was taken before coming to a conclusion as to whether it was voluntary or not. The applt was arrested by the police on 18-6-1949. He was produced before the Mag for the first time on 20-6-1949 for recording the confession. The latter gave him the necessary warning & remanded him to jail custody for full 24 hours. Again on 21-6-1949 he gave him the usual caution to the effect that he was not bound to make a confession & that his confession would be used as evidence against him. He also cautioned him against making a confession on the threat of the police or any other person & that he should not confess out of fear or coercion. In fact the applt's reply to the Mag's warning was that no one threatened to assault him. The Mag further put a searching question to the effect as to why the applt was making a confession & thereupon the latter replied that he was confessing because he really committed the offence. On 21-6-1949 the Mag gave him 30 minutes time for reflection. I have carefully scrutinised the evidence of the Mag (P. W. 4) & I am inclined to accept his statement to the effect that the confession was voluntary. There was ample time for reflection & though every one of the model questions suggested in 'Guru Baru Praja v. The King', I L R (1949) 1 Cut 207: (A I R (36) 1949 Orissa 67: 51 Cr L J 72) was not put, most of the questions were put & there was substantial compliance with the requirements of S. 164, Cr. P. C.

(28) Apart from the judicial confession; there is the extra-judicial confession which is of great value in the present case. It is true that ordinarily too much importance is not attached to extra-judicial confessions. But the circumstances are quite different in this case. The applt is an aboriginal & his companions were also aboriginals who had accompanied him to the Hat & who slept with him in a room of the liquor shop on the return journey. When they awoke on being disturbed by the death struggle of the victim the applt immediately told them that he killed Sana Nimulia mistaking him for his brother Arjun. The witnesses who have spoken about this are all simple aboriginals (P. W.s 1, 7, 8, 9 & 10) & there is absolutely nothing on record to show that they could have any possible motive either to implicate the applt on a false charge or else that they misunderstood what he told them then & there. The previous quarrel between the applt & his brother Arjun is well-proved & as all of them were sleeping in a row his explanation to the effect that he killed Sana Nimulia mistaking him for his brother in the darkness of the night seems very probable. The applt repeated the extra-judicial confession before the liquor vendor Sagar Sahu (P. W. 11) against whom also nothing could be urged. This is not a case of any interested party coming forward with a story of extra-judicial confession with a view to implicate an innocent man on a false charge.

(29) Moreover, the presence of human blood stains on the tangia is another important corroborative piece of evidence against the applt. Doubtless the tangia was not found in his hand when his companions awoke soon after the commission of the crime. But it was found lying at a distance of 5 or 6 cubits away from him & P. Ws. 1, 7, 8, 9 & 10 have all stated that the applt was the only member of the party who was armed with a tangia when they left the village for the Hat. Therefore there was no difficulty in identifying the tangia. The presence of human blood-stains on his shirt is also another incriminating circumstance against him.

(30) I would accordingly hold that though there is no eye-witness to the commission of the crime, the judicial confession of the applt, his extra-judicial confession to his companions & the presence of human blood stains on his tangia & his shirt, leave no room for doubt that the crime was committed by him & by none else. He was rightly convicted under S. 302, I. P. C. & the lesser sentence was also rightly imposed in view of his being a young aboriginal who had some kind of provocation from his brother in the evening of the date of the commission of the crime.

(31) The conviction & sentence are upheld & the appeal is dismissed.

(32) DAS, J: I agree with the answers given by Narasimham J. & with the reasons therefor given by him.

(33) I should have been content to leave the matter at that, since we are all agreed about the answers to the reference. But, out of respect for the different views expressed in the order of reference & somewhat different approach elaborated in the answer to the reference given by my Lord the Chief Justice & out of regard for the very strenuous arguments advanced at the bar, I consider it desirable to place briefly on record my point of view on the matters discussed, though they do not call for any final decision in this case.

(34) In the Evidence Act, confessions are treated as a species of admission. Any admission by an accused of an incriminating fact falls within the scope of Ss. 18 to 21, Evidence Act & is relevant. (See 'Ghulam Hussain v. The King', 77 I A 65: (51 Cr L J 1552).) A confession is an admission, in terms of the offence itself, or at any rate, substantially, of all the facts which constitute the offence. (See 'Pakala Narayanaswami v. Emperor', A I R (26) 1939 P C, 47 at p. 52, Col. II: (40 Cr L J 364).) Sections 24, 25 & 26 provide the circumstances under which a confession is not relevant or cannot be proved. Thus the scheme of the Evidence Act is to treat confessions 'prima facie' as relevant or provable under the category of admissions & to provide under Ss. 24, 25 & 26 the circumstances in which they are not relevant or provable. Sections 27, 28 & 29 are provisions indicating the limitations in the operation of Ss. 24, 25 & 26. This method of dealing with confessions adopted by the Indian Legislature shows a marked departure from the approach of the English law to the admissibility of confessions. The English law in this respect has been authoritatively pointed out by P. C. in 'Ibrahim v. The King', 1914 A C, 599 at p. 609: (A I R (1) 1914 P C 155) in the following terms:

"It has long been established as a positive rule of English Criminal Law, that no statement by an accused is admissible in evidence against him unless it is shown by the prosecution to have been a voluntary statement, in the sense that it has not been obtained from him either by fear of prejudice or hope of advantage exercised or held out by a person in authority".

The terms in which S. 24, Evidence Act, is couched seem to indicate that in the case of an ordinary confession, there is no initial burden on the prosecution to make out the negative, viz., that the confession sought to be proved or admitted is not vitiated by the circumstances stated in the section. It is the right of the accused to have the confession excluded & equally the duty of the Ct to exclude it even 'suo motu', if the vitiating circumstances "appear". While this is the general rule, Ss .25 & 26 are special rules relating to a confession made to a police officer & a confession made in the immediate presence of a Mag by an accused in the custody of the police officer. The former is completely excluded, thereby indicating a total distrust, (unlike in the Englisn Law) of the police machinery, in so far as it brings out a confession by the accused. But inspite of this distrust a confession made in the immediate presence of the Mag is made provable under S. 26, though the accused is at the time in the custody of the police. The position therefore as emerges, is that confessions other than what may be called police-confessions are admissible subject to their being excluded by the "appearance" of vitiating circumstances mentioned in S. 24. The Evidence Act does not deal with how magisterial confessions are to be recorded. That is specifically dealt with in S. 164, Cr. P. C. The effect of that section, as interpreted by P. C. in 'Nazir Ahmed's case', (A I R (23) 1936 P C 253 : 37 Cr L J 897), is that if a magisterial confession is sought to be admitted under the Evidence Act, it can be proved only if it is a valid record of the confession under S. 164, Cr. P. C. It is to be noticed that S. 26 is in negative terms. It does not say that every confession made in the immediate presence of a Mag can be proved as against the accused. Therefore, it would follow that if there is a special statute prescribing how a Mag is to record the confession, it is only a confession so taken that can be proved & received & admitted in evidence.

(35) A consideration of S. 164 however would show that what is aimed at in that section is not in the nature of an absolute guarantee that the confession is voluntary in the sense of freedom from inducement, threat, or promise, proceeding from a person in authority. What that section prescribes is not that the recording Mag should have positive proof before him about the absence of those vitiating circumstances but that he should, before recording, have "reason to believe" that the confession is voluntary, i.e., not prompted by inducement, threat, or promise, proceeding from a person in authority. It is to be noticed that the use of the phrase "he has reason to believe that it was made voluntarily" indicates that it is not the function of a trial Ct to sit in judgment over the recording Mag to the extent of substituting its belief on the material, but to see whether he has exercised his jurisdiction in this behalf judicially & with a judicial approach. What gives the Mag jurisdiction to record is his own subjective belief based on objective reasons. This clearly shows that it is not the intent of the Legislature by S. 164, Cr. P. C. to restore in respect of magisterial confessions the English Law requisite of positive proof of the absolute voluntariness of the confession as a 'sine qua non' for its admissibility a test which it seems to have discarded for non-magisterial confessions (other than police confessions which alone it has totally prohibited). The position, therefore as I conceive it, is that a magisterial confession can be proved only by the record of that confession & that the record cannot go in against the accused at the trial, unless it is one that is made in substantial compliance with the provisions of S. 164, Cr. P. C. including the fair belief of the recording Mag as to the voluntary character of the confession, arrived at on a judicial approach. But once the record goes in, it is for the accused to make out or for the Ct to find the appearance of vitiating circumstances mentioned in S. 24 in order to exclude it. It is also to be noticed that even in the matter of finding whether or not there has been substantial compliance with the terms of S. 164, the prosecution has the initial advantage of relying on the presumption in S. 80, Evidence Act & of the remedying provision of S. 533, Cr. P. C. What I wish to point out is that the Legislature has indicated two different standards for "proof" & "reason to believe" as appears from S. 3, Evidence Act & S. 26, I. P. C., that this distinction is not academic. Section 164, Cr. P. C. cannot, therefore, be read as though the Mag's jurisdiction to record a confession depends on positive proof before him of its voluntary character. The Mag in the circumstances in which he would at the time be placed, can only make a reasonable enquiry, but must come to a well-grounded belief judicially & on a judicial approach. The Legislature has provided that & alone as sufficient for initial admissibility of a judicial confession trusting to experienced Mag to whom alone the function is by law entrusted to discharge their prescribed duty in this behalf properly & responsibly. But this is not to say that the trial Ct is relieved of its duty under S. 24, Evidence Act to exclude the confession if it finds it irrelevant even after it is allowed to go in under S. 164, Cr. P. C.

(36) It appears to me therefore with greatest respect that to approach the subject of confessions & particularly of judicial confessions, as though every record or evidence of confession is to be treated as 'prima facie' suspect & as being liable to be thrown out as inadmissible in the absence of evidence that the recording Mag had clear & positive proof before him of its voluntary character, would be to contravene the provisions of the Statute in this behalf which are delicately balanced & which provide for a self-proving & admissible record of a judicial confession if duly taken. It would also equally be contrary to the express provisions of the Statute to allow a judicial confession to go in against the accused without substantial & adequate compliance with the provisions of S. 164 or to treat such substantial non-compliance as one affecting merely the weight of the confession or as liable to be cured under S. 533, Cr. P. C. in all cases. As has been laid down by so eminent a Judge as Sir Barnes Peacock as early as in 'Queen v. Nabadwip Chandra', 1 Beng L R O. Cr 15 at p. 22: (15 W R Cr 71 N),

"The object of the Criminal law is to punish the guilty for the purpose of deterring them & others from committing offences. The object of the law of procedure, including the Law of Evidence, is or ought to be that the innocent shall be protected & the guilty punished."

Any view, therefore, as regards judicial confessions which proceeds on a feeling that a magisterial confession is only a few degrees less open to suspicion than a police-confession, & that therefore it is necessary to impose further exacting tests by judicial legislation than what the Statute in terms has provided, or any view that would relieve the recording Mag from the rigour of the safeguards in terms imposed by the Legislature & treat all magisterial confessions as 'prima facie' valid, however recorded, leaving the defects in the recording & in founding his belief as going into the weight of the same, would with very great respect not be in harmony with the letter or the spirit of the statutory provisions in this behalf. It has been pointed out by reputed text-writers & by eminent Judges on the subject that the whole subject of confessions, in its treatment under the English Law, has been deflected from its rational course by a lot of unreasonable & illogical sentiment. (See per Baron Parke in 'R. v. Baldry', 5, Cox's Cr. Cas 523 at p. 531). This appears to have been due to not keeping separate in their consideration two matters, which are really independent, namely, (1) The confessions as a proved fact; (2) The process of proof of an alleged confession. The great likelihood of infirmities in the latter has been allowed to affect the weight due to the former & considerations germane to the latter have sometimes got crystallised by authority as affecting the weight of the former. See Wigmore, Vol. III, para 866 at p. 356. As late as in 'Ibrahim v. The King', 1914 A C 599: (A I R (1) 1914 P C 155) the judicial committee was obliged to remark that the rule of English Law on the matter before them must still be taken as unsettled. A perusal of the judgment of their Lordships in that case indicates how difficult & sometimes futile it is to lay down general rules on a branch of the law where the circumstances so greatly vary. In India, the Legislature has adopted a middle course in this respect & has laid down a few well-defined rules & has left other matters to be judged according to circumstances, I think it would be hazardous for Cts to try to enunciate further rules or weaken the application of the statutory requirements by importing other considerations, I wish, therefore, to say nothing which will in any way weaken the application of the safeguards provided by the Legislature in S. 164, Cr. P. C. & thereby load against an accused person ill-scrutinised confessions, irresponsibly taken, nor say anything which will unduly hamper the functions of the recording Mag by insisting on his having before him what virtually amounts to preliminary & positive proof of voluntariness, before proceeding to recording a confession which may, well nigh, be impossible in the situation in which he would then be placed, & thereby bring about likelihood of the initial exclusion of almost all judicial confessions to the detriment of the administration of criminal justice. I feel therefore bound to add that, with great respect, I am not in agreement with my Lord about the proposition enunciated in para 6 of his judgment or with his approach to the question based on English Law, but I am not to be supposed as being in total disagreement with my Lord's exposition of the subject in general. While I acknowledge, with respect, the learning thereof, I must own to a feeling of doubt whether it will help or hamper the subordinate magistracy for which it is intended.

(37) In arguments before us, a very wide range of discussions & citations have been covered. It is enough to say that I have considered all of them very carefully. I refrain from noticing them because it is unnecessary to burden this judgment with the same when all of us are in the main agreed about the answers to be given to the reference. I am also conscious of the fact that no amount of elaboration in a judgment where there are differing views on matters not directly arising for decision can afford guidance except as material for further discussion when such matters actually arise later for decision. There has also been some argument that Art. 20, sub-cl. (3), Const. Ind. recently adopted, makes a change in the legal position. All that I need say is that I do not think it does, if the law is as indicated in the answers to this reference.

(38) On the merits of the appeal before us also I agree with the judgment & conclusions of my learned brother Narasimham J.

Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 499 and 514 — Bond by surety only — Enforceability.

A bond executed only by the sureties and not by the accused also is not a bond as contemplated by S. 499 (1) and therefore the summary procedure for forfeiture of the bond provided in S. 514 will not apply: A I R (38) 1951 Orissa 18 Foll. (Para 2)

G. G. Das, for Petnrs — Advocate-General, for Opposite Party.

NARASIMHAM J: This petn is against the appellate order of the Dist Mag of Boudh-Phulbani dismissing an appeal filed by the petnrs against the order of a 1st class Mag, Boudh, forfeiting their bond executed in a case under S. 420/471, I. P. C. in the Ct, of the said Mag. Two persons named Nrusing Meher & Hrusikesh Meher were accused persons in that case. On 11-11-48 when they appeared before the S. D. M. they were directed to be released on bail of Rs. 1,000/- each & then the case was transferred to the file of a 1st class Mag named Sri S. B. Mohapatra for disposal. Then the two petnrs acting as sureties for the accused persons executed a bond undertaking to produce them before the Ct on such dates as may be fixed. Strangely enough the accused persons themselves were not required to execute bonds for their appearance before the Ct on several successive dates. Whether this omission was due to oversight or not it is difficult to say. But whatever that may be the fact remains that there is on record no bond signed by the accused persons for their appearance on successive dates.

(2) The main point of law urged by Mr. Das in support of this petn is that a bond executed only by the sureties & not by the accused persons also will not be a proper bond as contemplated by S. 499 (1), Cr. P. C. & that consequently the Mag had no jurisdiction to forfeit the bond while purporting to act under S. 514, Cr. P. C. In support of this contention he relied on a recent decision of my lord the Chief Justice in 'Gobindachandra v. State', Cri. Revn. No. 168 of 1950, (A I R (38) 1951 Orissa 18: 52 Cr L J 97) in which the entire case law on the subject has been exhaustively discussed. With respect I would agree with the reasonings given in that judgment & hold that a bond executed only by the sureties is not a bond as contemplated by S. 499 (1), Cr. P. C. & that consequently the summary procedure for forfeiture of a bond provided in S. 514, Cr. P. C. will not be applicable to such a case.

(3) I would accordingly allow the revision petn & set aside the order of the appellate Ct.

Civil Revn. No. 273 of 1948, D/- 24-3-1950.

Partition Act (1893), S. 4 (1) — Defendant, if can avail of provisions of section.

The language of S. 4 does not preclude a defendant from availing himself of the provisions of that section if the stranger transferee happens to be arrayed as a party defendant and should not be strictly limited only to those cases where the transferee figures as the pltf.

(Para 3)

Anno: Partition Act, S. 4, N. 1.

S. N. Das Gupta, for Petitioner — R. N. Sinha, for the Opposite Parties.

ORDER: This revision is directed against an order of the Second Munsif, Cuttack refusing to apply Section 4 of the Indian Partition Act to the proceedings before him.

(2) The facts are briefly these. The property in question is a dwelling house belonging to four branches of a family: one-fourth share belongs to defendant No. 1, a stranger; one-fourth share belongs to defendant No. 5 in his own right; one-fourth to defendants 2, 3 and 4, and the remaining one-fourth was purchased by the wife of defendant No. 5, who filed the suit for partition in order to buy off the share of defendant No. 1. A preliminary decree was granted and before the final decree was drawn up defendant No. 5, applied under Section 4 of the Partition Act to buy up the share of defendant No. 1, who was a stranger to the family. The learned Munsif rejected the petition on the ground that as the suit was not instituted by the stranger-transferee, section 4 of the Act did not, in terms, apply. Hence this revision.

(3) It is contended by Mr. Das Gupta appearing for the petitioner that Section 4 of the Partition Act can be applied in a case where the stranger-transferee is arrayed as a party-defendant as in this case and that the strict interpretation put upon it by the learned Munsif would result in frustrating the object of the Act. The Act was designed to prevent the intrusion of strangers into the dwelling-house of an undivided family and enable the Court to make a valuation if any shareholder undertook to buy the transferred share; and the shareholder offering to buy it shall be offered such valuation as the court may fix. This was certainly a beneficient provision intended to allow members of an undivided family to enjoy their property uninterrupted by strangers. But the language of the Section easily lends itself to the strict interpretation put upon it by the learned Munsif. The words "and such transferee sues for partition" are however capable of the wider meaning sought to be put upon them by Mr. Das Gupta. The word "sues" is applicable not only to a suitor who figures as plaintiff, but is equally applicable to a defendant who carries on his defence as a suitor. The words "to sue" not only signify "to prosecute" but also "to defend" or "to do something which the law requires for the better prosecution or defence of the cause" — See Stroud's Judicial Dictionary. I am therefore inclined to accept the argument of Mr. Das Gupta that the language of S. 4 does not preclude a defendant from availing himself of the provisions of that Section if the stranger-transferee happens to be arrayed as a party-defendant and should not be strictly limited only to those cases where the transferee figures as the plaintiff.

(4) Secondly, in a suit for partition every one of the parties is in the nature of a plaintiff in so far as each one of them wants his share to be partitioned off; and it is only by accident that one of them figures as a defendant and it is open to him to be substituted as the plaintiff; and even as defendant it is open to him to press his claim and have his share divided and allotted to him. Mr. Das Gupta has invited my attention to a case reported in 'Sheodhar Prasad v. Kishun Prasad', A I R (28) 1941 Pat 4: (190 I C 117) where Dhavle, J., took the same view. The latest case which is very much in favour of Mr. Das Gupta's contention is the one reported in 'Abu Isa v. Dinabandhu', A I R (34) 1947 Cal 426: (51 C W N 639). Mr. Sinha appearing for the opposite party relies upon 'Subbamma v. Veerayya', A I R (19) 1932 Mad 15: (136 I C 203), but I am satisfied that is no authority for the point raised by the petitioner here. I am of opinion that Section 4 of the Partition Act is equally applicable to all cases where a partition suit is brought and where a stranger-transferee is a party thereto. There does not appear to be any justification for confining the operation of Section 4 only to cases of partition suits filed by a stranger transferee alone.

(5) Mr. Sinha, however, points out that this point had once been taken by one of the parties and had been decided against. All that I am able to gather from the representations made at the Bar is that on a prior occasion, before the preliminary decree was passed, defendants 2, 3 and 4 contended that the plaintiff was not a stranger-transferee being the wife of defendant No. 5 and that, therefore, Section 4 of the Partition Act would not be available to her. The court upheld this contention and held that the plaintiff, being a member of the family, could not invoke the provisions of that Section. Mr.

Sinha relies upon this circumstance and urges that the point which has been once concluded cannot be agitated over again at the instance of defendant No. 5 the present petitioner. Unfortunately, this argument was not specifically raised before the Munsif on the ground of 'res judicata' nor does the Munsif base his order on that ground. In any event, the question whether the decree could be passed against a stranger-transferee when he is a defendant, was not specifically raised or decided. Furthermore, as at present advised, I am not prepared to say that the finding against the plaintiff would operate as 'res judicata' as between two co-defendants, viz. defendants 1 and 5 unless defendant 5 also raised the point.

(6) I have, therefore, arrived at the conclusion that the petitioner must succeed on both the contentions and direct the court to make a valuation of the share of defendant 1 and sell his share to such of the shareholders as may be willing to purchase it.

(7) The order of the Munsif is set aside and this revision is allowed. The petitioner shall have the costs of this revision. Counsel's fee one gold mohur.

Raghunath Patnaik and others, Defendants-Appellants v. Dullabha Behera, Plaintiff. Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 155 of 1950, D/- 5-12-1950.

Easements Act (1882), S. 18 — Trees growing on boundary line — Ownership.

Where the trees have sprung up on the plaintiff's land from roots of trees planted by the defendant on his own land, penetrating into the plaintiff's soil, the defendant cannot claim any right either by the statute of limitation or under the law of prescription although the roots of the trees have spread into the plaintiff's land for over twenty years. If the trees on the plaintiff's land derive nourishment from the soils of both the parties, they are the common property of both. If the defendant goes on the land of the plaintiff and cuts the trees there, he is liable to the plaintiff for half the value of the trees cut. (Paras 5, 7)

Anno: Easements Act, S. 18 N. 6.

P. C. Chatterji, for Appellants — Pitambar Misra and C. S. Misra, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT: The defendants are the appellants in this second appeal. The suit was for a perpetual injunction against the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff's peaceful enjoyment of the suit lands and for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 30 being the cost of bamboos alleged to have been cut and removed by the defendants from the suit lands.

(2) The dispute between the parties is about the ownership of certain bamboo clumps growing on a common ridge between the lands of the plaintiffs and those of the defendants. Survey Nos. 220/I and 220/2 admittedly belong to the plaintiff and adjoining it immediately to the north is Survey No. 210 belonging to the defendants. There are certain bamboo clumps all along the northern and northeastern portion of the ridge. The roots of these clumps have grown into the soil on either side of the boundary line and trees have sprung up on both sides. The question is whether or not the trees growing on the southern side of the ridge belong to the plaintiff. A commissioner was appointed to localise the boundary-line and he found that the bamboo clumps extended on either side of the boundary line and that the defendants cut and carried away some of the trees growing on the side of the plaintiff's lands.

(3) The learned Munsif who tried the suit in the first instance held that the defendants' father had actually planted the bamboo clumps on his side of the ridge and that the roots of those trees had, in course of time, burrowed into the plaintiff's lands on the south and that as a result new trees sprang up on his side and that, as such, the plaintiff had no right to the trees. He also placed reliance on the evidence adduced on the side of the defendants that they had been cutting bamboos from that part of the ridge for over twenty years and that consequently the plaintiff's title, if any, had been barred. The learned Munsif further held that the ridge itself was put up by the defendants and that therefore the trees growing on either side of the boundary line along the ridge belonged to the defendants. The plaintiff's case that the defendants went upon his lands and cut sixty bamboos was admitted . On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that the defendants were not entitled to trespass on the plaintiff's land for the purpose of removing the bamboos even though the trees might have been a part of the clump planted by the defendants on their side of the ridge. In this view of the matter, he set aside the order of the learned Munsif and decreed the plaintiff's suit for injunction as well as for damages as claimed in the plaint.

(4) In second appeal the learned counsel for the defendant-appellants urges that the lower appellate court was wrong in giving the plaintiff a decree for damages for trespass whereas the basis of the plaintiff's claim in the suit was for compensation for the removal of trees by the defendants on the ground that they were the plaintiff's property. The suit was not conceived in tort for trespass on the plaintiff's land and consequently the judgment of the lower appellate court was erroneous. This argument is met by learned counsel for the respondent plaintiff by the contention that although the suit was not for damages for trespass on the land the trees having grown on the plaintiff's land must be deemed to have belonged to him and that, accordingly, the decree granted to the plaintiff by the learned Subordinate Judge must be upheld.

(5) There is no common law, as such, relating to ownership of boundary trees in this country except that two Rules of Hindu Jurisprudence are quoted in Vyavahara Mayukha Chap. XV, Cl. 12 from Katyayana which is in the following terms:

"The fruit and flowers of trees produced upon a boundary between two fields are declared to be joint property pertaining in common to the masters of the two fields".

In Mandlik's Hindu Law there is a passage which throws some light on the ownership of the branches of a tree overhanging a neighbour's land. The rule is stated thus: Where the branches of trees growing in one man's field are spread over that of another then he shall be considered as the owner, in whose fields the the trees stand. This also appears to be the law in England and in other countries. The man who planted the tree is the owner not only of the trunk but also of the branches although the branches overhang his neighbour's land. He is also the owner of the roots although the roots penetrate into the neighbour's soil. The owner, however, cannot acquire a prescriptive right for his trees to overhang or for the roots of his trees to grow into his neighbour's land, apparently because there is a perpetual change in the quantity of inconvenience caused thereby. The leading case on the subject is the decision of the House of Lords in 'Lemmon v. Webb', (1895) A C 1: (64 L J Ch 205). Lord Herschell, L. C. observed:

"I think it is impossible to say that he has either ever acquired the right to the land over which they hang or to their overhanging under the statute of limitations. The trees, of course, grow from time to time and their state each year is different from what it was a year before. The same remark applies to the suggestion that a prescriptive right has been obtained. The tree of today is not in the condition in which it was 20 years ago. It would be idle to suggest that the right gained at any time was the right to have the tree there in the condition in which it was 20 years before and that it was only open to the adjoining owner to put back the tree into the condition in which it then was.....It seems to me impossible to say in a case of this description that a right is gained either by the statute of limitation or under the ordinary law of prescription".

It is clear, therefore, that the defendants cannot claim any right either by the statute of limitation or under the law of prescription, although the roots of the trees have spread into the plaintiff's land for over twenty years. The imperceptible penetration of the roots over a long period cannot amount to trespass as conceived in law. Trespass is a direct entry into the land of another. In this case the entry of the roots into the plaintiff's soil is consequential and is to be regarded as no more than a nuisance. It has been held that where the branches of a tree growing on the land of one man overhang his neighbour's land or where the roots burrow into his land and damage his buildings etc., it would amount to nuisance and not to trespass. See 'Butler v. Standard Telephones & Cable Co., Ltd.', (1940 K B 399: (109 L J K B 238). The person whose property has suffered from the roots of a tree belonging to his neighbour has the right to cut the roots of the offending tree and is also entitled to recover damages if damage has been suffered by his owing to the action of the roots. Authorities on this point were summed up by Kay, L. J. in 'Lemmon v. Webb', (1894) 3 Ch 1 at p. 24 in these words:

"The encroachment of the boghs and roots over and within the land of the adjoining owner is not trespass of occupation of that land which by lapse of time could become a right. It is a nuisance. For any damage occasioned by this, an action on the case would lie. Also the person whose land is so affected may abate the nuisance if the owner of the tree, after notice, neglects to do so".

The House of Lords ruled that no notice was necessary to the owner of the tree and that the person who complained of the nuisance might abate it by lopping off the branches which overhang his land. It is also clear that the right of lopping does not carry with it the right to appropriate the severed branches or the fruit growing on them — See 'Mills v. Brooker', (1919) 1 K B 555: (88 L J K B 950) where it was held that the right to lop off branches does not carry with it the right to pick and appropriate the fruit and if he does so he is guilty of conversion and liable to the owner for its value; 'Mahabali v. Manu', A I R (11) 1924 Pat 416: (74 I C 828) and 'Hakim ullal v. Saminullal', A I R (22) 1935 All 750: (156 I C 42). It has been laid down that not only has he the right to cut off the overhanging branches but he can also obtain an injunction for removing the overhanging portion without proof of damage — 'Vishnu Jagannath v. Vasudev Raghunath', 43 Bom 164: (A I R (5) 1918 Bom 68) and 'Bhoodev Mukerji v. Kalachand', 34 C L J 315: (A I R (8) 1921 Cal 129).

(6) In the present case however the question is whether the trees which have sprung up on the plaintiff's lands from roots which were planted by the defendants on their own lands and have subsequently burrowed into the plaintiff's soil remain the property of the defendants. The rule of Hindu Jurisprudence cited above appears to be the law in France, as would appear from Article 173 of the Code Napolean which runs as follows:

"Trees growing in a party hedge are party like the hedge and each of the two owners has the right of requiring that they be cut down".

In Houn's Law of Boundaries a passage is quoted from the Digest of Civil Law which reads as follows:

"If a tree planted near a boundary extends its roots into the lands of a neighbour it becomes common" — (Dig. XL — 1, 7, S. 13)."

Hay, L. J. quoted a passage from an anonymous case reported in '2 Rolls, 225', where the following note appears:

"But if it grows in a hedge which divides the lands of A and B and the roots take nourishment on both the lands it was adjudged that they were tenants in common of it".

In 'Holder v. Coates', (1827) M & M 112: (173 E R 1099), it was held that where the tree is on a boundary line so that the trunk is partly in the land of each of the adjoining owners they become joint owners of the tree.

(7) The principle, therefore, seems to be well established that where the ownership is unestablished that where the ownership is uncertain a tree on a boundary line is the common property of the owners on either side of the boundary; and secondly where the tree draws its nourishment from the soils of both owners it becomes the common property of the owners though it may actually be situated on the land of one of them. It is difficult to find for either party as to the proportion of nourishment derived by the tree from the plaintiff and defendant respectively. The law therefore appears to be well settled that where the roots of a tree extend into the lands of the two parties and derive nourishment from both, it should be held to be the common property of both. The findings of fact in this case being that the defendants originally planted the trees, the roots of which have penetrated into the plaintiff's land and fresh trees have sprung up on the latter as a result thereof, it must be held that the trees which were removed by the defendants drew their nourishment from the plaintiff's soil as well and were the common properties of both the parties. The plaintiff shall accordingly be entitled to a decree for half the value of the trees cut and removed by the defendants, viz., Rs. 15/-. In view however of his assertion that he had planted the tree originally — a claim which has been found to be false by both the Courts below — I would disallow the costs incurred by him.

(8) In the result the appeal is allowed in part. The judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is modified viz., that the plaintiff shall get a decree for Rs. 15/- instead of Rs. 30/- as claimed by him. There will be no order as to costs in view of the fact that the law relating to the ownership of the trees, in a case of this kind, is obscure.

Court-fee Act (1870), S. 7 (V), Sch. II, Art. 17 (VI), Art. 17 A (Orissa Amendment) — Suit for possession — Property inalienable.

Where a pltf sues for possession he is liable to value the suit under S. 7. Mere fact that the property is declared inalienable by S. 5 of the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act III (3) of 1895 does not render it incapable of valuation. (Para 1)

Anno: Court-fees Act, S. 7 (V) N. 1, Sch. II Art. 17 (VI) N. 1.

D. V. Narasing Rao, for Petnr — K. Patnaik Govt Advocate, for Opposite Party.

PANIGRAHI J: This revision is directed against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Berhampur, calling upon the pltf to pay 'ad valorem' Court-fee on his plaint. The pltf filed a suit for possession of certain lands alleged to be his Sardar Inam lands. The Revenue Ct in a suit brought under the Madras Hereditary Village Offices Act (Madras Act III (3) of 1895) proceeded on the assumption that the inam consisted of the emoluments arising from the lands & left it open to the pltf to establish his right to the land itself in a civil Ct. The pltf, thereafter raised this suit for establishing his right to the land as constituting a part of his emoluments in lieu of the Sardar service & prayed for possession of the land, & in the alternative prayed for partition of the same & possession of one-sixth share. The pltf's case primarily is that the land itself constituted the inam. If however the Ct should hold that it is not so, he wants to avail himself of the alternative remedy on the basis that the land would form a part of joint family property & would be available for partition. The pltf valued the occupancy right at Rs. 20,000/- but, for purposes of Court-fee, valued it according to Sch II Art. 17 A. His contention is that the nature of the right is such that it is incapable of valuation & has no market value, the sole basis for this argument being that the property is declared inalienable by S. 5 of the Madras Act III (3) of 1895. Despite the fact that the lands are inalienable it cannot be said that they are excommercium or that they are incapable of valuation: it may well be that on that very ground the property may have a larger value than otherwise. The pltf having sued for possession is liable to value it under S. 7, Court-fees Act. The pltf himself has assessed the value at Rs. 20,000/- & I fail to see how the argument that it is incapable of valuation can be reconciled with the pltf's valuation of the occupancy right at Rs. 20,000/-. After hearing Mr. Rao, Counsel for the petnr, we are satisfied that this is not a case which can be brought under Art. 17 A & we are of opinion that the order of the learned Subordinate Judge is correct & must be upheld, & would hold that the pltf is liable to pay 'ad valorem' Court-fee on the valuation he puts upon the relief of possession claimed by him.

(2) Mr. Rao, however, submits that he should be given permission to amend his plaint so as to reduce the valuation which he erroneously put at Rs. 20,000/-. That is a course which he may adopt in the lower Ct if he so chooses. But it is not for us to pronounce any opinion on the step he proposes to take. It will be for the lower Ct to adjudicate upon such a petn properly filed in due course by the pltf & to dispose it of on merits. So far as the principle on which Court-fee is to be paid is concerned, we hold that the order of the learned Subordinate Judge is correct & should be upheld.

This revision fails & is dismissed with costs. Hearing fee — two Gold Mohurs.

A. F. A. D. No. 214 of 1946, D/- 16-11-1949.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 142 — Possession — What is.

Possession must be distinguished from mere occupation or detention. Possession in the eye of the law consists of the fact of physical occupation and the mental act of holding the subject of possession to the exclusion of others. The physical element is not necessarily connected with any bodily contact with the subject of possession. It implies the physical power or possibility of dealing with the subject immediately. Legal possession is occupation with the intention of exercising the right of ownership in respect of it. Mere acts of user which do not interfere and are consistent with the owner's title are not sufficient to consistute dispossession of the owner or start adverse possession in favour of the occupant. Whether, in particular circumstances, the acts of the occupant amount to possession and whether such possession is on behalf of the legal owner or in opposition to his title are matters of inference to be drawn from proved facts. [Para 6]

Anno. Lim. Act, Arts. 142 and 144, N. 11 Pts. 5 and 7.

(b) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 144 — Adverse possession — Possession is not adverse if it can be referred to lawful title. [Para 6]

Anno. Lim. Act, Arts. 142 and 144, N. 18 Pt. 2.

(c) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 142 — Dispossession—Meaning of.

Dispossession involves some element of force or fraud and implies the coming in of a person and his driving out another person from his possession. There can, therefore, be no dispossession unless there is a termination of the possession of the rightful owner, followed by actual possession of another. [Para 7]

Anno. Lim. Act, Arts. 142 & 144, N. 9 Pts. 5 and 6.

(d) Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 142 and 144 — Discontinuance Meaning of Adverse possession —Hostile intention —Payment of house tax.

There can be no 'discontinuance' within the meaning of Art. 142 merely because of absence of physical possession. A mere repudiation of the plaintiff's title behind his back is not enough to dispossess him unless it is followed by some overt act. The payment of house tax is not such an unequivocal act as would constitute an assertion of hostile intention so as to amount to adverse possession in law. If the plaintiff knew that the defendant was asserting his own title and yet omitted to enforce the remedies open to him, there would be discontinuance. But without a voluntary abandonment of possession there can be no such discontinuance. Merely remaining quiescent cannot amount to discontinuance. [Para 8]

Anno. Lim. Act, Arts. 142 and 144, N. 9.

H. Mohapatra — for Appellant; A. N. Purohit — for Respondents.

Panigrahi J. — This is a second appeal by the unsuccessful plaintiff whose suit for recovery of possession of a house has been dismissed.

[2] The plaintiff is the son of one Jainarain who had a brother Rup Ram and mother named Achchunari Bewa. The plaintiff, his uncle Rup Ram and his grand-mother Achchunari were living joint. They own some homestead lands in Khurda and paddy lands in the adjoining villages. The plaintiff's case is that in or about the year 1924 there was an oral partition of the joint family properties between him and his uncle and that plot No. 533 consisting of 5.379 acres of land and the suit house and plot No. 534 which is the adjoining bari, were allotted to his share. The plaintiff further alleges that he was in possession of these plots, allotted to him, but that the properties stood jointly recorded in the settlement khatian in the names of the plaintiff, Rup Ram and Achchunari. On 13-8-1928 Rup Ram and Achchunari executed a 'nadabi deed (Ex. 2) in favour of the plaintiff acknowledging his title to the suit properties and the lands allotted to his share. In 1938 Rup Ram and Achchunari executed an agreement to sell the disputed house in favour of defendant 3 and his sons defendants 1 and 2. The defendants brought a suit against Rup Ram and his mother Achchunari in O. S. 586 of 1938 in the Munsif's Court for specific performance of the contract to sell. That suit ended in a compromise decree in execution of which the defendants took delivery of possession of the disputed property on 11-1-1942 thereby and dispossessed the plaintiff. The plaintiff, therefore, filed this suit for recovery of possession of the house on 17-10-1944. The only defence put up by the defendants is that the suit is barred by limitation by reason of their vendors having enjoyed the property openly and adversely to the plaintiff for longer than the statutory period of twelve years. The plaintiff led evidence to show that he was in enjoyment of the property, through tenants, but this was rejected by both the Courts below as unreliable. The evidence on behalf of the defendants was that Rup Ram was always in possession of the suit property for 15 to 20 years. The Courts below, therefore, held that the plaintiff had failed to prove dispossession within 12 years of the suit and accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

[3] The only point to be considered is whether the plaintiff's right to eject has been established. The 'nadabi' deed, dated 13.8-1928 (Ex. 2) recites :

"Having partitioned our properties each one of us has been paying rents on the lands and for the house separately, but we have sold some of the lands and the house allotted to us. The properties mentioned in this deed having fallen to your share you have been paying the rents thereon as being in possession. Although the said properties are recorded in our name we are not entitled to them, nor are we paying rents. You having apprehended that we might in future claim these properties, we execute this 'nadabi' deed."

At the time of the execution of this deed, the plaintiff was living at Ittamatti in Nayagarh State, running a grocery shop, and Rup Ram was living at Khurda and—according to the defence evidence—in the disputed house itself. This 'Nadabi' deed amounts to nothing more than an acknowledgment of the plaintiff's title and his right to the exclusive possession of the house. It does not appear that the plaintiff was living in the house or that Rup Ram and his mother Achchunari surrendered possession of the house on the day the Nadabi deed was executed. The effect of this document was that the plaintiff and Rup Ram regarded themselves as co-tenants by reason of the oral partition of the year 1924 and Rup Ram besides acknowledging the plaintiff's title to the suit house undertook not to claim any title thereto. The question that has now to be considered is whether if, notwithstanding this acknowledgment, Rup Ram continued in occupation of the house, such occupation would amount to exclusive occupation by Rup Ram or dispossession of the plaintiff.

[4] Exhibit 5 is the certified copy of a registered sale deed dated 2-1-1937 executed by the plaintiff and his uncle Rup Ram and his grandmother, Achchunari, jointly in favour of one Ramkumar Ram. This document recites that the plaintiff, his uncle and grandmother jointly executed an usufructuary mortgage deed in favour of the vendee on 4-12-1931 and borrowed Rs. 400. It further recites that the plots sold thereby, together with the house standing thereon, were in joint enjoyment of the vendors. The description of the boundaries also shows that the vendors had some joint lands in plot NO. 537. Exhibits 6 and 7 series show that the Settlement Record is still in the joint names of the plaintiff, his uncle and his grandmother. It would, therefore, appear that in spite of the admission that there was an oral partition—according to the Nadabi deed of the year 1928—the properties were in fact never divided by metes and bounds. In 1931 the joint family borrowed some money and later, in 1937, executed EX. 5 in order to discharge that debt.

[5] Strong reliance was placed on certain house tax receipts produced by the defendants to prove that Rup Ram was in exclusive possession of the suit house. Exhibit F series show that Rup Ram was paying tax for the house to the Union Board of Khurda from the year 1930-31. it is accordingly contended that the possession of Rup Ram became adverse to the plaintiff at least from 1930—the year from which he was paying house tax.

[6] Possession must be distinguished from mere occupation or detention. Possession in the eye of the law consists of the fact of physical occupation and the mental act of holding the subject of possession to the exclusion of others. The unity of these two elements, namely, occupation and animus possidendi is recognized as constituting 'possession' in the eye of the law. The physical element is not necessarily connected with any bodily contact with the subject of possession. It implies the physical power or possibility of dealing with the subject immediately. Legal possession includes cases of constructive possession, permissive possession and other kinds of possession where the owner is not in direct physical contact. There is perhaps no legal conception more open to a variety of opinion than 'possession' (See Lyall v. Kennedy (1887) 18-Q-B. D. 796.) Possession is a flexible term and is not restricted to mere occupation. Legal possession is occupation with the intention of exercising the right of ownership in respect of it. Mere acts of user which do not interfere and are consistent with the owner's title are not sufficient to constitute dispossession of the owner or start adverse possession in favour of the occupant. Another principle which is well settled is that possession is never considered adverse if it can be referred to a lawful title. Whether, in particular circumstances, the acts of the occupant amount to possession and whether such possession is on behalf of the legal owner or in opposition to his title are matters of inference to be drawn from proved facts.

[7] A great deal of argument was directed by Mr. Purohit, counsel for the respondents to the question whether the case was governed by ART. 142 or ART. 144, Limitation Act. But as we find the evidence sufficient to establish a clear conclusion of fact, it is unnecessary to discuss whether the onus lay on the plaintiff to prove that he was dispossessed within the statutory period or whether it was on the defendants to prove that their predecessor-in-title (Rup Ram) had acquired title by adverse possession. If the appellant's contention is right, the question is whether Rup Ram had adverse possession of the disputed property before 17-10-1932. If the respondents' contention is to be accepted the question is whether the plaintiff had not been dispossessed before that date. Article 142, Limitation Act, prescribes a period of twelve years from the date of dispossession or discontinuance of possession. The expression "dispossession' has nowhere been defined but there can be no doubt about its meaning. Dispossession involves some element of force or fraud and implies the coming in of a person and his driving out another person from his possession. There can, therefore, be no dispossession unless there is a termination of the possession of the rightful owner, followed by actual possession of another. The test, in such cases, has been laid down by Bramwell L. J. in Ley v. Jack (5 EX. Division p. 273):

"To defeat a title by dispossessing the former owner acts must be done which are inconsistent with the enjoyment of the soil for the purpose for which he intended it. It is, therefore, necessary to look at the position in which the former owner stands towards the property as well as to the acts done by the alleged dispossessor. Acts which prima facie are acts of dispossession may, under particular circumstances, fall short of evidencing any kind of ouster."

As was observed by Lord Sumner

"they may be susceptible of another explanation, bear some other character or have some other object." (44 Ind. App. 104.)

[8] Having regard to the recognition of the plaintiff's title by Rup Ram in 1937 (EX. 5) and the joint loan contracted by them in 1931 it appears to me that the possession of Rup Ram never went beyond mere occupation of the suit house either as a co-tenant with the plaintiff or as his representative. It should be noted that the parties were closely related. The plaintiff was doing business at Ittamatti and had to be absent from Khurda where the property lies. Rup Ram and his mother had no house to live in as the only house allotted to them was—according to the evidence—in a state of disrepair and had been usufructuarily mortgaged. In these circumstances, what could be more natural than that the plaintiff allowed his uncle and grandmother to reside in the house, keep it in good repair and pay the taxes to the Union Board? Conversely, there is no single act done by Rup Ram which is inconsistent with the plaintiff's possession. He never asserted any title hostile to that of the plaintiff. He never dealt with the property till 1938 in exercise of any right in himself, real or fancied, when he purported to execute the agreement to sell the property to the defendants. Even this act cannot be held to be adverse as it is not proved that the plaintiff had any knowledge of this transaction. The plaintiff's allegation of dispossession by the defendants in the year 1942 has, therefore, been established and it has not been proved that dispossession occurred earlier than that date. In the circumstances since dispossession occurred within twelve years of the suit Art. 142, Limitation Act, will not apply and the only article that would be applicable is the residuary Art. 144. It is nobody's case that there was discontinuance of possession by the plaintiff. There can be no 'discontinuance' within the meaning of the statute merely because of absence of physical possession. Rup Ram's occupation of the suit house having been found to be no better than that of a representative or a co-tenant or licensee from the plaintiff, the latter's possession continues until the denial of his title is brought to his knowledge. A mere repudiation of the plaintiff's title behind his back is not enough to dipossess him unless it is followed by some overt act. The payment of house tax is not such an unequivocal act as would be sufficient to attribute hostile intention to Rup Ram. Every occupier of a house is bound to pay tax and as Ex. F series show the payment was made by the occupier or owner, I am, therefore, unable to accede to the contention of Mr. Purohit that these constitute an assertion of hostile intention so as to amount to adverse possession in law. If the plaintiff knew that Rup Ram was asserting his own title and yet omitted to enforce the remedies open to him, there would be discontinuance. But without a voluntary abandonment of possesssion there can be no such discontinuance. Merely remaining quiescent cannot amount to discontinuance. On the proved facts, therefore, the fair presumption that would arise is that the continued residence of Rup Ram was with the permission of the plaintiff. That Rup Ram never asserted a title in himself is an obvious inference from the facts proved in the case.

[9] The Courts below fell into an error in interpreting physical occupation of Rup Ram and payment of house tax by him as constituting possession adverse to the plaintiff. This appeal accordingly succeeds. The judgments of the Courts below are reversed and the plaintiff's suit is decreed with costs throughout. The plaintiff shall also be entitled to recover the sum claimed by him as "wasilat."

Second Appeal No. 130 of 1944, D/- 3-11-1950.

(a) Tenancy Laws — Orissa Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1913), S. 31 — As amended in 1938 — Transfer of occupancy holding — Service of notice of transfer on landlord if essential for validity — Subsequent rent sale behind back of transferee — Effect.

(Per Panigrahi and Jagannadhadas JJ.; Narsimham J. dissenting.) — The transfer of an occupancy holding must be deemed to be complete as soon as the requisite fee is paid and the notice contemplated in S 31 is filed into Court. The provision that the Collector shall serve the notice is directory in nature and therefore the failure of the Collector to serve the notice on the landlord cannot in any way affect the title of the transferee to hold lands purchased as a tenant. It would not therefore be reasonable to import into S. 31, service of notice of transfer on the landlord or the landlord's knowledge of the transfer as a condition precedent to the vesting of the title in the transferee and to the binding character of the transfer as against the landlord. Once the transfer becomes complete the transferee becomes liable to the landlord for rent chargeable on the holding and the holding cannot be put up for sale in execution of a rent decree behind his back. If the holding is sold in execution of a rent decree to which the transferee is not a party, all that the auction purchaser acquires at the rent sale is only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor and not the holding itself. [Paras 17, 51]

Per Narsimham J.— The necessity of impleading a transferee of an occupancy holding or a portion thereof in a rent execution proceeding so as to have the full effect of a rent decree and rent sale, arises only if the landlord receives notice of the transfer through the machinery provided in S. 31 or becomes aware of it by other means. Doubtless there may be a presumption that he did receive notice of the transfer if the transferee had deposited the processes and necessary fees either before the registering officer or before the Court as required by sub-ss. (2), (5) and (6) of that section. But this is only a rebuttable presumption and if the evidence in a particular case shows that the processes were not actually served and the landlord has no knowledge through other sources it will not be correct to hold that rent decree and rent sale in execution thereof obtained by the landlord against the recorded tenants would have the effect of a money-decree. [Para 43] under S. 31 (5) — Effect — Subsequent rent sale behind back of prior auction purchaser — Title of prior purchaser if affected.

(b) Tenancy Laws —Orissa Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1913), S. 31 (5)—As amended in 1938—Mortgage sale of occupancy holding — Non-service of notice

A in execution of his mortgage decree against the recorded tenant of an occupancy holding purchased a portion of it. Though the necessary processes for service of notice on the landlords as required by S. 31 (5) were filed by A, the notices were not actually served on all the co-sharer landlords. The landlords subsequently obtained a rent decree against the recorded tenant in respect of arrears prior to the transfer without impleading A and the holding was then purchased by B in the rent sale:

Held (Per Jagannadhadas and Panigrahi JJ.; Narsimham J. dissenting), that the non-service of notice on the landlords had no bearing on the completion of transfer of title to A under the mortgage sale and the subsequent rent decree obtained behind the back of A was not binding on him. Consequently, A's title to the holding by virtue of his prior purchase was not affected by B's subsequent purchase at the rent sale and must prevail over the latter. [Paras 18, 43, 44, 45]

(c) Tenancy Laws — Orissa Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1913), S. 31 — As amended in 1938 — Object of notice.

The provision for notice in S. 31 is intended only to keep the landlord informed of all transfers taking place within his estate so that his lack of knowledge of such transfers may not lead to unnecessary litigation. It is a provision primarily for the benefit of the landlord and should not be construed as restricting the right of the tenant to transfer his holding. [Para 6]

(d) Tenancy Laws — Orissa Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1913), S. 83 — Section emphasises absolute character of transfer of an occupancy holding by a raiyat by declaring the transferee jointly and severally liable to landlord for arrears of rent prior to transfer — Landlord is bound to implead transferee in his suit for recovery of arrears of rent — S. 83 thus effectively safeguards landlord's interest whether notice of transfer is served on him or not. [Para 7]

(e) Tenancy Laws — Orissa Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1913), Ss. 31-A and 83 — Sections if redundant.

There is no redundancy or inconsistency between S. 31-A and S. 83. Section 31-A (1) recognises the status of a transferee of an undefined portion of the holding as a joint tenant with the transferor for the unsold portion as well, while S. 83 makes him jointly and severally liable for arrears of past rent on the entire holding. In the case of transfer of a defined portion of a holding, on the other hand, the transferee becomes a tenant in his own right of that portion under S. 31-A (2) and not a joint tenant as under S. 31-A (1); while his liability for arrears of rent due on the entire holding before the transfer is declared by S. 83. There was no need to declare his status as a joint tenant in the case of transfer of a defined portion, as indeed it would be inconsistent with the transfer, and therefore S. 31-A (2) merely gives the landlord the right to object to the distribution of rent and not to the transfer. [Para 8]

(f) Tenancy Laws — Orissa Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1913), S. 197 — Scope.

Section 197 does not suggest that the landlord could ignore all transfers made subsequent to the publication of the Record of Rights. If he does not bring the transferee on his rent roll, he shall do so at his own risk. [Para 10]

(g) Tenancy Laws — Orissa Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1913), S. 31-B Explanation — Scope — Words of explanation are wide enough to apply to all transfers whether made prior to amendment of 1938 or after it — It should not be restricted to pre-1938 transfers merely because it appears as explanation to S. 31-B: A I R (38) 1951 Orissa 41, Rel. on. (Per Narasimham J.) [Para 32]

S. N. Sen Gupta, L. K. Das Gupta and S. K. Ray — for Appellant; R. N. Singh — for Respondents.

Panigrahi J. — The point raised in this appeal relates to the correct interpretation of S. 31 (5), Orissa Tenancy Act (Bihar and Orissa Act II [2] of 1913, as amended by Orissa Act VIII [8] of 1938).

[2] The plaintiff purchased .60½ of an acre of land out of a holding measuring 1.45 acres, in execution of a mortgage decree against defendant 2 who was the occupancy raiyat of the holding No. 189 in Touzi No. 2484 belonging to defendants 3, 4 and 5 who are co-sharer landlords, in village Tiran. The plaintiff purchased four complete plots and an undivided half share in plot No. 580 on 15-5-40 Defendants 3 and 4 filed a rent suit against defendant 2 and put up the holding to sale in execution of the decree obtained in that rent suit. Defendant 1 purchased it at court auction on 15-5-41. The plaintiff thereafter on 17-9-41, filed the suit, out of which this appeal arises, praying for a declaration of his right and confirmation of possession and, in the alternative, for delivery of possession after ejecting defendant 1.

[3] The plaintiff-appellant's case is that on the confirmation of the sale by the Civil Court he acquired an absolute right to the land, and any rent decree passed behind his back thereafter would not affect his title to the holding. The landlord-defendants 3, 4 and 5 remained ex parte and the suit was contested by defendant 1 alone. The contention of defendant 1 is that the sale in favour of the plaintiff on 15-5-40, in execution of his mortgage decree against defendant 2, may be ever so good, but would not be operative against the landlords until they receive notice of that sale, and that as they had not received any such notice of sale, contemplated in S. 31 (5) of the Act they were not bound to implead the plaintiff as a party-defendant in the rent suit and that, accordingly, the title acquired by defendant 1 by reason of his purchase at the rent sale would prevail over that of the plaintiff.

[4] In 1938, the Orissa Legislature by Orissa Act VIII [8] of 1938, introduced some radical changes in the status of tenants of occupancy holdings by enacting Ss. 30-A, 31, 31-A and 31-B. Prior to the introduction of these sections, an occupancy holding was not transferable except with the consent of the landlord, this consent being purchased by the pament of what is known as the mutation fee. The object of the Legislature was to remove this fetter on the right of the occupancy raiyat to transfer his holding, and, by S. 30-A, it expressly declared such holdings, or portions thereof, to be transferable by sale, exchange, gift or bequest, without the landlord's consent, and without the payment of any fee to him; and it was also declared that such transfer would carry with it occupancy right in the holding as well as all other rights appertaining thereto. Section 31 is a machinery section and is entitled : "Manner of transfer and notice to the landlord" Sub-section (1) of S. 31 enacts that every voluntary transfer of an occupancy holding, or a portion thereof, shall be made by a registered instrument. Sub-section (2) of the section says that a registering officer shall not accept for registration any such instrument unless it is accompanied by a notice signed by the transferor and the transferee, giving particulars of the transfer and the fee prescribed for the service of such notice on the landlord. Sub-section (3) says that after the instrument is registered the registering officer shall transmit the notice to the Collector who shall cause it to be served upon the landlord, named in the notice, in the prescribed manner. Sub-section (4) similarly lays down the procedure to be adopted in the case of transfer of a holding by bequest and says that the Court shall, before granting a probate or letters of administration, require an applicant to file a notice giving particulars of the transfer, accompanied by the prescribed fee for the service of the notice on the landlord. When probate is granted, the Court shall transmit the notice to the Collector who shall cause it to be served on the landlord in the prescribed manner. Next comes sub-s. (5) which is in the following terms :

"When the holding of an occupancy raiyat or a portion or share thereof is sold in execution of a decree or of a certificate signed under the Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act, 1914, other than a decree or certificate for arrears of rent due in respect of the holding or dues recoverable as such, and neither the purchaser nor the decree-holder is the sole landlord, the Court or the Revenue Officer, as the case may be, shall, before confirming the sale, require the purchaser to file a notice giving particulars of the transfer in the prescribed form, and to deposit a fee of the prescribed amount for the service of it. When the sale has been confirmed, the Court or the Revenue Officer shall transmit the notice to the Collector who shall cause it to be served on the landlord in the prescribed manner."

In the case of an execution sale, the purchaser is required to file a notice giving particulars of the transfer in the prescribed form and to deposit the requisite fee for the service of such notice on the landlord. The actual service on the landlord is left to the Collector. The confirmation of the sale, however, does not await the service of notice on the landlord by the Collector. All that sub-s. (5) requires is that the purchaser is to file the notice and deposit the fee required for the service of it. As soon as these requirements are fulfilled, confirmation of sale should follow, as a matter of course, and the transfer of title to the purchaser becomes absolute. If the transfer relates to a portion or share of the occupancy holding, and the portion transferred is not divided by metes and bounds, S. 31-A (1) lays down that the transferee and the persons possessing interest in the remainder of the holding shall be considered as joint tenants by the landlord. The object of this provision is to enable the landlord to collect his rent from the entire holding by treating the transferee as a joint tenant with the transferor who still possesses an interest in the remainder of the holding. If the portion transferred is divided by metes and bounds, S. 31-A (2) lays down that the landlord shall be deemed to agree to the division as also to the distribution of the rent made by the parties unless, within six months of the date of service of notice, he applies to the Collector for a just and equitable apportionment of the rent so distributed. These two sections, viz., S. 31 and S 31-A, apply to transfers made after the passing of the amending Act (ACT VIII [8] of 1938). In respect of past transfers the Legislature made a provision in S. 31-B enacting that the transferee shall be liable to pay mutation fee within the time-limit fixed by the section, and that such transferee shall not be liable to be ejected on the ground that the landlord had not given his consent to the transfer. In order that the holding may not be put to sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, sub-s. (2) of S. 31-B provides that the transferee is to give notice of his transfer by registered post to the landlord and thereupon the landlord shall be bound to implead him as a party in the execution proceedings. Lest this provision should appear to be in conflict with the other provisions of the Act and the Civil Procedure Code, the Legislature provided, by way of explanation, that the transferee may be brought on the record in the execution proceedings either in substitution of, or in addition to, the judgment-debtor, and such transferee shall, when so substituted or added, be treated as a judgment-debtor. The scheme of the amending Act is that, in the first place, it declares occupancy holdings to be transferable; it then provided how the transfer is to be effected in different cases; thereafter it preserves the right of the landlord to object to unfair apportionment of rent if there be any such unfair apportionment, in cases of transfers of a portion or portions of holdings divided by metes and bounds; and lastly it makes provision to the effect that all past transfers could be validated by giving notice to the landlord, and ensures that the holding would not be exposed to sale without the transferee being made a party to the execution proceedings. The need for the landlord's consent to the transfer is expressly done away with and the provision for giving notice to the landlord through the Collector is not to be regarded as equivalent to taking the consent, as such, of the landlord for such transfer. The transfer can by no means be regarded as being dependent on the notice, which is to follow in due course after the completion of the transfer. The section does not expressly stipulate that the transfer of the holding will depend upon the consent or knowledge, or notice to the landlord; nor does it follow, by necessary implication, that it should be so. Having regard to the scheme and object of the amending Act, viz., that it was designed to remove a long standing grievance of the tenantry, the provisions should be so construed as to advance the remedy provided by the Legislature and suppress the mischief which was intended to be removed. We cannot get away from the remedial operation of the statute while complying with the language of the statute.

[5] Let me now examine the facts and the contentions advanced on either side. The proved facts are that plaintiff filed into Court the requisite notices and the process fee, as is evidenced by Ex. 7 (certified copy of the Order of the Court). Whether the Court actually transmitted the notices to the Collector and whether the Collector, on his part, served the notice on any of the landlords, has not been satisfactorily established one way or the other. The learned Subordinate Judge who was directed to record additional evidence and submit a finding on this point held that there was no material for concluding that the landlords, viz., defendants 3 and 4 had actually received any notice of tranfer, either through the machinery provided in S. 31 of the Act or otherwise. It was proved, however, that defendant 5, one of the cosharer-landlords, did receive the notice of transfer on 18.11.41. The agent of defendant 5 was examined and he produced Ex. 8, a copy of the notice under S. 31 (5) as having been served upon him. But his evidence that it was also served on the agents of defendants 3 and 4 on the day was not accepted. Neither defendant 3 nor defendant 4 nor their agent went into the box, to contradict it. The position thus would appear to be that two out of the three landlords have not been served with the notices by the Collector and it is, therefore, contended by Mr. Sinha, appearing for defendant 1, that the sale in favour of the plaintiff must be inoperative inasmuch as the co-sharer landlords, defendants 3 and 4, were not bound to implead the transferee in their rent suit. The competition is between two purchasers of an occupancy holding which was at one time non-transferable. The issue about non-transferability is raised not by the landlord but by one who has purchased the ryoti interest after the transfer in favour of the plaintiff. In such cases it has been held that it is not open to the subsequent transferee to question the validity of the first transfer (See Ayenuddin v. Srish Chandra, 11 C W N 76). In cases between rival claimants, neither of whom is the landlord or tenant, the question of transferability does not arise; and the one would have the best title if the holding were transferable is entitled to succeed—[Samiruddin v. Benga, 13 C W N 630 : (1 I.C. 114) and Tulsi v. Dayal, 15 I. C. 718 (Cal.).] None the less the respondent has been allowed to raise the point and his learned counsel was heard at length as if the subsequent purchaser were the representative-in-interest of the landlords.

[6] Mr. Singha's argument proceeds on the assumption that either notice or knowledge of transfer is an essential requisite for validating the transfer and that the landlord—who is expressly precluded by S. 30-A from withholding his consent to a transfer—must nevertheless receive the notice of such transfer before the transfer becomes operative. In other words, according to this contention the law as contained in the Amending Act VIII [8] of 1938 has brought about no such radical change as to make an occupancy holding absolutely transferable regardless of the interest of the landlord, and that the notice contemplated under S. 31 must be taken to have been substituted for impliedly obtaining the consent of the landlord. This contention, if I may say so with respect, completely ignores the antecedent history of the legislation, the object of the legislation, and the language employed by the Legislature in carrying out that object. Prior to 1938, the purchaser of a holding was required to apply to the landlord for registration of his transfer and no such transfer would be valid until the landlord consented to it. He could not deposite his rent until such registration (see S. 70 (3)). The raiyat could not sub let or mortgage except with the landlord's consent — (see Ss. 95 and 96). All these disabilities have been removed by the Amending Act of 1938. Section 30-A of the Amending Act is affirmative, explicit and peremptory when it says that a holding shall be transferable without the landlord's consent; and registration in his books is done away with. I am not inclined to restrict the operation of this section by introducing words which are not to be found there. Section 30-A does not say that the holding shall be transferable without the landlord's consent but that the transfer shall be operative only after notice has been served upon him. There is no such restrictive clause either in that section or in any of the succeeding sections. The duty of serving the notice is cast upon the Collector—a stranger to the transaction between the parties. The provision for notice, therefore, is in my opinion intended only to keep the landlord informed of all transfers taking place within his estate so that his lack of knowledge of such transfers may not lead to unnecessary litigation. It is a provision primarily for the benefit of the landlord and should not be construed as restricting the right of the tenant to transfer his holding It represents a delicate balancing of two conflicting interests: on the one hand the right of the tenant to transfer is unrestricted and on the other the hardship that may result if the landlord is kept ignorant of it is sought to be removed.

[7] It was then argued that since the transferee and the transferor are made jointly and severally liable for past rent under S. 83, the transferee does not acquire a perfect title until he is registered in the books of the landlord. Section 83, as it stood before 1938, applied to transfers in permanently settled areas where transfers could be effected without the landlord's consent—See old S. 31 (5). The transferee was declared liable for arrears of rent after the transfer along with the transferor. The Amending Act of 1938 has removed this distinction and placed transferees in permanently settled as well as in temporarily settled areas on the same footing. Furthermore the amendment makes him liable for arrears of rent even prior to the date of transfer. The landlord cannot, therefore, ignore the transfer having regard to the fact that under S. 83 the transferee is jointly and severally liable to the landlord for payment of arrears of rent accrued due prior to the date of transfer. Since S. 83 imposes a liability on the transferee for arrears of rent, any construction which would relieve him of that liability on the ground that the landlord had no notice of the transfer and thus impose the entire liability on the person remaining with the transferor would be unsound. If the transferee is liable to the landlord for arrears of rent, it stands to reason that the landlord is bound to implead the transferee in his suit for realising the arrears if the holding is sought to be proceeded against. Section 83, therefore, far from lending support to Mr. Singha's contention, emphasises the absolute character of the transfer of an occupancy holding by a raiyat by declaring the transferee jointly and severally liable to the landlord for arrears of rent accruing due prior to the date of transfer. The interest of the landlord is thus effectively safeguarded—notice or no notice.

[8] It was next contended that S. 31-A provides a clue as to the manner in which S. 31 is to be read. As I read S. 31-A it only emphasised the absolute right of transfer that was conferred on the raiyat when it lays down that if the transfer is of an undefined portion the transferee shall be considered as a joint tenant by the landlord. Here, again, the language is mandatory and leaves no option for the landlord to ignore the transfer. In the case of transfer of a defined portion, on the other hand, the only option left to the landlord is to object to the distribution of rent which is inextricably bound up with the division of the holding. This section is a corollary to S. 31 (2) and had to be inserted. Under the old S. 31, the landlord had the right to object to a transfer on the ground that it would result in the creation of unreasonably small holdings. The new S. 31 (2) requires that the deed of transfer should state the rent of each holding or a portion or share transferred and thus recognises the right of the raiyat to divide his holding and distribute the rent. Section 31-A makes it obligatory of the landlord to recognise this division. The transferee of an undefined portion 'shall be considered as a joint tenant by the landlord' under S. 31-A (1) and where the transfer is of a defined portion "the landlord shall be deemed to agree" to the division and distribution as set forth in the notice referred to in S. 31 unless he applies to the Collector for a fair and equitable distribution of rent within six months. The effect of this section is that the security of the holding for the rent due to the landlord is kept unimpaired. It says no more than that and cannot be regarded as by any means whittling down the operation of S. 31. It is noteworthy that when the transfer relates to an entire holding there is no provision entitling the landlord to object on any ground; such a case would be clearly covered by S. 83. It was suggested that S. 83 would be redundant in view of the provision in S. 31-A (1) of the Act, but I am unable to see any such redundancy or inconsistency between the two sections. Section 31-A (1) recognises the status of a transferee of an undefined portion of the holding as a joint tenant with the transferor for the unsold portion as well, while S. 83 makes him jointly and severally liable for arrears of past rent on the entire holding. In the case of transfer of a defined portion of a holding, on the other hand, the transferee becomes a tenant in his own right of that portion under S. 31-A(2) and not a joint tenant as under S. 31-A (1); while his liability for arrears of rent due on the entire holding before the transfer is declared by S. 88. There was no need to declare his status as a joint tenant in the case of transfer of a defined portion, as indeed it would be inconsistent with the transfer, and therefore S. 31-A (2) merely gives the landlord the right to object to the distribution of rent and not to the transfer. A reference to S. 99 which deals with sub-division of tenures would show that sub-divisions effected by transfers are expressly saved. A division of tenure of holding except as provided in Ss. 31 and 31-A is not binding upon the landlord unless it is made with his express consent under old S. 99, which has since been amended in 1947 (Act XV [15] of 1947).

[9] This also appears to emphasise the position that a tenant can, by transfer of his holding, effect a sub-division of the same between himself and the transferee without reference to the landlord and subject to the distribution of rent. Mr. Sinha's contention is that if the transfer were to be regarded as complete on registration, why does S. 31-A (1) declare that the transferee shall be regarded as a joint tenant by the landlord? The reason is obvious. Under the old Ss. 31 and 31-A, the transferee was obliged to apply to the landlord for recognition of his transfer and the transfer of the holding could be validated only after registration of the transfer in the landlord's books on payment of the mutation fee. Excepting in the cases specifically provided in old Ss. 31 and 31-A, all other cases of sub-division of a tenancy were prohibited without the landlord's consent in writing as laid down in S. 99. When these two sections were replaced by the new Ss. 31 and 31-A in 1938 and the landlord's consent was dispensed with, it was necessary to declare that the transfer of a holding or a portion thereof would be binding upon the landlord even when made without his consent, and the status of the transferee would be that of a joint tenant along with the transferor. The present position, therefore, is that while a division of tenure can be effected by sale, exchange, gift, or bequest, subject only to the right of the landlord to object to the distribution of rent any other form of division would be governed by the provisions of S. 99.

[10] Reliance was placed on S. 197 of the Act for the contention that the landlord is bound to look to the Record of Rights for realisation of his rent, and that tenant alone whose name is recorded in the Record of Rights shall be liable to pay the rent due to him. A reference to this section shows that all that it lays down is that a revenue Court shall have due regard to the entries made in the Record of Rights. There is nothing in the language of the section to suggest that the landlord could ignore all transfers made subsequent to the publication of the Record of Rights. If he does not bring the transferee on his rent roll, he shall do so at his own risk.

[11] Mr. L. K. Das Gupta, learned counsel appearing for the plaintiff-appellant advanced the following propositions: (1) that the transfer of a holding is complete, the moment registration of such transfer is made by the registering officer or the moment a sale certificate is granted by the Court; (2) that the transferor of an occupancy holding ceases to be liable to the landlord for payment of rent once he transfers his interest in the holding to another party; (3) that in order that the holding may pass to the auction-purchaser at a court sale there should be the relationship of landlord and tenant subsisting on the date of the rent sale. If the matter were res integra, I should have had no difficulty in holding, on a mere interpretation of the relevant sections, that these contentions are well-founded. But every one of these propositions has been well established by a long course of decisions of the Calcutta High Court which have been approved by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

[12] The language employed in S. 13, Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885 (VIII [8] of 1885) is identical with that used in S. 31, amended Orissa Tenancy Act. Section 13 of the Bengal Act says that when a permanent tenure is sold in execution of a decree the Court shall, before confirming the sale, require the purchaser to pay into Court the landlord's fee required by S. 12 together with the prescribed cost of transmission thereof to the landlord and such further fee for service of the notice of sale on the landlord as may be prescribed; and that when the sale has been confirmed the Court shall send to the Collector the landlord's fee, the prescribed cost of transmission of the same, and a notice of the sale, and the Collector shall cause the fee to be transmitted to, and notice to be served upon, the landlord named in the notice and in the prescribed manner. A comparison of the above provisions in S. 13 of the Bengal Act with those contained in S. 31 (5) of the Orissa Act would clearly show that the object of the Legislature in both cases was to provide a machinery for the transfer of a permanent tenure in the former case and of an occupancy holding in the latter case. The agency employed for service of notice of transfer is the Collector in both the cases.

[13] It has been held, uniformly, by the Calcutta High Court that the transfer of a tenure under the Bengal Act becomes complete on payment of the requisite fee to the landlord and the cost of transmission thereof. As early as 1889 it was held by Petheram C. J. in Kristo Bulluv v. Kristolal Singh, 16 Cal. 642 that a transfer becomes complete as soon as the document was registered and that the liability of the transferor to the landlord for payment of rent ceases when the estate is so transferred, and the Act does not say that his liability subsists until notice has been served upon the landlord. This case has been followed in a number of cases decided by that High Court. In Chintamoni Dutt v. Rashbehari, 19 Cal. 17 it was observed:

"Though it might seem a case involving hardship to the landlord that he has not received notice on account of some neglect on the part of the Registrar, or the Collector, his suit is still liable to be dismissed if brought against the wrong person."

The argument that the landlord is entitled to look to his recorded tenant until he receives due notice of the transfer was negatived on the authority of Kristo Bulluv's case, 16 Cal. 642. In Mohesh Chunder Ghose v. Saroda Prasad, 21 Cal. 433, the argument put forward was that the recognition of the transferee of a share of the holding would conflict with S. 88, Bengal Tenancy Act, which corresponds to S. 99 of the Orissa Act—an argument that was repeated before us by Mr. Sinha. This argument was rejected on the ground that the transferee of a portion of a holding can always claim to be a joint tenant with the transferor and there was nothing inconsistent in S. 88 which would militate against that position of the transferee. It was held in that case that the decree obtained by the landlord and the rent sale in execution thereof without impleading the transferee, did not affect the rights of the transferee plaintiff. In Hemendra Nath v. Kumar Nath, 12 C. W. N. 478, neither the landlord's fee was paid nor notice of transfer served on the landlord. It was held that once the document was registered the fact that the landlord's fee was not paid did not render the transfer invalid. A transfer in favour of the purchaser must be deemed to have been completed upon payment of fee into the Court, irrespective of its acceptance by the landlord: See Girish Chandra v. Khagendranath, 13 C. L. J. 613 : (9 I. C. 1001). The unrecorded transferee of a transferable tenure is a tenant though his name is not on the books of the landlord: See Azgar Ali v. Asaboddin, 9 C. W. N. 134. Similar cases which recognised transfers, in spite of the fact that the landlord's fee had not been paid may be found reported in Fazal Ali v. Amir Baksh, 47 I. C. 334 : (A.I.R. (6) 1919 Cal. 1000) and Joy Gobind v. Monmotha Nath, 33 Cal. 580.

[14] The exposition of the law in Kristo Bulluv's case, 16 Cal. 642 and in Hemendra Nath v. Kumar Nath, 12 C. W. N. 478 was referred to, with approval, by the Judicial Committee in Surapati Roy v. Ramnarain, 50 I. A. 155 : (A. I. R. (10) 1923 P. C. 88). In Jitendranath Ghose v. Manmohan Ghose, 57 I. A. 214 at p. 221 : (A. I. R. (17) 1930 P. C. 193) the Judicial Committee had again occasion to consider the requirements of notice as prescribed in Ss. 12 and 13, Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885. The arguments addressed before their Lordships in this case are reported in Jitendra Nath v. Manmohan, 34 C. W. N. 821 : (A. I. R. (17) 1930 P. C. 193). Lord Tomlin pointed out, during the discussion, that before the Bengal Act of 1885 there was a statutory duty on the tenant to give notice to the zamindar but no such duty was imposed on the tenant or the transferee under the Act of 1885 and that it was for the Court or the Collector to give that notice. At p. 832 of the Report the same learned Lord made this observation :

"Once you have a valid transfer by a registered instrument, what has notice got to do with it?"

Sir George Lowndes, who delivered the judgment of the Board, pointed out that before the Act of 1885 the duty was laid specifically upon the transferee to see that his name was recorded in the landlord's sherista, but after the coming into force of the Act of 1885, instead of the transferee being required to go to the landlord to get his name recorded, the landlord had to find out his tenant. The landlord could not ignore a transfer of the tenure and rely upon decrees obtained by him against persons whom he chose, for his own purposes, still to regard them as his tenants, though he knows or must be taken to know—that their interest in the tenure has ceased. It was further observed that, apart from the knowledge of the landlord, their Lordships had no hesitation in presuming, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the procedure laid down in Ss. 12 and 13 of the Act was duly followed and that proper statutory notice was given. It was accordingly held that the tenure being statutorily transferable, the original tenure-holders would no longer be liable for rent and that an effective decree could only be obtained against the transferee.

[15] Nor can the failure to serve the notice have the effect of invalidating the sale of the tenure : See Barada v. Tarakanath Prasad, A.I.R. (13) 1926 Cal. 844 : (94 I. C. 147) and Amtika Charan v. Harkishoree, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Cal. 825 : (103 I. C. 707).

[16] These cases were sought to be distinguished on the ground that they related to transfer of tenures. But I can find nothing on principle to distinguish these cases from the present case. The language used by the Legislature being the same in both the cases the interpretation given to that language by the Calcutta High Court should be adopted. The Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 was amended in 1928 and the right of transfer was conferred upon occupancy tenants by Ss. 26B and 26C. Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Nari Mollani, 63 Cal. 1117:(A. I. R. (23) 1936 Cal. 279) was a case which arose under S. 26C, Bengal Tenancy Act of 1928. In that case the landlord's transfer fee did not reach the landlord before the decree in the rent suit was passed, and Mitter J. held that as soon as the document was registered title to the holding passed from the transferor to the transferee with retrospective effect from the date of execution of the conveyance. The question whether the landlord was served with the notice of transfer by the Collector was not material and it could not be said that the transfer would be complete as against the landlord only when he received the notice of transfer. In another case, relied on by the learned counsel for the respondent, viz., Nagendranath v. Niranjan, A. I. R. (24) 1937 Cal. 655:(I.L.R. (1938) 1 Cal. 164) the immediate point for decision was whether the transferee was represented by the transferor in an execution proceeding and the decision of the question turned upon the correct interpretation of S. 146A, Bengal Tenancy Act ,introduced in the year 1928. There is no corresponding provision in the Orissa Tenancy Act and I am unable to see how this case can support the respondent's argument.

[17] My conclusion, therefore, on a review of all these decisions, is that the transfer of an occupancy holding must be deemed to be complete as soon as the requisite fee is paid and the notice contemplated in S. 31 is filed into Court. The section refers to the immediate act of parties to give validity to the transfer and does not extend to the acts or omissions of third parties. The provision that the Collector shall serve the notice is a direction to that officer, it is directory in nature as it is introduced after the transfer is completed (Craies on Statute Law, p. 238). A provision in a statute is often directory in the sense that it is not a condition precedent, but a condition subsequent, as to which responsible persons may be blamable and punishable if they do not observe it (see Halsbury, Vol. 27, p. 172). The failure of the Collector to serve the notice on the landlord cannot in any way affect the title of the transferee to hold lands purchased as a tenant. Once the transfer of title becomes complete it follows, as a consequence, that the transferee becomes liable to the landlord for rent chargeable on the holding and the holding cannot be put up for sale in execution of a rent decree behind his back. It may be that the transferor is also liable but as there is no privity of estate between him and the landlord in respect of the transferred portion and as the relationship between the landlord and the transferor ceases to be that of a landlord and tenant from the date of sale the transferor's liability to pay rent also ceases. In such a case all that the auction purchaser acquires at the rent sale is only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor and not the holding itself: See A. H. Forbes v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh, 41 I. A. 91 : (A. I. R. (1) 1914 P. C. 111) and Krishnapada v. Mannada Sundari, 59 Cal. 1202 : (A. I. R. (19) 1932 Cal. 321 S. B.). It has been observed that "any proceedings for rent after the completion of the transfer must be against the transferee and any decree for rent obtained against the transferor after the transfer cannot affect the interest of the transferee."

See Prabhavati v. Lalji Mahto, 23 Pat. 356 : (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Pat. 252), following Kristo Bulluv v. Kristolal, 16 Cal. 642. In Chandra Sekhar v. Jagannath, 24 Pat. 148 : (A. I. R. (32) 1945 Pat. 313), it was found, as a fact, that the landlord's fee was not paid and no notice of transfer was served upon the landlord as required by S. 13, Bihar Tenancy Act, which corresponds to S. 12, Bengal Tenancy Act. It was held that the mere fact that the Registrar or the Collector did not carry out the directions contained in Ss. 12 and 13 cannot affect the title of the transferee. It may be noted that, in that case, even the requisite fee for serving the notice had not been deposited.

[18] I am satisfied that the non-service of notice on the landlord has no bearing on the completion of transfer of title and that the decree for arrears of rent obtained by the landlords in this case does not bind the plaintiff. The plaintiff's title to the suit holding by virtue of his purchase on 15-4-40 is not affected by the later purchase of the same by defendant 1 at court auction in execution of a rent decree, on 15-5-41, and must prevail over the latter.

[19] In the result I allow this appeal with costs throughout.

[20] Narasimham J.—This appeal is by the plaintiff against the appellate judgment of the Additional District Judge of Cuttack modifying the judgment of the 2nd Additional Munsif of Cuttack in a suit brought by the appellant for declaration of his title and confirmation of possession in respect of 60½ decimals of land which forms part of an occupancy holding comprising 1·45 acres recorded in Khata No. 189 of village Adankur, P. S. Tirtol. During the last settlement the said Khata comprised 6·63 acres of land. But since then the holding was split up into two separate holdings consisting of 1.45 acres and 5.18 acres with the consent of the landlords and defendant 2 and his co-sharers were recorded as raiyats in respect of 1.45 acres of the said khata. The plaintiff's father took a mortgage of 60½ decimals of that separate holding from defendant 2 and in execution of the mortgage decree the plaintiff purchased that property through the civil Court on 15-5-40. Soon after the purchase he filed the necessary fees and processes for service of notice on the landlords as required by sub s. (5) of S. 31, Orissa Tenancy Act, as amended by Orissa Act VIII [8] of 1938. But it appears that the processes were not actually served on all the co-sharer landlords. Defendants 3, 4 and 5 are the three co sharer landlords of the khata. For arrears of rent due on this holding defendants 3 and 4 filed a rent suit on 12-4-40 (more than a month before the mortgage sale in favour of the plaintiffs and impleaded in that rent suit the recorded tenant (defendant 2) and his co-sharer Sadai Rout making the other co-sharer landlord (defendant 5) a pro forma defendant in that suit. In due course they obtained the rent-decree in November 1940 and in execution of that decree the holding was purchased on 15-5-41 by defendant 1 who obtained delivery of possession through the civil Court. It was conceded before us (though this point was challenged in the lower Courts) that in that rent suit and the subsequent rent sale the requirements of Ss. 199 and 212, Orissa Tenancy Act, were complied with. Consequently, the decree would have the effect of a rent decree and the entire holding would pass by the sale unless it be held that the plaintiff is a necessary party to the execution proceeding.

[21] The plaintiff's main contention is that by virtue of the mortgage sale dated 15-5-40 he became a co-sharer raiyat of the holding and that as he was not impleaded as a party in the rent suit and the subsequent execution proceedings, the rent-decree had the effect only of a money-decree and that consequently his title in respect of 60½ decimals of the holding remained unaffected by the rent-sale. Several other points were taken up both in the trial Court and in the lower appellate Court and also before this Court when it sat as a Division Bench and heard the appeal. At that time Mr. Dasgupta on behalf of the appellant asked for a remand of the appeal for a finding of the lower Court as to whether the mortgage sale in favour of the appellant was duly notified to the landlords in the manner provided in S. 31 (5) or else they were otherwise aware of the transfer. He felt so sure of his ability to prove by evidence that the transfer in favour of the plaintiff was brought to the knowledge of the landlords and that they actually made the necessary corrections in their rent-roll and entered the transferee plaintiff as a tenant that he did not rely on the presumption of due service of notices by the Collector under S. 31 (5), Orissa Tenancy Act. This Court then remanded the appeal to the lower Court for a finding on this question of fact but unfortunately for Mr. Dasgupta the finding of the Subordinate Judge is to the effect that two of the landlords (defendants 3 and 4) did not have notice of the transfer either through the machinery provided in S. 31, Orissa Tenancy Act, or otherwise. Mr. Dasgupta, however, contended that even if it be held that those landlords did not know about the transfer yet the decree obtained by them in a rent suit (otherwise properly constituted against the recorded tenants) would still have the effect of a money-decree inasmuch as the title of the plaintiff to his portion of the holding become complete as soon as the mortgage sale was confirmed on 15-5-40. Consequently, on the date of the rent-sale (15-5-41) one of the parties interested in the holding was not a party before the execution Court and his right, title and interest cannot, in any way, be affected by the sale. Mr. Sinha on behalf of respondent 1, however, urged that in view of the clear finding to the effect that the transfer was not brought to the knowledge of all the landlords either through the machinery provided in S. 31 (5), Orissa Tenancy Act or otherwise such transfer though valid as between the transferor and the transferee (defendant 2 and the plaintiff) could not have a binding effect on the landlords so as to render a rent-decree obtained by them in a suit properly constituted in other respects against the recorded tenants into a mere money-decree. In view of the importance of this question and its repercussion on the security of the holding for arrears of rent in north Orissa it was considered necessary to decide this question in a Special Bench. There is a Division Bench decision of this Court in Giridhari Mohanty v. Abdul Khan, I.L.R. 1950 Cut. 195:(A.I.R. (38) 1951 Orissa 41) in which my Lord the Chief Justice (Panigrahi J. concurring) while discussing another case, which on facts is distinguishable from the present one, made some general observations to the effect that the various amendments to S. 31, Orissa Tenancy Act, by the amending Act of 1938 had as their object the conferments of an unrestricted right of transfer either in whole or in part to the raiyat but at the same time making it incumbent on the transferee to give notice of such transfer to the landlord in the manner provided in that section so as to make it binding on the latter. The correctness of some of those observations was also challenged before this Special Bench.

[22] Prior to the amending Act of 1938, the landlord's consent was necessary to make any transfer of an occupancy holding or a portion thereof binding on him and such consent was deemed to be given when he accepted the prescribed transfer fee tendered by a tenant or else when that fee was received by the Collector and a declaration was given by him to the effect that the transter was registered (see old S. 31). Unless a transfer was so effected the landlord could proceed to sue the recorded tenant for arrears of rent and any decree obtained by him would have the effect of a rent-decree provided that all the co-sharer landlords and co-sharer recorded tenants were made parties. Section 212, Orissa Tenancy Act, expressly stated that in such a case the entire holding would pass to the purchaser. The landlord was not bound to implead any transferee either of a whole or a portion of the holding whose transfer had not been recognised by him in the manner described above and the omission to so implead such a transferee would not in any way reduce the rent-decree to a money-decree. But there were also some occupancy holdings which were transferable without the consent of the landlord in accordance with custom or usage prevalent in particular localities. The law relating to the transfer of these classes of holdings will be discussed later.

[23] In 1938, the Orissa Legislature made radical changes in the Tenancy law mainly with the object of conferring on all classes of occupancy raiyats freedom as regards transfer. In place of old S. 31, four new sections (30A, 31, 31A and 31B) were substituted. Section 30A expressly declared that the occupancy holding of a raiyat or a portion or a share thereof was transferable without the landlord's consent and without the payment of any fee to him. Section 31 contained elaborate provisions regulating the mode of transfer and service of notice on the landlord. As regards voluntary transfers, registration was made compulsory irrespective of the value of the property and the registering officer was prohibited from accepting for registration any instrument of transfer unless it was accompanied by a notice signed by the transferor and the transferee giving particulars of the transfer and also the prescribed fee for service of the notice on the landlord. The registering officer was required to transmit the notice to the Collector who was also required to serve it on the landlord in the prescribed manner. As regards involuntary transfers sub-s. (5) of that section required that the Court, before confirming the sale, should direct the purchaser to file a notice giving particulars of the transfer in the prescribed form and to deposit the necessary process fee. After the confirmation of the sale the Court was required to transmit the notice to the Collector who was directed to cause it to be served on the landlord in the prescribed manner. I shall discuss Ss 31A and 31B later. As a consequential amendment, S. 83 was also recast and the transferor and the transferee were made both jointly and severally liable for arrears of rent that accrued due prior to the date of the transfer and such arrear rent was made a first charge on the holding. The contention of Mr. Dasgupta is that by virtue of S. 30A an occupancy raiyat was given the unrestricted right of transfer either of the whole or a portion of the holding and as soon as such a transfer was duly registered under sub-s. (2) of S. 31 (in case of voluntary transfers) or the sale of the holding was duly confirmed (in case of involuntary transfers) by a Court under the provisions of sub-s. (5) of S. 31 the title of the transferor completely passed to the transferee and that the other provisions regarding service of notice on the landlord though intended to inform the landlord about the transfer do not affect the transfer of title. Therefore, even if the notices prescribed in that section are not served on the landlord the transfer was binding on him and if notwithstanding such transfer, he continues his suit against the transferor he runs the risk of having his rent-decree declared to be a money-decree. Mr. Sinha, however, contended that the elaborate provisions made in S. 31 for service of notice on the landlord through the Collector made it clear that the object of the Legislature was to make such transfer binding on the landlord only after he became aware of it. Ordinarily in view of the presumption in favour of regularity of performance of official acts a Court may presume that the notices were duly served on the landlords if it could be shown that the transferee filed the necessary processes and the fee before the registering officer or the Court as the case may be. But where, on the evidence adduced in a case, it is actually found that the notices were not served on the landlords, such a presumption cannot arise and though title might have passed from the transferor to the transferee by the confirmation of the sale such a transfer will not be binding on the landlord until he is made aware of the transfer.

[24] The whole question turns on the construction of sub-s. (5) of S. 31, but for that purpose that section has to be construed along with Ss. 30A, 31A and 31B which were all contemporaneously inserted in the parent Act by the amending Act of 1938 and which along with S. 31 consolidate the law relating to transfers of occupancy holdings. Any necessary implication arising out of the construction of those sections will have a direct bearing on the effect of non-compliance with any of the provisions of S. 31 dealing with the mode of transfer. Moreover, the previous law embodied in old S. 31 should be the background against which the provisions of the aforesaid four amended sections should be viewed. As pointed out by the Privy Council in Abdur Rahim v. Abu Mahomed Barkat Ali, 55 I. A. 96 at p. 103 : (A. I. R. (15) 1928 P. C. 16) :

"When it is contended that the Legislature intended by any particular amendment to make substantial changes in the pre-existing law, it is impossible to arrive at a conclusion without considering what the law was previously to the particular enactment and to see whether the words used in the statute can be taken to effect the change that is suggested as intended."

[25] It is, therefore, necessary to closely scrutinise the law on the subject prior to the amending Act of 1938. As early as 1884, a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Panye Chunder v. Hurchunder, 10 Cal. 496, had pointed out that

"According to the common law, quite apart from any statutory provisions, when a tenant transfers his interest to a third person, in order to discharge himself from future liability for rent, and in order that the transferee may have the advantages of the tenancy, one or both of them must give notice to the landlord."

This common law right of a landlord to receive notice was emphasised by Dr. Rash Behari Ghose in his arguments in Sasi Bhusan v. Tara Lal Singh, 22 Cal. 494. In that case, however, the Judges did not express their views definitely on the question because they were dealing with a non-agricultural tenancy which was governed by S. 108 (j), T. P. Act. But in a later Madras decision reported in Ranga Ramanujachariar v. Srinivasa, A. I. R. (2) 1915 Mad. 34 : (25 I. C. 804), Sadasiva Aiyar J., concurred in the view that "it is the common law of India that on transfer of a tenure with notice the lessee ceases to be liable for rent."

This common law right received statutory recognition in S. 73 of the old Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885 which ran as follows :

"When an occupancy-raiyat transfers his holding without the consent of the landlord, the transferor and transferee shall be jointly and severally liable to the landlord for arrears of rent accruing due after the transfer, unless and until notice of the transfer is given to the landlord in the prescribed manner."

Prior to 1913 most of the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act were in force in Orissa and at the time occupancy holdings were broadly divided into two classes : (1) those holdings which were transferable without the consent of the landlord in accordance with the custom or usage prevalent in a particular locality and (2) those holdings which were not transferable without the consent of the landlord. Section 73 of the old Bengal Tenancy Act dealt with the former class of occupancy holdings only. Therefore, apart from the common law which existed prior to the passing of Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885, it seems well established that from the passing of the Orissa Tenancy Act in 1913, those occupancy holdings which were transferable without the consent of the landlord were controlled by S. 73, Bengal Tenancy Act, in accordance with which the landlord was entitled to receive notice of the transfer before the transferor-occupancy-raiyat could be absolved from his liability for rent that may accrue even after the date of the transfer. Therefore the claim of the landlord to receive notice before transfers are made binding on him even in respect of holdings which were transferable without his consent is not a new claim put forward now but is based not only on the common law of India existing prior to 1885 but also on the express provisions of S. 73 of the old Bengal Tenancy Act. In Maddox Settlement Report at p. 226 it was pointed out that S. 73, Bengal Tenancy Act, did not appear to alter the then existing law in Orissa.

[26] The Orissa Tenancy Act came into force in 1913 and S. 31 of that Act dealt with the law regulating the transfers of occupancy holdings in temporarily settled estates. Section 73, old Bengal Tenancy Act, was similar to S. 83, Orissa Tenancy Act, but as the latter section was restricted to holdings in permanently settled estates it may be left out of the present discussions. Old S. 31, Orissa Tenancy Act, recognised distinctly two steps in the transfer of an occupancy holding so as to make it binding on the landlord. Firstly, there should be an application by the transferee for registration of the transfer. Such an application gave notice of the transfer to the landlord as required by the common law as well as by old S. 73, Bengal Tenancy Act. The next step was the payment of mutation-fee which was fixed at a maximum of 25 per cent of the consideration money. The word 'maximum' has great importance. Prior to 1913, the exact amount of mutation-fee realised for recognition of transfers by the landlords varied from place to place and in many estates such as a Khasmahal no mutation-fee was charged at all. In fact in Maddox Settlement Report at p. 218 he mentions that in some estates the zamindars recognised the transfers on payment of arrear rent and nominal sums such as Rs. 2 as Dakhil Kharaj Salami without insisting on full payment of 25 per cent. of the consideration money. Therefore, on receipt of the application from the transferee for registration of the transfer and the payment of the prescribed mutation fee or a nominal fee or no fee at all according to the custom or usage prevalent in the estate (which was expressly saved by S. 237) the landlord was bound to recognise the transfer and if he omitted to do so a special provision was made in sub-s. (3) of old S. 31 for such recognition through the medium of the Collector. Therefore under the law in force from 1913 to 1938 the previous law which required notice of the transfer to be given to the landlord even in respect of those holdings which were transferable without his consent was maintained by insisting on the transferee applying to the landlord for registration of the transfer and the two steps in the transfer were distinctly recognised.

[27] When the Legislature passed the amending Act of 1938 the change in the law was expressed in sub-s. (1) of S. 30A as follows:

"The occupancy holding of a raiyat, or a portion or share thereof, shall be transferable by sale, exchange, gift or bequest without the landlord's consent and without payment of any fee to him."

By this amendment, the necessity of obtaining the consent of the landlord and the payment of fee to him were dispensed with, but his right to receive notice of the transfer which was always existing even before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 was not expressly taken away. Therefore applying the dictum of the Privy Council mentioned above, the residue of the old law which required knowledge of the transfer on the part of the landlord still continues to exist. When an amending Act changes the old law it is not necessary that the amending Act itself should expressly say what is the residue of the old law that still continues to exist. Doubtless the Court should give full effect to the amendment; but after giving such effect and excising from the old law all elements which were expressly dispensed with by the amendments the residue must continue to remain in force. As pointed out by Maxwell in his Interpretation of Statutes, 8th Edn., p. 73

"the legislature does not intend to make any substantial alteration in the law beyond what it explicitly declares, either in express terms or by clear implication, or, in other words, beyond the immediate scope and object of the statute. In all general matters outside those limits the law remains undisturbed."

Thus when the Legislature knowing fully well that under the old law the landlord was entitled to get notice of the transfer and was also entitled to give his consent on receipt of the customary mutation fee not exceeding 25 per cent. of the consideration money expressly dispensed with the consent and the payment of mutation fee in the amending Act of 1938 and kept completely silent as regards the right of the landlord to receive notice, the reasonable inference is that that right continues to exist.

[28] In Expln. (1) to old S. 183, Bengal Tenancy Act, the usage under which a raiyat was entitled to sell his holding without the consent of the landlord was expressly saved. Some of the case law under that Explanation is instructive. In Jagun Prosad v. Posun Sahoo, 8 C. W. N. 172, itw as pointed out that

"The essence of a usage of transferability is that tranfers made to the knowledge of but without the consent of the landlord are valid and must be recognised by him."

This view was reiterated in Peary Mohan v. Joti Kumar, 11 C.W.N. 83. As already pointed out there were always certain classes of occupancy holdings which were transferable without the consent of the landlord according to local custom or usage. But in respect of those classes of occupancy holdings neither under the old common law nor under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act nor under the provisions of the O. T. Act up to 1938 could it ever be validly contended that the transfer was binding on the landlord even if he was not aware of the same On the other hand, the aforesaid discussions make it clear that he was entitled to notice. The amending Act of 1938 dispensed with the necessity of proving custom or usage in every case and unified the incident of transferability of all classes of occupancy holdings by bringing it to the same level as that of those holdings which were always transferable without the consent of the landlord.

[29] This was perhaps the reason why in new S. 31 elaborate provisions were made for effective service of notice of the transfer through the medium of the Collector instead of leaving it to the choice of the parties. The amending Act of 1938 did not substitute notice of transfer on the landlord in lieu of his consent to the transfer as required by the old law. Knowledge of transfer by the landlord was always required as it is of the essence of transferability. But under the old law, on that knowledge was superimposed the obtaining of the landlord's consent either by payment of mutation fee or otherwise and it was this necessity of obtaining consent by payment of mutation fee that was expressly taken away by S. 30A (1). If the Legislature intended that the giving of notice to the landlord itself should be dispensed with the Legislature could easily have adopted the language used in S. 12 as regards the right of transfers of permanent tenures and S. 30 as regards devolution of occupancy rights by inheritance. In both those sections, it was expressly stated that the transfer or devolution of the tenure, or the holding, as the case may be, shall be "in the same manner as other immovable property". The Legislature could easily have said in S. 30A also, as in S. 12, that an occupancy holding was capable of being transferred "in the same manner and to the same extent as other immovable property". If such language had been used the question of notice to the landlord could not have arisen because ordinarily in transfers of immovable property the giving of notice to a third party is not required to complete the transfer. The elaborate provisions made in S. 31 for the giving of effective notice of transfer to the landlord through the medium of the Collector indicate unmistakably that the Legislature did not change the old law regarding the giving of notice to the landlord but put it on a surer footing.

[30] An indication as to the stage at which the transfer is binding on the landlord seems inferable from a scrutiny of Ss. 31A and 31B. Sub-section (1) of S. 31A says that where a transfer of a portion of a holding is not defined by metes and bounds the transferee and the persons possessing interest in the remainder of the holding shall be considered as joint tenants by the londlord. The word 'considered' occurring in this sub-section has been rightly emphasised by Mr. Sinha as implying that as soon as the landlord is made aware of the transfer he is bound to consider the transferee and the persons possessing interest in the remainder of the holding as joint tenants. If the contention of Mr. Dasgupta is correct and the title passes completely as soon as the sale is confirmed sub-s. (1) of S. 31A becomes otiose. The right of free transfer having been declared in S. 30A and the mode of transfer having been declared in S. 31 the transferee and the person possessing interest in the remainder of the holding become joint tenants by virtue of those sections and there would have been no need to make a pious declaration in sub s. (1) of S. 31A. A consideration of sub-s. (2) of S. 31A leads to a similar result. That sub-section authorises the landlord to apply within six months of the date of service of notice of the transfer for a just and equitable distribution of rent in those cases where a transfer is of a portion of a holding and the portion is defined by metes and bounds. If he fails to apply within such time, his consent to the division and distribution of rent shall be deemed to have been given. Thus where a transfer of a portion of a holding is by metes and bounds the landlord is authorised to take further steps on receipt of notice and visits him with a penalty if he omits to take such steps within a stipulated period. Thus the provisions of S. 31A imply that the binding nature of the transfer, where it is a transfer of a portion of a holding as against the landlord, arises only after he is made aware of the transfer. Section 31 deals with all classes of transfers, namely (1) transfer of an entire holding, (2) transfer of a portion of a holding defined by metes and bounds and (3) transfer of a portion of a holding not defined by metes and bounds and makes no distinction as regards the mode of transfer of service of notice on the landlord in respect of those three classes of transfer. If, therefore, in respect of two of those classes, S. 31A, by necessary implication, indicates that there must be actual service of notice on the landlord so as to make it obligatory on him to consider the transferee and other persons as joint tenants or to take further steps for apportionment of rent, it will be illogical to hold that in respect of the transfer of an entire holding no such service of notice is necessary.

[31] A similar result would follow from a consideration of S. 31B which deals with transfers that took place prior to 1938 and which remained unrecognised on the date of the amending Act. Under sub-s. (1) of that section, the right of a landlord to realise transfer fee lawfully payable was recognised but at the same time such transferee was held not liable for ejectment on the ground that the consent of the landlord had not been given. Sub-section (2) and the Explanation thereto being of great importance in the present discussion may be quoted in full.

"(2) The holding or a portion or a share thereof shall not be liable to be sold in satisfaction of the decree for arrears of rent without making the said transferee a party to the proceedings in execution of the decree provided that the transferee has given notice of transfer by registered post to the landlord.

Explanation—Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act or in the Code of Civil Procedure, in the case of a transfer of a holding or a portion of a share thereof, whether before or after the decree, the transferee may be brought on record in the proceedings in execution either in substitution of or in addition to the judgment debtor, and such transferee shall, when so added or substituted, be treated as a judgment-debtor for all purposes of the said proceedings in execution of the decree."

It is here that the Legislature for the first time expressly states that in respect of pre-1938 transfers the holding shall not be liable to sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent without making the transferee a party provided that the transferee has given notice of the transfer by registered post to the landlord. This shows that the Legislature intended that the duty of the landlord to implead the transferee arises only after he is given notice of the transfer. It is true that such notice was required to be given by registered post whereas in the case of transfers made after the amending Act of 1938 such notices were required to be served through the Collector But the difference as regards the medium for the service of notice in respect of these two classes of transfers is unavoidable because as regards pre-1938 transfers whether voluntary or involuntary, there can be no question of filing the processes etc., either before the registering officer at the time of registration of the transfer or before the Court at the time of the confirmation of the sale because these had terminated long ago. The Legislature had no other option but to require service on the landlord by registered post, but it was very particular that in respect pre-1938 and post-1938 transfers, the machinery for service of notices on the landlord should be very effective. As regards the meaning of the words "giving notice by registered post" S. 29, Orissa General Clauses Act, 1937 is very clear. Though such a notice would be deemed to have been effected by properly posting the notice by registered post the non-receipt of the notice can also be proved. That is to say if by evidence it is proved that the notice is not received by the addressee the presumption under that section would not apply. In my opinion, the main object of S. 31B was to validate all pre-1938 transfers and to place them on the same footing as post-1938 transfers except to the limited extent of retaining the landlord's right of realisation of mutation fee in respect of the former class of transfers. It will be illogical to say that after conferring unrestricted right of transfer on occupancy raiyats in 1938 and after expressly declaring that even in respect of pre-1938 transfers the landlord had no right of eviction and that the obligation of the landlord to implead the pre-1938 transferee in his rent execution proceedings would arise only after service of notice of the transfer the Legislature intended that in respect of post-1938 transfers such obligation would arise irrespective of the service of notice especially in view of the nature of the machinery chosen in both classes of transfers for service of such notices. A question may be asked as to why, when the Legislature took so much precaution to express itself clearly in sub-s. (2) of S. 31B in respect of pre-1938 transfers, no such declaration was made in S. 31. The Legislature could easily have inserted another section in S. 31 very similar to sub-s. (2) of S. 31B and had it done so, the present controversy would perhaps have never arisen. But the absence of such a provision is quite understandable. The rule for the construction of a statute prospectively is not so stringent as the rule for construing it retrospectively. Retrospective effect cannot be given unless it is expressly so provided or else such effect follows by necessary implication. Hence for pre-1938 transfers express provisions had to be made in sub-s. (2) of S. 31B. As regards post-1938 transfers the Legislature perhaps thought that the changes brought about by the amendment when read with the residue of the old law would indicate that service of notice on the landlord was always necessary.

[32] The Explanation to sub-s. (2) of S. 31B is equally helpful. The words in it are wide enough to apply to all transfers, whether made prior to the amendment of 1938 or after the amendment of 1938. It seems just an accident (or perhaps an oversight on the part of the draftsman) that it was inserted as an Explanation to S. 31B and it might for all practical purposes have remained as an independent section. This question has been fully discussed in Giridhari Mohanty v. Abdul Khan, I.L.R. 1950 Cut. 195 at p. 200: (A.I.R. (38) 1951 Orissa 41) by my Lord the Chief Justice and with respect I would agree with his observations. When the words of this Explanation are in terms wide enough to include all classes of transfers there seems to be no justification for restricting it to pre-1938 transfers merely because it appears as an Explanation to S. 31B

[33] Thus I would hold that on a fair construction of Ss. 31, 31A and 31B and considering the same in the light of the law as it stood prior to 1938 the reasonable inference is that the landlord is not bound to implead the transferee in his rent execution proceedings unless he knows or must be presumed to know such transfer. Where, on the evidence in a case, such presumption is rebutted and it is found as a fact that he is unaware of the transfer he is not bound to implead the transferee at the risk of having his rent-decree reduced to the position of a money-decree.

[34] Mr. Dasgupta, however, contended that if such a view be taken the unrestricted right of transfer conferred by the amending Act of 1938 would, in many cases, be made ineffective by a landlord who could conveniently evade the service of notice and thus bring the holding to a rent-sale by impleading only the recorded raiyats. He urged that so long as the transferee was not guilty of any laches and had filed the necessary processes and the fee either before the registering officer or before the Civil Court under S. 31, he should not be visited with any penalty for non-service of such notice due to any fault either in the office of the Sub-Registrar or Civil Court or of the Collector. This argument, however, overlooks one important fact, namely, that when a person purchases an occupancy holding he knows or, at any rate, is presumed to know, that under S. 83, Orissa Tenancy Act, he is also jointly and severally responsible for the arrear rent and that such rent is a first charge on the holding. It is, therefore, his duty to find out, as soon as the transfer is effected, whether any arrear rent is due on the same and he could easily obtain this information at the office of the landlord in every village. On ascertaining about such arrear there is nothing to prevent him from rushing to the rent Court depositing the arrear rent and thereby saving the property from sale. Moreover, at the time of attachment in the rent execution proceeding, when the processes are served at the spot he gets another opportunity to know about the existence of arrear rent on the holding and there is nothing to prevent him from appearing before the Rent Court to be made a party. Under S. 228, he could save the property from sale by depositiug the decretal dues within 30 days of the sale. Therefore, the hardship to a bona fide transferee that is visualised by Mr. Dasgupta disappears if he exercises even ordinary prudence in the management of his affairs. If he thinks that his duty is completed as soon as the processes are filed in the civil Court (in the case of involuntary transfers) and that he need not bother as to whether any arrear rent is due, he runs the risk of the entire holding being sold after impleading the recorded transferee. In the present case there was an interval of one full year (15-5-40 to 15-5-41) between the date of the plaintiff's purchase from the recorded tenant and the date of the rent sale. During that period the plaintiff took absolutely no steps for payment of the arrear rent. The arrear had accrued prior to the plaintiff's purchase and inasmuch as the plaintiff's purchase was only of a portion of a holding the recorded tenant still continued to be a tenant for a major portion of the holding. From the plaintiff's conduct it can reasonably be held that he acquiesced in the recorded tenant continuing to represent the holding and there is thus no question of any equitable construction in his favour.

[35] Mr. Dasgupta's contention, however, requires omniscience on the part of the landlord and visits him with the penalty of having his rent decree reduced to the position of a money-decree for the sole reason that he was not aware of the transfer, especially when it took place after the institution of his rent suit as in the present case. It is also equally unfair to a bona fide purchaser for value in the rent sale. It was then urged that the amending Act of 1938 being a remedial statute should not be so construed as to defeat its main object of conferring complete freedom of transfer on occupancy raiyats. This argument, however, overlooks the fact even if the opposite view be accepted that the transferee is not required to prove in every case that the notice was actually served on the landlord and thus the object of the statute is not frustrated. Once he proves that he deposited the requisite fees and processes before the civil Court, and that Court passes order for the issue of those processes to the Collector, he can rely on the presumption of due performance of further official acts and thus shift the burden of rebutting that presumption on the landlord or on the auction purchaser in the rent sale. In the present case such a presumption was not available to the plaintiff because though Ex. 7 shows that the processes were filed before the civil Court, there is no order of the Court for the issue of those processes to the office of the Collector. This case is, therefore, of an exceptional nature and cannot justify the construction of the provisions of S. 31 dealing with the service of notice on the landlord as merely directory and not mandatory or as having no bearing on the question of the duty of the landlord to implead the transferee in the rent execution proceeding. It is easier for a transferee raiyat to know about the arrear rent due on his holding than for a landlord to know about the transfer effected by any one of his innumerable raiyats. No construction which would penalise a landlord for omitting to implead a transferee, about whose transfer he is unaware, can be justified especially when S. 31 does not expressly declare to that effect and when the opposite construction does not, in any way, cause any hardship to a bona fide transferee and is thus not defeating the main object of the amending Act.

[36] Moreover, if Mr. Dasgupta's contention is accepted, the security of the holding for arrears of rent and the special incidents of a rent sale provided in Chap. XVI could in most of the cases be nullified. As soon as a rent decree is obtained by a landlord against a recorded tenant and execution is applied for either orally or under S. 217, the recorded tenant may, if he is unable to pay the decretal amount, transfer the holding in favour of a third party in an out of the way sub-registrar's office prior to attachment at the post. Notice of transfer would in the usual course take three to four months for actual service on the landlord. In the meantime, a landlord acting in good faith without knowledge of the transfer, would have brought the holding to sale and it might be purchased by a third party. Then he may be met with the plea that prior to the date of attachment, the judgment-debtor's entire interest had been validly transferred and that consequently by the rent sale nothing passed. Thus the rent decree would be reduced to a scrap of paper and the landlord would be compelled to bring a fresh suit against the transferees subject to the law of limitation. In ordinary litigations relating to immovable properties such difficulties cannot arise because the law of lis pendens (S. 52, T. P. Act) would save the plaintiff-decree-holder. But that provision is not applicable to a rent suit inasmuch as in such a suit no right to immovable property is directly and specifically in question. Therefore any construction of S. 31 which would nullify the effect of a rent decree and weaken the security of the holding for arrears of rent on which the whole of Chap. XVI, Orissa Tenancy Act, is based, seems not justifiable especially when there is no express provision to that effect in the amending Act.

[37] Whenever any statute refers to the 'giving of notice' to any person, such a notice is generally effective against that person only when it is actually served on him or else when, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, it may be presumed to have been served on him. The entire Civil Procedure Code is based on this principle and S. 27, General Clauses Act, 1897 and the corresponding S. 29, Orissa General Clauses Act, 1937, merely reproduce this principle. There are several sections in the Orissa Tenancy Act which refer to the giving of notice to a person and in respect of all of them the binding nature of the notice on that person arises only after actual receipt of the notice by him. At this stage I would defer the consideration of the provisions of Ss. 14 to 16, Orissa Tenancy Act, dealing with transfer of tenures which will be dealt with separately. Section 57B refers to the liability of an under-raiyat to be ejected by his landlord at the end of the agricultural year when such notice to quit has been served on him Similarly, S. 82 refers to the liability of a tenant to pay rent to the transferee from the original landlord when notice of such transfer has been given to him. Section 97 deals with the liability of a raiyat who has surrendered his holding to indemnify the landlord for loss of rent due to the surrender unless he gives notice in writing of his intention to surrender. Sub-section (4) of that section authorises the Revenue Court to serve such notices. I do not think it will ever be contended that the liability of the tenant to indemnify the landlord under S. 97 (2) will be removed unless it be shown that the notice was actually served or may be presumed to have been served on the landlord. Section 98 says that when a tenant abandons a holding the landlord may enter on it after filing a notice in the Collector's office. Under sub-s. (3) of that section the limitation for a suit by the tenant for recovery of possession of that land is within two years from the date of the publication of the notice I may also refer to Ss. 104, 207 (1) and 221 (4). There seems to be no reason, in the absence of any provision in S. 31, to hold that the same principle should not apply in construing that section. The landlord is after all not a stranger third party but he is also interested in the holding as his rent is the first charge on it and any transfer made after the institution of his rent suit adversely affects him. In this connection I can do no better than quote the observations of Field J., in Panye Chunder v. Hurchunder, 10 Cal. 496 :

"When a decree-holder seeks to execute his decree against property, movable or immovable, it is his duty to make sure that the property which he brings to sale in execution is the property of the judgment-debtor, and, if he makes any mistake, he does so at his own peril. The circumstances of the present case are, I think, an exception to this general rule. The landlord, the decree-holder, knew that the person whom he sued was his tenant. No doubt that tenant had by law the right to transfer his tenure, but the same law cast upon the transferee the duty of giving the landlord due notice of the transfer, and unless the transferee discharged the duty so cast upon him, the landlord was not in my opinion bound to look beyond the information contained in any sirishta, and cannot be affected with knowledge of a fact not communicated to him by the person whose duty it was to communicate it."

Though that decision related to tenures governed by Bengal Act VIII [8] of 1869 which has long since been repealed, the soundness of those observations has not been doubted in any subsequent decisions though this case was subsequently considered and distinguished in Afraz Mollah v. Kulsumannessa Bibee, 10 C. W. N. 176 : (4 C. L. J. 68).

[38] I may now refer to the parallel provisions in the Bengal Tenancy Act on which learned counsel for both sides have relied. In Bengal, prior to 1928, an occupancy raiyat had no right of transfer without the consent of the landlord except by custom and consequently the landlord could obtain a valid rent decree by impleading only those tenants recorded in his rent-roll. But in 1928 such right of transfer was conferred by new Ss. 26A to 26J which made elaborate provisions for payment of landlord's fee. But as regards the proper representation of the tenants in rent suits a new provision (S. 146A) was inserted and sub-s. (3) of that section settled the matter beyond all doubt. It is not necessary for the present discussion to refer to that section. Mr. Das relied on Maharaj Bahadur Singh v Nari Mollani, A. I. R. (23) 1936 Cal. 279 : 63 Cal. 1117) But that decision was distinguished and explained in Nagendra Nath v. Niranjan, A I. R. (24) 1937 Cal 665 : (I L. R. (1938) 1 Cal. 164). The Calcutta decisions relating to transfers of occupancy holdings are, therefore, not of much help in view of the express insertion of S. 146A. Bengal Tenancy Act dealing with the vexed question of representation of co-sharer tenants. But there are several decisions under Ss. 12 and 13, Bengal Tenancy Act, dealing with transfers of permanent tenures which might throw some light. Section 11 of that Act says that a permanent tenure is capable of being transferred or bequeathed in the same manner as other immovable properties.

This section thus recognises unrestricted right of transfer. Section 12 describes the procedure for voluntary transfers of permanent tenures and directs that a registering officer shall not accept for registration any instrument of such transfer unless the prescribed fee and processes are filed. Such processes should be served on the landlord in the prescribed manner. Similarly S. 13 contains provisions for involuntary transfers through court sales and directs that before confirming the sale the purchaser shall deposit the landlord's fee and processes which should be served on the landlord in the prescribed manner after confirmation of the sale through the Collector. These two sections undoubtedly bear very close resemblance to S. 31 Orissa Tenancy Act, and in fact the language is, in many respects, identical. It has, however, been held in a series of decisions beginning with Kristo Bulluv v. Kristo Lal, 16 Cal. 642, Chintamoni v. Rash Behari, 19 Cal. 17, Surapati Roy v. Ram Narain, 50 Cal. 680 : (A. I. R. (10) 1923 P. C. 88), Barada v. Tarak Nath, A. I. R. (13) 1926 Cal. 844 : (94 I. C. 147) and Jitendra Nath v. Monmohan Ghose, A. I. R. (17) 1930 P. C. 193 : (58 Cal. 301), that a transfer of a permanent tenure is complete soon after registration or confirmation of the sale, as the case may be, and the mere fact that notice of such transfer was not received by the landlord in the manner provided in S. 12 or in S. 13 would not in any way invalidate the transfer or justify the landlord in continuing his rent sale against the transferor. Mr Dasgupta urged that the principle should apply for transfers of occupancy holdings. But in applying the decisions based on Ss. 12 and 13 of the Bengal Act to a transfer under S. 31, Orissa Tenancy Act some of the important distinctions between permanent tenures and occupancy holdings should not be overlooked. Firstly, as regards permanent tenures, S. 11 gives complete unrestricted right of transfer whereas the corresponding S. 30A, Orissa Tenancy Act, merely says that an occupancy holding may be transferable by sale without the landlord's consent and without payment of any fee to him. In other respects the old law remains unaffected. Secondly, even in Bengal it was held in Babar Ali v. Krishnamanini Dassi, 26 Cal. 603 : (3 C. W. N. 531) that the unfettered freedom of transfer conferred by the Bengal Tenancy Act was intended to be exercised in strict conformity to the conditions of the Act prescribed in Ss. 12 and 13 and unless those conditions were substantially complied with the transfer was invalid and ineffectual. This decision necessitated the passing of an amending Act known as the Bengal Tenancy Validation Act, 1903 (Bengal Act I [1] of 1903) which expressly stated that as soon as transfers of permanent tenures are registered and sales of such tenures are confirmed by the Courts the transfer is complete and it shall not be deemed to be invalid merely on the ground that the landlord's prescribed fee had not been paid. This Act of 1903 thus settled the controversy and made it absolutely clear that the provisions of Ss. 12 and 13, Bengal Tenancy Act, providing for transmitting notice and transfer fee to the landlord cannot affect the transfer of title. Therefore all decisions subsequent to 1903 regarding compliance with the provisions of Ss. 12 and 13, Bengal Tenancy Act being based on those express provisions cannot be of much guide in the present case where there is no provision similar to the provisions of the validating Act. The law in the present case seems to be somewhat similar to what it was prior to the passing of that Act of 1903 in Bengal and the principles laid down in Babar Ali v. Krishnamanini Dassi, 26 Cal. 603 : (3 C. W. N. 531) would apply. That is to say, there must be substantial compliance with the provisions of S. 31, Orissa Tenancy Act, regarding the mode of transfer before such transfer can be said to be effectual and valid. Thirdly as regards permanent tenures, there was no provision similar to old S. 73, Bengal Tenancy Act, making the transferor also jointly and severally liable for arrears of rent accruing due after the transfer unless and until notice of the transfer is given to the landlord. That section applied only to occupancy holdings. Therefore whatever common law right might have existed prior to the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, in absence of any express provision in that Act and in view of the unambiguous language used in S. 11 to the effect that the transfer of a permanent tenure can be made 'in the same manner and to the same extent as other immovable property, the transferor's liability ceased as soon as title passed to the transferee in the manner provided in S. 12, Bengal Tenancy Act. This was perhaps the main reason why in Kristo Bulluv v. Kristolal, 16 Cal. 642, Petheram C. J. held that a suit brought against the transferor for rent after he has transferred the tenure is not maintainable. In fact he has made this absolutely clear in the following para of the judgment:

"The liability here is a liability in consequence of the estate and it is admitted that it is an ordinary rule that the liability ceases when the estate is transferred."

Fourthly, the permanent tenures were freely transferable without the consent of the landlord, long before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act in 1885. Hence Ss. 11, 12 and 13 of that Act did not make any change in the law dealing with such transfers. But in the Orissa Tenancy Act, Ss. 30A and 31 changed the previous law and have to be construed against that background for ascertaining the extent of the change so effected.

[39] A closer scrutiny of the various Calcutta and Patna decisions regarding transfers of permanent tenures would show that in almost all those cases it was found as a fact that the landlord had actual knowledge of the transfer and in spite of that knowledge he continued the proceedings against his recorded tenure-holder. For instance in Giris Chandra Guha v. Khagendra Nath, 13 C. L. J. 613: (9 I. C. 1001), the landlord having noticed that the tenure passed into the hands of the transferee brought the rent suit against the recorded tenant and thereby ran the risk of having his suit declared to be not properly constituted and the decree not being a rent-decree. Similarly, in Surapati Roy v. Ram Narain, 50 Cal. 680: (A. I. R. (10) 1923 P. C. 88), the landlord was fully aware of the transfer of a portion of the tenure and in fact in a previous suit between the parties the transferors had entered appearance and denied their liability on the ground that they had parted with their interest. In spite of that knowledge the landlord continued a fresh suit against all the recorded tenants. Similarly, in Jitendra Nath v. Manmohan, A. I. R. (17) 1930 P. C. 193: (34 C. W. N. 821) which is the leading Privy Council case on the subject, their Lordships devoted two paras to the question of the landlord's knowledge of the transfer and held that there was unrebutted evidence of such knowledge. They further held that:

"When the landlord knows or must be taken to know that the recorded tenants' interest in the tenure had ceased he could not ignore such transfers and rely upon decrees obtained by him against the transferors."

Similarly in Prabhabati v. Lalji Mahto, A.I.R. (31) 1944 Pat 252: (23 Pat. 356), there was a clear finding to the effect that the landlord had full knowledge of the transfer. The only decision in which it was held that even if the landlord had no knowledge of the transfer he was still bound to implead the transferee in his rent suit is Chandra Sekhar v. Jagarnath Singh A. I. R. (32) 1945 Pat 313: (24 Pat. 148). It is not necessary for me to say how far that decision is correct. But as already pointed out that decision itself is based on the Bengal Tenancy Validation Act, 1903 which confers complete title to the transferee of a permanent tenure irrespective of the service of processes on the landlord. Therefore that decision may not apply to the present case.

[40] In Sarasvati Charan v. Suraj Deo, A. I. R. (15) 1928 Pat. 867: (7 Pat. 167), there is an interesting discussion about how far there should be compliance with Ss. 12 and 13, Bengal Tenancy Act, but in that case there was a complete failure to comply with the provisions of Ss. 12 and 13 and therefore the question as to what would happen when the transferee has done his part of the duty by depositing the landlord's fee and processes before the Court and when the failure to serve notice on the landlord was due to the laches of the Court or the Collector did not come up for decision. In fact Sir Dawson-Miller C. J. left the question open by the following words:

"It is unnecessary to determine whether if the plaintiffs had done all that was required by them and still the landlord had not received notice they could then have contended that the rent suit was not properly constituted."

A recent Calcutta decision reported in Menajuddin v. Heronuddin Mullick, 225 I. C. 575: (A. I. R. (34) 1947 Cal. 137) is also helpful in the present discussion. There the superior landlord instituted a rent suit against the recorded tenure holders and obtained his decree and in execution of the same put the tenure to sale. But prior to the rent sale the tenure was purchased in execution of a mortgage decree by a third party. The main question canvassed in that case was whether the rent sale affected the rights of the purchaser in execution of the mortgage decree who was not made a party in that sale. The Court held that the purchaser's right was not affected. But one of the arguments advanced was that the landlord could not make the purchaser in execution of the mortgage decree a party because he was not aware of that purchase. Mukherji J. deals with this question as follows:

"It appears that there is oral evidence on the record which is practically one-sided and which goes to show that the landlords had knowledge. Quite apart from that, as the sale was in execution of a mortgage decree, notice would be served upon the landlords under the provisions of S. 13. Bengal Tenancy Act. The presumption in law would be that such notices were served. It was certainly open to the landlords to rebut that presumption by showing that no notice was served upon them or even if it was served at all, it was served after the rent sale took place, but no such evidence was adduced by the defendants to this suit, and consequently, we are unable to say that the landlords had no knowledge of the plaintiff's purchase."

The passage underlined (here italicised) seems to indicate that if the presumption is rebutted by evidence and it is proved that the landlord did not have knowledge of the transfer, the decision in that case might have been otherwise. Though all these cases relate to transfers of permanent tenures and though the Bengal Tenancy Validation Act, 1903 had removed all doubts about the passing of title on transfer, neither the Privy Council in Jitendra Nath v. Manmohan, A. I. R. (17) 1930 P. C. 193: (34 C. W. N. 821) or in Surapati Roy v. Ram Narain, 50 Cal 680: (A. I. R. (10) 1923 P. C. 88)

nor the High Courts in the above-mentioned cases, have held that where the landlord had no knowledge of the transfer he was still bound to find out who the transferee was and to implead him in his rent execution proceedings. This indicates that knowledge of the transfer on the part of the landlord is one of the important circumstances in considering how far his rent decree and sale in execution thereof carried on against the recorded tenants without impleading the transferee, would have the effect of a money-decree only. Bearing in mind the important distinguishing features between a permanent tenure and an occupancy holding and the inferences arising from a construction of Ss. 31A and 31B it would appear that in case of transfer of a portion of an occupancy holding governed by S. 31, Orissa Tenancy Act, it will not be reasonable to hold that whether the landlord had knowledge of the transfer or not he was still bound to implead the transferee so as to obtain the full effect of a rent decree.

[41] Even on the question of representation, I do not think Mr. Dasgupta has a good case. This is not a case of a transfer of an entire holding but only of a portion of the holding The recorded tenant was still the owner of a substantial portion (more than two-thirds) of the holding and though the transfer in favour of the plaintiff took place about a year before the rent sale he did not care to enter appearance in the rent execution proceedings for being made a party. When the landlord brought the rent suit the recorded tenants alone had interest in the holding and the suit was thus properly framed in its inception. Under such circumstances and in view of the joint and several liability of the transferor for arrear of rent as provided in S. 83 it may be held that the holding was adequatly represented by the recorded tenants. This principle of representation by acquiescence was recognised as early as 1902 in Rajani Kant v Uzir Bibi, 7 C. W. N 170 and it was reiterated in Gagan Sheikh v. Abejan Khatun, 14 C. L. J. 180 : (10 I C. 116).

[42] My learned brother Panigrahi J. (whose judgment I have had the advantage of reading) has relied on Ayenddin Nasya v. Srish Chandra, 11 C. W. N. 76, Samiruddin v. Benga, 13 C. W. N. 630 and Tulsi v. Dayal, 15 I. C. 718 (Cal) in support of the view that the question about the transferability of the holding may be raised by the landlord against the transferee but not by the auction-purchaser after the transfer in favour of the plaintiff and that such a purchaser had no right to question the validity of the first transfer. But with respect I should point out that a closer scrutiny of the aforesaid three decisions would reveal fundamental differences between the facts of those cases and the facts of the present case. In Ayenddin Nasya v. Srish Chandra, 11 C. W. N. 76 the defendant was a lessee from a co-sharer landlord who had purchased the holding in execution of a decree for his share of the rent only. That decision was given in 1906. At that time there was no provision in the Bengal Tenancy Act enabling a co-sharer landlord to obtain a decree for his share of the rent while at the same time having the effect of a rent-decree so far as the sale of the holding was concerned. It was only in 1907 that a new S. 148-A was inserted in the Bengal Tenancy Act by the amending Act I [1] of 1907 in consequence of which a co-sharer could after complying with the provisions of that section obtain a decree for his share of the rent which would be as effectual as a rent-decree by the sole landlord. Prior to 1907 therefore a rent suit by a co-sharer was always regarded as only a money-suit. In the Orissa Tenancy Act, however, S. 199 was specially inserted corresponding to S 148-A Bengal Tenancy Act, conferring on the co-sharer the special right of realising his share of the rental without in any way reducing his decree from a rent-decree to a money-decree. I have already pointed out that the present suit is of that type and the decree would therefore have the effect of a rent decree unless the plaintiff-appellant can succeed on other points discussed already. Ayenddin Nasya v. Srish Chandra, 11 C. W. N. 76, is therefore clearly distinguishable. Samiruddin v. Benga, 13 C. W. N. 630, deals with different set of facts. In Tulsi v. Dayal, 15 I. C. 718 (Cal.), also the rent sale was in execution of a decree obtained by a co-sharer landlord and there is nothing to show that the special procedure prescribed in S. 148 A, Bengal Tenancy Act was followed. Those decisions are, therefore, not of any help. On the other hand, in Menajuddin v. Heranuddin, 225 I. C. 575 : (A. I. R. (34) 1947 Cal. 137), this question about the transferability of the tenure was raised not by the landlords or the recorded tenants on the one hand and the transferees on the other but by subordinate tenants of the tenure who challenged the right of the purchaser of the tenure in execution of the mortgage decree on the ground that the entire tenure had been purchased in a rent sale by another party. Their right to challenge the title of the purchaser in the mortgage decree was not disputed. Therefore I do not think that it can be maintained that the defendants are not entitled to raise the question about the passing of the entire holding in the rent sale.

[43] I would, therefore, hold that the necessity of impleading a transferee of an occupancy holding or a portion thereof in a rent execution proceeding so as to have the full effect of a rent decree and rent sale, arises only if the landlord receives notice of the transfer through the machinery provided in S. 31 or becomes aware of it by other means. Doubtless there may be a presumption that he did receive notice of the transfer if the transferee had deposited the processes and necessary fees either before the registering officer or before the Court as required by sub ss. (2), (5) and (6) of that section. But this is only a rebuttable presumption and if the evidence in a particular case shows that the processes were not actually served and the landlord had no knowledge through other sources it will not be correct to hold that rent decree and rent sale in execution thereof obtained by the landlord against the recorded tenants would have the effect of a money-decree.

[44] I would, therefore, affirm the judgment of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal.

[45] Jagannadhadas J. — I have had the advantage of reading the judgments of my learned brothers, Panigrahi and Narasimham JJ. I have also read with care the observations of my Lord the Chief Justice in Giridhari Mohanty v. Abdul Khan, I. L R. (1950) Cut. 195: (A I.R. (38) 1951 Orissa 41), having a bearing on the questions arising in this case. I am conscious of the fact that having regard to the vast experience of his Lordship the Chief Justice as regards the Tenancy Laws of Orissa, great weight is due to his views. I have accordingly bestowed anxious thought on the questions raised before us, and have come to the conclusion that the non-receipt of notice by the landlord contemplated under S 31 (5), Orissa Tenancy Act, does not by itself, have the effect of rendering the transfer of the occupancy holding or of a portion or share thereof not binding against the landlord.

[46] On the facts found in the case, which I need not repeat, the question that arises for consideration is whether in execution of a decree against defendant 2, the recorded tenant, for arrears of rent which accrued prior to the date of the transfer of a portion of the holding in favour of the plaintiff, the entire holding including the plaintiff's share or interest therein could be validly sold though the plaintiff was not a party to the proceedings. As pointed out by my Lord the Chief Justice in Giridhari Mohanty v. Abdul Khan, I. L. R. (1950) Cut. 195 at p. 199 : (A. I. R (38) 1951 Orissa 41):

"The position of law is too well settled to be controverted that at the time of sale in execution of a decree for recovery of rent, the entire landlord's interest and also the ryoti interest should be represented respectively by the decree-holder as well as the judgment-debtor. Any one of these parties having ceased to have either the landlord's interest or the ryoti interest, as the case may be, the execution and the sale thereunder should lose the character of being an execution of a rent decree as such with the result that the sale will not pass the holding or the tenancy as the case may be.

As a principle, it is fundamental that nobody's property will be sold except in a proceeding to which he is a party."

(See also A. H. Forbes v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh, A. I. R. (1) 1914 P. C. 111 : (41 Cal. 926) and Aradhan Mondal v. Abhoya Charan, A. I. R. (10) 1923 Cal. 321 : (68 I. C. 626) These observations apply with equal force whether what is sold is a whole or a part of the rayati holding In considering the question at issue in the case, I must point out at the outset that in the course of the arguments and discussions before us, the distinction between the effect of non-joinder of the plaintiff as the part-owner of the holding, and the liability of the holding to be represented by defendant 2 the recorded tenant in the circumstances, so as to bind the plaintiff's interest in an action by the landlord, has not been kept in view. The whole argument has proceeded on the footing that the decision of the case turns only on whether by virtue of the transfer the title itself to the part transferred has or has not passed to the plaintiff so as to bind the landlord. It is the non-appreciation of these two as distinct legal positions that has caused not a little difficulty in the correct appreciation of the legal question involved. It may also be noticed that the question as to who are necessary parties to proceedings taken by the landlord to bind the tenant's interest in the holding is not in terms prescribed by any provision of the Orissa Tenancy Act. Sections 199, 212 or S. 197 do not provide for this and one must turn only to the general law for the purpose. (See Rampada Nag v. Kanai Rai, A.I.R. (13) 1926 Cal. 1219 at p. 1220, Col. II : (98 I. C. 206.)) Under that law every person having an interest in the holding must be impleaded as a party if the holding is to pass and this obligation does not depend on notice or knowledge of the transfer.

[47] I shall first take up the question whether or not defendant 2's interest to the extent of what has been transferred, must be taken to vest in the plaintiff so as to bind the landlord also and to render him a necessary party to proceedings by the landlord against the holding. As I have said at the outset, I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that it does in agreement with the view of my learned brother Panigrahi J. Even apart from any authority, and on a fair and reasonable consideration of the group of sections that were introduced into the Orissa Tenancy Act of 1938 by Orissa Tenancy Amendment Act, 1938 (Orissa Act VIII [8] of 1938), this result must follow. By S. 6 of the amending Act, a new S. 30-A was inserted into the parent Act, which categorically states that

"the occupancy holding of a raiyat or portion or a share thereof shall be transferable by sale, exchange, gift or bequest without the landlord's consent and without payment of any fee to him" and that "such a transfer shall carry with it the occupancy right in the holding and all the rights appurtenant thereto."

Section 7 of the amending Act substitutes a new S. 31 for the previous S. 31 and provides for the manner of transfer and notice to the landlord. That section enjoins that every such transfer shall be made by a registered instrument, except in the case of a sale in execution of a decree or a certificate signed under the Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act. Sub-sections (2) and (3) enjoin on the registering officer not to accept an instrument for registration, unless notice containing certain particulars in the prescribed form is filed and a prescribed fee for service of notice on the landlord is deposited. It also enjoins on him that after registration, he should transmit the notice to the collector who in turn is enjoined to cause it to be served on the landlord named in the notice. Similarly, where the holding is purchased in execution of a decree, the Court is enjoined to require the purchaser to file a notice with particulars and to deposit fees for service of notice before confirming the sale and to transmit the notice to the Collector for service on the landlord after confirmation. There are similar provisions relating to bequests and foreclosure in mortgage suits. These provisions appear to prove clearly that the point of time at which the transfer becomes effective is registration in the case of a private sale and confirmation in the case of a court-sale in the same manner as under the general law. If that be so, I can see no reason for thinking that the registration or confirmation makes the transfer operative only as between the transferee, but that the title must remain in suspense so far as the landlord is concerned until he receives the actual notice. To have this effect, it would be necessary to construe the provisions relating to the service of notice as a condition precedent for the vesting of the title in the transferee and yet confine such construction to the operativeness of the transfer as against the landlord, but not as against the transferor. Looking merely at the language of the two Ss. 30-A and 31, I am unable to find any justification for any such anomalous construction. The provisions in S. 31 relating to the filing of notices and payment of fees before registration or confirmation and those relating to the service of notice after registration or confirmation may no doubt be mandatory in one sense, that is, in the sense that their violation must have some legal consequences. But it is quite a different thing to say that they are conditions precedent for the vesting of the title in the transferee or that they are enough to bring about the vesting of the title in two different ways at two different stages; one as against the transferor and the other as against the landlord. It is in dealing with the analogous wording of the corresponding section relating to the transfer of tenures and in repelling a similar (though not exactly the same) contention that the Privy Council in Jitendra Nath v. Manmohan, A. I. R. (17) 1930 P. C. 193 at p. 196 : (34 C. W. N. 821) said that "their Lordships knew no principle of law which justifies such a contention."

[48] It has been urged, however, that the contrary is the proper construction if the collocation of other connected sections is taken and the previous state of law is considered. I have no doubt that reference to previous law is a valuable guide as laid down in Abdur Rahim v. Abu Mahomed Barkat Ali, 55 I. A. 96 : (A. I. R. (15) 1928 P. C. 16), but it is clear from that decision itself that the ultimate criterion is as to what is the meaning and effect of the language used by the amending legislation. Under the pre existing law, the occupancy holding was not freely transferable (except where there was a custom), but the consent of the landlord was a pre-requisite and that would ordinarily be given on the payment of the mutation fee. Section 31 of the Act as it stood before 1938 intervened by providing a machinery against the arbitrary refusal of the consent by the landlord and as against the demand of exorbitant mutation fees, but left matter untouched so far as permanently settled estates were concerned. All this has been completely changed and the new S. 30 (A) provides that all occupancy holdings shall be transferable carrying with it the occupancy right and other appurtenant rights. It has been pointed out that this section does not say as does the corresponding S. 12 relating to the transfer of permanent tenures that it shall be capable of being transferred "in the same manner and to the same extent as other immovable property", but that it only says that it shall be transferable "without the landlord's consent and without any payment of fee to him." It has been suggested that the difference in this language is indicative of the fact that the transfer was not intended to bring about the same results, but was intended to be subject to certain further limitations which must be gathered from S. 31. It appears to me, with respect, that the use of the phrase "without the landlord's consent and without payment of any fee to him" merely meant to emphasize the fact that the pre-existing fetter on free transferability were intended to be completely wiped out. It cannot be taken to suggest that any further limitation was intended to be placed. An argument has been strenuously advanced at the bar that while the mutation fees and consent were abolished, a small process fee and service of notice were intended to be substituted and that inasmuch as the transfer was not previously binding in the absence of mutation fee and consent, similarly the transfer is not binding against the landlord in the absence of payment of process fee and service of notice. This, to my mind, is whittling down the effect of the unambiguous language that has been used in the section and to say that while the Legislature intended to wipe out the consent of the landlord, it still meant to leave its trial behind. It is to be noticed that sub-s. (4) of the previous S. 31, in terms, said that

"save as provided in this section and Ss. 95 and 96, no transfer of an occupancy holding or portion of a holding otherwise by succession or by sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent shall be valid unless and until the landlord has consented thereto."

If the Legislature merely meant to substitute notice for consent, it would similarly have said that the transfer under S. 30-A is not binding until notice has been received. In this context, it appears to me that the provisions of the amendment Act of 1938 relating to pre-amendment transfers, viz., those contained in S. 31 B, are very significant. My learned brother Narasimham J. has been inclined to think that that section supports the conclusion that a transfer under S. 31 also is not binding against the landlord until notice is received. It appears to me, with respect, that it confirms exactly the opposite conclusion. Section 31-B validates pre-amendment transfers to a limited extent. It protects the transferee from liability to ejectment but continues his liability for payment of mutation fee and prescribes a period of limitation for recovery thereof. It recognizes that the effect of validating the transfer even to that limited extent is to render the transferee a necessary party for sale of the holding in satisfaction of the decree for arrears of rent and provides a machinery therefor by the "explanation" to the section and by sub-s. (2) casts upon the transferee the obligation in giving notice of transfer by registered post in order that he may not be affected by proceedings to which he is not a party. To my mind from the absence of such a provision in S. 31 the implication is obvious that in the case of other transfers governed by S. 30 A giving notice of the transfer is not a condition precedent to the operativeness of the normal requirement as to the transferee being a necessary party to the proceedings by which he is to be bound. It has been urged by learned counsel for respondent that the new S. 31-A, sub-ss. (1) and (2) clearly indicate that the knowledge of the landlord is a prerequisite for the working of that section and it would, therefore, follow that service of notice on him is essential. It appears to me that the sub-sections of this section cannot be taken to imply what they do not in terms say that service of notice is a condition precedent for the binding character of such transfers on the landlord. The argument based on the wording of sub ss. (1) and (2) of S. 31-A recognises that they deal only with transfer of a portion or a share and not of the whole of the holding. It would be far-fetched to extend the construction by implication said to arise from the language of S. 31-A to the case of transfer of the entirety of a holding. It appears to me that S. 31-A has only to do with the distribution of the rent; while the right of transfer of a portion or share has been recognised in unrestricted terms carrying with it the right of sub dividing the holding as the tenant may choose. The Legislature was only anxious to protect the interests of the landlord in so far as the distribution of the rent is concerned. In the case of a transfer of an undivided share or portion by metes and bounds, the rent was to remain joint and in the case of transfer of a portion by metes and bounds the transferor and the transferee were given the right to distribute the rent between themselves subject to the right of the landlord to challenge the same by an application before the Collector in time. Knowledge of the landlord is undoubtedly presumed and how S. 31A, sub-s. (2) is to be worked in the absence of such knowledge may be a question for consideration when it arises, but that cannot be a reason for importing such knowledge consequent on the notice as a condition precedent to the binding character of the transfer not merely for the distribution of the rent with which the section deals, but for the operativeness of the transfer itself as against the landlord about which it has nothing to say. Some stress has been laid upon the use of the phrase "shall be considered as joint tenants by the landlord" in S. 31A, sub-s. (1). This appears to me only to emphasize that while the tenant has no right to distribute the rent when he sells an undivided share or portion, the landlord cannot refuse to recognize the transfer of such undivided share, but must treat him as a joint tenant. The phrase "shall be considered" cannot be construed in this context too literally. For instance, nobody would suggest that it is not open to the landlord to agree to the distribution of rent in such a case, but that the landlord is bound to treat them only as joint tenants for all time and cannot if he chooses agree to the splitting up of the joint tenancy.

[49] My learned brother Narasimham J. is inclined to think that both under the common law of the country as well as under the statutory tenancy law prior to the amendment of 1938, the giving of notice to the landlord was a condition precedent to the binding character of the transfer against the landlord in cases where by custom or otherwise the holding was transferable without his consent, and that the only effect of the 1938 amendment was to take away the requirement of consent where it was previously necessary, but not to touch the requirement as to giving of the notice. I must confess with respect that I have not been persuaded by this argument. The only basis for the view that under the common law the giving of notice was necessary to make the transfer binding on the landlord is the dictum in Panye Chunder v. Hurchunder, 10 Cal. 496, but that case itself was one relating to the alienation of a tenure and the decision in that case was based on a specific provision of the then Bengal Tenancy Act of 1869, namely, S. 26, which expressly imposed a duty of giving notice to the landlord upon all transferees of tenures to which the section applied. My learned brother has also referred to the recognition of custom of transferability. In Jagan Prosad v. Posun Sahco, 8 C. W. N. 172, their Lordships were considering whether the evidence of transfers without consent in other pattis can be used as proof of the custom relating to the partti of the particular landlord. In negativing it, their Lordships say :

"The essence of a usage of transferability is that transfers made to the knowledge of but without consent of the landlord are valid and must be recognised by him."

I understand this passage in the context only to mean that instances of transfer to constitute proof of usage must be transfers which have in fact been recognised as a matter of course by the landlord though he did not consent to them. There was no question in the case as to whether or not the landlord was bound to recognize a particular transfer on knowing about it, after the usage itself has been established. I do not understand these cases to lay down that a landlord was not bound to recognize a transfer until he has notice of it, but that the custom of transferability without consent is made out by and validates only transfers known to the landlord. This is clear from the case in Peary Mohan v. Joti Kumar, 11 C. W. N. 83. That is perfectly intelligible since a custom to be recognised by the Court must be reasonable. But transferability conferred by statute cannot be judged on that footing and must be gathered from the language used. It is also true that certain decisions have held that the principle underlying S. 108, sub-s. (j), T. P. Act is also applicable to agricultural leases. That, however, does not appear to me to help the present discussion. The question that arose in those cases was whether or not the transferor tenant could absolve himself from the liability from future rent by the mere transfer itself, and it was held that he could not, in view of the fact that the transferor was liable to the landlord by privity of contract. Such a line of reasoning is not normally applicable to the case of an occupancy raiyat, who, it seems to me, more often holds by privity of estate and not by privity of contract. It would also appear from the decision in Saradindu Mukherjee v. Kunja Kamini, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal. 514 : (202 I. C. 663) that the principle of S. 108 (j) does not apply to a case where the incidents relating to the assignment or transfer of the tenancy are provided for by the tenancy legislation itself as in the case of transfer of permanent tenures under the Bengal Tenancy Act. In any case, this does not show that so far as the transferee is concerned, his liability to the landlord depends on his giving notice Neither S. 108 (j), T. P. Act, nor S. 73, Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885 which have been referred to in the discussion, show that the transferee's liability does not commence from the date of the transfer or that it arises only when a notice has been given or the landlord has knowledge. Indeed, they clearly seem to imply the contrary. Section 83, Orissa Tenancy Act, prior to the amendment of 1938 was as follows :

"When an occupancy raiyat in a permanently settled estate transfers his holding without the consent of the landlord, the transferor and the transferee shall be jointly and severally liable to the landlord for arrear of rent falling due after the transfer."

It would appear from this section that in respect of transfers falling within its scope at the time, the transferee's liability would commence from the date of the transfer itself and not from the date when the landlord gets notice or has knowledge of the transfer. This implies, if at all, that the reciprocal liability of the landlord vis s-vis the transferee, viz., his obligation to recognize him and treat it as binding arose from the date of the transfer itself and did not depend on any independent notice after transfer. It is significant that by the amendment of 1938 this old S. 83 relating to future arrears of transferable holdings in permanently settled estates has been omitted and fresh section dealing only with past arrears, and applicable to all transfers within temporarily or permanently settled estates has been substituted. This substitution seems to me to be an indication of the legislative intention that the transferor-tenant was not to be liable for future rents at all from the date of the transfer and the transferee was to be liable for past and future arrears—notice or no notice. The position, therefore, as I understand, was this. There probably was some common law principle that a transferee of a tenancy must give notice to the landlord before he could get the benefit of the tenancy as stated in Panye Chunder v. Hurchunder, I. L. R. 10 Cal. 496 but this became academic when landlords grew sufficiently powerful to obliterate free transferability of tenancy rights and were able to impose their consent as a condition precedent. The matter then rested either with statute or custom. Custom recognized the validity only of transfers to the knowledge of the landlord. See Jagan Prosad v. Posun Sahoo, 8 Cal. W. N. 172 and for the rest consent was a pre-requisite except when statute purported to regulate the same. That attempt at regulation was first made in Orissa in 1913, which retained the theory that consent was a pre-requisite, but provided for a statutory mode of obtaining that consent from an unreasonable landlord. Thus between 1913 and 1938 the field relating to transfers of tenancy right in Orissa was partly occupied by statute and partly by custom and the particular provisions relating to the validity of such transfers in both the cases were such that notice to the landlord was necessarily implied. Notice was not something in addition to the requisites for validity of the transfer and did not have any separate existence as a pre-requisite to render it binding as against the landlord. All that has now been changed, and the field is in its entirety occupied by statute. The requisites for validity of the transfer have themselves been altered and I do not think it permissible to hold that the implications of the previous law continue unless the same can be reasonably derived from the language of the new statute itself. I am, therefore, not persuaded by the argument that prior to 1938, there was any well-established principle recognised by the Orissa Tenancy Act to the effect that notice was an independent pre-requisite for the binding character of the transfer of a transferable holding and that therefore it could be argued that pre-requisite was left untouched.

[50] My learned brother Narasimham J. has noticed the case in Babar Ali v. Krishnamanini Dassi, 26 Cal. 603 : (3 C. W. N. 531), where it has been held that:

"As regards court-auction sale of a permanent tenure which was confirmed without the payment of the prescribed landlord's fee and in disregard of the provisions of Ss. 12 and 13, Bengal Tenancy Act, the sale itself was invalid."

It would appear that subsequent to that decision, the legislature intervened by passing the Bengal Tenancy Validation Act, 1903 (Bengal Act (I [1] of 1903) which in terms enacted that the non-payment of the fee should not be held to invalidate the transfer. It has been suggested that since there is no such specific provision in the Orissa Act, the non-compliance with any of the requirements of Sub-ss. (2) to (6) of S. 31 may have the effect of invalidating the transfer in the light of the decision in Babar Ali v. Krishnamanini Dassi, 26 Cal. 603 : (3 C. W. N. 531). This, however, does not seem to follow. On the very language of sub-ss. (2) to (6) of S. 31, non-payment of process fee or not filing of notices for service appear to stand on a different footing from the non-service of notice. If the requirement as to payment of process-fee and filing of notices are not complied with, the Registrar or the Court are specifically prohibited from completing the title. But the service of notice is a duty cast on the officers after the formal completion of the title and, the disregard of the statutory prohibition before completion of title may well be held as was done in Babar Ali v. Krishnamanini Dassi, 26 Cal. 603 : (3 C. W. N. 531), to invalidate the title itself while a dereliction of duty cast on the public officers after completion of title cannot by itself be said to invalidate the title. Indeed, even in the former contingency the case in Chandra Sekhar v. Jagannath, A. I. R. (32) 1945 Pat. 313 : (24 Pat. 148) has held that the title is completed by registration or confirmation, even though it was in disregard of the statutory prohibition. That, however, is a question which does not arise for decision in this case. All that is sufficient to say in this context is that failure to give notice after registration or confirmation cannot be said to stand on the same footing.

[51] It appears to me, therefore, that taking all the amending sections together and having regard to the pre-existing state of law, it would not be reasonable to import into S. 31 service of notice of transfer on the landlord or the landlord's knowledge of the transfer as a condition precedent to the vesting of the title in the transferee and to the binding character of the transfer as against the landlord

[52] As has been pointed out in the judgment of my learned brother Panigrahi J., there is quite a large catena of decisions of high authority starting from Kristo Bulluv v. Kristolal Singh, 16 Cal. 642 which was approved in Jitendra Nath v. Manmohan, A. I. R. (17) 1930 P. C. 193 : (34 C. W. N 821) construing the analogous section relating to the transfer of permanent tenures in the manner in which Panigrahi J. and myself are inclined to construe. It has been urged that the law relating to the transferability of permanent tenures has always been different and that therefore different considerations must apply. It has also been pointed out that almost every one of those decisions while saying that the binding character of the transfer on the landlord is not dependent on the payment of the fee or service of the notice, also mentioned that on the facts of those particular cases, the landlord had knowledge or must be taken to have knowledge. It has, therefore, been urged that those decisions cannot be taken as a guide for the construction of S. 31, Orissa Tenancy Act. It appears to me, however, that when the Legislature adopted almost similar language and machinery in S. 31, Orissa Tenancy Act, relating to occupancy holding as in Ss. 12 and 13, Bengal Tenancy Act relating to permanent tenures the prima facie implication is that the Legislature did so with full knowledge of the judicial interpretation that the language of those sections had received and was prepared for the similar language used in S. 31 being construed in the same manner. See Mersey Docks v. Cameron, (1864-65) 11 H. L. C. 443 : (145 R. R. 255) and Isan Chandra v. Saftulla Sikdar, A. I. R. (9) 1922 Cal. 331 at p. 333 : (68 I. C. 219). The reference to knowledge in all such cases is easily explicable on the ground that what was intended to be obviated thereby was the likelihood of the applicability of the theory of representation on the facts of a particular matter with which I shall deal presently.

[53] It has been very strenuously argued that this view would result in considerable hardship to the landlords and that it will encourage fraudulent transfers by defaulting tenants almost on the eve of rent sales. It is also said that this view will be contrary to what has been accepted by the Bench and the Bar all along as having been the correct legal position, namely, that a decree in execution sale as against the tenant recorded in the landlord's registry is valid to pass the holding itself when the transferee of whose transfer the landlord was not aware is not made a party. These considerations even if correct are matters for hesitation and more anxious consideration, but cannot ultimately be the prevailing factors for decision if otherwise the construction of the section is reasonably clear on the language. No pre-existing reported decision relating to the construction of S. 31-A, Orissa Tenancy Act, has been brought to our notice excepting, as already stated, Giridhari Mohanty v. Abdul Khan, I. L. R. 1950 Cut. 195 : (A. I. R. (38) 1951 Orissa 41). In that case the particular question with which we are dealing, was not before the Court. There are no doubt some observations which may be taken to indicate the contrary view, but his Lordship the Chief Justice himself at p. 206 of the report appears to have summarised the position when he stated :

> "So is a transfer by an occupancy tenant to which his landlord's consent is implicit by virtue of the statute as soon as its conditions for giving notice to him are fulfilled."

This seems to imply not that the notice should have been served, but that the pre-requisite for the issue of notice, namely, the filing of notices and the deposit of the fees should have been complied with. Indeed, the scheme of S. 31 as amended seems to me, not that notice has been substituted for consent and knowledge is essential or that it is only on the receipt of notice or on obtaining knowledge that the transfer becomes binding on the landlord, but that the transfer was intended to become absolute on registration or confirmation and that a dependable machinery for issue of notice to the landlord was provided by means of public agencies by insisting on registration in every case of private sale and that the transferor and the transferee were to be penalised only by refusal of the registration or confirmation if they failed to provide facilities for service of notice, and not in any other way. The Legislature apparently contemplated that the public machinery provided would work effectively and promptly and that service on the landlord and his knowledge of the transfer would be a matter of course. It did not, therefore, provide for the consequences of the failure of the machinery. As to the supposed hardship of the landlord or the scope for the commission of frauds by defaulting tenants, I am not satisfied that it is likely to be so serious as has been represented to us to be, especially since a sale in execution of a rent-decree must be preceded by attachment under Ss. 216 and 217 of the Act, and fraudulent transfers prior thereto are not likely to be numerous or common; but if the hardship resulting from what appears to me to follow from a plain reading of the amending sections is really such as is said to be, the remedy rests with the Government in tightening up the statutory machinery which the Legislature provided for the service of notice or by the Legislature itself intervening by a clear provision for the effect of non-service of notice. It is not without some significance that as a fact the proceedings of the Orissa Legislature when the Bill relating to the amendment of 1938 was on the anvil show that a specific non-official amendment providing for the giving of notice and the effect thereof on the lines of the analogous provisions of the Madras Estates Land Act was moved, but not accepted. See Orissa Legislative Assembly Debates 1938, p. 1841 and p. 1866).

[54] The contrary view strenuously urged on the other side appears to me to lead to much greater anomaly and hardship. Such a view would result in keeping the transferor-tenant liable for all future arrears of rent even though his liability for rent was not based on any contract, but only on the holding of the land; while as already pointed out it is clearly implied by the new S. 83 that there was to be no continuing liability of the transferor for future arrears. Any continuing liability of the transfer for future arrears would be in the nature of a fetter on his right of transfer. I cannot imagine that the Legislature ever intended that while as a result of the transfer the transferee's liability for rent should arise at once and also should extend to past arrears, his title to the land should be precarious and liable to be defeated by proceedings to which he was not a party, whether such proceedings be in respect of further or past arrears, and that the transferor-tenant should be hampered in the freedom of his transfer by continuance of such liability dependant on the failure of the machinery for giving notice or the default of the transferee in not punctually paying up his rent are circumstances for which he is not responsible.

[55] It appears to me that the difference in the two views propounded in this case arises from the difference in the approach to the crucial question involved, namely, whether the right of the occupancy raiyat in the land is to be treated as an interest in the land or as being analogous to a contractual right. If it is an interest in the land itself, it is more in consonance with principle that the effectiveness of transfer of such interest can have nothing to do with notice or knowledge though it may be that the landlord who has an interest in the land is in one sense affected by such transfer. If it be permissible to apply terms familiar to Madras Tenancy Law, the tenant has the Kudivaram interest in the land and the landlord has the Melvaram interest and both are in a sense co-owners in different levels of the total ownership of the land. (See Venkata Narasimha v. Kotayya, 20 Mad. 299 : (7 M L J 251).) Into such a relationship it is hardly right to import notions arising out of a contractual tenancy. In referring to this analogy, I am perfectly well aware that the conditions of the tenancy law here are different from those in Madras; but I refer to the same only for the purpose of elucidating the position that the right of an occupancy raiyat in the land is in the nature of property and that his obligations towards the landlord must be founded, as far as possible, on the terms of the statute which purport to govern the same.

[56] From the above discussion, it follows in my opinion that the transfer of an occupancy right under S. 31 of the amended Orissa Tenancy Act is binding as much against the landlord as against the transferor from the date of its registration or confirmation and that, therefore, he would normally be a necessary party to any proceedings taken to bind his interest in the holding. This, however, does not necessarily conclude the question which arises in such cases, namely, as to what is the effect of proceedings taken as against the original recorded tenant alone without making the transferee a party.

[57] While it is true as pointed out at the outset that no person's title can be affected by proceedings to which he is not a party, that principle itself has been subjected to an important exception, namely, that the interest of a person not a party to the proceeding may be fully bound by the result of the proceedings if on the facts and circumstances of the particular case, the party on record may be held to represent fully the person having the interest and not on the record. The well-known Privy Council cases in Malkarjun v. Narhari, 27 I. A. 216 : (25 Bom. 337 P. C.) and Khiarajmal v. Daim, 32 I. A. 23 : (32 Cal 296 P. C.) — clearly recognise both the main rule and the exception by way of principle of representation. I have had occasion to discuss the principal of representation under the general law with reference to the limited question of the binding character, against the true legal representative of proceedings bona fide taken against the wrong representative. (See Sarat Chandra Deb v. Bichitrananda Sahu, I. L. R. (1950) Cut. 413 at p. 434-445). I find on a close examination of the law on the subject that this principle of representation has been held to apply also to rent-decrees and execution proceedings for realisation of rent. Thus, for instance, in Nitayi Behari v. Hari Gobinda, 26 Cal. 677, two of the learned Judges, Hill and Banerjee JJ., have extended the principle of representation laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bissesur Lall v. Luchmessur Singh, 6 I. A. 233 : (5 C. L. R. 477 P. C.), to the facts of that case and held that a registered tenant represented the transferee who was not a party to the proceedings and that the proceedings against the registered tenant bound the transferee. The case in Afraz Mollah v. Kulsumannessa Bibee, 10 C.W.N. 176: (4 C. L. J. 68), recognizes the applicability of the principle to rent proceedings and decides on the facts of that case that there was no representation (see the judgment of Mukherjee J.). The case in Jagat Tara Dassya v. Daulati Bewa, 13 C. W. N. 1110 : (2 I. C. 695), discusses the principle of representation and says that the fact that the party to the proceeding is only the registered tenant is not everything and the principle was laid down that it is only one of the items of evidence upon which the question is to be decided as to whether he fully represents the holding so as to bind a person not a party to it. The case in Gagan Sheikh v. Abejan, 14 C. L. J. 180: (10 I. C. 116), also recognises and discusses the rule of representation of the holding by some of the heirs of the original tenant on behalf of all the persons interested and says it is essentially a question of fact. Profulla Kumar v Salimullah, 23 C. W. N. 590: (A. I. R. (6) 1919 Cal. 62) is another case in which the principle of representation was applied and the sale as against the recorded tenants was held binding as against persons not recorded. In Faridpur Loan Office Ltd. v. Nirode Krishna Ray, A. I R. (16) 1929 Cal. 452: (56 Cal. 462), it was clearly laid down as follows:

"Now the ordinary law is that where a landlord sues some only of the co-tenants of a tenure obtains a decree, and purchases the tenure in pursuance of the decree, all that he obtains by the purchase is the interest of the defendant judgment-debtors. But the whole tenure will pass under the auction-purchase pursuant to the decree if the facts warrant a finding that the tenants who were impleaded in the circumstances represented the whole estate."

Rameshchandra v. Dinanath Mestary, A. I. R. (23) 1936 Cal. 178 : (63 Cal. 846) also appears to adopt this view. In Girdharimohnty v. Abdul Khan, I. L. R. (1950) Cut. 195 at p. 199: (A. I. R. (38) 1951 Orisa 41), his Lordship the Chief Justice has said:

"At the date of the sale the judgment-debtor in the suit was no longer the raiyat and was not representing the holding."

(The underlining (here italicised) is mine). This clearly shows that in his Lordship's view the principle of repreeentation is available in such a case. That principle, as has been pointed out by me in Udayanath Mohapatra v. Rahas Pandiani, I. L. R. (1950) Cut. 410 at p. 411: (A I. R. (38) 1951 Orissa 10) is based on the fact that the interests of the person wrongly on the record and of the person really interested, though not a party on the record, are identical in respect of all matters arising on the proceeding in question and that the action of the creditor in failing to implead the person really interested was bona fide. These are the necessary criteria though not always sufficient by themselves to bring about the applicability of the principle of representation which must ultimately depend on the applicability of the equitable doctrine to the facts of each particular case. In considering whether the facts of any particular case justify a conclusion as to the binding character of rent proceedings against the holding itself, though every person interested therein is not a party, the corresponding decisions under the Bengal Tenancy Act prior to the enactment of the statutory representation under S. 146A, may be a useful guide. But it is necessary to caution that so far as any such prior decisions relating to non-transferable holdings are concerned, the cases mix up the question of representation with the question of want of title as against the landlord on account of the absence of his consent to the transfer. It is unnecessary, however, to pursue this aspect further to attempt to lay down the conditions or limits for the applicability of the doctrine of representation in the rent proceedings except to say that the non-observance of the statutory requirements of S. 31, Orissa Tenancy Act, which results in the landlord having no notice and the default in non payment of rent which brings about the proceedings for recovery of rent, may on the facts and circumstances of a particular case, afford sufficient protection to the landlord or the auction-purchaser on invoking the principle of representation. The present case has unfortunately not been presented from that aspect and the requisite facts have not been elucidated on that footing. I am also not prepared to embark upon a larger discussion of the limits of this principle of representation without its having been debated at the bar before us in this case. It is enough to state that I am satisfied that the principle is available and can be invoked in proper cases. I may add, however, that in a matter so important as the effect of rent proceedings, it is rather unfortunate that the applicability and the limits of the principle of representation should have been left unprovided for by the Legislature. This has been made up to some extent in Bengal by the enactment of S. 146-A.

[58] In the result, therefore, I agree that the appeal should be allowed with costs throughout.

[59] By the Court.—In accordance with the majority view the order of the Court is that the second appeal is allowed with costs throughout Narasimham J.—This is judgment debtors' appeal from a final decree dated 24-10-1944 passed by the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack in a mortgage suit. In order to appreciate the points involved in this appeal it is necessary to describe briefly the previous history of this protracted litigation.

[2] Patia estate known as Killa Patia is an impartible estate in Cuttack district whose proprietor was one Raja Raghunath Deb in 1913. On 26-2-1913 he executed a simple mortgage for Rs. 1,07,000 mortgaging the entire estate in favour of one Bhaban Sahu, the predecessor-in-interest of the respondent-decree-holders. Again on 13-8-1913 he executed a second mortgage in favour of the same Bhaban Sahu for Rs. 5,000 in respect of the same property. Raja Raghunath Deb died subsequently and was succeeded by one Madan Mohan Deb who assumed the title of Raja Madhusudan Deb. Some time in 1917 the title of Madan Mohan Deb to Killa Patia was challenged by Achhutananda Deb in O. S. No. 762 of 1917 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack. Achhutananda lost the suit in the lower Court and filed an appeal (F. A. No. 1 of 1920) in the High Court. During the pendency of the appeal, Madan Mohan Deb died and the Secretary of State for India was substituted in his place. On 10-3-1922, however, the Secretary of State for India and Achhutananda compromised the litigation in consequence of which the estate was surrendered to Achhutananda who obtained possession in due course in the same year.

[3] Sometime in 1926 Bhaban instituted a mortgage suit (O. S. No. 51 of 1926) on the basis of the second mortgage bond dated 13-8-1913 and impleaded Achhutananda (as the latter was in possession of the entire estate by virtue of his compromise with the Secretary of State of India) as the principal defendant. The suit was decreed on 23-8-1927. In 1929, however, the title of Achhutananda to Patia estate was challenged by one Krushna Chandra Deb in O. S. No. 24 of 1930 which was decreed in his favour on 25-11-1933. During the pendency of this litigation, however, Killa Patia was sold on 20-5-1931 in execution of the mortgage suit (O. S. No. 51 of 1926) of Bhaban Sahu and purchased by the Raja Bahadur of Kanika subject to the first mortgage dated 26-2-1913. The said Raja Bahadur obtained delivery of possession of Killa Patia (excluding the palace and its appurtenances) on 4-9-32. Consequently when Krushna Chandra Deb succeeded in his litigation against Achhutananda in O. S. No. 24 of 1930 he could not obtain possession of the entire estate but only of Patia palace and its appurtenances amounting to 2.44 acres of land. The said Raja Bahadur, apart from being in the possession of the entire estate as a purchaser of the equity of redemption in mortgage suit O. S. No. 51 of 1926, also acquired further interest in the estate by virtue of two subsequent mortgages taken by him from Madan Mohan Deb as early as 1918 and 1919 and decrees obtained on the basis of those mortgages as early as 1927. In the present litigation, however, it is unnecessary to describe in detail the other interests obtained by the Raja Bahadur of Kanika in Patia estate.

[4] On 6-2-1935 the respondents instituted the mortgage suit under appeal (O. S. No. 9 of 35) on the basis of the first mortgage bond for Rs 107,000 executed by Raja Raghunath Deb on 26-2-1913. They took care to implead as defendants (i) Krushna Chandra Deb who had succeeded in his litigation against Achhutananda in 1933 (O. S. No. 24 of 1930) (ii) the Raja Bahadur of Kanika (iii) the Raja of Madhupur who had obtained some interest in the mortgaged property by virtue of a transfer in his favour of the subsequent mortgage decrees obtained by the Raja Bahadur, and (iv) Achhutananda himself. Achhutananda and Raja of Madhpur did not contest the litigation and a preliminary decree for Rs. 3,71 833-8-0 was passed by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Cuttack on 6-3-37 Against this preliminary decree an appeal was filed before the Patna High Court in F. A. No. 3 of 1938 by the Raja Bahadur of Kanika alone and it was dismissed on 28-11-1941.

[5] In the meantime the decree-holders moved the Court for making the preliminary decree final. In 1941, however, three persons, namely, Nakshyatramalini Debi Chandramani Patamahadei and Sachidananda Narayan Deb claiming to be heirs of Krushna Chandra Deb filed applications before the learned Subordinate Judge for reducing the decretal amount under S. 10 (1), Orissa Money-lenders Act, 1939 which embodies the well-known rule of Damdupat. They urged that as the original mortgage of 1913 was for Rs. 107,000 the decree holders were not in any case entitled to get more than the same amount as interest in view of S. 10, Orissa Money-lenders Act and consequently the decretal amount should be scaled down to Rs. 2,14,000. This application was rejected by the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack by an order dated 5-2-1942. Appeals were taken against that order to the Patna High Court (Misc. Apps. Nos. 12, 13 and 14 of 1942) but they rejected as not maintainable and a prayer to treat those appeals as appeals against a final decree was rejected. After committing minor errors the Subordinate Judge made the decree final by his order dated 24-10-42 and the present appeal is against that final decree.

[6] It will be noticed that at the time of passing the preliminary decree the only two contesting defendants were (i) Krushna Chandra Deb and (ii) the Raja Babadur of Kanika. The appeal against the preliminary decree was taken up by the Raja Bahadur only. The present appeal against the final decree has, however, been filed by the three rival heirs of Krushna Chandra Deb and the Raja Bahadur of Kanika has receded into the background. The only point for decision in this appeal is whether the appellants are entitled to any relief under S. 10 (1), Orrisa Money-lenders Act. The said Act came into force on the 30th June, nearly two years after the passing of the preliminary mortgage decree. The Raja Bahadur of Kanika could not obviously claim any benefit under the Orrisa Money-lenders Act because the definition of the expression 'loan' in S. 2 (i) (3), expressly excludes any amount that is payable under a mortgage by the purchaser at a sale of the whole of the property subject to a mortgage. The Raja Bahadur's purchase of the mortgaged property in execution of the O. S. No. 51 of 1926 was made on 20-5-1931 and in the sale it was expressly stated that the purchase was subject to the first mortgage of 26-2-1913. Consequently, the amount payable by him to the decree-holders will not be a 'loan' within the meaning of the Orissa Money-lenders Act and he is not entitled to any relief under that Act. This is the main reason why he has chosen to remain in the background in the present litigation.

[7] Though in form this is an appeal against the final decree dated 24-10-1944, in substance it is an appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge dated 5-2-1942 rejecting the appellant's petition for relief under S. 10 (1), Orissa Money-lenders Act. The learned Subordinate Judge rejected their petitions for two reasons; (i) the appellants have no subsisting interest in the estate known as Killa Patia because the said estate was adequately represented by Achhutananda in mortgage suit No. 51 of 1926 and Achhutanand's interest had been purchased by the Raja Bahadur of Kanika on 20-5-1931. Krushna Chandra's success in O S. No. 24 of 1930 against Achhutananda gave him possession of only 2.44 acres of land containing the Patia palace and its appurtenances but that did not give him any claim to the impartible estate. The present mortgage suit under appeal is confined to the impartible estate of Patia and the appellants have no interest in the same; and (ii) in any case sub-s. (1) of S. 10, Orissa Money-lenders Act, will not be applicable to a preliminary decree passed prior to the coming into force of that Act. For this view he relied on Chandrawati Debi v. Nandkishoreprasad, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Pat. 376 : (186 I. C. 401).

[8] Both the reasons given by the learned Subordinate Judge were assailed before us very strongly and lengthy arguments were advanced on the question as to whether Krushna Chandra Deb or his heirs had any subsisting interest in the mortgaged property. A decision on this question depends on whether Achhutananda effectively represented the mortgaged property in mortgage suit No. 51 of 1926 so as to bind Krushna Chandra also notwithstanding the fact that the latter was not a party to that litigation. The learned lower Court, however, held against Krushna Chandra relying on Sanna Govappa v. Rodda Sanna Govappa, A. I. R. (16) 1929 Mad. 482 : (120 I. C. 65) mainly on the ground that from 1922 till 1932 Achhutananda was in possession of Killa Patia and was thus a legal representative of the original mortgagor Raja Raghunath Deb. The learned counsel for the appellants challenged the correctness of Sanna Govappa v. Rodda Sanna Govappa, A. I. R. (16) 1929 Mad. 482 : (120 I. C. 65) and argued that the general principle to the effect that a person who is not a party to a litigation is not bound by the same should not be relaxed except to the limited extent permissible by virtue of the Privy Council decision in the well-known case Malkarjan v. Narhari, 27 I. A. 216 : (25 Bom. 337 P. C.). He also relied on a later Privy Council decision reported in Khiarajmal v. Daim, 32 I. A. 23 : (32 Cal. 296 P. C.) where the previous decision was distinguished. He also relied on Pukhraj Jeshraj v. Jamsetji Rustum, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Bom. 63 : (50 Bom. 802) which has been followed in a later Madras decision reported in Manikyanayanim Varu v. Lakshminarasimha, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Mad. 43 : (139 I. C. 465) and Amarchand v. Parmanand, A. I. R. (21) 1934 ALL. 474 : (150 I. C. 323). Out of respect for the learned counsel for the appellants I would have liked very much to discuss this interesting question of law. But in the present case this question appears to be of mere academic interest because even if it be held in favour of the appellants that Krushna Chandra was not bound by the decree in O. S. NO. 51 of 1926 against Achhutananda and that their interest in the impartible estate of Patia continued to exist, they cannot, in my opinion, claim any relief under S. 10 (1), Orissa Money-lenders Act.

[9] As already pointed out, the Orissa Money-lenders Act came into force on 30-6 1939, nearly two years after the passing of the preliminary mortgage decree in the present case. Section 10 (1) of the Act runs as follows:

"Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any other law or in anything having the force of law or in any contract, no Court shall, in any suit brought by a money-lender in respect of a loan advanced before or after the commencement of this Act, pass a decree for an amount of interest for the period preceding the institution of the suit which, together with any amount already realised as interest through Court or otherwise, is greater than the amount of the loan originally advanced."

The expression 'decree' has been defined in S. 2 (g) as having the same meaning as in the Civil P. C. and with a view to avoid any ambiguity it is further expressly stated that it includes a preliminary decree and a final decree in the case of secured loans. The learned counsel for the appellants relied very much on this definition and urged that by virtue of that definition, the expression 'decree' occurring in sub-s. (1) of S. 10, Orissa Money-lenders Act, should be construed as referring to a final decree also and that consequently even though the preliminary decree might have been passed prior to the coming into force of that Act, if no final decree had been passed before that date, the Court was bound to comply with the provisions of that sub-section. The whole question, therefore, narrows down to this: Does the expression 'decree' occurring in S. 10 (1), Orissa Money-lenders Act, include a final decree in a mortgage suit or else is it limited to a preliminary decree only because of the context? The definition of the expression 'decree' in S. 2, Orrisa Money-lenders Act, is itself subject to there being nothing repugnant in the subject or context' and notwithstanding the definition, if the context in any of the succeeding provisions of the Act indicates clearly that the Legislature intended only a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit, the definition must necessarily be deemed to have been modified to that extent. It will be noticed that in sub-s. (1) of S. 10 the material words used are "pass a decree for an amount of interest for the period preceding the institution of the suit." Can it be said that in a final decree in a mortgage suit for sale any decree is passed for any amount of interest? The Legislature while enacting the Orrisa Money-lenders Act was fully aware of the various provisions of the Civil P. C. dealing with preliminary decrees and final decrees in mortgage suits. It was fully aware that under O. 34, R. 4 a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit first directs the ascertainment of the interest due and then directs payment of the principal and interest whereas in a final decree under O. 34, R. 5 the only direction by the Court is for sale of the mortgaged property if the amount specified in the preliminary decree is not paid within the stipulated period. Similarly in the forms of the preliminary decree and the final decree (Forms 10 and 11) of Appen. D to Sch. I, Civil P. C., the distinction between the directions contained in the two decrees is clearly borne out. That is to say, the preliminary decree directs the payment of principal plus interest within a stipulated period and describes the consequences of non-payment, whereas the final decree direc's the sale of the mortgaged property or a part thereof. Thus, the Legislature was fully aware of the nature of the directions contained in the two decrees and when in sub-s. (1) of S. 10 expressly referred to a decree for an amount of interest for a period prior to the institution of the suit the reasonable inference seems to be that in the context of that sub-section the Legislature meant only a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit and not a final decree.

[10] Any doubt on this point is, I think, clarified by scrutinising the provisions of sub s. (2) of S. 10 which runs as follows:

"Where in any suit, as is referred to in sub-section (1) it is found that the amount already realised as interest through Court or otherwise for the period preceding the institution of the suit is greater than the amount of the loan originally advanced, so much of the said amount of interest as is in excess of the loan shall be appropriated towards the satisfaction of the loan and the Court shall pass a decree for the payment of the balance of the loan, if any."

It will be noticed that in this sub-section the words used are 'pass a decree for the payment of the balance of the loan'. There can be no doubt that this refers only to a preliminary decree because that decree alone, in terms, directs payment of any sum. But it was argued that the provisions of sub s. (1) of S. 10 are not controlled by the provisions of sub-s. (2) of that section and that the expression 'decree' need not necessarily have the same meaning in both the sub-sections. But in my opinion sub-ss. (1) and (2) of S. 10 are closely interlinked and sub-s. (2) is in the nature of a consequential provision to carry into effect the provisions of sub-s. (1) in those cases where excess interest had been paid.

[11] If the other provisions of the Orissa Money-lenders Act are scrutinised this view seems to gain further strength. For instance, in ss. 9 and 12 there can be no doubt that a decree in relation to mortgage suit means only a preliminary decree. But in S. 14 (1) there can be no doubt that a decree means only a final decree because the sub-section refers to a decree for the sale of the judgment-debtor's property.

[12] The authorities on the subject, of the Patna High Court, are I think overwhelming. As early as 1939 in Muhammad Yunus v. Champamani Bibi, 18 Pat. 141 at p. 152: (A.I.R. (26) 1939 Pat. 49), a Division Bench while construing S. 11, Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1938, (which was similar to S. 10 (1), Orissa Money-lenders Act) held that that section referred to the passing of a fresh decree and not merely to the carrying out of a decree already passed which is what happens when a final decree is drawn up. Again in Chandrawati Debi v. Nandkishore Prasad, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Pat. 376: (186 I. C. 401) a similar interpretation was given to S. 7, Bihar Money-lenders (Regulations of Transactions) Act, 1939 and it was pointed out:

"The passing of the final decree does not involve the determination of any amount of interest for the period preceding the institution of the suit at all and the preliminary decree in the present case became binding on the parties when it was confirmed on appeal."

An attempt was made to distinguish the two Patna decisions on the ground that in the Bihar Act the expression 'decree' has not been so widely defined as in S. 2 (g), Orissa Money-lenders Act. It is true that in the Bihar Act the expression 'decree' has not been defined expressly so as to include a preliminary decree and a final decree in the case of secured loans; but there is no exhaustive definition of the expression 'decree' in the Bihar Act at all and the definition is merely of an inclusive nature running as follows:

"'decree' includes an award and an order of contribution passed under the Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act, 1935."

It cannot be seriously contended that the ordinary meaning of the expression 'decree,' namely the definition as given in the Civil P.C. meant to apply throughout the Bihar Act also. The sole object of the inclusive definition provided in S 2 (b), Bihar Act, was to add something more to the definition as given in Civil P C. That is to say, the definition of the expression 'decree' as given in the Civil P. C. includes both a preliminary decree and a final decree, was left untouched. Doubtless in the Orissa Money-lenders Act, S. 2 (g) defines the expression 'decree' more elaborately by way of abundant caution though such caution was unnecessary when it says that the definition given in the Civil P. C. shall apply. Thus there seems to be no doubt that both in the Bihar and the Orissa Acts the Civil Procedure Code definition of the expression 'decree' applies and the Bihar cases cannot be distinguished on this ground.

[13] Apart from this reason, there is a direct case dealing with the construction of S. 11 (2), Orissa Money-lenders Act, reported in Chakradhar Mahapatra v. Sailendra Narayan Bhanj Deo, 9 Cut. L. T. 54 where the same meaning was given to the expression 'decree' occurring in S. 11 (2), Orissa Money-lenders Act, relying on the aforesaid two previous decisions. It was urged that this view was wrong and we were requested to refer this appeal to a Full Bench for overruling that decision. But with respect I am inclined to agree with the reasons given by the learned Judges in those three Patna decisions.

[14] I am, therefore, of the opinion that the appellants cannot invoke the aid of sub s. (1) of S. 10, Orissa Money-lenders Act, in view of the fact that the preliminary decree was passed long before the Act came into force.

[15] The other points that were argued at great length before us have been fully dealt with in the judgment of my learned brother which I have had the opportunity of reading I am in entire agreement with him on those matters and consequently even if the view taken by me regarding the construction of S. 10 (1), Orissa Money-lenders Act, be held to be incorrect, the appellants cannot succeed in view of their having lost in the mortgaged property in consequence of the decree in O. S. No. 51 of 1926.

[16] The appeal is dismissed with costs.

[17] Jagannadhadas J.—The facts have been set out in my learned brother's judgment, and it is unnecessary to recapitulate the same. The question at issue is the right of the appellants to get relief under S. 10, sub-s. (1), Orissa Money lenders Act (Orissa Act III [3] of 1939) in respect of the amount declared due under the preliminary mortgage decree in O. S 9 of 1935, on the file of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Cuttack dated 6-3-1937. There independent applications were made by the appellants for the said relief during the pendency of the decree-holder's application for passing a final decree. These applications were rejected by an order of the learned Subordinate Judge dated 5-2-1942 and the final decree was passed on 24-10-1944. As pointed out by my learned brother, the present appeal, though in form an appeal against the said final decree, is, in substance an appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge dated 5-2-1942 inasmuch as no other objection to the final decree has been raised before us. It may also be mentioned that the present appellants had previously filed direct appeals against the order of the Subordinate Judge dated 5-2-1942, but those appeals, namely, Misc. Apps. Nos. 12, 13 and 14 of 1942 were rejected by the High Court on 25-4-1944 on the ground that the appeals were not maintainable, but with the express reservation that the point which the appellants were trying to raise in those appeals could be properly raised in their appeal against the final decree when passed. The decision that the said miscellaneous appeals were not maintainable, may not be correct, in view of the decision of the Privy Council in Adaikappa Chettiar v. Chandra Sekhara, A. I. R. (35) 1948 P. C. 12 : (I. L. R. (1948) Mad. 505) but no objection on that ground can be taken to the challenging of the correctness of the order of the Subordinate Judge dated 5-2-1942, in this appeal since the same has been expressly reserved.

[18] The learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the applications of the appellants on the following grounds : (1) The appellants have no subsisting interest in the property which is the subject-matter of the mortgage sued upon; (2) the relief under sub-s. (1) of S. 10, Orissa Money-lenders Act, is not available in respect of the amount declared due under a preliminary mortgage decree passed before the commencement of the Act.

[19] The second of these questions may be taken up first. The question for consideration is whether S. 10, sub s. (1), Orissa Money-lenders Act, is applicable to a final decree to be passed in a mortgage suit wherein the preliminary decree has already been passed prior to the commencement of the Act. The said sub-section runs as follows :

"Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any other law or in anything having the force of law or in any contract, no Court shall, in any suit brought by a money-lender in respect of a loan advanced before or after the commencement of this Act, pass a decree for an amount of interest for the period preceding the institution of the suit which together with any amount already realised as interest through Court or otherwise, is greater than the amount of the loan originally advanced."

[20] It is not disputed that this section applies as much to a suit instituted after the Act came into force as to a suit pending at the date of the Act, by virtue of S. 16 (1) of the Act. There can also be no doubt that in a mortgage action, the suit is pending notwithstanding that a preliminary decree has already been passed. It is also to be noticed that the word "decree" has been specifically defined in the Orissa Money-lender's Act by S. 2, cl. (g) thereof as including preliminary decrees and final decrees in the case of secured loans. It would appear, therefore, prima facie, that S. 10 (1) applies equally to a Court which has yet to pass a final decree in a mortgage suit and that the prohibition against passing a decree for interest in excess of what is provided therein is equally applicable to such a case in view of the absolute and mandatory terms of the sub-section. It is however argued that the said provision is not applicable for the following reasons : (a) What is prohibited is the passing of a decree for interest which is not what purports to be done by a final decree; (b) The extended definition of the word "decree" to include a final decree is only when there is no repugnancy arising out of the context. The context which refers to the passing of a decree for interest shows that the final decree was not meant to be included in the word "decree" in the sub-section. (c) The effect of holding that the sub-section covers a final decree is to permit the preliminary decree itself to be reopened which has already become final between the parties and it therefore operates to give retrospective effect to the said sub-section, which if intended would have been provided for specifically and in clearer language.

[21] In support of the above arguments the cases in Muhammad Yunus v. Champamani Bibi, A. I. R. (26) 1939 Pat. 49 : (18 Pat. 141); Chadrawati Debi v Nand Kishore Prasad, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Patna 376 : (186 I. C. 401) and Chakradhar Mahapatra v. Sailendra Naraya Bhanj Deo, 9 Cut. L. T. 54 have been cited. The broad consideration underlying the decision in these cases is this. A final decree in a mortgage action is passed in terms of O. 34, R. 5, Civil P. C. It does not involve the determination of any fresh right, but merely carries into effect the preliminary decree after making some further arithmetical calculations that may be necessitated on account of any payments meanwhile. The preliminary decree is the decree that regulates the rights of the parties and also the amount of interest which is payable in respect of the loan and thus regulates the final decree. The preliminary decree retains its force even after final decree (see Mt. Wahidunnissa v. Dip Narain, A. I. R, (3) 1916 Pat. 370: (1 Pat. L J. 406 F B). Hence the Court does not at the stage of final decree pass any fresh decree for interest. Therefore, it is argued, the sub-section does not apply to the passing of a final decree. It cannot be disputed that the above is the normal relation between the preliminary and final decrees as provided in the Civil P. C. But is that any sufficient reason for not giving full effect to S. 10 (1) in the face of the express provision defining the word "decree" as including the final decree in a mortgage-suit? It is to be noticed that S. 10 (1) is applicable "notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any other law." It would therefore follow that the fact that the giving effect to the provision would contravene the ordinary notions of the relation between the preliminary decree and a final decree as gathered from the Civil P. C., cannot be a reason for its inapplicability. To my mind, the real question is whether when passing a final decree in a mortgage suit, the Court is or is not passing a decree "for an amount of interest for the period preceding the institution of the suit."

[22] It appears to me with great respect that it does. A careful examination of the relevant provisions of the Civil P. C. will clearly show that the Court passes a decree for interest not only at the stage of the preliminary decree, but also at the stage of the final decree under O. 34, R. 5, and of a further decree under O. 34, R. 6, where the circumstances admit of the same. This is none the less so though there need not be a fresh determination of the amount of interest at the later stages under O. 34, R. 5 and O. 34, R. 6. Under O. 34, R. 4. the Court undoubtedly determines what is the interest payable and passes a decree for principal and for interest; but the relief granted is only by way of a declaration of the amount due and an option given to the concerned persons to redeem. Under O. 34, R. 5, the Court grants a fresh relief by way of direction for sale to realise the amount still remaining due by way of principal and interest, and in that sense passes a decree for an amount of interest still remaining due. Under O. 34, R. 6, the Court again passes a decree for the amount still remaining due including interest, if any, and grants a relief for realisation of the same from the person of the judgment-debtor or his property other than that covered by the security. The Court thus passes a decree for interest at each and every one of these three stages covered by O. 34, R. 4, O. 34, R. 5, O. 34, R. 6, the actual relief granted however being different. In the normal course, no doubt, the interest payable prior to the institution of the suit is determined at the stage of the preliminary decree and there is no fresh determination of such interest at the subsequent stages but the subsequent stages also result in decree by the express definition of the word "decree" itself in the Civil P. C., obviously because the right to the further reliefs appropriate to each such stage is determined by those decrees. I can see therefore no insuperable difficulty, on principle, in giving full effect to the word "decree" in S. 10 (1) as comprising a final decree also especially when the Legislature by way of abundant caution in specific terms states so in the definition clause and makes S. 10 (1), applicable notwithstanding any law to the contrary.

[23] It has been pointed out that sub-s. (2) of S. 10 which prima facie would appear to apply to the same set of facts as contemplated in S. 10 (1) uses the phrase "pass a decree for payment of the balance of the amount." Our attention has been drawn to the form of the preliminary decree as given in Sch. 1 Appendix D, Civil P.C., which shows that the defendant is directed to pay the amount determined to be due. A close examination, however, of the forms of the preliminary and final decrees in Forms 5, 5-A and 6 in Sch. (1), Appendix D, Civil P. C. and a reference to the terms of O. 34, R. 4, O. 34, R. 5 and O. 34, R. 6 with reference to their substantive provisions, would clearly show that a preliminary decree is in substance, nothing more than a declaration as to the amount due. A substantive relief by way of realisation which amounts to payment is given only by the final decree and a further decree for personal payment is passed under O. 34, R. 6 in an appropriate case. If anything, therefore, the phrase "pass a decree for payment of the balance of the loan" in S. 10 (2) would apply to the decrees under O. 34, R. 5, O. 34, R. 6 and not to the decrees under O. 34, R. 4. What appears to me to be almost decisive in the construction of the word "decree" as used in S. 10 (1) or S. 10 (2) is that to construe the word "decree" therein as referring only to a preliminary decree would be to ignore that at least so far as the decree under O. 34, R. 6 is concerned, the Court is passing a decree for payment of the balance due and thus S. 10 (2) would in any case, apply to that decree. It would be anomalous to hold that the provisions in S. 10 would apply to preliminary decrees under O. 34, R. 4 and to the personal decree under O. 34, R. 6, but not to the intermediary final decrees under O. 34, R. 5. I am also not impressed by the argument that the exercise of the powers under S. 10 (1) at the stage of the passing of the final decree would involve the re-opening of the preliminary decree and cannot therefore, be done. That appears to be in a way begging the question. When the Court is given the specific power to scale down the interest on specific principles, it is not recalculating the interest with reference to the contract between the parties or under the general law which is all that has been done under the preliminary decree and authorised to be done by the Civil P. C. In passing an amended final decree under S. 10 (1), therefore, the Court in terms does not purport to amend or modify the preliminary decree which determines only the contractual interest, but exercises the fresh powers, dehors the contract conferred on it by Legislature and passes the further decree in exercise of those powers. I am also not impressed by the argument that there is any repugnancy in the context in which the word "decree" in S. 1 0(1) is used which necessarily limits it to a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit. The argument of repugnancy is really one based on the importation of the concept of inter-relation between the preliminary decree and final decree as gathered from the Civil P. C. It appears to me that the fact of any conflict arising out of the implications of the provisions of the Civil P. C., if the word "decree" is to be taken as defined in the Money-lenders Act, is in no sense a repugnancy "arising from the context. The repugnancy must be one which arises from the Money-lenders Act itself and not from anything to be implied from outside it. The Act itself in terms is intended to cut across the provisions of the pre-existing law or the implications thereof and the conflict with such law cannot amount to repugnancy in the context.

[24] A close examination of the other provisions Act leads me to the same conclusion. For instance, by parity of reasoning with reference to which the meaning of the word "decree" in S. 10 (1) and (2) is sought to be understood, the word "decree" in Ss. 11 and 12 also must refer only to a preliminary decree. Under S. 11, after reopening the previous transaction, the Court has to pass fresh decree for interest that may be due. Under S 12, the Court is to exercise the power to grant instalments at the time of passing the decree in a suit, and refers also to payment by judgment-debtor. If the above reasoning relating to the inter-relation between a preliminary decree and a final decree and as to the preliminary decree being the only decree for payment of interest is imported into these sections also, it would result in making these provisions equally inapplicable to final decrees under O. 34, R. 5 and personal decrees under O. 34, R. 6. But there are very clear indications in these sections to the contrary at least so far as their applicability to decrees under O. 34, R. 6, Civil P.C., is concerned. That would mean again the anomalous result that these sections which are applicable to decrees under O. 34, R. 4 & O. 34, R. 6 are not applicable to decrees under O. 34, R. 5. It would also follow that the specific mention in the definition of the word "decree" as including the final decree would become absolutely purposeless and devoid of any application, if in all the four Ss. 10, 11, 12 and 13 the word "decree" is not to include "final decree".

[25] The construction which I am inclined to put on S. 10 (1) of the Act as being applicable also to final decrees in mortgage suits is one that would be in accordance with the scheme of the Act and would promote the purpose of the Act as stated in the preamble, namely, to grant relief to debtors in the province of Orissa. The Act provides for relief, broadly speaking, by enjoining the Courts to exercise certain powers not available to them under the Civil P.C. The powers so conferred on Court when passing decrees are in Ss. 9 to 12, and those in execution stage are in Ss. 13 ,14 & 15 and in Ss. 10 (3) and 11 (2). At the stage of passing the decree, the Court is empowered to scale down interest according to the provisions of Ss. 9, 10 and 11 and to accord the relief by way of instalments under S. 12. At the execution stage there are safeguards under Ss. 14 and 15 for securing that the property is sold at an adequate price and that only a sufficient portion of the property is sold. By S. 13 the executing Court is given the power to modify the decree already passed by granting instalments. Under Ss. 10 (3) and 11 (2) the Act is assiduous to grant relief even in execution by way of scaling down of interest in respect of unsatisfied decrees whose execution remains pending, but limits such relief to decrees passed subsequent to 1.4-1936, and confines the reliefs to those awardable under Ss. 10 (2) and S. 11 (1). It is unecessary to speculate upon the reasons for these limitations or the principle behind the same and it may be difficult to gather any principle for not extending the relief in such cases to that awardable under S. 10 (1) also. But what is to be noticed is that the Legislature has thought fit to extend reliefs by way of scaling down interest to unsatisfied decrees also, though with certain limitations. It would, therefore, be contrary to the whole purpose and policy of the Act not to give the benefit of the provisions of the Act to a judgment-debtor against whom even a final decree has not yet been passed and against whom the suit still remains pending.

[26] Of the three decisions above mentioned and cited in suport of the opposite view the first two namely, Muhammad Yunus v. Champamani Bibi, A. I. R. (26) 1939 Pat. 49 : (18 Pat. 141) and Chandrawati Debi v. Nandkishore Prasad, A.I.R. (27) 1940 Pat. 376 : (186 I.C. 401) are decisions under the Bihar and Orissa Money-lenders Act. They may be distinguished on the ground that the definition of the word "decree" therein does not in terms include a final decree, though, of course, "a decree" would include a final decree even under the normal connotation of the word under the Civil P. C. The case, however, in Chakradhar Mahapatra v. Sailendra Narayan Bhanj Deo, 9 Cut. L. T. 54 is a direct decision under the Orissa Money-lenders Act, though it is a decision relating to S. 11 (2) and not a decision under S. 10 (1). I can only say with great respect that that decision requires reconsideration. In addition to the criticism offered above relating to the common idea running through all these three decisions about the juridical inter-relation between a preliminary decree and a final decree, there is one portion of the reasoning in Chakradhar Mahapatra v. Sailendra Narayan Bhanj Deo, 9 Cut. L. T. 54, which I have been unable to follow. The learned Judges refer to the definition of the word "decree" in the Orissa Money-lenders Act as supporting the view taken by them. Probably, it was meant thereby to indicate, that in order to make S. 2 (g) applicable "decree" must be the aggregate of a preliminary and a final decree, since the word "decree" is defined as including "preliminary decree and final decree" and that, therefore the condition of the decree being passed on 1-4-1936 or thereafter, would apply only if both preliminary and final decrees are passed after 1-4-1936. If so, it appears to me with respect, that this ignores that "the decree" referred to in sub-s. (2) of S. 11 is the decree which is under execution and remains unsatisfied and which can only refer to a final decree and not to a preliminary decree also in any case. The learned Judges have not noticed that the definition of the word "decree" is that it includes "preliminary decrees and final decrees" in cases of secured loans and uses the plural not to indicate the combination of a preliminary decree and a final decree, but to indicate that it includes all kinds of preliminary decrees and (meaning or) all kinds of final decrees without discrimination. In view of the opinion that I have formed on this question, I should have considered it necessary to refer the same for an authoritative decision by a Full Bench, if the result of this appeal depended entirely on this.

[27] I shall now take up for consideration the first point on the basis of which the learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the applications, viz., that the appellants (applicants) have no subsisting interest in the mortgaged properties and that hence they cannot obtain any relief under the Orissa Money-lenders Act. Before dealing with the question, it would be well to appreciate at the outset how the question of subsisting interest of the appellants arises with reference to their right to relief under the Act. In order that S. 10 (1) may be applicable, it is of course necessary that the question must arise in a suit brought by a money-lender in respect of a "loan advanced." "Loan" is defined by S. 2 (i) of the Money-lenders Act. By the said definition "loan" means (omitting portions unnecessary for this discussion):

"an advance whether of money or in kind on interest made by a money-lender . . . but shall not include . . . the amount or the proportionate amount, as the case may be, payable under a mortgage by the purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree of a Court or otherwise, of the whole or part of the properties subject to a mortgage, the purchase having been made prior to the coming into force of this Act."

There is no dispute that the suit amount would be loan, but for sub-s. (3) above. In this case admittedly the personal remedy in respect of the mortgage sued upon is long ago time-barred. The properties which are the subject-matter of the mortgage are now in possession of defendant 2, Raja Bahadur of Kanika, who has purchased the same in court-auction on 20-5-1931 in execution of the decree in O. S. No. 51 of 1926 specifically subject to the suit mortgage. Prima facie, therefore, the amount under the mortgage bond is payable by defendant 2 out of the properties in his possession and it would therefore appear that the money due under the mortgage-bond is not a "loan" for the purposes of the Act. The contention of the appellants however is that the decree in O. S. 51 of 1926 was one obtained against defendant 4 herein who has been ultimately found to have no title to the mortgaged property and that accordingly the said decree and the execution proceedings thereupon do not bind him and that the execution sale is not effective to convey any title or interest to defendant 2. The argument therefore is that defendant 2 cannot be treated as a purchaser of the mortgaged properties since the purchase referred to in cl. (3), sub-s. (i) of S. (2) must refer to a valid purchase on account of which the purchaser would be liable to pay the mortgage amount out of the properties belonging to him by the said purchase. The question, therefore, is not directly whether the appellants have any subsisting interest in the equity of redemption, but whether the equity of redemption has validly passed to defendant 2 and as belonging to him is liable to meet the mortgage-debt. The answer to this question will depend upon whether in the circumstances relating to the suit O. S. No. 51 of 1926 which led up to the execution sale under which defendant 2 made the purchase, the decree and the execution proceedings though taken only against defendant 4 and though the predecessor of the present appellants, namely, Krishna Chandra Deb is not a party to the same, are enough in law to pass the title in the property to the purchaser, defendant 2.

[28] Before dealing with this question on its merits, it is as well to clear certain preliminary arguments advanced on both sides relating to

it. It has been contended on behalf of the respondents that this question is not open to be raised at this stage in these proceedings by the appellants. That argument is based on the following facts: In the suit out of which these proceedings arise, namely, O. S. 9 of 1935, the predecessor of the present appellant in para 10 of the written statement raised the plea that

"the plaintiffs had no right to institute O. S. 51 of 1926 against defendant 4 (13th respondent) on the strength of the alleged mortgage-bond dated 13-8-1939 of Raja Raghunath Deb in favour of Bhaban Sahu, knowing full well that defendant 4 had no right to represent the Patia Estate and as such the execution case No. 6/13 of the Subordinate Judge's Court was infructuous as against the Estate of this defendant for want of proper representation and defendant 2 (11th respondent) acquired no right by sale thereunder."

[29] On this pleading an issue was raised which is covered by issue 7. The last portion of the said issue 7 runs as follows:

"Did defendant 2 or defendant 3 acquire any right under their alleged purchases in execution of a decree against the non-representation of the alleged mortgagor."

The judgment in the suit dated 6-9-1937 shows that issue 7 has not been pressed by the contesting defendants. It would appear that the contesting defendants in the suit were defendants 1 and 2. It is therefore, argued for the respondents before us that the suit was allowed to proceed on the footing that defendant 2 obtained a valid title in the equity of redemption by virtue of his purchase and that in a later stage of the same proceedings, defendant 1 or his representatives cannot be allowed to turn round and say that defendant 2 had no title. On behalf of the appellants, it is urged that that issue was then raised only as between defendant 1 and defendant 2 and did not arise as between the plaintiff and defendant 1 and the fact that defendants 1 and 2 as between themselves gave up the contest for purposes of the pending litigation cannot be taken advantage of by the plaintiff. It is however pointed out on the other side that though the question now raised is one between the plaintiff and defendant 1's representatives, it directly affects defendant 2 also and therefore to allow the question to be raised at this stage is to reopen an issue which has been closed in the course of the trial itself. There is, no doubt, some force in these arguments, but it appears to me that the consideration of the question on its merits cannot be shut out on this technical view of the matter. The question as to whether defendant 1 or defendant 2 had the title to the equity of redemption was one, which at that stage was not directly relevant in the mortgage suit and may well have been thought by all the parties as not requiring a decision and accordingly given up without any necessary implication as to the conflicting title between defendant 1 and defendant 2. The question has now become material on account of the fact that legislation subsequent to the judgment necessitates the consideration of the matter, in further stages of the same suit. In such circumstances, I do not think there is any prohibition based on procedure for the re-opening of the issue during the pendency of that very suit, even as between defendants 2 themselves, if it became necessary, much less as between plaintiff and defendant 1. I would, therefore, overrule this contention raised on behalf of the contesting respondents.

[30] It has been equally urged on behalf of the appellants that by the very frame of the suit and by the preliminary decree therein and also by virtue of the fact that the present appellants have been specifically brought on record as representatives of the deceased defendant 1 during the pendency of the final decree-proceedings the plaintiffs-respondents must be deemed to have admitted that defendant 1 and his representatives had a subsisting interest and that the preliminary decree itself gave them the right to redeem, and that therefore it is not open to the plaintiffs in these proceedings to contend that the appellants have no such subsisting interest which will enable them to obtain relief under the Orissa Money-lenders Act. It appears to me that this argument is equally not tenable. A perusal of the plaint in the suit would clearly show that it is not based on any admission of subsisting interest of defendant 1. It merely narrates all the relevant facts that had transpired and para 20 in the plaint sets out as follows:

"While defendant 4 was in possession of the properties mentioned below, defendant 1 brought O. S. No. 24/30 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack against him (defendant 4) for recovery of possession of the mortgaged properties mentioned below on 29-3-30 and the suit was decreed on 25-11-30."

The plaint contains no statement whether defendants 1 or defendant 2 were entitled to the equity of redemption and it has taken the obviously intelligible course that both defendants 1 and 2 should be made parties to be on the safe side without taking any risk of committing oneself to a decision on a somewhat difficult legal question as to who was the person entitled as between the two. I do not think it fair, in those circumstances, to construe the plaint or the decree following thereon and the proceedings taken to bring the present appellants as legal representatives of the deceased defendant 1, as constituting an admission by the plaintiffs about the subsistence of the interest. It must also be remembered that as pointed out above the question at issue is not so much whether defendant 1 had or his legal representatives have a subsisting interest in the equity of redemption, but whether proceedings in the suit O.S. 51/26 are such as to bind them so as to vest the title to the equity of redemption in defendant 2 by virtue of the execution sale thereunder. As already pointed out this question is completely outside the scope of the mortgage-suit as originally framed and has become material only by virtue of subsequent legislation and it cannot therefore be taken to have been admitted by the previous course of the proceedings. It is said, however, that since the preliminary decree in terms directs defendant 1 along with the other defendants to pay the mortagage amount declared due by the preliminary decree, he has got the right to treat that as a loan payable (by ?) himself and therefore to be relieved against that payment by provisions of the Orissa Money-lenders Act. But there is no personal liability in this case and the only liability arises in respect of the property, title to which is the matter in conflict between defendants 1 and 2.

[31] This argument, therefore, is really the same as the prior one in a different form. I have, therefore, no hesitation in equally overruling the same raised on behalf of the appellants.

[32] It has further been argued that in certain prior proceedings arising out of the same suit the High Court had decided that the present appellants had a subsisting interest and that therefore the question cannot now be reopened. That argument is based on the following facts. After the final decree now under appeal had been passed and the decree-holder applied for execution, the present appellants applied for relief under Ss. 14 and 15, Orissa Money-lenders Act, praying that the Court should estimate the value of the property and direct the sale only of such portion of the property as would be sufficient for the decree-amount. This prayer was rejected by the Subordinate Judge and Misc. Appeal No. 6/47 was filed against it which was dealt with by the High Court by its judgment dated 22-5-1947 and by that judgment the learned Judges directed the Subordinate Court to proceed as prayed for by the appellants. It is argued that that amounts to an adjudication that the appellants had an interest in the property which entitled them to relief under the Orissa Money-lenders Act. A perusal of that judgment, however, clearly shows that the learned Judges directed that course more as a matter of convenience and not as a result of adjudication and have, in express terms, left the matter for adjudication in the present appeal. In fact, they were aware of the fact that the present appeal was then pending and regretted that both the appeals could not be taken up and disposed of together. There is, therefore, no substance in this contention.

[33] A further contention, has, however been raised, namely, that on any view of the facts the appellants are entitled to a portion of the mortgaged property and have therefore got the right of redemption in respect of the entire mortgage by virtue of S. 91, T. P. Act. It is true that in execution of the decree which defendant 1 herein obtained against defendant 4 herein in O. S. 24 of 1930, defendant 1 had obtained delivery of two acres and forty-four decimals of Lakhraj-Baheli land and the building and the homestead of Patia Palace situate on the land lying within the Mouza of Patiagarh, Killa Patia. It would appear that defendant 2 did not obtain possession of this item of property when he obtained delivery on the strength of the purchase made by him in sale in execution of the decree in O. S. No. 51/26. Prima facie, therefore, the 2.44 acres and the building thereon were not comprised in the second mortgage which was the subject-matter of the suit O. S. No. 51/26. The question, however, is whether they were comprised in the properties covered by the first mortgage dated 26-2-13 which is the subject-matter of the present suit. A schedule of the properties comprised in the 1st mortgage is attached to the preliminary decree which is a part of the present proceedings. The said schedule sets out the Mouzas which are the subject-matter of the mortgage, and mentions Nizagarh Patia as one of the said Mouzas. The appellants contend that the land of 2.44 acres with the buildings thereon must be taken to be part of Nizagarh-Patia and therefore to be comprised in the mortgage. This, however, does not necessarily follow. It will be seen from the said schedule that what has been mortgaged are the "said villages together with all sorts of proprietary interest therein" and this is also what appears on a reference to the original mortgage-bond dated 26-2-1913, which has been marked as Ext. 1 in the suit and the translation of which appears in the paper-book of F. A. 3 of 1938. When certain villages have been mortgaged "with the proprietary rights therein" it is not to be presumed that the residential house therein of the mortgagor and the land on which those residential houses stand have also been mortgaged without clear and express words to that effect. It is well settled that the execution sale of a land does not necessarily pass the buildings standing thereon unless the same has also been made the subject-matter of the sale vide Narayan Das v. Jalindra Nath, A. I. R. (11) 1927 P. C., 135 : (54 Cal. 669). See also Mahomad Amanotullah v. Elahi Bux, 2 Cut. L. T. 91.

That the residential buildings and the plot on which they stood were not intended to be mortgaged either by the first mortgage dated 26-2-1913, or by the second mortgage dated 13-8-13 which is in the same terms (and which has also been marked in the present suit as Ex. 1-E and the translation of which appears in the same paper-book in F. A. 3/38) would seem to be probablised by the fact that defendant 2 did not obtain delivery of the same in pursuance of his court-auction-purchase. I, therefore, agree with the Subordinate Judge thinking that the appellants cannot be said to have partial interest in the equity of redemption of the suit-mortgage which gives them the right to relief on that ground. If I had come to the conclusion that the 2.44 acres of land with buildings thereon was part of the mortgaged property that it was all the interest that the appellants had in redeeming the mortgagee, it should have been necessary to consider the question whether by virtue of the definition of "loan" in the Money-lenders Act, only the proportionate portion of the decree-amount which corresponded to this item of property bore to the entire mortgaged property is not all the amount that can be considered as "a loan" in relation to the relief that the appellants may have been entitled to. This would have been an extremely small amount and obviously the appellants are not interested in it. It is however unnecessary to consider the same in view of the relevant facts, which I have taken.

[34] The appellants have raised a further point that the purchase by defendant 2 in court-auction was during the pendency of defendant 1's suit O. S. No. 24/30 against defendant 4. This is no doubt so. I cannot see what advantage the present appellants can derive from that fact so far as the questions now at issue are concerned in these proceedings. That fact cannot be relied upon to show that the purchase by defendant 2 is void and of no effect. That is not the effect of S. 52, T. P. Act, or the analogous principles applicable to execution sales. The principle of lis pendens does not invalidate the transfer but only renders the transfer subject to the rights obtained by the decree-holder in the litigation. Defendant 1 could, therefore, have obtained delivery of possession of the entire estate against defendant 2 by virtue of the decree obtained against defendant 4, and in fact it would appear that that is what he attempted to do, but did not succeed in getting, vide judgment between the parties reported in Krishna Chandra v. Rajendra Narayan, 2 Cut. L. T. 49 : (A. I. R. (23) 1936 Pat. 465) (which though not formally marked as an exhibit, has been referred to in the judgment of the Court below and by both the parties before us in the argument) If, however, it is suggested that what the auction purchaser, defendant 2 got, was only the right, title and interest of defendant 4 in the properties which in a suit between him and defendant 1 has been declared to be nil, that argument raises the question whether what passed at such a sale, on the facts was only the right, title and interest of the particular judgment-debtor in the property or the property itself. Looked at in that light it is not a question of lis pendens but involves the question whether, defendant 1's interest is bound by the sale which is the main question in the case that will be presently considered. There appears, therefore, to be no substance in the reliance by the appellants on the question of lis pendens.

[35] It may at this stage be mentioned that during the course of the arguments before us, an application has been made on behalf of the respondents to admit as additional evidence, a certified copy of a registered document dated 26-2-42 whereby all the right, title and interest of appellants 1 and 2 in this appeal in the mortgaged property including the right of redemption are purported to have been transferred in favour of the original defendant 3, the Raja of Madhupur. This document was sought to be admitted with a view to urge that even if the present appellants had any subsisting interest they have lost the same by virtue of this deed of transfer and that, therefore they cannot maintain this appeal. We have declined to admit the same. It is to be noticed that the purported transfer is stated to be only by appellants 1 and 2 but even if all the three appellants had been parties to the transfer, it would not follow that the present appellants would lose their right to prosecute the appeal. Order 22, R. 10, Civil P. C. only provides for the continuance of the proceedings by the assignee pending the suit with the leave of the Court, but does not deprive the original assignor of his right to continue the proceedings, vide Joti Lal v. Sheodhayan, A. I. R. (23) 1936 Pat. 420 : (15 Pat. 607).

[36] The main question therefore that arises in this case for decision is whether defendant 2 has, by his purchase in court auction in execution of the decree in O. S. 51/26 become validly entitled to the suit properties subject to the suit mortgage, and whether defendant 1 has lost all interest therein by such court auction sale. The contention for the appellants is that the judgment in O. S. 24/30 has conclusively established as between himself and defendant 4 that defendant 1 was the legal successor to the estate of late Raja Raghunath Deb and that since the plaintiff does not challenge the correctness of the decision, the suit which was brought by him on the 2nd mortgage against defendant 4 and the decree obtained therein and the execution proceedings thereupon do not at all bind him and do not have the effect of conveying away to defendant 2, the title in the suit properties which was vested in defendant 1 at the date of the court auction sale. The contention on behalf of the plaintiff respondent is that though defendant 1 was not a party to the decree in O. S. 51/26, and the execution proceedings thereon, his interest in the properties was sufficiently represented by defendant 4, having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case and that consequently all the proceeding therein bound defendant 1 and have the effect of passing to the purchaser, defendant 2, the title of the original mortgagor in the property. The learned Subordinate Judge has agreed with the respondents' contention relying mainly on the case in Sanna Govappa v. Rodda Sanna Govappa, A. I. R. (16) 1929 Mad. 482 : (120 I. C. 65) and on the definition of the word "legal representative" in S. 2, cl. (11), Civil P. C.

[37] There can be no doubt about the fundamental principle that the title of a person to property cannot normally be affected by any proceedings to which he is not a party. As pointed out by the Privy Council in Khiarajmal v. Daim, 32 I. A. 23 at p. 32 :

"a Court has no jurisdiction to sell the property of persons who were not parties to the proceedings before it. As against such persons, the decrees and sales purporting to be made would be a nullity and may be disregarded without any proceedings to set them aside."

But it cannot also be disputed that there are certain well-recognised exceptions to the same. The only question is as to the limits of the exception and as to the principle regulating it. The Privy Council cases in Malkarjan v. Narhari, 27 I. A. 216 : (25 Bom. 337 P. C.)) and Khairajmal v. Daim 32 I. A. 23 : (32 Cal. 296 P. C.) recognise that though a person may not be a party to an action, his interest in the property may still be bound if he can be said to have been sufficiently represented in the proceedings. Learned counsel for the appellants argues that the only exception recognised by the above Privy Council cases is the case where the proceedings in Court have been initiated against the right person who dies during the pendency of the proceedings and a wrong legal representative is substituted, whom the Court expressly or impliedly decides to be the right legal representative. It is contended that it is only in such cases that the Privy Council have upheld court auction sales in application of the larger principle that when a Court which had jurisdiction to deal with the proceedings pending before it decided wrongly as to who the legal representative is, a bona fide court-auction purchaser is not to be affected thereby. Learned counsel argues that the Privy Council does not lay down any general principle of representasion applicable in such cases and relies on the cases in Pukhraj Jeshraj v. Jamsetji Rustum, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Bom. 63 : (50 Bom. 802) and Amarchand v. Parmanand, A. I. R. (21) 1934 ALL. 474 : (150 I. C. 323) in support of the position that the principle of the above two Privy Council cases is not to be extended. He urges that Sanna Govappa v. Rodda Sanna Govappa, A. I. R. (16) 1929 Mad. 482 : (120 I. C. 65) which the learned Subordinate Judge relied upon and which formulates a general principle of representation in broad terms is erroneous. It is also pointed out that in a later case in Manikyanayanim Varu v. Lakshminarasimha, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Mad. 43 : (139 I. C. 465) and Pukhraj Jeshraj v Jamsetji Rustum, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Bom. 63 : (50 Bom. 802) was followed and that the case in Sanno Govappa v. Rodda Sanna Govappa, A. I. R. (16) 1929 Mad. 482 : (120 I. C. 65) was not even referred to as an authority.

[38] I am unable to agree with the contention of the learned counsel for the appellants that the principle of representation in such cases is so limited and circumscribed as the learned counsel would have it. There are quite a large number of reported cases in the various High Courts which have held the proceedings against a wrong person to be binding against the person really interested under a variety of circumstances. The Privy Council in Khiarajmal v. Daim, 32 I. A. 23 at p. 33 : (32 Cal. 296 P. C.) recognise this when they state as follows:

"The Court had no jurisdiction to sell the property of persons who are not parties to the proceedings or properly represented on the record."

The Privy Council also say in the same case at p. 35 as follows:

"The Indian Courts have properly exercised a wide discretion in allowing the estate of a deceased debtor to be represented by one member of the family and in refusing to disturb judicial sales on the mere ground that some members of the family who were minors were not made parties to the proceedings, if it appears that there was a debt justly due from the deceased and no prejudice is shown to the absent minors. But these are usually cases where the person named as defendant is, de facto, manager of a Hindu family property, or has the assets out of which the decree is to be satisfied under his control."

In Court of Wards v. Ramaput Singh 14 M. I. A. 605 : (10 Beng. L. R. 294) a suit was brought against the widow of the deceased debtor and a decree was obtained thereon and property sold in execution. It was held that the sale bound the son of the deceased debtor, who and not the widow turned out to be the real heir. A perusal of the decision in the case shows that in so holding their Lordships laid stress both on the course of the proceedings which showed that the estate of the deceased was throughout intended to be bound and the widow was treated as the sole legal representative by the Court, on objection taken, and also on the fact that the widow happened to be the registered proprietor of the estate after the deceased. It is instructive, however, to notice that their Lordships followed the case in Eshan Chunder v. Buksh Ali Sowdagur, Marsh Rep. 614 also reported in Baksh Ali Sowdagur v. Eshan Chunder, W. R. Special Number, 119 (F. B.), and approved of the decision of Peacock C. J. therein. In this case as in the case in Court of Wards v. Ramaput Singh, 14 M. I. A. 605 : (10 Beng. L. R. 294) the creditor filed a suit against the widow of the debtor and obtained a decree thereon, and brought the properties of the deceased debtor to sale. It was held that the auction purchaser obtained title to the property and that the sale was binding on the son of the deceased debtor who was the real owner. Their Lordships relied largely on the fact that the proceedings in Court clearly showed that the decree and the execution proceedings were intended to be taken as against the deceased debtor's estate, that the widow was intended to be sued as representing the debtor's estate and that there is no suggestion of any fraud or collusion. This case has been specifically referred to and approved in Khiarajmal v. Daim, 32 I. A. 23 : (32 Cal. 296 P. C.) as also in Bissessur Lall v. Luchmessur Singh, 6 I. A. 233 : (5 C. L. R. 477 P. C.). In this later case, their Lordships summarise the facts of the case in Ehsan Chunder v. Bukhsh Ali Soudagur, Marsh. Rep. 614 and Court of Wards v. Ramaput Singh, 14 M. I. A. 605 : (10 Beng. L. R. 294) as showing that :

"in execution proceedings the Court will look at the substance of the transaction and will not be disposed to set aside the execution upon mere technical ground when it is found that it is substantially right."

A similar view of the principle of substantial representation was taken by the Privy Council in the case in Hari Saran v. Bhubanessarih Debi, 16 Cal. 40 : (15 I. A. 195 P. C.). There can, therefore, be no doubt that the principle of representation and the binding character on the true legal representative, of execution sales, in proceedings taken against the wrong legal representative on the principle of valid representation, is not so limited and circumscribed as that contended for by the appellants' counsel.

[39] The exact principles, which determine such representation have not, however, so far as I am aware, been authoritatively formulated in any decision of the Privy Council and there is a certain amount of conflict on that matter in the decisions of the various High Courts. The Madras High Court in a series of cases commencing from Janki v. Dhanu Lall, 14 Mad. 454 have recognised a principle of representation much wider than that applicable to a case where there has been an express or implied decision by the Court that the particular person before it is the proper legal representative. (See Kadir Mohideen v. Muthu Krishna, 26 Mad. 230 : (12 M. L. J. 368), Ramaswami Chettiar v. Oppliamani Chetty, 33 Mad. 6 : (4 I. C. 1059), Gnanambal Ammal v. Veeraswami Chetti, A. I. R. (3) 1916 Mad. 1022 : (31 I. C. 920), Madhayar Ayudu v. Subbama, A. I. R. (4) 1917 Mad. 979 : (35 I. C. 124), Soorayya v. Chinna Anjaneyalu, A. I. R. (6) 1919 Mad. 16 : (52 I. C. 509), Nallappa v. Nilana Gowda, A. I. R. (13) 1926 Mad. 487: (93 I. C. 625), Kolaremathu Amma v. Madhavi Amma, A. I. R. (15) 1928 Mad. 243 : (103 I. C. 409), S. Govappa v. R. S. Govappa, A. I. R. (16) 1929 Mad. 482 : (120 I. C. 65), Chaturbhuj Doss Khushal Doss & Sons v. Rajamenicka Mudali, A. I. R. (17) 1930 Mad. 930 : (54 Mad. 212). The entire case law on this matter as far as the Madras High Court is concerned, has been fully reviewed and some general principles have been attempted to be formulated in the later two cases in S. Govappa v. R. S. Govappa, A. I. R. (16) 1929 Mad. 482 : (120 I. C. 65) and Chaturbhuj Dass Khushal Dass & Sons v. Rajamanicka Mudali, A. I. R. (27) 1930 Mad. 930 : (54 Mad. 212). It is unnecessary to notice all these decision in detail and it is sufficient to refer to the last of these cases as showing that in Madras the position appears to have been accepted as stated by Reilly J. in his judgement as follows :

"If a plaintiff in good faith sued a person who appears to him to be the proper legal representative of his deceased debtor and that representative has an existing interest to defend the estate and there is no fraud or collusion in the proceedings, then a decree so obtained is binding on the deceased's estate whoever may be actually entitled to the residue of the estate after the debts have been paid."

In the view of that learned Judge "this is both good sense and good law as laid down by the Privy Council". The other learned Judge Madhavan Nair J. also laid down the principle in substantially the same terms as follows :

"In my opinion there is no justification for confining the principle enunciated in this decision only to those cases where a wrong representative is brought on record in the course of execution proceedings. The question to be considered whether it arises in the course of execution proceedings or in the course of the suit is this : whether the estate of the deceased person was sufficiently represented by the legal representative who has been actually brought on record. I think the same principle should govern all cases where a wrong representative has been brought on record, where such representative has been added in the course of the suit or in the course of the execution proceedings. The same consideration should apply also to a case where the suit itself is instituted against the wrong legal representative at the very commencement."

It may be pointed out that the decision in the later case of Manikyanayanin Varu v. Lakshminarasimha, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Mad. 43 : (139 I. C. 465) cannot be said to weaken the authority of these prior decisions in the Madras jurisdiction since it makes no reference at all to any of the prior decisions and also since on the facts that case can be distinguished.

[40] It is unncessary for me for the purpose of this case to consider whether the principles as so broadly formulated in the Madras cases are entirely correct. The cases in Pukhraj Jeshraj v. Jamsetji Rustum, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Bom. 63 : (50 Bom. 802) and Amarchand v. Parmanand, A. I. R. (21) 1934 ALL. 474 : (150 I. C. 323) relied upon by the counsel for the appellants show that a somewhat stricter view has been taken in other High Courts. A perusal of the large number of reported cases on this matter shows that questions arose for decision under the following circumstances: (a) Proceedings have been taken against a person who has the prima facie title, the real title being in a person who is not a party to the proceedings; (b) proceedings have been taken against only one or some of the proper legal representatives, the others not being parties thereto; (c) proceedings have been taken against a person who was found to be in actual possession of the property of the deceased claiming to succeed to him or to represent, the persons legally entitled not being a party. A further distinction has arisen in some of these cases as to whether the proceedings have been initiated against the wrong person or whether the wrong person was brought on the record during the proceedings.

[41] While there is a conflict of decisions in respect of (a) and (b) above, there is a fair unanimity of reported decisions right from the earliest times in respect of (c) to the effect that proceedings taken bona fide by the creditor against the person actually in possession by virtue of the assertion of a claim to succeed to or represent the estate of the deceased debtor, are binding against the real legal heir, whether such proceedings were commenced or continued against the wrong person and irrespective of any express or implied decision by the Court that the person so impleaded was the proper legal representative. The earliest reported case on this question is the case in Ishanchunder v. Bukhsh Ali, Marsh 614, Weekly Reporter, Special Number, p. 190 which I have already referred to and which has been approved by the Privy Council in the case in Court of Wards v. Ramaput Singh, 14 M.I.A. 605 : (10 Beng. L. R. 294) Khiarajmal v. Daim, (32 I.A. 23 : 32 Cal. 266 P.C.) and in Bissesur Lal v. Luchmessur Singh, 6 I.A. 233: (5 C.L.R. 477 P. C.). It may be noticed that on the facts of that case, it was found that, after the original debtor's death the widow's name was entered in the collector's books as the owner of the property and that the creditor alleged that the widow was in possession of the estate. The execution sale as against her was held to bind the real heir. In Prosunno Chunder v. Kristo, 4 Cal. 342, a creditor suing on a debt due to him from a deceased debtor, obtained a decree for sale against a person who took possession of the property of the deceased honestly beleiving her to be the widow and legal representative of the deceased, though it appeared ultimately that she was not a widow, but only a concubine and that the deceased had left a will in favour of another. It was held that the decree was binding against the real legal representative. This was followed in Chunilal Bose v. Osmond Beeby, 30 Cal. 1044 where the proceedings taken against the prima facie heir, who had taken possession of the estate, was held to be binding against the true legal representative. In Jatha Naik v. Venkatapa, 5 Bom. 14 where the sale in execution of a decree obtained against the wrong legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor was held not binding on the real heir the case in Ishan Chunder v. Bukhsh Ali Sowdagur, Marsh. Rep. 614 was accepted, but distinguished on the ground that that was a case where the defendant therein, though not an heir of the deceased, was in possession of the estate of the deceased and was sued in a representative capacity. In Premraj Motiram v. Javarmal, 18 I. C. 381 : (15 Bom. L. R. 41) where a decree against the wrong person was held not binding it was bound on the facts that the person against whom the decree was obtained was not in possession of the property of the deceased. In Pukhraj Jeshraj v. Jamsetji Rustum, A.I.R. (14) 1927 Bom. 63 : (50 Bom. 802) which has been relied on on behalf of the appellants is also a case where it does not appear that the wrong person against whom the decree was obtained was in possession of the property of the deceased. In Mt. Kaniz Abbas v. Lala Baladin, A. I. R. (12) 1925 Oudh 330 : (28 O. C. 177) the mortgagee obtained a preliminary decree against a mortgagor who died before a final decree was passed, and the widow of the mortgagor was entitled only to the 1/4th share of the property, but she was in actual possession of the entire property and was mutated in the revenue Court on the basis of that possession in respect of the entire property and was substituted as the only legal representative. It was held that the final decree and the further proceedings thereon were binding on the real heir. Ramaswami Chettiar

v. Oppliamani Chetty, 33 Mad. 6 : (4 I. C. 1059), Granambal Ammal v. Veeraswami Chetti, A. I. R. (3) 1916 Mad. 1022 : (31 I. C. 920) and Nallappa v. Nilana Gowda, A. I. R. (13) 1926 Mad. 487 : (93 I. C. 625) were all cases in which the wrong legal representative was in actual possession of the estate of the deceased and the decree in execution proceedings obtained against him was held binding on the true legal heir. Madlayar Ayudu v. Subbama, A. I. R. (4) 1917 Mad. 979 : (35 I. C. 124) was a case in which the decree against a wrong person was held not binding on the true legal representative; but it was recognised in that case that if the decree had been obtained against the person in possession it would be binding. In Jharu v. Pardhana, A. I. R. (26) 1939 Lah 277: (183 I. C. 487) the position was accepted, referring to the case in Ehsan Chunder v. Bukhsh Ali Sowdagur, Marsh. Rep. 614 and Court of Wards v. Ramaput Singh, 14 M. I. A. 605 : (10 Beng. L. R. 294) that if the person against whom the decree was obtained was in possession of the estate, the decree would be binding. It was accordingly held that in the circumstances of that case there was proper representation and that the decree was binding. Lalsa Rai v. Udit Rai, A. I. R. (11) 1924 ALL 717 : (75 I. C. 114) and Amarchand v. Parmanand, A. I. R, (21) 1934 ALL. 474 : (150 I. C. 323) seem disposed to take the contrary view and appear to hold that a decree against a wrong person even though he may be in possession of the estate of the deceased is not binding against the true legal representative. The former is a case where the true representative intervened before the actual sale in pursuance of the decree and sued for a declaration that the decree was not binding on him and it may be distinguishable on the ground that there the protection of the rights of a bona fide purchaser in Court was not involved. Amarchand v. Parmanand, A. I R. (21) 1934 ALL. 474 : (150 I. C. 323) however was a case in which the title involved was that of the purchrser in execution of a decree obtained against the wrong legal representative who was in possesion and it was held that the decree and the execution sale were not binding on the true legal representative. It appears to me that the case in Amarchand v. Parmanand, A.I.R. (21) 1934 ALL. 474: (150 I. C. 323) has not sufficiently considered the relevant provisions of the Civil P. C. and the cases of the Privy Council which recognise the principle of substantial representation for the protection of the rights of the bona fide purchaser in court auction, where such rights come into conflict with the rights of the real heir of the deceased debtor who was not eo nomine a party to the proceedings which led the court auction sales. The principle of substantial representation in connection with such matters has been indicated in Subramania Ayyar v. Arumuga Chetty, 26 Mad. 330 and Ramaswami Chettiar v. Oppliamani Chetty, 33 Mad. 6 : (4 I. C. 1059). It is based upon the fact that interests of the real representative and of the person wrongly impleaded are identical in respect of all matters arising on the proceeding in question, though they may be rivals in respect of their title to the debtor's property. If, therefore, he acts without any fraud or collusion he may be presumed to have done what all the real legal representatives would have done if he had been a party. The real legal representative could not, therefore, be prejudiced by his not being a party and the creditor would not be saddled with the undue burden or having to determine for himself at his risk and peril who the real legal representative is. That the identity of interests as regards the particular proceeding is the basis of representation in legal proceedings can be clearly gathered from the decision of the Privy Council in Krishnayya v. Rajah of Pittapuram, A. I. R. (20) 1933 P. C. 202 : (57 Mad. 1). That case no doubt deals with a totally different matter arising under S. 33, Evidence Act, but the case is instructive. Their Lordships in that case pointed out at p. 207 (1) that one of the essential elements of substantial representation as between parties to two different proceedings is that that the interest of the party to the first proceeding in the answer to be given to the question at issue in that proceeding is the same as that of the party to the second proceeding and therefore

> "the relevant party in the first proceeding, in fact represented in the first proceeding, the relevant party in the second proceeding and may grammatically and truthfully be described as a representative of the party to the second proceeding."

As their Lordships say, "he was in effect fighting that person's battle as well as his own." There can be no doubt that judged with reference to this test, a person in possession of the estate of the deceased debtor by virtue of a claim to succeed to him has the same identical interest as his rival claimant, who equally claims to succeed the deceased in proceedings taken to realies the debt out of the property in his possession. Therefore at least in so far as the validity of the title of the court-auction-purchaser in such proceedings is concerned, such a person fully represents the real heir.

[42] This result also follows from a consideration of the relevant provisions in Ss. 50 and 52, Civil P. C. which deal with the remedies of a creditor to realise his debt from the estate of his debtor. Section 50 relates to a case where a creditor has obtained a decree against the original debtor, but the debtor dies before the decree is fully satisfied. The said section declares that he can execute the decree against the proper legal representative to the extent of the property which has come to his hands and has not been duly disposed of. Section 52 says that where a decree is passed against a party as the legal representative of a deceased person and the decree is for the payment of money out of the property of the deceased, it may be executed by the attachment or sale of any such property which is in the possession of such legal representative. Sub-s. (2) of the said section provides for cases where the legal representative is not in possession of the property and we are not concerned with that. What is necessary to note is that this S. 52 is sufficiently wide in terms to apply both to the case of the original debtor dying during the pendency of the suit and of his dying before the institution of the suit. In either case, a decree may be obtained against the legal representative for payment of the money out of the property of the deceased in his hands. Now the expression "legal representative" has been defined in S. 2, cl. (ii) as not only the person who in law represents the estate of the deceased, but also to include one who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased. Whatever may be the connotation of the words "intermeddles with the estate of the deceased" in this definition, there can be no doubt that a person in possession of the estate of the deceased by virtue of a claim to succeed to him or represent him and therefore liable to pay his debts out of the property in his possession, is a legal representative of the deceased at least to the extent of the property in his possession, for the purpose of satisfying the debts of the deceased out of such property. If that is so, Ss. 50 and 52 give a clear right to the creditor to obtain satisfaction of their debts out of that property in the hands of the intermeddler by proceedings taken against that intermeddler alone. It follows that such proceedings bind the real legal representative. That a person in such situation is a legal representative is recognised by the decisions in Gnanambal Ammal v. Veeraswami Chetty, A. I. R. (3) 1916 Mad. 1022 : (31 I. C. 920), Madhayar Ayudu v. Subbama, A. I. R. (4) 1917 Mad. 979 : (35 I. C. 124); Kusum Bandhu v. Ramdayal, A. I. R. (11) 1924 Cal. 362 : (69 I. C. 179); Nagendra Nath v. Hasan Chandra, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Cal. 865 : (149 I. C. 927). In the last case it was stated as follows :

"It is one of the essential tests with regard to the case of persons who intermeddle with the estate of another before they can be called as legal representatives of the deceased person, that they must retain possession of properties belonging to the estate with the intention of representing the estate."

It has also been pointed out in Chockalingam Chettiar v. Karuppan Chettiar, A. I. R. (35) 1948 Mad. 385 at p. 387 : ((1948) 1 M. L. J. 82)) that intermeddling referred to in S. 2 (ii) must involve

"an assumption of a representative capacity in relation to the estate and not in assertion of a claim of right, adversely to the estate."

That is a person in possession by way of "intermeddling" to be treated as legal representative must claim to succeed to the deceased debtor and hold it as his representative in the same way as his real heir would have done, if he had been in possession. There can be no doubt, therefore that by virtue of this specific provisions in the Civil P. C. above pointed out, a decree bona fide obtained against a wrong person who is in possession of the estate of the deceased as above stated is binding on the real legal heir. In Lasa Rai v. Udit Rai, A. I. R. (11) 1924 ALL. 717 : (75 I. C. 114) and Amarchand v. Parmanand, A. I. R. (21) 1934 ALL. 474 : (150 I. C. 323) it has been remarked that the definition of the word "legal representative" in the Civil P. C. is only for purposes of the Civil P. C., but does not alter the substantive law. It may be so, but it is applicable to the procedure provided in S. 52 which relates as such to an action commenced after the death of the debtor as to one continued after his death.

[43] It is however necessary to emphasise that in order that S. 52 may be applicable, the decree must have been obtained against the wrong person as representing the deceased debtor and with a view to get satisfaction out of the estate of the deceased. In an ordinary money decree obtained against an individual, the decree-amount is realised by attachment and sale of the judgment-debtor's property, which means normally, his right, title and interest. But if the suit is so framed as to indicate clearly the intention of the creditor to obtain satisfaction out of the property of the deceased and is brought as against the legal representative as defined in S. 2 (ii) and a decree obtained accordingly, the Code gives the power to the Court by Ss. 50 and 52 of selling the property of the deceased debtor himself and not merely the particular judgment-debtor's right, title and interest. In order therefore that proceedings taken against a wrong legal representative should bind real heir, it is essential that the proceedings themselves taken as a whole, must show that the estate of the deceased was intended to be bound and satisfaction intended to be obtained therefrom.

[44] In a case, however, where the proceedings are for realisation of the amount due on a mortgage created by the deceased debtor, it is obvious that such proceedings stand on a different footing from proceedings which result in a simple money decree. In such a suit, the clear intention of the creditor is to realise his debt from the very property which was originally given to him as security for the debt by the deceased debtor. Indeed by virtue of the provisions of the Civil P. C., he cannot get satisfaction out of any other property until the security is exhausted. Order 34, R. 5 (3) clearly shows that the Court is given powers specifically in a mortgage-suit, properly constituted, to direct the sale of the mortgaged-property itself. It is also well settled that in a sale in execution of a mortgage decree, the purchaser normally gets not the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor at the date of the sale, but the rights of the original mortgagor as they stood on the date of the mortgage. (See Karamat Ali v. Gorakhpur Bank Ltd, A. I. R (9) 1922 ALL 495 at p. 496 Col. 2 : (44 ALL. 488) and Kalipada Mukerji v. Basanta Kumar, A. I. R (19) 1932 Cal. 126 at p. 132 Col 1: (59 Cal. 117) Therefore, while it may be that in an ordinary simple money suit where it is not made out that the proceedings were intended to be taken against the estate of the deceased and that the provisions of Ss. 50 and 52 have been properly utilised, the Court may have no jurisdiction to sell the property of the real heir in a proceeding against the wrong person and therefore such sale is a nullity, in a mortgage suit where by the very terms of the Civil P. C., the Court has jurisdiction to sell the mortgaged property itself and where the wrong legal representative is on the record, the sale is valid and binding against the true heir and is not vitiated by any want of jurisdiction. At best all that can be said is that if there are any defects, it is an irregular sale which the real heir can challenge and get set aside by appropriate proceedings in time.

[45] I have therefore no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that where a mortgagee institutes a suit bona fide against the person in possession of the estate of the deceased mortgagor, who is in such possession in assertion of a claim to succeed to that estate, and where a person purchases the mortgaged property bona fide in execution of that decree, such purchaser gets the full title to the mortgaged property by virtue of such sale and the real heir is bound thereby and that his only remedy, if at all, in a proper case is to get the sale set aside by appropriate proceedings in time.

[46] It is in the light of these principles, that the relevant facts in this case have to be appreciated and the question at issue decided. Those relevant facts may now be stated. The original proprietor of Killa Patia was one Raja Raghunath Deb. He executed on 26-2 13 a simple mortgage for Rs. 1,07,000 mortgaging the said Killa Patia in favour of one Bhaban Sahu, predecessor in interest of the plaintiff-respondents which is the subject-matter of this suit. He also executed a second mortgage for the same property for Rs. 5 000 on 13-8-13 in favour of the same mortgagee. It was this second mortgage that was the subject-matter of the suit instituted by the said mortgagee in O. S. 51/26. That suit was instituted after the death of the original mortgagee, Raghunath Deb, who died on 4-11-13. It was instituted against one Achutananda Roy, defendant 4 in the present suit. Between the date of death of Raja Raghunath Deb and the institution of the suit, O. S. 51/26, there was litigation about succession to the estate of Killa Patia. On Raghunath Deb's death, one Madan Mohan Deb claiming to be the adopted son of Raghunath Deb took possession of the estate. Achutananda (the present defendant 4) filed O. S. 762/17 against the said Madan Mohan alleging that he was the legitimate son of Raghunath Deb and impugning the adoption of Madan Mohan Deb. He lost the suit in the first Court and filed an appeal F. A. 1/20 in the High Court. During the pendency of the appeal Madan Mohan Deb died and the Government appear to have taken possession of the estate. It is not very clear from the records, why the Government intervened, but it looks not unlikely that it took possession on the footing of escheat. However that may be, it is undisputed that the Government was in possession of the estate immediately on the death of Madan Mohan Deb and that Achutananda brought the Government on the record in his appeal on the death of Madan Mohan. That appeal in the High Court was ultimately compromised as between Achutananda (defendant 4 herein) and the Government by the terms of which the Government consented to the appeal of Achutananda being allowed. Defendant 4, Achutananda was put in possession of the estate by the Government by virtue of this compromise on 10-3-22. It was in these circumstances that the mortgagee, Bhaban Sahu, instituted his suit O. S. 51/26 on his second mortgage against the present defendant 4 Achutanada alone. [After stating various proceedings and evidence his Lordship proceeded:] These various proceedings therefore, show that the action of the present plaintiff's predecessor in the present suit. in filing a suit on his second mortgage against the person then in possession of the mortgaged property namely, defendant 4, in assertion of a claim to have succeeded to the original mortgagor, was perfectly bona fide and that all the proceedings that he has taken to bring the property to sale in execution of his mortgage decree were also bona fide and that the purchase by defendant 4 must be taken to be equally bona fide. The present defendant 1 had full knowledge of the execution proceedings and made an unsuccessful attempt to stop the same, but did not intervene in the execution sale to assert his rights of redemption and refrained from taking any proceedings to have the sale set aside or declared null and void, though he failed to obtain possession, and now after the lapse of nearly 10 years from the date of the execution sale his representatives have come forward with these applications.

[47] It has been noticed that even such interest as defendant 1 may have had was likely to have been completely extinguished by this date since defendant 2 has admittedly been in continuous possession of the suit mortgaged properties from 4-9-32 when he obtained delivery of possession up to date for a period much over 12 years. Of course, if the case had to be decided on that footing alone, it might have been necessary to consider, in view of the fact that the present applications for relief under the Orissa Money-lenders Act were filed in 1941 (before the lapse of 12 years), whether subsequent continuance of possession should be taken into account and also whether anything had transpired during all these years to render the possession of defeddant 2 not adverse to defendant 1. But this is mentioned only to show that the appellants appear to be fighting a battle from which they themselves are likely to derive no benefit except by way of speculation.

[48] In view of all the facts and circumstances of this case as above pointed out, I have come to the clear conclusion that defendant 2 has become the valid purchaser of the property involved in the present suit in the court auction held in execution of the decree in O. S. 51/26, subject to the present suit mortgage, and that defendant 1 has no subsisting interest therein and that consequently defendant 1 or his alleged successors, the present appellants, have no subsisting interest. They are, therefore, not entitled on this ground to any relief under S. 10 (1), Orissa Money-lenders Act.

[49] The appeal must accordingly be dismissed with costs.

Radhamohan Rana and others, Petnrs v. Gobinda Gopalananda, Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. Nos. 51 and 52 of 1950, D/- 20-4-1950.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 39, R. 2 — Disobedience of injunction — Effect.

In a suit by an outgoing trustee for impugning an order of Endowments Comr the Ct passed a preliminary order for injunction at the instance of the pltf. The deft appeared to show cause but defaulted at subsequent hearing and an 'ex parte' decree was passed granting the declaration prayed for and also a perpetual injunction. The 'ex parte' decree was however set aside and the suit was restored to the file. The deft then obtained possession of the temple under the order of the Hindu Religious Endowments Commissioner and thereby committed a breach of the injunction order.

Held, that the deft being under a 'bona fide' belief that the proceedings for injunction having come to an end with the passing of 'ex parte' decree could not be revived by reason of the restoration of the suit, and he could not be held guilty of wilful violation of the order of injunction. Hence he could not be proceeded against for contempt of Ct. (Paras 2, 3)

Anno: C. P. C., O. 39, R. 2, N. 6, Pt. 7.

(b) Orissa Hindu Religious Endowments Act IV (4) of 1939 as amended by Orissa Act XXXI (31) of 1947, S. 59 (3) — Good faith — Disobedience of injunction — Trustee when protected — Orissa General Clauses Act I (1) of 1937, S. 2 (17).

Per Narasimham J. — For purposes of Orissa Hindu Religious Endowments Act so long as the impugned act is done honestly, even negligence on the part of the doer will nevertheless indicate good faith on his part in view of the definition of 'good faith' in S. 2 (17), Orissa General Clauses Act.

Where a newly appointed trustee dispossesses the old trustee in pursuance of an order of the Endowments Comr in spite of an order for injunction issued against him by a Civil Ct, prior to the commencement of the Amending Act and there is no finding as to the absence of good faith on the part of the new trustee, no proceedings for disobedience of an injunction order can be started against him in view of the statutory protection given to him by S. 59 (3) of the Act as amended in 1947. (Para 10)

M. S. Rao, for Petnrs — L. K. Dasgupta and S. Mohanty, for Opposite Party.

RAY C. J: The two revisions were heard together & this order will govern them. Both of them are directed against the orders of the Cts below visiting the petnrs with some punishment for having disobeyed an order of injunction passed by the Ct under O. 39, R. 2, C. P. C. & against the consequential order of directing the defts to restore possession of the subject matter of dispute back to the pltf which had been taken in violation of his order of prohibition in the order of temporary injunction.

(2) It is fundamental that nobody shall be proceeded against in contempt except for wilful violation of a Ct's order — be it a prohibitory or stay or injunction order — as the case may be. The circumstances of this case have to be set out in order to examine the question whether the petnrs were guilty of wilful violation. The circumstances are: (i) The opposite party, who was a trustee of Khirachora Gopinath Jiu Temple at Remuna, & the endowment thereof, was dismissed by the Hindu Religious Endowment Comr on his finding that the endowment was a public one. He appointed the petnrs, as trustees, in exercise of his powers under the Hindu Religious Endowments Act. As provided in the Act, the aggrieved person, namely, the outgoing trustee, brought a civil suit, in which these civil revisions arise, for having it declared that the temple & endowment were private of which he was the hereditary trustee & that the Hindu Religious Endowments Comr's order declaring the same as public was wrong & was liable to be set aside. (ii) The Hindu Religious Endowments Comr was not impleaded as a party-deft to the suit at the beginning. While the suit was proceeding as between the newly appointed trustees & the outgoing trustee, the latter moved the Ct to restrain, by an order of injunction, the newly appointed trustees, namely, the defts, from interfering with his possession & management of the endowment & performance of sebapuja. The learned trial Ct issued a preliminary order of injunction calling upon the defts to show cause why the preliminary order should not be made absolute. Along with that, an interim order of injunction was passed. Service of notice accompanied the interim order of injunction. The defts put in an objection against the order being made absolute. This objection was never attended to by the trial Ct nor was the order ever made absolute. On some date, fixed for hearing, the defts defaulted & the Ct passed an ex parte decree. The scope & effect of the ex parte decree was to set aside the Hindu Religious Endowments Comr's order declaring the temple & endowment to be public, & to grant perpetual injunction, against the trustees, from interfering with the pltf's management of the endowment, & performance of sebapuja. Necessarily, with the passing of this ex parte decree, the interim order of injunction become exhausted. It was, however, replaced by the order of perpetual injunction incorporated as a part of the decree. The defts, however, are not charged with having violated the said perpetual injunction order, but they later filed an appln for setting aside the ex parte decree. Eventually, the decree was set aside, & the suit was restored to its file. It appears from the defts' appln to the Hindu Religious Endowments Comr, under amended S. 59 of the Act, that they were genuinely under the belief that they were not, at the moment, bound by any order of injunction. They made out this point in the following manner, namely, that the interim order of injunction came to an end either with their filing objection against that order which was never adjudicated upon, or, at any rate, on the disposal of the suit by the ex parte decree. At any rate, the latter position is an obvious one, & cannot be taken exception to. This ex parte decree having been set aside, the question arises whether the interim order of injunction was revived. There is nothing in the order setting aside the ex parte decree nor is there any other order incorporated in the order-sheet to show that the Ct meant to revive the pending proceedings in the matter of injunction as well. Without such an express order & without determining whether cancellation of ex parte decree automatically revives the pending proceedings of an injunction, it is clear that the defts could be held justified to be under a genuine belief that they were not under the restraint of any order of injunction. In such a state of things, if they took possession of the disputed property appertaining to the endowment, they cannot be said to have been guilty of wilful violation of an order of injunction of the Ct prohibiting them from either taking over possession or otherwise interfering with the pltf's possession.

(3) I quite appreciate the view taken by the Cts below that the prerogative right of prohibiting a party from committing violation of its primary & prohibitive order should not be lightly interfered with, though that order may seem to be technically unsound. The spirit behind the order is fully appreciated by this Ct. Reversal of their order should not lend support to any theory that the Ct could not be rightly advised upon strict enforcement of its order of prohibition or restraint whenever such an order is called for in the exigencies of a particular case. Any other view shall lead to disturbance of peace & good order in the society. In the special circumstances, however, in this case as already stated, I would set aside the order punishing the petnrs for violation & contempt of Ct.

(4) In the course of the argument, our attention was invited to sub-s (3) of S. 59 of the Act, & it was contended that even if there is wilful violation of an order of injunction passed, in such circumstances, as prevail in this case, sub-s (3) gives the party complete immunity from any sort of legal proceedings which would include a proceeding consequent upon violation of the Ct's order of injunction prohibiting them from doing anything which the statute entitled them to do under the authority of the Hindu Religious Endowments Comr in their capacity as public servants within the meaning of sub-s (4), provided that is done in good faith. This opens a question of some significance. An argument against this contention may take the shape that the legal proceeding is not for having taken possession but for breach of the Ct's order which supervened. What was meant by sub-s (3) referred to such acts or offences that would ensue directly & solely from the act of taking possession. It would save the man from committing criminal trespass & from being liable to damages for having taken possession of the property & so on & so forth. In view of the importance of the question, it is difficult for me, as at present advised, to come to any definite decision. The solution swings between two extremes — on one side the paramountcy of the law incorporated in statute has to be maintained, & on the other side, the sovereignty of the Ct & its order have also to be respected. As it does not strictly arise in this case, in view of its having been successfully disposed of on the point, already considered, I should not express any opinion.

(5) It would be proper to leave a word of caution for the guidance of the civil Ct. Such matters will ever & anon arise as the Hindu Religious Endowments Comr's order declaring a temple to be a public, dismissing an old trustee, and appointing a new one, in his place, or directing delivery or taking up of possession under S. 59 will often come for invasion in a civil Ct. The civil Ct, having jurisdiction over the matter, shall be deemed to have right to maintain 'status quo ante' in relation to the subject-matter of dispute & restrain continuing injuries to any one or the other of the parties in litigation. A case may arise in which the Hindu Religious Endowments Comr, impleaded as a deft, may be restrained, or, in other words, may be asked to stay his hands under S. 59 of the Act. It may also happen that he may either directly or through his agents refuse to obey. A question of conflict of jurisdiction should naturally arise. If the civil Cts are fully aware of their responsibilities, the occasion for such an eventuality could be avoided. The civil Ct, when asked to issue an order of injunction to restrain the hands of the deft, whosoever he may be, has always to consider the balance of convenience within which is included consideration of matters of public policy. Whenever the Civil Ct should find that some statutory authority is acting within the limits of the powers conferred upon him by law, as a matter of balance of convenience, he should generally consider it to be in favour of the said authority & his agents. Rare cases, however, may arise in which such authorities may be acting mala fide and in abuse of their powers. In such a case, I can pronounce, without hesitation, that the hands of the Civil Ct are long enough to restrain them, although wise regulation of powers, with reference to the public policy & the balance of convenience, would reduce the happening of such conflicting jurisdictions to a nullity.

(6) I shall now address myself to the advisibility of acceding to Mr. Dasgupta's contention that the question of punishment apart, possession taken wrongfully should not be maintained. What he contends is this that in deference to the Ct's authority & dignity, even notional possession shall be delivered to him, which may later be placed in the hands of a receiver or be disposed of in any manner conformable to the interest of the endowment. But this contention, however, overlooks the question whether this taking of possession is unlawful. Section 59 stares the contention in the face. Besides, we have no reason to presume that the defts are either trespassers or are guilty of malfeasance or misfeasance within the knowledge of the Hindu Religious Endowments Comr. Their actions are within the supervising authority of the Hindu Religious Endowments Comr. We should, therefore, set aside the order of the Cts below directing that the possession shall be restored back to the pltf; but door must be left open to the pltf to apply to the Ct for appointment of a receiver or to take such other appropriate steps in case the defts are found to be interfering unduly with the property rights of the endowment & committing acts of waste in abuse of their powers. In this matter the Hindu Religious Endowments Comr shall be given an opportunity to be heard & his view should be given every deference in arriving at a certain arrangement.

(7) In the result, the civil revisions are allowed. Each party should bear his own costs throughout.

(8) NARASIMHAM J: I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice that the two petns should be allowed.

(9) In C. R. No. 52 of 1950 the only point for decision is whether the punishment of the petnrs for having violated an order of injunction issued by the lower Ct was justifiable. In my opinion sub-s (3) of S. 59, Orissa Hindu Religious Endowments Act as amended by Orissa Act, 1947 is a complete answer to such a charge. The petnrs merely obeyed the order of the Endowments Comr dispossessing the opposite party & putting the petnrs in possession of the temple & its properties in exercise of the extraordinary powers conferred on the Endowments Comr by the amending Act, 1947 (Orissa Act XXXI (31) of 1947). Mr. Dasgupta however contended that Orissa Act XXXI (31) of 1947 cannot affect an order of injunction issued prior to the coming into force of that Act as in the present case. But so far as I could see there is nothing in Orissa Act XXXI (31) of 1947 to indicate that from the date of the commencement of that Act the Comr has no power to put into possession a newly appointed trustee even though there might have been an order of injunction issued against him by a civil Ct prior to the commencement of that Act. The Legislature deliberately conferred drastic powers on the Comr by the amending Act of 1947 & empowered him to put a newly appointed trustee in possession by using even force, if necessary. Prior to 1947 the power to put a new trustee in possession remained with the civil Ct under the old S. 59, Orissa Hindu Religious Endowments Act. When the Legislature in 1947 deliberately transferred that power from the civil Ct to the Endowments Comr himself with a view to secure effective compliance with his own order it is difficult to understand how any previous order of injunction that might have been issued against any party by a civil Ct could in any way affect the statutory powers conferred on the Endowments Comr by the amending Act or else how the protection conferred by sub-s (3) of S. 59 (as amended) of the O. H. R. E. Act to a person acting under the instructions of the Endowments Comr can be in any way whittled down. The main purpose for which the amending Act was made by the Legislature cannot be rendered infructuous by any such limited construction.

(10) Doubtless if it could be held that the petnrs did not act in good faith they cannot claim the protection of sub-s (3) of S. 59, O. H. R. E. Act. The expression 'good faith' has been defined in S. 2(17), Orissa General Clauses Act, 1937 as follows:

"a thing shall be deemed to be done in 'good faith' where it is in fact done honestly, whether it is done negligently or not."

This definition is an important departure from the definition of the same expression occurring in S. 52, Penal Code where

"Nothing is said to be done or believed in 'good faith' which is done or believed without due care & attention."

Thus though for the purpose of the Penal Code where an act is done negligently even though it may be done honestly, a plea of good faith may not stand, for the purpose of the O. H. R. E. Act, however, so long as the impugned act is done honestly, even negligence on the part of the doer will nevertheless indicate good faith on his part. In the present case there is no finding by either of the two Cts to the effect that the action of the petnrs was not done in good faith. Consequently I would hold that proceedings for disobedience of an injunction order cannot be started against them in view of the statutory protection given to them by sub-s (3) of S. 59, O. H. R. E. Act as amended.

(11) In C. R. 51 of 1950 the question for decision is whether the order of the lower Ct restoring possession of the temple properties to the opposite party can be sustained. I must say that an order of that nature would frustrate the object for which S. 59 was amended by Orissa Act XXXI (31) of 1947. That section as amended requires the ex-trustee to give up possession to the new trustee under the orders of the Endowments Comr & then seek his redress by institution of a suit in the usual way. Whether in such a suit the Ct will have power to appoint a Receiver & thereby dispossess the new trustee who has been actually put in possession of the temple properties by the Endowments Comr under S. 59 is a question on which it is unnecessary to express any opinion at present. It is sufficient to note that in the present case where there is no application for appointment of a Receiver or any finding that the new trustees (the petnrs) are mismanaging the temple properties, the order of the lower Ct directing them to give up possession to the previous trustee (the opposite party) was clearly wrong.

Second Appeal No. 135 of 1947, D/- 26-9-1950.

Tenancy Laws — Orissa Tenancy Act II (2) of 1913, S. 26 (2) — Purchase of occupancy land by co-sharer proprietor prior to 1913 — Bengal Tenancy Act VIII (8) of 1885, S. 22 (2).

When a co-sharer purchased occupancy land prior to 1913, his occupancy right in such land is certainly extinguished but the holding continues and he can hold the land subject to payment of rent to the other co-sharer proprietors under S. 22 (2), Bengal Tenancy Act. The right acquired by him would not be affected by S. 26 (2), Orissa Tenancy Act. The fact that the co-sharer was recorded in the Current Settlement Register as holding the land under S. 26 (2), Orissa Tenancy Act does not affect his status acquired before 1913. When in such a case the touzi is sold for arrears of land revenue the right of the co-sharer in the occupancy holding does not pass to the purchaser.

B. K. Pal, for Applt — P. C. Chatterji, for Resp.

PANIGRAHI J: This appeal raises a point of some novelty but not of difficulty. The facts necessary to be stated are that the father of the deft-applt was the owner of two-thirds share in touzi No. 1075 & this two-third share was recorded in the registers of the Collectorate as touzi No. 5989. He had also purchased 3.28 acres of lands appertaining to holding Nos. 34 and 35 (which are the subject-matter of the suit) by sale deeds, Ex. A — series of the years 1895, 1906, 1907 & 1909. These lands were acquired by purchase from tenants who had occupancy rights therein. The deft was recorded in the Current Settlement Register as holding these lands under S. 26 (2), Orissa Tenancy Act. Touzi No. 5989 was put up for sale by the Collector for realising arrear of land revenue on 24-10-40 & was purchased by the pltf. The pltf took delivery of the same through the revenue Ct on 19-1-42. In Nov 1943 he instituted a suit alleging dispossession by the deft-applt in Dec 1942. The pltf's case was that the interest of the deft in the occupancy holding also passed to the purchaser at the revenue sale. That plea is resisted by the deft on the ground that what actually passed to the purchaser at the revenue sale was only the interest in the estate & not the interest in the holding which the deft had purchased. The question that is to be considered is which of these contentions is to prevail.

(2) Mr. B. K. Pal, appearing for the deft-applt, contends that the law applicable to this case is S. 22 (2), Bengal Tenancy Act which was operative in Orissa before the introduction of the Orissa Tenancy Act in the year 1913. Section 22 (2), Bengal Tenancy Act corresponds to S. 26 (2), Orissa Tenancy Act, but there is a substantial difference in the language of the two sub-sections. Under S. 22(2), Bengal Act, as it stood before its amendment in 1907, a co-sharer-proprietor purchasing the occupancy right in a land would be entitled to hold the land subject to payment to his co-proprietors of the rent which may from time to time be payable to them. Section 26 (2) of the Orissa Act, on the other hand, declares that such person shall have no right to hold the land as a ryot but shall hold it as a proprietor & shall pay to his co-sharers a fair & equitable sum for the use and occupation of the same. The difference in language seems significant & created different rights in the purchasing co-proprietor under the two Acts. Under the Bengal Act the purchase of the holding by one co-sharer would not enure to the benefit of the other co-sharers & there would be no merger of interest of the ryot with that of the landlord. All that S. 22 (2), Bengal Tenancy Act declared before its amendment in 1907 is that the occupancy right in a holding would be extinguished in the event of its purchase by a co-sharer proprietor. That sub-section, as it stood before the amendment, was as follows:

"22 (2) If the occupancy right in land is transferred to a person jointly interested in the land as proprietor or permanent tenure-holder, it shall cease to exist; but nothing in this sub-section shall prejudicially affect the rights of any third person."

This section was the subject of controversy for a long time & came up for interpretation before the Calcutta H. C. In 'Jawadul Haque v. Ramdas', 24 Cal 143: (1 CWN 166 S B) & 'Rammohan v. Sheik Kachu', 32 Cal 386: (1 C L J 1 F B), the view taken by that H. C. was that S. 22 (2) did not extinguish the holding, that occupancy right is only an incident of the holding & the extinction of the occupancy right did not necessarily put an end to the holding itself. The amending Act of 1907 did not alter the law as laid down in these two cases. It merely emphasises the position that the purchasing co-proprietor shall hold the land subject to payment of proportionate rent to his co-sharers, & that he was not to be deprived of the benefit of his purchase nor would his purchase enure to the benefit of the other co-sharers who did not contribute to the purchase. The result was the creation of an intermediate status for the purchasing proprietor, which was certainly not that of an occupancy ryot nor that of a tenant-at-will. The position was merely that he had right to retain possession of the land subject to the payment to his co-sharers of their shares of the rent. In the latest decision of the Patna H. C., reported in 'Upendra Pratap Narain v. Dulhin Ishwarwati Kuer', 27 Pat 610: (A I R (37) 1950 Pat 115 F B), the majority view follows the law as laid down in 'Jawadul Haque v. Ramdas', 24 Cal 143: (1 C W N 166 S B). It was held in that case that a co-sharer-landlord who had purchased a transferable occupancy holding was entitled to retain it in his possession as his purchased land on a partition taking place between him & his co-sharers. In 1908, S. 22 (2), Bengal Tenancy Act was further amended in its application to East Bengal & Assam. The sub-section, as applicable to East Bengal, declares in language identical with that used in S. 26 (2), Orissa Tenancy Act, that the purchasing co-proprietor shall have no right to hold the land as a ryot but shall hold it as a proprietor. It has been held in 'Abhoy Charan v. Ram Sunder', A I R (17) 1930 Cal 109: (124 I C 323), that this amendment made in 1908 has no retrospective effect & that a purchaser before the introduction of the amendment would not lose the right he had before the amendment was made. It was accordingly contentded by Mr. Pal that all the purchases made by his client being prior to 1913 when S. 26 (2), Orissa Tenancy Act took the place of S. 22 (2), Bengal Tenancy Act, the right acquired by him would not be affected by the Orissa Tenancy Act, 1913. We are satisfied that this contention is correct & must prevail, the result being that the deft-applt can retain possession of the lands that he had acquired by purchase prior to 1913. His occupancy right in such lands is certainly extinguished but the holding continues & he can hold the land subject to payment of rent to the co-sharer proprietors. The remark made against his name in the Current Settlement Record-of-Rights does not affect the legal position or his status which he had acquired before the passing of the Orissa Tenancy Act.

(3) The correct position, therefore, appears to be that the applt was by reason of his purchase of the occupancy holding a tenant under the general body of proprietors & was liable to pay rent to them under S. 22 (2), Bengal Tenancy Act, as amended in the year 1907 & that there was no merger of the two interests, provision for which was subsequently enacted in S. 26 (2) of the Orissa Act. The provision in the Bengal Act was expressly to the effect that he "shall be entitled to hold the land subject to the payment to the co-proprietors or joint tenure-holders of the shares of the rent which may be from time to time payable to them."

The Section expressly provides for payment of "rent" instead of "a fair & equitable sum for the use & occupation of the same" as laid down in S. 26 (2) of the Orissa Act.

(4) Another distinction to be noted is that under the previous law the purchasing co-proprietor was "entitled to hold the land" whereas it was laid down in the Orissa Act that he shall have no right to hold the land as a ryot. The difference in language is, in my opinion, deliberate & while the Orissa Act enacted that there should be a merger of the ryoti interest in the proprietary interest the law prior to the introduction of the Orissa Tenancy Act, 1913 was otherwise. The purchasing co-proprietor was certainly not a ryot because S. 22 (2) of the Bengal Act before its amendment in 1907 declared that the ryoti interest shall cease to exist. He had therefore some interest in the land which was not illusory or intangible. The right to hold the land subject to payment of rent to his co-proprietors was recognised by the law as a real right. The question accordingly is whether such right would pass to the purchaser at a revenue sale of the touzi. Section 13 of the Bengal Act XI (11) of 1859 empowers the Collector to put up to sale that share of the estate which has been separately registered & in respect of which a separate account has been kept. Section 54 declares the rights of a purchaser of a share in the estate sold under S. 13 & lays down that when a share or shares of an estate may be sold under the provisions of S. 13 or S. 14 the purchaser shall acquire the share or shares subject to all encumbrances & shall not acquire any rights which were not possessed by the previous owner or owners. The section declares in affirmative terms what the purchaser shall acquire & also contains a negative declaration as regards what he shall not acquire. On a plain reading of the section it appears that all that the purchaser acquires is only the share which the defaulting proprietor had in the estate; & what he does not acquire is any right which the previous owner did not possess. If I am right in my view of the provision in S. 22 (2) of the Bengal Act, as stated above, it cannot be said that the previous owner owned, in the land that he purchased from the occupancy ryot, any interest as owner of the estate, since S. 22 (2) kept the two interests separate & recognised the status of the purchasing co-proprietor as a tenant paying rent, to the general body of co-proprietors. It therefore follows that the deft-applt did not possess the interest, that he had purchased as proprietor. The section does not say that the purchaser at the revenue sale shall acquire all the rights which were possessed by the previous owner; in terms it expressly says that he shall not acquire any rights which were not possessed by the previous owner. This can only mean that the purchaser acquires no more than what was the property of the previous owner, viz., his share in the estate. The holding did not become the private land of the proprietor; it was held by him in a different capacity & therefore would not pass at the revenue sale to the auction-purchaser.

(5) I would accordingly allow this appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 299 of 1947, D/- 7-11-1950.

Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 142 and 144 — Adverse possession — Essentials — Landlord and Tenant — Non-transferable holding transferred — Possession of transferee for over 12 years, without landlord exercising his right of re-entry — Transferee acquires tenancy rights by adverse possession.

In order that possession may be adverse it must be actual, exclusive, and adequate in continuity, in publicity and in extent. It is not necessary that such possession should also be to the knowledge of the person against whom possession is asserted. It is sufficient that the possession be overt and without any attempt at concealment, so that the person against whom time is running ought, if he exercised vigilance, to be aware of what is happening.

When a non-transferable holding is transferred in its entirety, it amounts to an abandonment by the tenant of that holding. The landlord is entitled to exercise his right of re-entry on the date of transfer. The possession of the transferee is adverse from its very inception as he has entered upon the land under a void transaction. Time therefore runs against the landlord from the date of the transfer, and if the adverse possessor remains in possession for over twelve years, the title of the tenant is completely extinguished. The landlord's right to recover the same is also similarly extinguished if he does not enforce his right to re-enter or recover within the period of limitation. In such a case the adverse possessor acquires the tenancy rights. (Paras 4, 7)

PANIGRAHI J: This is an appeal against the reversing judgment of the Subordinate Judge, Cuttack, directing the dismissal of the pltf's suit for ejectment & damages. The facts — which are not in dispute — are that one Bai Panigrahi, an ancestor of the pltf & defts 2 to 6 who constitute one family, purchased some lands by two registered kabalas dated 27-8-1914 & 24-7-1917 from one Burunda Naik & his son respectively who were then the recorded tenants of those lands. The lands appertained to khata No. 249 in touzi No. 2219. As a result of the partition of the touzi the disputed plot fell in the separated touzi No. 7288 which was purchased by deft 1 at a revenue sale on 18-3-1918. In the Current Settlement the suit plots, which measure 70 decimals, were recorded in Khata No. 120 & in the remarks column the transferee's name was noted as being in possession by virtue of the two kabalas mentioned above. Deft 1 the landlord of the separated touzi brought rent suit in the year 1938 against Bhagat, son of Padi, & obtained a rent decree in Rent Suit No. 4078 of 1938-39. The holding was put up to sale in execution & purchased on 25-10-1938 by deft 1. In due course deft 1 took delivery through Ct on 26-1-1940. The pltf, therefore, filed the suit in 1944 for a declaration of his title & for possession with mesne profits. The pltf's case is that he has acquired occupancy right by reason of his adverse possession against the landlord for over twelve years & that the decree obtained against the original tenant, who had his right in the holding at the time of the suit, is not binding upon the pltf. The main contention on behalf of the first deft was that the pltf was never in possession of the disputed lands.

(2) Both the Cts below found that the pltf entered into possession under the sale-deeds mentioned above & was in possession right up to deft 1's purchase of the suit lands in rent Ct sale. The primary Ct further held that the pltf's possession since 1917 — when the disputed land became a separate holding — was adverse to the landlord & that he had acquired an occupancy right by being in adverse possession for over twelve years before the rent suit. The appellate Judge, however, differing from the trial Ct, held that the pltf should prove adverse possession for twelve years from the date of the auction-sale in favour of deft 1, in order to succeed in the suit. In the view of the lower appellate Ct the pltf was an unrecognised transferee & the decree against the recorded tenant was a valid decree. He further held that the pltf's possession as a tenant of the land & his payment of water-tax cannot be said to be adverse as it had not been brought to the notice of deft 1 nor could any knowledge be imputed to him. In any event, knowledge of deft 1 can be said to have commenced from the date of publication of the Current Settlement Record of Rights, & not before that. In this view of the facts the appellate Ct reversed the judgment of the learned Munsif & dismissed the pltf's suit.

(3) The only point that falls to be considered in second appeal is whether the pltf has acquired the status of an occupancy raiyat by reason of his adverse possession for over twelve years prior to the date of the rent suit. Mr. Das Gupta learned counsel for the pltf-applt contends that it is not necessary for the pltf to establish that the landlord had knowledge of his possession which was adverse since its inception as he had purchased a non-transferable holding. It cannot be seriously challenged that the suit plots were recorded as complete holdings in the separated touzi after the partition of the original touzi, & that the landlord was sixteen-annas landlord of the tenant who was the full owner of the holding. If, therefore, the original tenant is shown to have lost possession to a trespasser who completes his title by being in possession for over twelve years, it cannot be said that the holding is still represented by the original tenant who has completely lost his title after the expiry of twelve years. It is also urged that if the possession is overt, the landlord must be deemed to have had knowledge unless he is kept out of such knowledge by some attempt at concealment on the part of the possessor. This argument is met by Mr. Rao, learned counsel for the resp, by the contention that the alleged adverse possession of the pltf is only an encumbrance on the holding which is voidable by the auction-purchaser & that as in the present case the landlord himself happens to be the auction purchaser there was no need for avoidance. Mr. Rao also attempted to raise a new point before us that the transferor was all along in occupation of the land as the sub-tenant of the pltf & he relied upon the evidence of a solitary witness who, in the opinion of the Cts below, had been gained over. Another point that was urged by Mr. Rao is that sale in favour of the pltf's ancestor being only of portions of a holding, the landlord is not bound to exercise his right of re-entry & that the original tenant continues to be liable for the rent. We are satisfied that the last two arguments of Mr. Rao are untenable in view of the admitted facts in this case. The only point, therefore, on which the decision of this appeal should depend is whether the pltf has acquired the right of the recorded tenant by reason of his adverse possession for over twelve years as against the landlord.

(4) In order that possession may be adverse it must be actual, exclusive, & adequate in continuity, in publicity & in extent. It was, however, held in some of the reported cases, that such possession should also be to the knowledge of the person against whom possession is asserted. But this view of the law can no longer be maintained as correct in view of the decision of the Judicial Committee in 'Secretary of State v. Devendralal Khan', 61 I A 78: (A I R (21) 1934 P C 23), where the contention was raised on behalf of Govt that the adverse possession of the deft was not brought to their notice. Lord Macmillan, after giving a general exposition of the requirements of adverse possession, observed that there was no authority for such a requirement. It was held,

"It is sufficient that the possession be overt & without any attempt at concealment, so that the person against whom time is running ought, if he exercised vigilance, to be aware of what is happening."

This view has been reiterated in a later case of the P. C. reported is 'Srish Chandra v. Baijinath', 62 I A 40: (A I R (22) 1935 P C 36). It is therefore now well established that, in order to constitute adverse possession, it is not necessary that the acts of possession should be exercised to the knowledge of the pltf. When a non-transferable holding is transferred in its entirety, it amounts to an abandonment by the tenant of that holding. The landlord is entitled to exercise his right of re-entry on the date of transfer. The possession of the transferee is adverse from its very inception as he has entered upon the land under a void transaction. Time therefore runs against the landlord from the date of transfer, & if the adverse possessor remains in possession for over twelve years, the title of the tenant is completely extinguished. The landlord's right to recover the same is also similarly extinguished if he does not re-enforce his right to re-enter or recover within the period of limitation. This is the principle laid down in 'Probhavati Dasi v. Taibaturinessa', 19 C L J 62: (A I R (1) 1914 Cal 196), where Jenkins C. J. observed that the only way of overcoming the bar of limitation would be by establishing a case within S. 18, Limitation Act, & that the statute of limitation operates to create a limited interest of tenancy in the person who has been in continuous possession for the requisite period . The case reported in 'Nalini Kanta v. Govinda Ramanuja', A I R (21) 1934 Pat 458: (150 I C 102) lends support to the contention that time would run against the landlord from the date of his knowledge but that case was not one in ejectment & is easily distinguishable. The case reported in 'Rajendra Narayan v. Nilmani Behera', 3 Cut L T 64: (A I R (24) 1937 Pat 593) is more to the point & follows the P. C. view in 'Secy of State v. Devendra Lal', 61 I A 78: (A I R (21) 1934 P C 23), cited above.

(5) Having regard to the concurrent findings of the Cts below that the pltf had been in possession right from the date of his purchase to the date of the rent sale in favour of the first deft, that is to say, for a period of nearly twenty years prior to the institution of the rent suit, it cannot be asserted that the landlord was unaware of time running against him if, by the exercise of ordinary vigilance, he could have known it.

(6) Mr. Rao very strenuously argued that the pltf did not file any rent receipts in proof of his possession, but it is not shown that the landlord received any rent from the recorded tenant during this period. The fact that the transferee's name was recorded in the Current Settlement shows he was in possession prior to the date of the Settlement.

(7) I have therefore no hesitation in holding that the pltf had been in adverse possession of the suit holding for over twelve years prior to the institution of the rent suit openly & continuously & that he had acquired the tenancy right by such adverse possession. The auction sale of the suit holding did not have the effect of conveying the holding as the pltf was not made a party to the rent suit. The pltf is accordingly entitled to a decree as prayed for.

(8) The judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is set aside & that of the trial Ct is restored. The appeal is allowed with costs throughout.

When an appln is made for the grant of probate of a disputed will, the Ct called upon to do so has to be fully satisfied that the document has been duly and validly executed and attested and that it is the legal declaration of the intention of the testator with respect to the property which he desires to be carried into effect after his death. The onus, in such cases, rests on the person who propounds the will to establish that it is the will of a free and capable testator who at the time had a sound disposing state of mind. Where circumstances exist, which excite the suspicion of the Ct, it is for those who propound the will to remove such suspicion and to prove affirmatively that the testator knew and approved the contents of the document. This onus is all the greater where the person who propounds the will takes a benefit. Where there is conflict of evidence and the best evidence relating to the factum of the execution

When a will which has not been registered during the lifetime of the testator, and has not seen the light of the day for about three years after the death of the testator is put forward and a probate is asked for, something more is required than the bare and formal proof of execution and attestation, by calling in a few only of the persons connected with it. It has to be satisfactorily made out that it is the free and conscious act of the testator and for this purpose the best evidence of all the circumstances connected with the execution of the will has to be fully made out. (Para 4)

DAS J: This is an appeal against the judgment of the learned Dist J. of Cuttack, granting probate to one Fagu Prusti, of the will of one Narayan Prusti. The appct is the brother of the testator, who is also the executor under the will. The objector, who is the applt before us, is the wife of the testator. The will is said to have been executed on 30-5-38. The testator admittedly died two months thereafter on 2-8-1938. He was about 35 years old at the time of his death. He left him surviving the applt, his wife Nilambar Bewa, and a daughter aged about 6 years, Padma Dei. Subsequent to the birth of his daughter, he appears to have had two male children, one after another, but they had both died before the date of the alleged will. It would appear from the evidence of the applt that the second of the male children was born about a year prior to the testator's death & died when he was a baby less than 10 months' old. The will purports to be executed in favour of one Brajabandhu Prusti, the minor son of Fagu Prusti, the resp. In support of the due execution of the will, two persons purporting to be the attestors thereof, have been examined as P. Ws. 1 & 2 & the will has been marked as Ex. 1. The wife who has examined herself as D. W. 1 & who appears to be literate & claims to be acquainted with the writing & signature of her husband, denies that the signature in the alleged will is that of her husband. The will also purports to bear the thumb impression of the testator. No documents have been filed on either side for comparison of the alleged signature or thumb impression in the will. The will has not been registered & it has been produced by the resp for the first time in the year 1941 in connection with certain land revenue proceedings. It would appear that the applt, Nilambar Bewa, applied for mutation of her name in the place of her deceased husband in respect of his properties. But the resp, Fagu Prusti objected on behalf of his minor son & produced the will in support of his objection before the Revenue Ct as appears from Ex. 4, the order in the land-revenue proceedings dated 24-10-41. The proceedings terminated against the applt & we have been informed at the Bar that the applt has thereupon filed a title-suit which is now pending & has been stayed to await the disposal of this appeal.

(2) The applt has, in addition to challenging the genuineness of the will, contended that her husband died undivided, implying thereby that the will is invalid. This contention has presumably been raised with a view to take advantage of the provisions of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act of 1937, which has been made applicable retrospectively to the agricultural property in Orissa by Orissa Act of 1944. She has also raised the contention that the properties of the testator disclosed in the probate proceedings & specifically mentioned in the will are far less than what the testator died possessed of. Neither of these questions, namely, as to the testamentary capacity of the testator or the extent of the properties in respect of which the will may become operative are matters with which the Ct is concerned in these probate proceedings. It is therefore unnecessary to say anything regarding the same. It may also be mentioned that under the terms of the alleged will, the appct is to be the executor only during the minority of his son who, at the time of the alleged execution of the will, was 14 years old as spoken to by P. W. 1 & who therefore must have been major by 1944 when this appln was made. It is doubtful whether under the circumstances, the appct had a right to apply for the probate. No such question has been raised before us & it is unnecessary therefore to say anything further about it.

(3) When an appln is made for the grant of probate of a disputed will, the Ct called upon to do so has to be fully satisfied that the document has been duly & validly executed & attested & that it is the legal declaration of the intention of the testator with respect to the property which he desires to be carried into effect after his death. The onus, in such cases, rests on the person who propounds the will to establish that it is the will of a free & capable testator who at the time had a sound disposing state of mind. But where circumstances exist, which excite the suspicion of the Ct, it is for those who propound the will to remove such suspicion & to prove affirmatively that the testator knew & approved the contents of the document. This onus is all the greater where the person who propounds the will takes a benefit. These propositions are well-established & beyond any question. See 'Barry v. Butlin', (1838) 2 Moore P C 480: (46 R R 123); 'Tyrrell v. Palnton', (1894) P D 151: (70 L T 453. No doubt mere unreasonableness or inofficiousness of a will is not to be treated as a suspicious circumstance, if there is cogent & reliable proof of valid execution by the testator in a sound disposing state of mind. See 'Monghibhai v. Pragji Dayal', A I R (12) 1925 P C 198: (89 I C 88). Nor should any mere circumstantial improbabilities be allowed to outweigh reliable & positive testimony. See 'Chotey Narain Singh v. Ratan Koer', 22 Cal 519: (22 I A 12 P C). It is also true to say that bare conflict of testimony as to the factum of valid execution by the testator or as to his capacity is not to be treated as an item of suspicion within the meaning of the rules laid down in 'Barry v. Butlin', (1838) 2 Moo P C 480: (46 R R 123) & 'Tyrell v. Painton', (1894 P D 151: 70 L T 453). See 'Jarat Kumari v. Bissessur

Dutt', 39 Cal 245: (13 I C 577); 'Sarojini Dassi v. Haridas Ghose', A I R (9) 1922 Cal 12: (49 Cal 235); & 'Prasannamoyi Debi v. Baikuntha Nath', A I R (9) 1922 Cal 260: (49 Cal 132). But where there is such conflict of evidence and the best evidence relating to the factum of the execution & the circumstances relating thereto has been given, the Ct may well hold the will not proved. See 'Bindeshri Prasad v. Mt. Baisakha Bibi', A I R (7) 1920 P C 70: (61 I C 431) & A I R 1930 P C 140 (sic). It is in the light of these well-established principles that the evidence & the circumstances in this case have to be considered. A perusal of the learned Judge's judgment discloses a lack of grasp of the above principles & it therefore falls to us to make an independent appreciation.

(3a) The will purports to be addressed in favour of Brajabandhu Prusti, son of Fagu Prusti, as the donee thereunder. At the outset, it specifies the property which at the time is said to be owned by the testator. Its provisions may be translated as follows:

"I have been suffering from 'Vatha Roga' for a long time. I have no child excepting a daughter named Padma Dei. I have no expectation of having any children in future. I have been looking on you Brajabandhu Prusti from your childhood with affection as a son. You have also been conducting yourself like a son, being obedient & well-behaved. I am therefore very much attached to you. Consequently, I am placing much hope in you for future. My father-in-law Gopal Sahu having seen my weak condition, has kept away my wife, his daughter, for a long time in his house. He is also a habitual litigant & I am therefore apprehensive that he will after me, involve any property which I may leave, in waste & loss. In order to avoid disputes & for securing proper arrangement for the offering of Pindas, in order to secure salvation in the other world, & because there is uncertainty as to what may happen to me in course of time, I am executing this will, of my own accord freely with a sound & settled mind. The above mentioned Brajabandhu Prusti will after my death get, & in my place become the owner & possessor of all the property which I have mentioned above & all other property which I may acquire during my lifetime. No other person can raise any objection to this. Any such objection will be untenable in view of this will. This is proper for you (Brajbandhu Prusti) the donee under this, viz., you as well as Fagu Prusti whom I am appointing as executor during your minority, will carry out duly the arrangement hereunder mentioned for Khork Poshak (maintenance) of my daughter Padma Dei & of my wife Nilambara Dei, viz., for the mother annually 2 bharans of paddy & eighteen rupees & for the daughter till her marriage annually one Bharan of paddy & twelve rupees, will be regularly supplied, also for the marriage of my daughter an expense of not less than Rs. 150/- will be incurred ,also towards her Jautuk (marriage gift) one mana of Sarad paddy land in Ratisinga village will be given. If she is unwilling to take the land, she will be given the value thereof. Aslo according to family usage, her usual requirements will be met. The funeral ceremonies of myself & my wife will also be duly performed. So long as my wife & daughter are in Joint mess like me or if they leave our ancestral house & go anywhere else, they will not be entitled to receive maintenance as above. If my wife leaves the ancestral house & goes away elsewhere, she will not be entitled to take my daughter with her, if my wife goes outside as above, my executor will look after my daughter as her guardian. If necessary, he can for the purpose have resort to Ct in his capacity as guardian. Also if you both give any trouble in the matter of supplying maintenance as above they will be entitled to take the necessary proceedings through Ct & realise what is due to them. I have appointed your father Fagu Prusti an executor in order that he may look after all matters as above stated in case I happen to die during your minority. You will be entitled to take over all the responsibility from Fagu Prusty, on your attaining majority if you so choose."

This is written by one Krupasindu Das of Talakusuma, & attested by four persons, (1) Laxman of Gurupailo, (2) Harekrishna Gochhait of Baharana, (3) Dharanidhara Das of Soralio, & (4) Dadhi Sahu of Tala Kusuma. It has also been signed by the resp, Fagu Prusti, & one Jagannath Prusti, another cosharer in token of their agreement to the will. Out of these seven persons connected with the will only the attestors, namely, Dharanidhara Das & Harekrishna Gochait have been examined as P. Ws. 1 & 2 respectively. The testator is a resident of the village Baharana. P. W. 1 who is a resident of a different village gave evidence that he happened to go over to the testator's village that day in order to place some orders for preparation of certain ornaments with one Hari Sahu, whose house is close to the testator's house. He says that when he was sitting there, he was called by the testator for attesting the will. He went to the testator's house & saw there the scribe preparing a draft & remained there for about an hour. The executant signed & thumb-marked the will in his presence & in the presence of others who all attested the will in the presence of each other & in the presence of the testator. P. W. 2 who belongs to the same village as that of the testator, is his neighbour, with one house intervening. He says that the testator executed a will two months prior to his death & that one Krupasindhu scribed the will & he & others attested the will. He says that a draft was prepared first, that it was read to the executant, & that a fair copy was made & also read over, that the executant signed & thumb-marked the same & that all the rest of them thereupon attested. This is practically all the evidence on the strength of which the learned Judge has found in favour of the will.

(4) It appears to us that this evidence is wholly insufficient to satisfy the Ct with reference to the standards above indicated. When a will which has not been registered during the lifetime of the testator, & has not seen the light of the day for about three years after the death of the testator is put forward & a probate is asked for, something more is required than the bare & formal proof of execution & attestation, by calling in a few only of the persons connected with it, as in this case. It has to be satisfactorily made out that it is the free & conscious act of the testator & for this purpose the best evidence of all the circumstances connected with the execution of the will has to be fully made out. When such evidence is available & not given, it raises grave doubts even as regards the truth of the case relating to execution & attestation. In the present case, apart from the non-registration & late production of the will, there are a number of other circumstances which have not been sufficiently explained. The most material witnesses have not been examined. All the attesting witnesses, excepting one, happen to be residents of villages different from that of the testator. In a case of this kind, the scribe is generally the most important witness, but he has not been examined. It was said by P. W. 1 that the scribe was his neighbour & that he was suffering from a severe type of diabetes. When cross-examined, he says that he saw the scribe only a month prior to his giving deposition. This is no proof that the scribe was not available as a witness in these proceedings owing to any serious illness. One of the important questions that arise in a case of this kind is as to the custody of the alleged will from the moment of its execution till it sees the light of the day. The resp, the proponent of the will, has produced it into Ct, but has not examined himself. Admittedly he was connected with the execution of the will & he has signed it in token of his consent. According to the evidence of P. Ws. 1 & 2, he was also present at the time when the will was written & the will itself was for the benefit of his son. He is obviously very much interested in the will, though he may take no direct benefit under it, excepting by way of management of the property till his son attains majority. On the evidence of P. Ws. 1 & 2, the testator was having joint mess with him at the time of the alleged execution of the will & for sometime prior thereto. In the circumstances, he was the best person to explain the circumstances relating to the execution of the will & the entire background of the testator's situation which may have operated on his mind for making the particular provisions therein. He should also have been in a position to explain how the various persons from different villages happened to figure as attestors & why the will was not registered & in whose custody the will was after execution & how it came to his hands. The non-examination therefore of these two important witnesses, namely, the scribe & the resp, cannot but raise grave suspicion in the mind of the Ct as to the genuineness & bona fides of this will. Out of the two witnesses actually examined, P. W. 1 is in the nature of a chance witness. P. W. 2 says in his evidence that the testator was in a sound state of mind when he executed the will, but he adds curiously enough that he was 'then' having a fit of epilepsy. This clearly shows that, according to this witness, the will was executed when the attestor had at best probably just recovered from an epileptic fit. It is therefore obviously necessary to scrutinise the evidence carefully as to whether the alleged will represents a free & volitional act of the testator at a time when he was in a position to give his consideration to all the circumstances which would normally operate on a person's mind when he proposes to make a will. The only evidence of this as given by P. W. 2 consists in his statement that the testator called him from his house & told him that since his wife had left him, he would execute a will leaving maintenance allowance for his wife & daughter, & that the scribe prepared a draft which was read over to the executant & was altered according to his suggestion. The other witness, P. W. 1 purports to corroborate this evidence as to the draft & alteration thereof at the suggestion of the testator. According to his evidence, he had been sent for & came to the place while the scribe was still preparing the draft. P. W. 2 however specifically says that by the time P. W. 1 came to the place, Ex. 1 (which was the original will) was almost written out. This, if true, must indicate that P. W. 1 was not on the scene at the time of the draft. P. Ws. 1 & 2 therefore cannot be said to corroborate each other in their evidence relating to the draft of the will. The draft itself is not forthcoming, the scribe not having been examined. In these circumstances, it is difficult to accept the evidence of P. Ws. 1 & 2 as enough to satisfy the requisite standard of proof in such a case, though nothing specifically has been definitely or clearly brought out as against them for their speaking in support of a forged will. This difficulty is all the more strengthened when the provisions of the will & the background of the circumstances in which the will is said to have come into existence are scrutinised & examined.

(5) The testator was only about 35 years old by the time he made the will. It is clear that he was having children in the usual course through his wife. The last of his children having died within about a month or two prior to the date of his making the alleged will, there is no apparent reason for thinking that by that time, he had lost all hope of having any male children. It is true that he died within about two months after the alleged execution of the will, but this is by itself no indication that he was then apprehensive of death. Both according to the wife, D. W. 1 as also according to the neighbour, P. W. 2, he died accidentally by getting drowned in a tank when he had an epileptic fit. There is some evidence that the testator was subject to attacks of epileptic fits, but whether he was so afflicted with this as a disease so as to make him apprehensive of death or whether thereby he was in any state of prolonged illness or debility, does not appear from the evidence. The will itself does not refer to any such health-condition of the testator, but merely states that the testator was suffering from "Bata Roga". Therefore it has not been satisfactorily established that either the family condition or the health condition of the testator was such at the time as would predispose him at the age of 35 to make a will. This is a matter on which the resp, Fagu Prusti, could have thrown some light by examining himself.

(6) There is some suggestion in the will that the testator was greatly attached to the legatee, Brajabandu Prusti, of which, however, there is absolutely no proof. Some attempt has been made in the evidence to make out that the testator & his wife, the applt, were not pulling on well with each other & that the applt had left her husband's house about three or four years prior to his death & stayed away with her parents & that she came back to the husband only within 21 days prior to his death. But there is absolutely no mention of any thing of this in the will itself. P. Ws. 1 & 2 have given some indefinite evidence to the above effect without categorically & definitely affirming it. The applt has been cross-examined on this point, but has strongly repudiated the suggestion. According to her, she was throughout with her husband until his death, but had gone to her father's place three years prior thereto to attend a marriage ceremony there & stayed there on that occasion for about 15 days & returned. Here again the resp Fagu Prusti, with whom the testator was said to be having joint mess during his wife's absence was the best person to speak to this matter & his non-examination tells against this story. Learned counsel for the resp also relied on Ex. 3, which is a portion of a post card dated 19-4-36 purporting to have been written to the testator. This post-card was shown to the applt when she was being examined & she admitted that portion was to be her handwriting. That portion Ex. 3 may be translated as follows:

"Marriage is not yet settled. If the motor comes, the marriage will not take place. If the motor is only for Rs. 600/-, it may take place. The daughter-in-law is not yet fixed. If you would have given horoscope we should have got it seen. You might have given Padma's horoscope. The disgrace you have offered is uncommon in this world. Please write how your health is. What more can I say? Anyhow you have offered disgrace. My father is not in Nua Bazar. How are you managing mess & drink."

This is relied on to show that the husband & wife were not pulling on well with each other at the time. Apart from the fact that the contents of this portion have not been specifically put to the applt in her cross-examination there is nothing in the disjointed & rather unintelligible sentences in this letter to lead to an inference that there was any ill-will between the husband & the wife at the time or that the same continued until his death. It is therefore clear that no alleged ill-will between the husband & the wife as an operative cause for the making of the will has been made out.

(7) The provisions of the will completely disinherit the wife & the only young daughter of the testator & give the property to the nephew. No such family situation has been established which would prima facie have predisposed the testator to have made such a will. It has been urged that a provision has been made for the maintenance of the wife and the daughter & for the marriage & other expenses of the daughter & that that provision was fair & reasonable having regard to the extent of the property & that therefore there is no reason to attribute any unnaturalness to the will. It has been pointed out also that the property is small & has been valued even by the Collector only at Rs. 2100/- & that the provision for maintenance for both the mother & daughter together comes to about 3 bharans of paddy & Rs. 30/- annually & is reasonable. It is suggested that the testator may well have been unwilling that the family property should get into the hands of his father-in-law, who being a litigant would waste it away so as not to make the property ultimately available to the family members or reversioners. There is absolutely no proof that the father-in-law is a litigant. The only thing that has been brought out, is an answer in the cross-examination of the applt, wherein she stated that her father goes to Cuttack, say once a week in connection with his Ct affairs, which may well be quite bona fide & honest on his part in connection with his own affairs. The provision for maintenance itself is rather curious. It says that the wife & the daughter will not be entitled to receive the maintenance so long as they are in joint mess like him (that is presumably with the brother Fagu Prusti); or if they leave the ancestral house & go anywhere else. The provision for maintenance thus appears to be hedged in with unreasonable restrictions apart from the question whether in quantum it is fair in relation to the property. The will also says that if the wife leaves the ancestral house, she will not be entitled to take the minor daughter with her & enjoins on the executor to take steps, if required, to assert his rights as guardian of the minor daughter. Admittedly the applt & her daughter have left the ancestral house of the testator shortly after his death, but no proceedings have so far been taken, which is unlikely if the will is true & meant to be acted upon.

(8) It is clear, therefore, looked at either with reference to the inherent probabilities or as regards the positive evidence given, that there is every reason to doubt the genuineness or bona fides of the will, Ex. 1. In my view, the resp has not discharged the burden which lies heavily on him. The will, Ex. 1 must be held not to have been proved. The appln for probate must accordingly be dismissed.

(9) The appeal is therefore allowed with costs both here & in the Ct below.

Brajasundar Deb Pltf.-Applt. v. Binode Rout and others—Defts.—Resps.

Second Appeal No. 25 of 1944 D/- 8-3-1949.

(a) Grant — Service grant — Resumption of — Onus.

There is a clear distinction between the grant of an office to be remunerated by the use of land and the grant of land burdened with service. In the former case the land will prima facie be resumable; in the latter case prima facie it will not; but the terms of the grant or the circumstances in which it was made may establish a condition of the grant that it was resumable. The onus will be upon the grantor to make out such a condition. [Para 5]

(b) Land tenures—Service tenure — Liability to attachment—Civil P. C. (1908), S. 60 (1) (f) — Tenancy Laws — Orissa Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1913), S. 192.

In a pure service-tenure resumable at the will of the landlord, there can be no saleable interest vested in the tenant, and his interest (if any) will not be attachable under S. 60 (1) (f), Civil P. C. which applies to rent suits also by virtue of S. 192, Orissa Tenancy Act. [Para 8]

(c) Record of Rights—Entry in—'Jagiri ghenan tenancy'—Expression 'Jagir' may mean resumable service-tenure but when used in conjunction with word 'ghenan' makes such tenancy heritable and transferable without permission of landlord and as such it cannot be held to be resumable. [Para 10]

(d) Tenancy Laws—Orissa Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1913), S. 117 (3)—Presumption as to correctness—Earlier entry if by itself sufficient to rebut presumption of correctness of later entry.

The presumption of correctness, under S. 117 (3), attaches only to the Current Settlement record-of-rights and as regards the previous record-of rights the proviso to S. 117 (3) says that such entry shall be admissible as evidence of the facts existing at the time such entry was made. Therefore, an entry in an earlier record-of-rights will not by itself be sufficient to rebut the presumption of correctness in the later record-of-rights. [Para 9]

(e) Record of Rights—Entry in—Tenant recorded as 'sthitiban' with note that low rental was fixed because of services rendered by him to landlord—Meaning of—Presumptive value of entry—Tenancy laws—Orissa Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1913). Ss. 3 (23), 28 and 232.

A settlement entry cannot be said to be inconsistent because in one column the status of the tenant is shown as 'sthitiban' and in another column it is noted that the low rental is fixed because of the services rendered by the tenant to the landlord. [Para 11]

The status of a tenant as a settled raiyat is in no way inconsistent with his paying lesser rental than the fair rent because of the services rendered by him. There is no provision in the Orissa Tenancy Act which prohibits a settled raiyat from entering into a contract with his landlord for a substantial reduction in the rent of his holding in lieu of the services rendered by him to the landlord. Neither S. 28 nor S. 232, operates as a bar to such a contract and on the other hand the definition of the expression 'tenant' given in S. 3 (23) shows that such a contract is possible. [Para 6]

Such an entry has presumptive value to the effect that tenancy was created burdened with some service and the only right left to the zamindar is to ask for full assessment of rent when the services are terminated or are no longer required. [Para 11]

L. Mohanty—for Appellant; S. N. Songupta—for Resps.

Narasimham J.—This is an appeal from the appellate judgment of the District Judge, Cuttack, reversing the judgment of the Munsif, Cuttack, and dismissing the suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant for eviction of the defendants from certain plots appertaining to khata No. 197 in village Deulsahi and for other consequential reliefs.

[2] The plaintiff is the proprietor of Aul estate and village Deulsahi is within his zamindari. In the last settlement (1922 32), the said khata (Ex. 6) was recorded in the names of defendants 1 to 4 as 'sthitiban' with a rental of Rs. 11-7-0 but it was further noted that the rental was fixed at a low figure in view of the rendering of 'chela' service by the tenants to the zamindar. In the Revision Settlement records-of-rights finally published in 1911 (Exs. 5 & 5-a) the same rental was shown as payable; but as regards the status of the tenants the following entry was made: 'Chela jagiri ghenan".

[3] The plaintiff's case as set forth in the plaint was that the disputed lands were given as jagir (service tenure) to one Dinabandhu Dakhinkabat in lieu of remuneration for services which he rendered to the Zamindar as 'chela' and that a nominal quit rent (ghena jama) of Rs. 11-7-0 was fixed because of the services rendered by the tenant to the landlord. Subsequently the said Dinabahdhu Dakhinkabat failed to pay even the quit rent and thereupon the Zamindar brought the property to sale in execution of a rent decree. Defendant 1 purchased it and continued to perform the services as 'chela' to the Zamindar and remained in possession of the lands. During the last settlement, however, the said defendant fraudulently got the lands entered as his 'sthitiban'. The plaintiff, however, maintained that the lands were granted on pure service tenure and that the plaintiff was entitled to resume the same and eject the defendants in consequence of their failure to render the services. The defendants' case, however, was that the lands were settled with the ancestors of Dinabandhu Dakhinkabat by the ancestors of the plaintiff more than 100 years ago on tenancy rights; but that the rent was fixed at a low figure because of the services rendered by the tenant to the zamindar. The stipulation, however, was that if the services were not rendered the zamindar would be entitled to assess the lands to fair rent. The defendants claim that the current settlement entry recording them as 'sthitiban' was correct and that the plaintiff was in no case entitled to evict them from the lands though he may seek for assessment of fair rent in view of the fact that services are no longer rendered by them.

[4] The plaintiff has miserably failed to prove the case as set forth in his plaint. There is absolutely no evidence on record to show that the disputed lands were granted to Dinabandhu Dakhinkabat as 'jagir' by way of remuneration for the services rendered by him to the zamindar as 'chela'. The only witness examined by the plaintiff, namely, Keshabanand Das (P.W. 1) frankly admitted in his cross-examination that he entered the services of the plaintiff only in 1921 and that he had never seen the said Dinabandhu Dakhinkabat. He also admitted that there were no papers in the zamindar's shirasta showing the settlement of the lands of jagir with the said Dinabandhu or the rendering on services by the said Dinabandhu to the zamindar. Thus there is neither oral nor documentary evidence to prove the actual origin of the tenancy. The learned Advocate on behalf of the plaintiff has, however, relied mainly on the settlement entries (Exs. 5, 5a and 6) and certain admissions made by defendant 1 in his pleadings and in his evidence.

[5] In a case of this type where the right of the tenant is associated with the rendering of service to the landlord, the main question for decision is whether the lands were originally granted burdened with service or else whether the original grant was merely of an office to be remunerated by the use of certain lands. The distinction between these two classes of grants was pointed out by the Privy Council as early as 1870 in Alexander John Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Tuquee, 13 M I.A. 438: (5 Beng. L. R. 529 P.C.) and reiterated in Lakhamgouda v. Baswantrao, A. I. R. (18) 1931 P. C. 157 : (132 I. C. 736). I may quote the following passage from the latter decision :

"The distinction to be borne in mind is between the grant of an office to be remunerated by the use of land and the grant of land burdened with service. In the former case the land will prima facie be resumable, in the latter case prima facie it will not but the terms of the grant or the circumstances in which it was made may establish a condition of the grant that it was resumable. The onus will be upon the grantor to make out such a condition."

To a similar effect are the observations of the Bombay High Court reported in Lakhamgavda Basaprabhu v. Keshav Annaji, 28 Bom. 305 : (6 Bom. L. R. 364).

[6] It is, therefore, necessary to consider how far the settlement entries and the other pieces of evidence adduced in the case show that the landlord is entitled to resume the lands and evict the defendants therefrom. In the current settlement it is clearly noted that the status of the tenants is 'sthitiban'. That expression means 'status of settled raiyat' (see Appen. 18 to Dalziel's Settlement Report) Doubtless it was further noted that the rent payable was fixed at a low figure because of the 'chela' services rendered by the tenant to the landlord. It was argued that this entry regarding the performance of service to the landlord was inconsistent with the status of the tenant as 'sthitiban' and that consequently the said current settlement entry may be deemed to have been rebutted by the other entries in the khatian itself. In support of this argument reliance has been placed on Sankar Malik v. Braja Sunder Deb, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Pat. 587 : (191 I. C. 89) in which also similar entries in respect of a service-tenure in the same zamindari were held to be inconsistent. That case is doubtless distinguishable from the present case on facts because in that case apart from the settlement entry there was other evidence (which was accepted by the Courts) to the effect that the lands were settled with the tenant on condition of his rendering service. But apart from this distinction on facts, with great respect to the learned Judge who decided that case, I cannot accept the view that the two entries in the settlement khatian are inconsistent. The status of a tenant as a settled raiyat is in no way inconsistent with his paying lesser rental than the fair rent because of the services rendered by him. There is no provision in the Orissa Tenancy Act which prohibits a settled raiyat from entering into a contract with his landlord for a substantial reduction in the rent of his holding in lieu of the services rendered by him to the landlord. Neither S. 28 nor S. 232 operates as a bar to such a contract and on the other hand the definition of the expression 'tenant' given in S. 3 (23) shows that such a contract is possible. The reason as to why an entry of the above type was made by the settlement authorities in the zamindari of Aul will be clear from a perusal of Paras. 60 and 395 (pp. 22 and 139) of Mr. Dalziel's Settlement Report. The settlement authorities were fully aware of the distinction between 'the grant of land in lieu of services' and 'the grant of land burdened with services' and they made careful enquiries with a view to ascertain whether the lands were originally settled as raiyati holdings and then a portion of the rent was commuted to service or else the lands were held purely on condition of rendering service. In the former class of cases they gave the raiyati status to the tenant. In the latter class of cases, however, the lands were shown as 'jagir' resumable by the landlord when the services were no longer required. I may as well quote the following passage from Para. 395:

"The main question of status that arose at attestation was concerning the recording of the so called ghenan jagirdars who are common in this estate. These persons perform services and also pay quit rents, and an enquiry was made as to whether they were really jagirdars or ordinary raiyats performing service in lieu of rent. Many such tenants were recorded as settled raiyats at attestation but at S. 116 stage the landlord succeeded in most cases in getting the status changed to jagir, the tenants themselves presenting little opposition."

Thus from the Settlement Report itself it is clear that the settlement authorities made careful enquiries and recorded such tenants as 'sthitiban' only when they were satisfied that the tenancy was originally created as a raiyati holding and there was a commutation of rent to service. In fact the Zamindar of Aul hotly contested the proceedings before the settlement authorities and in several instances got the entries corrected but so far as the present khata No. 195 was concerned his objection was disallowed (Ex. B). The settlement entry is thus not based on any mistaken view of law (as has been inferred in some unreported decisions of the Patna High Court) but it is based on a careful enquiry regarding the origin of the tenancy in every individual case. Consequently, the presumption of correctness under S. 117 (3), Orissa Tenancy Act, applies with great force and a very heavy burden is cast on the plaintiff to rebut this presumption by reliable evidence.

[7] The next question for decision is whether the presumption of correctness attaching to the settlement entry has been rebutted by evidence. I have already pointed out that on the plaintiff's side there is no evidence worth the name to show the origin of the tenancy. Similarly, his reliance on the evidence of defendant 1 seems futile. Defendant 1 himself has no personal knowledge of the origin of the tenancy. All that he has stated is that he never performed any service to the landlord. In his written statement also he never admitted that the lands were settled with the ancestors of Dinabandhu Dakhinkabat by way of remuneration for services to be rendered by them to the Zamindar. On the contrary, his clear case was that the lands were settled with them on tenancy rights; but that the rent was fixed at a low figure in view of the services rendered and the agreement was that the rent may be enhanced to the prevailing rent of the locality if the services were no longer required. I do not find anything either in the written statement or in the evidence of defendant 1 which would go to support the plaintiff's case or rebut the settlement entry.

[8] It is an admitted fact that the suit lands were put up for sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent due thereof and purchased at court auction in 1924 by defendants 1 to 4. The previous tenant was one Dinabandhu Dakhinkabat whose name stands recorded in the Revision Settlement Khatian. The conduct of the landlord in his bringing the tenancy lands to rent sale shows unmistakably that he recognised the existence of a saleable interest in the lands of the tenant. If, as now claimed by the landlord, the tenancy was resumable being a pure service-tenure, it is inexplicable as to why he brought the lands to sale instead of suing for ejectment of the service tenant. In a pure service-tenure resumable at the will of the landlord, there can be no saleable interest vested in the tenant, and his interest (if any) will not be attachable under S. 60 (1) (f), Civil P. C. Omprasad v. Rahimoddin, A. I. R. (33) 1946 Nag. 147: (I. L. R. (1946) Nag. 112) and Neti Anjaneyalu v Sri Venugopala Rice Mill Ltd., 45 Mad. 620 : (A. I. R. (9) 1922 Mad. 197 F. B.). That section applies to rent suits also by virtue of sub s. (2) of S. 192, Orissa Tenancy Act. Thus the conduct of the landlord in bringing the property to sale for arrears of rent due thereof in 1924 is consistent with the current settlement entry recognising the tenant to have the status of a settled raiyat and is totally inconsistent with the present claim of the landlord to resume the tenancy on the termination of the services by the tenant.

[9] It was next argued that in the Revision Settlement Khatians (Exs. 5 and 5 A) the tenancy was clearly noted as 'chela jagiri ghenan' and that nothing has intervened between the date of the final publication of the Revision Settlement record-of-rights of 1911 and the date of the final publication of the Current Settlement record-of-rights (about 1930) to change the the status of the tenants. The presumption of correctness, however, attaches only to the Current Settlement record of-rights and as regards the previous record-of-rights the proviso to sub-s. (3) of S. 117, Orissa Tenancy Act, says that such entry shall be admissible as evidence of the facts existing at the time such entry was made. Therefore, an entry in an earlier record of-rights will not by itself be sufficient to rebut the presumption of correctness in the later record-of-rights. The various cases on which Mr. Mohanty has relied as regards the relative value to be given to conflicting entries in two records-of-rights (Raghunath Misra v. Ram Behera, A. I. R. (9) 1922 Pat. 548: (1 Pat. 167), Abhiram v. Chintamani, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Pat. 164: (6 Pat. 342) and Naurangi v. Kanhaiya, A. I. R. (17) 1930 Pat. 568: (123 I. C. 390)) all relate to the corresponding provisions either in the Bengal Tenancy Act or in the Bihar Tenancy Act which are however, inapplicable to the present case. In those Acts, there is no express provision in the statute itself regarding the value to be attached to previous settlement entries and there is no provision corresponding to the proviso to sub-s. (3) of S. 117, Orissa Tenancy Act. In the Orissa Tenancy Act, however, there is an express statutory provision regarding the relative value to be attached to the earlier and later settlement entries and in view of that provision any discussion of the case law on the subject is quite unnecessary.

[10] But the Revision Settlement record-of-rights does not in any way materially help the plaintiff. There is absolutely no evidence on record as to what is meant by the expression 'jagiri ghenan.' Doubtless the expression 'jagir' may mean resumable service-tenure but its use in conjunction with the word 'ghenan' may change the meaning completely. There is no glossary attached to the Revision Settlement of Mr. James for the purpose of ascertaining the meaning of the expression 'jagiri ghenan.' But there is an earlier Settlement Report (1892 to 1901) of Aul Estate made by Babu Debendra Nath Bose in which there are some passages dealing with the rights of ghenan tenants and jagir tenants. In paras. 59 and 66 of that Report ghenan tenancies in Aul estate have been noted to be heritable and transferable and those tenants have a higher status than ordinary raiyats because the holding is transferable without the consent or permission of the landlord. In para. 60 of that Report, there is a reference to jagir grants which are said to be resumable. But a careful reading of paras. 59, 60 and 66 of that Report would indicate that the settlement authorities made a distinction between 'ghenan tenancies' on the one hand which are heritable and transferable and pure jagir tenancies' which are resumable on the termination of services. Though there is no discussion about 'jagiri ghenan tenancies' it would prima facie appear that the use of the word 'ghenan' makes such tenancies heritable and transferable without the permission of the landlord. If there is such a right how can it be held that such a tenancy is resumable? At any rate, the burden is very heavy on the landlord to show what exactly was meant by the expression 'ghenan jagir' used in the Revision Settlement and in the absence of any evidence on his side and in view of the observations given in paras 59, 60 and 66 of Mr. Bose's Settlement Report, I would hold that even the Revision Settlement entry does not indicate that the tenancy is resumable.

[11] Mr. Mohanty has relied on Sanniyasi v. Salur Zamindar, 7 Mad 268, Maga Devi v. Vakrama, 14 Mad. 365 and Radha Pershad Singh v. Budhu Pershad, 22 Cal. 938 in support of his argument that service-tenures are resumable on the termination of services. But these three cases are clearly distinguishable on facts. In the last case there is a clear finding that the service-tenure was created for the purpose of doing the private work of the zamindar and that it was not a grant of an estate burdened with the performance. In the former two cases there is no clear discussion about the difference between 'the making of a grant in lieu of services' and 'the making of a grant burdened with services'. But the general trend of discussion seems to indicate that the tenancies were of the former class. In the present case, however, not only is there total absence of any evidence on the side of the plaintiff to show that the tenancy was created by way of remuneration for services rendered by the tenant to the landlord but there is the current settlement entry which indicates that a permanent tenancy was created though a lesser rent than that prevailing in the locality was fixed because of certain services rendered by the tenant to the landlord. The presumption of correctness attaching to it has not been rebutted. Mr. Mohanty has also relied on two unreported decisions of the Patna High Court in S. A. No. 154 of 1937 and S. A. No. 45 of 1941. Both these decisions are decisions of single Judges who felt themselves bound by the Division Bench decision reported in Sankar Malik v. Breeja Sundar, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Pat. 587: (191 I. C. 89) which I have already referred to in the preceding para. With great respect to the learned Judges, I am unable to accept the reasoning that the settlement entry is inconsistent because in one column the status of the tenant is shown as 'sthitiban' and in another column it is noted that the low rental is fixed because of the services rendered by the tenant to the landlord. Such an entry has presumptive value to the effect that the tenancy was created burdened with some service and the only right left to the Zamindar is to ask for full assessment of rent when the services are terminated or are no longer required.

[12] I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

[13] Das J. — I agree with the judgment of my learned brother Narasimham J. in this case.

[14] The appeal has been referred to a Special Bench because it raises questions as to the effect of inconsistent entries in the earlier and later settlement records relating to the same holding and as to the effect of resumption of service tenures. On these matters there have been some conflicting decisions. It is unnecessary, however, for me to deal with the matter at any length as the same has been dealt with by my Lord the Chief Justice in S. A. No. 193/43 which I fully accept and also since my learned brother has covered the ground elaborately in his judgment in this case.

[15] As pointed out by them, in the face of clear statutory provisions in S. 117, sub-s. (3) and the proviso thereto, of the Orissa Tenancy Act, specifying in unambiguous terms the exact value to be attached to entries in the current record-of-rights and the entries in the earlier record-of-rights, all the decisions which are inconsistent with the same must be taken to be wrongly decided.

[16] As regards the effect of resumption of service tenures, it is enough to say that resumption means no more than the taking back of that which was once given (See Siyyadi Garu v. Nissanka Bahadur Garu, 30 I. C. 416 : (A. I. R. (3) 1916 Mad. 826). If as a result of resumption, the landlord claims to eject the tenant, he must show that he had granted the land itself for the service on conditions which will enable him to take back the land on the termination of the service. In accordance with the normal rule that a person suing in ejectment must make out his title to eject, the landlord who claims ejectment on resumption has got to make out the nature and the conditions of the grant. It is no doubt true that in some of the earlier cases, namely, Radha Parshad Singh v. Budhu Pershad, 22 Cal. 938, Sanniyasi v. Salur Lamindar, 7 Mad. 268 and Maga Devi v. Vakrama, 14 Mad. 365, it has been assumed that resumption in the case of personal service tenures entitles the landlord to eject. The case in Radha Pershad Singh v. Budhu Pershad, 22 Cal. 938 has been followed in some subsequent cases in Patna, 57 I. C. 47 and C. J. Shillingford v. Gena Tatma, A. I. R. (25) 1938 Pat. 141 : (174 I. C. 588). In some later cases in Madras, it has been pointed out that ejectment of the tenant is not the necessary result of resumption and that the facts giving rise to that right must be made out. (See Fatmatul Kubra v. Mt. Achchi Begam, 21 I. C. 831 : (11 A. L. J. 1009) and Siyyadi Garu v. Nissanka Bahadur Garu, 30 I. C. 416 : (A. I. R. (3) 1916 Mad. 826). The Privy Council case in Bommrauze Bahadur v. Venkatadry Naidu, 7 M. I. A. 128 at p. 142 shows that resumption consists normally in putting an end to the grant and remitting the services and requiring the grantee to pay full assessment. The cases in Alexander John Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Tuquee, 13 I. A. 438 : (5 Beng L. R. 529 P. C.), Lukhamgavda Basaprabhu v. Kashav Annaji, 28 Bom. 305 : (6 Bom. L. R. 364), Lakhamgouda v. Baswantrao, A. I. R. (18) 1931 P. C. 167 : (132 I. C. 736) show clearly that the onus is on the grantor to make out his right to resume and also to eject as a result of resumption. Reliance has been placed in course of the discussion on Ss. 235 and 237, Orissa Tenancy Act, which show that nothing in the Act affects any incident of service tenure or affects any custom or usage not inconsistent with any of the provisions in the Act. This does not mean that where the special incidents or the customary rights of the particular service tenure are not made out on the evidence, there is any presumption in favour of the right of resumption or against occcupancy rights of service tenure-holders. If there are any such special incidents or customary rights, it is on the person who invokes them to establish them. As pointed out by my learned brother in his judgment and also by my Lord the Chief Justice in S. A. 193/43, the rent of occupancy ryots under the Orissa Tenancy Act may be partly payable in cash and partly by service under a special contract by virtue of the definition of "tenant" in S. 3, sub-s. (2).

[17] In the result I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs throughout.

[18] Panigrahi J. — I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Cri. Appeal No. 30 of 1950, D/- 10-8-1950.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 33 —Previous deposition of witness —Admission of —Proof of condition laid in S. 33 —Waiver of.

Under S. 33, a previous deposition cannot be admitted in evidence unless the conditions for its admission are made out. There can be no waiver on the part of the accused in a criminal case as regards any statutory requirements. It is no doubt true that in a civil proceeding, strict proof of these conditions can be waived; that is so only because in a civil proceeding the facts required to be proved can be admitted by the opposite party & a waiver in a civil proceeding amounts to proof by waiver. But the conditions of S. 33 must be strictly proved & they cannot be waived in a criminal proceeding. [Para 3]

(b) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 100, 304 — Murderous attack—Right of private defence.

An accused is perfectly justified in resisting an aggressive attack on him by taking the weapon from out of the deceased & inflicting injuries on him to the extent that may be required according to his assessment of the circumstances at the time for the purpose of preventing any further assault on himself by the deceased. If in the course of it he kills the originally aggresive person, S. 100 completely protects it. While no doubt it is true that the exercise of the right of private defence subsists only so long as an apprehension of the aggresive attack continues, it is also well settled that an accused who has had to face an aggressive murderous attack by the deceased & who had to struggle with him in order to get possession of the weapon which was used against him, cannot be expected to exercise any cool judgment in the situation. His responsibility is not to be judged by any mere meticulous standards. [Para 6]

(c) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 164 — Questioning accused as to motive of confession.

Per Panigrahi J.—It is not correct to rule out a confession recorded under S. 164 as inadmissible on the ground that the accused was not asked the motive of his confession. The Code does not require any such question to be put. [Para 8]

(d) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 342—Examination of accused—Nature of.

Per Panigrahi J.—The object of S. 342 as has been repeatedly pointed out is to enable the accused to explain any circumstances appearing against him. It is intended to be exploratory rather than inquisitorial. [Para 8]

B. M. Patnaik Asst. Govt. Advocate—for the State.

Jagannadhadas J. — The applt. before us, one Ratan Munda, has been convicted under S. 304, Penal Code, for having caused the death of one Tuti Munda on the evening of 22-9-1949

& has been sentenced to undergo R. I. for five years.

[2] The prosecution case is as follows : 22-9-1949, was the Nuakhoi day when the villagers were in a festive mood. The deceased who had taken drink on that occasion came out of his house with a Falsia telling his wife that he was going to kill the accused & finish him off that day & ran towards the house of the accused which was about 120 cubits away. He is said to have entered into the house & attempted to assault the accused with the Falsia, but the accused managed to ward off the assault. He struggled with the deceased to wrest away the Falsia from his hands. There was a tussle between the two & ultimately the accused was able to get hold of the Falsia with which he dealt severe blows on the deceased & ran away from the place. After having run away from the place, he is said to have made some extra judicial confessions. The wife of the deceased came to know of this & ran up to the house of the accused, & found her husband lying dead with serious injuries on his body. She went to P. W. 1 another villager, a relation, who also came & saw the dead body. P.W. 1 lodged F.I.R. with the police. Thereafter there was the usual investigation & the post mortem examination of the dead body of the deceased.

[3] The post mortem report, Ex. 2, & the evidence of the doctor P. W. 7, clearly disclose that the deceased died as a result of having received serious injuries with a weapon like a Falsia which is said to have been used in this case. There is no doubt, therefore, that the deceased died as a result of severe injuries dealt on him with a Falsia. The actual evidence of the prosecution is to the following effect: P.W. 2 the wife of the deceased gives evidence that the deceased started out from his house that evening telling her specifically that he was going to murder the accused with the Falsia in his hand & that he ran towards the house of the accused in spite of her attempt to stop him. P W. 5 another witness who was near about the house of the accused tending cows says that he at the time found the deceased entering into the house of the accused with a Falsia in hand saying that he would kill the accused that day. P.W. 8 another witness who happened to be going that way at the time heard the deceased saying that he would finish off the accused says that though he did not see what happened inside the house of the accused, he heard Ghada Ghada noise emanating from the house of the accused after the deceased went in & that thereafter he left the place out of fear. P. W. 3 who is an eye witness & whose evidence will be presently noticed, also says that the deceased while on the way, before entering the house of the accused was saying that he will finish off the accused that day. Therefore, there can be no doubt on this evidence that the deceased, whatever may have been his reason or motive rushed that evening into the house of the accused with a Falsia in hand to kill the deceased with the same. The evidence, however, of the actual murderous assault by the accused against the deceased is that of P.W. 3 & of another witness by name, Lunda Munda, who was examined in the committing Mag's Ct. but who was not examined in the Sessions Ct. So far as the evidence of the witness, Lunda Munda, is concerned, the prosecution attempted to prove by the evidence of P. W. 14 that he was ill and not able to attend the Ct. & that, therefore, his deposition in the committing Mag 's Ct. should be admitted in evidence. The learned Ses. J. while being of opinion that the evidence of P. W. 14 was not enough to make out strictly the precondition for the admission of Lunda Munda's evidence under S. 33, Evidence Act, still admitted the same & marked it as Ex. 14 on the ground that the lawyer for the defence waived his objection to it. This is a wholly irregular procedure. It has been often pointed out that there can be no waiver on the part of the accused in a criminal case as regards any statutory requirements. It is a matter beyond dispute that under S. 33 a previous deposition cannot be marked unless the conditions for its admission are made out. It is no doubt true that in a civil proceeding, strict proof of these conditions can be waived; that is so only because in a civil proceeding the facts required to be proved can be admitted by the opposite party & a waiver in a civil proceeding amounts to proof by waiver. This principle has been very clearly reiterated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chanichal Singh v. Emperor, A.I.R. (33) 1946 P. C 1 : (I. L. R. (1945) Kar. P. C. 366), where they point out that the conditions of S. 33, Evidence Act, must be strictly proved & that they cannot be waived in a criminal proceeding. We must, therefore, rule out the deposition of Lunda Munda in the Committing Ct. marked as Ex. 14. The evidence of P. W. 3 who is the only other eye witness to the assault by the accused against the deceased shows that he saw the accused inflicting several blows on the deceased with a Falsia when the deceased was in a lying posture at the entrance of the house of the accused. He says that on seeing the same he himself ran away out of fear. On this evidence which there is no reason to doubt, it must be taken as proved that the deceased died as a result of murderous assault by the accused with a Falsia when as a fact the deceased ran up to the accused with a Falsia with the avowed object of killing him.

[4] It may be mentioned that there is in this case an extra judicial confession under S. 164, Cr. P. C., made before the Mag. P. W. 11 & marked as Ex. 3. The learned Ses. J. has ruled out the judicial confession as inadmissible, but has to some extent relied on the extra judicial confession made to P W. 6. It is unnecessary, however, in this case to make use either of the extra judicial confession or the judicial confession because the evidence of the witnesses noticed above is quite clear & satisfactory to establish that the accused dealt serious & severe blows on the deceased as a result of which he died on the spot.

[5] There is no direct evidence of what exactly happened after the deceased rushed into the house of the accused with a Falsia in hand, & before P. W. 3 found the accused dealing blows on the deceased with a Falsia in front of his house. This is only a matter for reasonable inference from the circumstances. The accused in his statement says that the deceased gave him a blow with the Falsia & that only the blunt side of the blade thereof struck him in his attempt to ward it off, that he fell down as a result thereof & that there was tussle for the Falsia between them & that he succeeded in snatching it away. This version appears very likely having regard to the evidence & the circumstances & may be taken as true. The accused, however, does not admit having himself assaulted the deceased with the Falsia but says that he ran away from the place after he secured possession of the Falsia. His suggestion is that in the course of the struggle for the Falsia, the deceased may have received injuries & died as a result thereof. This, however, is most unlikely having regard to the number & nature of the injuries disclosed in the post mortem certificate & must be rejected in view of the evidence of P. W. 2. The denial by the accused of any assault by him can only be ascribed to nervousness. At this stage we may notice that while the post mortem certificate shows as many as 15 injuries, it unfortunately does not appear therefrom, nor has it been elicited from the doctor, P. W. 7, whether all of them were ante mortem. The evidence was probably intended to convey the idea that all the injuries were ante mortem but this is a matter which in a case of this kind should have been expressly clarified. In the evidence as recorded there is certainly room for the argument on behalf of the accused that at least some of the injuries were post mortem in the sense that the accused may have inflicted one fatal blow which immediately brought about the death of the deceased & that he may have dealt all other blows actually after the life was extinct though still under a feeling that the deceased may have been alive.

[6] However that may be, the real question that arises in this case is whether or not the accused is in the circumstances of the case protected completely by the exercise of the right of private defence. The learned Ses. J. was of the view that though the circumstances show that the accused had the right of private defence, he exceeded it by dealing quite a number of fatal blows mercilessly on the deceased after the earlier blow or blows brought him down to the ground, that the infliction of the injuries when the deceased was in a lying condition was unjustified & that this amounts to excess of the right of private defence. It is necessary in the first instance to point out that in making the assumption that the deceased was dealt a fatal blow when standing which brought him to a lying condition the learned Judge acted on the evidence, Ex. 14, which we have ruled out as inadmissible. Once that is excluded, there is no other evidence on which it can be said that the deceased was brought into lying condition in the first instance by an earlier fatal blow given while standing. It is possible that the accused dealt all the blows only when the deceased fell down during the course of the struggle between him & the deceased for the possession of the Falsia which he succeeded in securing. The limits of the exercise of the right of private defence in such cases are indicated in Ss. 100 & 102, I. P. C. As is clear from the evidence there was a definite attempt by the deceased to kill the accused with the Falsia. The accused was perfectly justified in resisting that aggressive attack on him by taking the Falsia from out of the deceased & inflicting injuries on him to the extent that may be required according to his assessment of the circumstances at the time for the purpose of preventing any further assault on himself by the deceased. If in the course of it he kills the originally aggresive person, S. 100 I. P. C. completely protects it. While no doubt it is true that the exercise of the right of private defence subsists only so long as an apprehension of the aggresive attack continues, it is also well settled that a person in the position of the accused at the time who has had to face an aggresive murderous attack by the deceased & who had to struggle with him in order to get possession of the Falsia which was used against him, cannot be expected to exercise any cool judgment in the situation. His responsibility is not to be judged by any mere meticulous standards. The law on the subject has been laid down in quite a number of cases and it is sufficient to refer to the cases in Dalipsingh v. Emperor, A. I. R. (10) 1923 Lah. 155 : (25 Cr. L. J. 676), Ahmad Din v. Emperor, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Lah. 194 : (28 Cr. L. J. 252) and Chheda v. Emperor, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Oudh 380 : (35 Cr. L. J. 55). These cases adopt the passage in Mayne's Criminal Law at p. 231 which is the correct law :

"Where the assault has once assumed a dangerous form, every allowance should be made for one, who with the instinct of self-preservation strong upon him, pursues his defence a little further than to a perfectly cool bystandar, would seem absolutely necessary. The question in such cases will be, not whether there was an actually continuing danger, but whether there was a reasonable apprehension of such danger."

The learned Government Advocate argues that having regard to the large number of injuries in this case, a good many of which each by itself might have proved fatal, the accused as soon as he found that he had dealt one fatal injury or probably two, must have desisted from the rest & that the fact of his having persisted in inflicting so many injuries is a clear indication that he was acting out of vindictiveness & anger & not in self-defence. To adopt this view is to indulge in speculation. We have no means of knowing from the evidence which injury was inflicted earlier & which was inflicted later. We cannot find anything in this case from which we can come to any satisfactory conclusion that the accused inflicted deliberately certain injuries out of mere anger & revenge after the apprehension of an aggressive attack from the deceased passed away. In the circumstances we cannot agree with the learned Ses. J. that the accused had exceeded the limits of private defence.

[7] In the result, the accused must be found completely protected by the right of private defence. He is accordingly found not guilty. His appeal must be allowed. The conviction and sentence must be set aside and the accused acquitted.

[8] Panigrahi J. — I agree that this appeal be allowed as this is a case of justifiable homicide. I would like to point out, however, that the learned Ses. J. is not correct in ruling out the confession recorded under S. 164, Cr. P. C., as inadmissible on the ground that the accused was not asked the motive of his confession. The Code does not require any such question to be put & the Mag. has recorded his reasons why he was satisfied that this is voluntary. The Mag. in Para. 7 of the confession says that the confessant was properly cautioned. Sufficient time was given to him for a cool reflection. There was no extraneous influence operating on him. It is, therefore, believed that he makes a clean breast. The accused was produced before him on 18-10-49, 19-10-49 & again on 20-10-49 on which date his confession was recorded. He was warned on more than one occasion & then he was asked whether he had been influenced or tutored by anybody to make a confession & he was told that the statement, he would make, might be used as evidence against him. The Code does not prescribe any other requirement, not certainly any question relating to the motive of the accused as to why he was going to confess. I have also noticed in the examination of the accused under S. 342, Cr. P. C., that the learned Ses. J. put a question regarding the number of injuries on the person of the deceased. The question is as follows:

"The doctor says that there were 15 injuries on the body of the deceased. All those injuries could not have been caused only when the Falsia was being dragged. can you explain how they were caused?"

This question is in the nature of cross examining the accused & should not have been put. The object of S. 342 as has been repeatedly pointed out is to enable the accused to explain any circumstances appearing against him. It is intended to be exploratory rather than inquisitorial. In the present case, however, this question has not prejudiced the accused & therefore, is not of much consequence.

(f) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 35 — Successful deft. disentitled to costs.

In a suit for maintenance by illegitimate daughter out of the estate of her putative father the conduct of the successful deft. in challenging even the paternity of the pltf. & in making wild & irrelavant allegations against her chastity disentitles him from claiming costs either in the lower Ct. or in the appellate Ct. H. Mohapatra*—for Applt.; P. V. R. Rao and P.C. Chatterji—*for Resps.

Narasimham J.—The pltf. claims to be the illegitimate daughter of Sri Krupamaya Ananga Bhima Deo, the late Zamindar of Bodokhemidi estate which is an impartible estate under the Madras Impartible Estates Act, 1904. The principal deft. (deft. 1) is the present Zamindar of Bodokhemidi estate & is the legitimate son of Sri Krupamaya Ananga Bhima Deo. The other defts. are said to be tenants established on the suit lands by deft. 1. The pltf's case was that her father gave her certain landed property described in sch. 'A' of the plaint situated in village Kattubati & known as 'Kheta Dholia' lands for her maintenance & that deft. 1 wrongfully resumed these lands & settled them with the other defts. She, therefore, prayed for being put in possession of the suit lands or else for a decree directing deft. 1 to pay her either the value of the lands or else the annual Rajabhagam (rent) due from these lands. There was also an alternative prayer for a decree for maintenance at the rate of Rs. 30 per month till her marriage & for making the maintenance a charge on the properties of deft. 1 described in Sch. 'B'.

[2] Sri Krupamaya Ananga Bhima Deo died in September, 1922 & his estate was managed by the Ct. of Wards for some years during the minority of deft. 1. The estate was released on 2-12-30. The gift of the 'A' schedule lands in favour of the pltf. was made by Sri Krupamaya Ananga Bhima Deo by a document (Ex. 9) dated 25-2-1922. The pltf. was born sometime in 1920 or 1921 & though her paternity was strenuously contested in the lower Ct. the finding was that Sri Krupamaya Ananga Bhima Deo was her father & this finding was not seriously challenged before us. Some time in 1924 the Ct. of Wards resumed the said lands & in lieu thereof settled a maintenance allowance of Rs. 71 per month for the pltf. & her mother Sri Kumuda Angalagi (P. W. 1). This maintenance allowance was paid regularly during the time of the Court of Wards. But when deft. 1 took up the management of the estate in 1930 he stopped it altogether. Sri Kumuda Angalagi then instituted a suit for maintenance alleging that she was a concubine under the exclusive keeping of Sri Krupamaya Ananga Bhima Deo & as such entitled to maintenance from the impartible estate. That litigation was fought up to the H. C. & in the end (vide Ex. 4 [b]) she was granted a decree for maintenance at the rate of Rs. 50 per month.

[3] The lower Court found in favour of the pltf. on the question of her paternity but dismissed the suit chiefly because the pltf. failed to show that either under the Hindu law or by virtue of any special family custom she was entitled to maintenance from the estate of her putative father after his demise. The Ct. further held that the grant of 'A' schedule lands in village Kattubati by Sri Krupamaya Ananga Bhima Deo ceased to be operative after his death by virtue of the provisions of the Madras Impartible Estates Act, 1904 & that she acquired no right over the said lands either by virtue of the grant or by adverse possession as claimed by her.

[4] The main points canvassed by Mr. H. Mohapatra on behalf of the applt-pltf. are these: (i) the 'A' schedule lands do not form part of the impartible estate of Bodokhemidi & that any alienation of the same made by the previous Zamindar would, therefore, be valid even after his death & would not be hit by the Madras Impartible Estates Act, 1904; (ii) in any case, the pltf. has perfected her title to those lands by adverse possession; (iii) in the family of Bodokhemidi Zamindars there was a special family custom by which illegitimate daughters were also entitled to maintenance out of the estate; and (iv) under the ordinary Hindu law also an illegitimate daughter was entitled to maintenance from the estate of her putative father which has descended to his lawful heirs.

[5] Point No. 1.—Mr. Mohapatra's contention on this point is that for about 150 years the suit lands in Kattubati village had been alienated by successive Zamindars to various persons & that consequently those lands never formed part of the Bodokhemidi zamindari. In support of this argument, he has relied mainly on the evidence of one Ujal Das Nahar Bisoi (P. W. 4) who stated that those lands were first given as service Inams to one of his ancestors nearly 100 years ago & that the lands remained in the possession of the family for about 50 years. Subsequently they were resumed by the Zamindar & granted successively to two illegitimate descendants, namely, Gopinath Deo & Naba Lal Deo who enjoyed the same for some years. Subsequently they were again resumed & granted to the pltf. by Sri Erupamaya Ananga Bhima Deo. This witness' evidence even if believed would merely show that for about 100 years the lands were successively alienated as Inams but frequently resumed & re-granted to other persons. But his evidence is quite insufficient to show that the lands do not form part of Bodokhemidi zamindari. But if the pltf. could establish that the lands were pre-settlement Inams, that is to say, grants made by the Zamindars long before the coming into force of Permanent Settlement Regulation there may be some scope for Mr. Mohapatra's argument. But the ptf's. own witnesses (P. Ws. 4 and 5) admitted that the lands were Dharmilla Inam grants. It is beyond question that a 'Dharmilla Inam' is a post-settlement Inam & that it is included in the assets of the zamindari. Moreover, the very fact that the Zamindars never made the grants irresumable but on the contrary resumed them on successive occasions & re-granted the same to other persons indicates unmistakably that the lands were treated as coming within the ambit of Bodokhemidi zamindari.

[6] Point No. 2.—The plea of adverse possession is also equally futile. The pltf's possession of the property dates only from the date of the grant, namely, 25-2 1922. She was in possession for hardly two years when the Court of Wards dispossessed her & settled a monthly cash allowance as maintenance. The learned lower Ct. rightly rejected the applt's contention that as the cash allowance was settled by the Ct. of Wards in lieu of maintenance she must be deemed to have been in continued possession of the lands through the Court of Wards till the stoppage of that allowance by deft. 1 in 1930. In Ex. 1 (a) which is a letter issued by the Manager of the Court of Wards to the pltf's mother on 29-9-23 it was clearly stated that the pltf. had no claim to the lands after the Ct. resumed the same & settled a cash allowance in her favour. Therefore the pltf's possession was hardly for two years & no claim by adverse possession can in any case arise.

[7] Mr. Mohapatra, however, tried to show that the possession of the previous Inamdars, namely, Naba Lal Deo, Gopinath Deo & the ancestors of P. W. 4 was also adverse to the Zamindar & the period during which they were in possession must be added to the period of possession of pltf. 1 in determining the question of adverse possession. This argument, however, cannot stand. Neither Naba Lal Deo nor Gopinath Deo nor the ancestors of P. W. 4 can be said to be the predecessor-in-interest of the pltf. and consequently their possession cannot be tacked on to the possession of the pltf. Moreover their possession was not continuous but was interrupted frequently by resumption & re-settlement.

[8] It cannot also be seriously contended that at any time there was adverse possession of the lands by any of the alienees. From the very beginning the grant was merely the grant of Melawaram right. P. W. 4 admitted that when his ancestors were in possession of the lands more than 50 years ago there were already tenants on the lands who used to execute muchilikas in favour of his ancestors. Doubtless in his cross examination he tried to show that his ancestors themselves reclaimed the lands & made them fit for cultivation.. But P. W. 3 admitted that there were tenants on the lands during the time of Sri Gopinath Deo & Nahar Bisoi (referring to an ancestor of P. W. 4). Similarly, P. W. 2 also admitted that there must have been tenants on the lands when they were gifted to the illegitimate offsprings of the previous Zamindars. Therefore there seems to be no doubt that the lands were all along tenanted lands & the grants made to Nahar Bisoi (ancestor of P. W. 4) & the illegitimate offsprings of the previous Zamindars were only grants of melawaram right. None of these grantees can claim to have acquired any permanent right either in the nature of occupancy right or any right by adverse possession because their possession was at no time adverse to the Zamindar.

[9] Point No. 3.—Now I take up the plea of special family custom which is the main strength of the pltf's case. But the evidence led by her to show that there was a special family custom by which illegitimate daughters of Zamindars of Bodokhemidi were entitled to maintenance out of the estate is quite meagre & unreliable. There is no documentary evidence to prove this custom & the pltf. has relied mainly on the oral evidence of her mother Sri Kumuda Angalagi (P. W. 1) & two other witnesses, namely, Appalanarasingham (P. W. 2) & Binayak Patra (P. W. 5). The pltf's mother (P. W. 1) has obviously no personal knowledge of the grant of maintenance to illegitimate daughters of the previous Zamindars. In her cross-examination she had to admit:

> "Former daughters, like my daughter, of Bodokhemidi Zamindars, were given lands, but I cannot give their names. I cannot give any particulars of any such grants. I cannot give any particulars of such cases in other Zamindaris."

Thus her evidence does not help the pltf. in any way. P. W. 2 had worked as Manager of Bodokhemidi estate from 1924 to 1930. His evidence shows that illegitimate dependants of the Zamindars were paid touzis (cash allowances) from the estate during the time that he was Manager. He gave the names of several dependants but those names all relate to males. The only instance in which an illegitimate daughter was given maintenance allowance as proved by him is that of one Godabari Jemma who is also another illegitimate daughter of Sri Krupamaya Ananga Bhima Deo. The pltf. was also receiving cash allowance from the estate during the time of the Court of Wards. Therefore, even if the evidence of P. W. 2 be believed, it only shows that from 1924 to 1930 the illegitimate daughters of Sri Krupamaya Ananga Bhima Deo were given cash allowances. His evidence is quite inadequate to prove a special family custom. He has obviously no knowledge of the custom, if any, which prevailed in the family prior to 1924. Similarly, the evidence of P. W. 5 does not materially help the pltf. The only special instance which this witness proves is the grant of maintenance to one Muktamala, an illegitimate sister of Lakshminarayan Deo about 100 to 150 years ago. His knowledge about that grant is based on hearsay. Even if it be taken as true, a single instance of the grant of such allowance to an illegitimate daugher is quite insufficient to prove a special family custom. No papers of the estate showing grant of any allowance to Muktamala or to any other illegitimate daughter of the Zamindar have been proved. No Ct. can from such meagre evidence infer that there was any special family custom in Bodokhemidi estate as pleaded by the pltf.

[10] Point No. 4.—Lastly I take up the rights of the pltf. under the ordinary Hindu law. In Mulla's Hindu Law, 10th Edn., Art. 522 at p. 609, it is clearly stated that there is no provision in the Hindu law for the maintenance of illegitimate daughters. To a similar effect is the observation at p. 823 of Maine's Hindu Law, 10th Edn. In the lower Ct. it appears to have been conceded that under the ordinary Hindu law the pltf. is not entitled to any maintenance. Mr. Mohapatra has, however, relied on certain passages at p. 228 of Raghavacharlar's Hindu Law, 3rd Edn. where the learned author seems to be of the view that as a member of the family an illegitimate daughter also must be held to be entitled to a maintenance allowance in the same way as an illegitimate son. But the authorities, however, cited by him do not lend support to such a broad proposition. Doubtless in an old Bombay decision reported in Parvati v. Ganapatrao, 18 Bom. 177 there are some observations which may lend support to the view that an illegitimate daughter was also entitled to maintenance out of the family property. In Natarajan v. Muthiah Chetty, A. I. R. (13) 1926 Mad. 261 at p. 266: (95 I. C. 972), a single Judge (Kumaraswami Sastri) reviewed the previous decisions on the subject & held that an illegitimate daughter was entitled to maintenance until she married or attained majority. But his decision was reversed by a Division Bench of the same H. C. in Vellayyappa v. Natarajan, 50 Mad. 340: A. I. R. (14) 1927 Mad. 386) where there is a full discussion of the law regarding the rights of maintenance of an illegitimate daughter. In that decision, the arguments that an illegitimate daughter was entitled to maintenance as a member of her father's family was advanced & repelled. That litigation was taken up to the Privy Council on other grounds; (see Vellayyappa Chetty v. Natarajan, 58 I. A. 403: (A. I. R. (18) 1931 P. C. 294)), but no appeal was taken up against the decision of the Division Bench disallowing maintenance to illegitimate daughters. It is conceded that there is no written text in the scriptures recognising the right of an illegitimate daughter to maintenance. In the absence of any written text & in view of the case law as mentioned above, I do not think I will be justified in recognising such right merely on the ground that an illegitimate daughter may also form part of her putative father's family. The case seems to be rather hard; but the law seems to be definitely against the pltf. Moreover, in view of the fact that the pltf. was more than 21 years at the time of the institution of the suit even Natarajan v. Muthia Chetty, A. I. R. (13) 1926 Mad. 261: (95 I. C. 972) will not materially help her because in that case the right of maintenance of an illegitimate daughter was limited to her 18th year.

[11] I would, therefore, affirm the judgment & decree of the lower Ct. & dismiss the appeal. Both parties will bear their own costs. As rightly pointed out by the lower Ct., the conduct of deft. 1 in challenging even the paternity of the pltf. & in making wild and irrelevant allegations against her chastity disentitles him from claiming cost either in the lower Ct. or in the appellate Ct. Applt. should pay the Ct.-fee which would have been payable if she had not been permitted to appeal in forma pauperis.

Thangudu Varaha Narasimhamurty — Petnr. v. The State.

Cr. Misc. Nos. 158 & 170 of 1950, D/-31-1-1951.

(a) Public Safety — Preventive Detention Act (1950), S. 7 — Grounds of detention — Insufficiency — Distinction between grounds & facts — Grounds stating that detenu was hoarding food grains for selling in black-market — Sources of information not disclosed — Sufficiency — Constitution of India, Art. 22 (6).

Insufficiency of the grounds supplied to a detenu would not render the detention order invalid ab initio. [Para 7]

Unreasonable delay, however, in communication of the grounds or communication of inadequate or vague & indefinite grounds would make further detention of the detenu illegal. [Para 9]

There is, however, a distinction between 'facts' & grounds'. Grounds are mainly, if not solely, the reasons of detention. They are inferential deductions in terms of the social orders sought to be maintained in the interest of the general public. In order to fulfil the constitutional guarantee of affording opportunity to be heard in defence, the acts, that bear out the offensive conduct of the persons accused & bear the next proximate relation to it, are also to be given out as a part of the grounds, the ambit whereof is to be determined in the particular facts of every case. The rules, in this connexion, are bound to be flexible rather than hard & fast. In this view of the matter, the facts, illustratively stated, are incidents, events & circumstances informations, suspicions, conjectures & the like including the sources of informations & the agencies set up in that behalf; they may constitute the background which determines the nature & character of the acts manifesting the grounds that eventuate necessity for detention. They may amount to proofs that set the machinery in motion. They are zealously guarded by the Legislature against disclosure. [Para 10]

Where the grounds stated that the detenu (a wholesale licensed dealer in foodgrains) was engaging himself in the activity of hoarding considerable quantity of foodgrains from out of their normal circulation so vitally necessary for the life of the community & thereby offended against the provision of S. 3 (1) (a) (iii) & also disclosed that the object of such hoarding was to profiteer by selling the hoarded stock in the black-market:

Held, that the grounds disclosed were not insufficient for enabling the detenu to make a representation, although all the sources of information which led the authorities to the conclusion that detention was essential to prevent the detenu from selling in the black-market, were not disclosed. [Paras 10, 18]

Selling in the black-market amounts to interfering with the normal supply to the community at large. It hampers the scheme set on foot by the Govt. responsible for good social order, for ensuring distribution of supplies essential to the community & for keeping the same going on, particularly, in times of scarcity & shortage of foodgrains. [Para 11]

The act complained of was not done by him as a licensed dealer but stood completely outside it. Hence it could not be argued that the self-same act of the detenu, as a licensee, could be dealt with in a punitive measure rather than preventive. [Para 17]

(b) Constitution of India, Art. 19 (1) — Applicability to preventive detention legislation.

The principle of reasonable restriction or reasonableness of law imposing restriction upon the liberty of citizens has no application to the laws prescribing preventive detention. [Para 13]

P. V. B. Rao & G. N. Murty — for Petnr; Govt. Advocate—for the State.

Ray C. J. — These cases arise out of two petns. presented by the self-same petnr. Thangudu Varaha Narasimhamurty, impugning the validity of two detention orders, one, dated, 8-11-1950 & another, dated, 26-11-1950. The second order replaced the first. Except for some verbal alterations, the orders are the same in all essential particulars. By the time the first Misc. Case was filed, the second order of 26th November had not been passed. Therefore, the petnr. thought it appropriate that he should impugn the second order, virtually the order authorising the detention, by another petn. The latter is registered as Misc. Case No. 170. At its admission for hearing, it was directed to be heard along with the previous case, Cr. Misc. Case No. 158 of 1950.

[2] The petnr. has been directed to be detained since 8-11-1950, till 7-2-1951, for a period of three months. The detention order has been passed under the provisions of sub-cl. (iii) of cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) of S. 3, Preventive Detention Act, 1950 (Central Act, IV [4] of 1950), read with S. 4 thereof, by the Sub-divisional Mag. of Berhampur, district Ganjam. The order reads as follows:

No. CC. 768/50 Office of the Subdivisional Magistrate, Berhampur,

ORDER UNDER THE PREVENTIVE DETENTION ACT, 1950.

Whereas I, K. Ramamurty, I. A. S, Sub-divisional Magistrate, of Berhampur, Ganjam district, am satisfied that with a view to preventing T. K. N. Murty, proprietor of Neelakhanteswar Rice Mills, Berhampur from acting in any manner prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies & services essential to the community, it is necessary so to do, I, K. Ramamurty, I. A. S., Sub-divisional Mag. Berhampur, in exercise of the powers conferred by sub-cl. (iii) of cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) of S. 3, Preventive Detention Act, 1950 (IV [4] of 1950) read with S. 4 thereof, am pleased to direct that the said T. V. Murty, be detained for a period of three months until 7-2-1941 & removed to the District Jail, Berhampur, for the purpose of detention in the said Jail.

This cancels the previous order dated 8-11-1950 & takes effect from the same date, i.e , from 8-11-1950.

[3] The grounds of detention issued on the same date were received by the detenu on 27-11-1950. The grounds are:

"That on 5-10-50 you hoarded 596mds. of fine paddy, 96 mds. of fine rice & 25mds. of superfine rice, with an intention to sell in blackmarket.

It is necessary for the maintenance of supplies & services essential to the community, to prevent you from doing these acts by detaining you under Act (IV [4] of 1950.)

You have a right of representation against this order which you may exercise by presenting it in writing through the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Berhampur, within 15 days from the receipt of these grounds."

[4] It may be noted that he had been informed of his right of representation, & the grounds for his detention, on 8-11-1950, the date when the detenu had been taken into custody by virtue of the first order. There is no substantial difference between the two versions of the grounds supplied.

[5] The cases had come up before us on 22-12-1950. In course of the hearing, it appeared to us that in virtue of S. 9 of the Act, in every case where a detention order had been made under sub-cl. (iii) of cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) of S. 8 by an officer satisfied under sub-s. (2) of the section, it was necessary that the State Govt. to which the officer concerned was subordinate should, within 6 weeks from the date of detention, place before the Advisory Board the grounds on which the order had been made the representation, if any, made by the person affected by the order & also the report made by such officer to the State Govt. We, therefore, made enquiries of the Govt. Advocate, who was representing the State Govt., if the mandatory provisions had, in the case before us, been complied with. He took time to make necessary enquiries & inform us. By consent of parties, further consideration of the matter had been set down for 23-1-1951.

[6] We heard the learned counsel of both parties in relation to matters relevant to the consideration of petnr's case. On conclusion of the hearing we directed that the petns. be dismissed & that the reasons for the dismissal should be communicated later. On behalf of the Ct., I now proceed to give the reasons in the following few paras.

[7] (a) The main ground that was urged strenuously by Mr. P. V. B. Rao, the learned counsel for the petnr. was that the grounds supplied being vague, indefinite & inadequate for making an effective representation to the State Govt. the order of detention was bad in law. He relied upon a few decisions in support of his contention. None of the authorities cited lend support to the contention that insufficiency of grounds would render the detention order invalid ab initio. In the very scheme of legislation for preventive detention authorised by the Constitution of India, the grounds for detention must have to be supplied later than issue of a detention order & its execution by the concerned authority, & service thereof on the detenu. If the grounds are such as are sanctioned by law, & warrant, to the satisfaction of the concerned authority, an order of preventive detention, it cannot be invalidated by the failure on the part of the said authority to comply with the conditions subsequent. Communication to the detenu of the grounds of detention is a subsequent condition. The purpose thereof is to give him an opportunity, as early as possible, to demur to the correctness, sufficiency & validity of the grounds in his defence, & to establish his innocence. Reference, in this connexion, may be made to S. 7 of the Act. The section runs as follows:

7. (1) When a person is detained in pursuance of a detention order, the authority making the order shall, as soon as may be, communicate to him the grounds on which the order has been made, & shall afford him the earliest opportunity of making a representation against the order, in a case where such order has been made by the Central Govt. to that Govt. & in a case where it has been made by a State Govt. on an officer subordinate thereto, to the State Govt.

(2) Nothing in sub-s. (1) shall require the authority to disclose facts which it considers to be against the public interest to disclose.

[8] The section speaks for itself & does hardly convey an idea that communication of the grounds would be either contemporaneous with or previous to the issue of detention order, or, for the matter of that, the detention of detenu. It is not contended, here, that there has been any unreasonable delay in communicating the grounds to the detenu. The contention advanced in the form stated above must necessarily fail.

[9] (b) The authorities cited do, however, establish that unreasonable delay in communication of the grounds or communication of inadequate or vague & indefinite grounds would make further detention of the detenu illegal. From this premise, it must follow that the Ct. approached for the purpose of issue of a writ of Habeas Corpus, shall be completely justified in directing the release of the detenu. This position of law has now been established beyond any controversy, & we do not dispute its correctness. In several cases of preventive detention that came before us previously, we have acted upto this very rule.

[10] (c) The question that then arises is whether the grounds communicated, in the present case, are insufficient for the purpose of enabling him to make a representation in an effective manner so as to establish his innocence. We are of opinion that the grounds are definite & adequate for the purpose. The contention of the learned counsel proceeds from a misconception about the distinction between 'facts' & 'grounds'. Grounds are mainly if not solely, the reasons of detention. They are inferential deductions in terms of the social orders sought to be maintained in the interest of the general public. In order to fulfil the constitutional guarantee of affording opportunity to be heard in defence, the acts, that bear out the offensive conduct of the persons accused & bear the next proximate relation to it, are also to be given out as a part of the grounds, the ambit whereof is to be determined in the particular facts of every case. The rules, in this connexion, are bound to be flexible rather than hard & fast. In this view of the matter, the facts, illustratively stated' are incidents, events & circumstances, information, suspicions, conjectures & the like including the sources of informations & the agencies set up in that behalf; they may constitute the background which determines the nature & character of the acts manifesting the grounds that eventuate necessity for detention. They may amount to proofs that set the machinery in motion. They are zealously guarded by the Legislature against disclosure. In the present case, the ground of his detention was that he was engaging himself in the activity of secreting considerable quantity of food-grains from out of their normal circulation so vitally necessary for the life of the community & thereby offended against the provision of S. 3 (1) (a) (iii) of the Act The ground also discloses that the object of such hoarding was to profiteer by selling the hoarded stock in black-market. Extent of hoarding is mentioned too. Variety of facts from multitudinous sources besides the confirmatory fact of hoarding might have come to the notice of the concerned authorities in order to lead them to the conclusion that the petnr. unless prevented was about to indulge in selling the essential food-grains in black-market. All the relevant facts need not be disclosed. It so clearly appears from sub-s. (2) of the section. It might as well be that there was previous information as to the habit of black-marketing & no steps could be taken until the authorities had proof of one or more tangible relevant acts.

[11] (d) Pre-existence of obnoxious antecedents assignable to a person carries with it susceptibilities or propensities of habitual indulgence in or recurrence of similar conduct in future. Hence flows the necessity for prevention by adoption of preventive measures such as preventive detention of the person concerned. Mr. Rao tried to argue that as a licensed wholesale dealer in food-grains, such as paddy, rice, wheat, gram & pulses &c., he was entitled to 'hoard'. This argument overlooks the distinction between storing'. & 'hoarding'. The dictionary meaning of the word 'hoard', as a noun, is 'a hidden stock, a place for hiding anything', & 'to hoard' means 'to amass and deposit in secret'. That both the acts of 'hoarding' & 'selling in black-market are prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies essential to the community admits of no doubt. It is sought to be argued by Mr. Rao that, in its bearing on maintenance of essential supplies, selling in black-market is as good as selling in open market, & it helps rather than defeats supply of the relevant commodity. The character of the resulting consequences of an act is to be judged not from the uncommon level of the rich & the substantial section of the community but from the economic level of the mass. The emphasis is upon the words "essential to the community". Viewed in this light, it can be predicated without any fear of contradiction, that selling in the black-market amounts to interfering with the normal supply to the community at large. It hampers the scheme set on foot by the Govt. responsible for good social order, for ensuring distribution of supplies essential to the community, & for keeping the same going on, particularly, in times of scarcity & shortage of food-grains. It is complained that the Act is defective in the sense that it does not define nor enumerate essential supplies or prejudical acts. With the best use of human ingenuity, such enumeration or definition is difficult of performance. Each case must be decided on its own facts. In this context, the Ct. is always at an enormously relative disadvantage in coming to a conclusion of its own so as to be in a position as against the concerned executive authority's decision to hold that the condemned act does not come within the purview of the prescribed prohibited. acts; but, however, it is quite plain that the difficulty of the kind does not arise in the present case.

[12] (e) It is next argued that preventive detention as a measure of social control with a view to safeguard the maintenance of supplies & services essential to the community is beyond the range of reasonable restrictions on the citizens' right to personal liberty & freedom. A more effective & reasonable measure of protection against the relevant social & communal evils could be effected by the Govt. requisitioning the secreted stocks & distributing the same to community by putting them back within the orbit of normal circulation. And besides, as a licensed dealer, the petnr. is liable to punishment for violating the terms & conditions thereof amongst which are included omission to keep proper accounts & selling in black market &c. Any one or both of the last named measures could have been resorted to by the State Govt. or its subordinate authorities. In not doing so & in giving preference to the measure of preventive detention, they acted mala fide in the discharge of their functions.

[13] (f) The principle of reasonable restriction or reasonableness of law imposing restriction upon the liberty of citizens has no application to the laws prescribing preventive detention. An argument on this line had been advanced to their Lordships of the S. C. in the case of A. K. Gopalan v. State, 1950 S. C. R. 88: (A. I. R. (37) 1950 S. C. 27: 51 Cr. L. J. 1383). Art. 19 (5), Const. Ind. was prayed in aid for the purpose of impugning the validity of the Act. This argument could not be sustained according to the majority view of the Ct. The point has been elaborately dealt with & discussed in the judgment of Kania C. J. The discussion begins at p. 100 of the S. C. Report, 1950, Vol. I & ends at p. 117. I would quote a passage from that learned judgment by way of negativing the contention advanced before us. His Lordship the Chief Justice observes:

"Article 22 envisaged the law of preventive detention. So does Art. 246 read with Sch. 7 List I, Entry 9, & List III, Entry 3. Therefore when the subject of preventive detention is specifically dealt with in the Chapter on Fundmental Rights, I do not think it is proper to consider a legislation permitting preventive detention as in conflict with the rights mentioned in Art. 19 (1). Article19 (1) does not purport to cover all aspects of liberty or of personal liberty. In that Article only certain phases of liberty are dealt with. 'Personal liberty' would primarily mean liberty of the physical body. The rights given under Art 19 (1) do not directly come under that description. They are rights which accompany the freedom or liberty of the person. By their very nature they are freedoms of a person assumed to be in full possession of his personal liberty. If Art. 19 is considered to be the only Article safeguarding personal liberty several well-recognised rights, as for instance, the right to eat, or drink, the right to work, play, swim & numerous other rights & activities & even the right to life will not be deemed protected under the Constitution. I do not think that is the intention. It seems to me improper to read Art. 19 as dealing with the same subject as Art. 21. Article 19 gives the rights specified therein only to the citizens of India while Art. 21 is applicable to all persons. The word citizen is expressly defined in the Constitution to indicate only a certain section of the inhabitants of India. Moreover the protection given by Art. 21 is very general. It is of 'law' whatever that expression is interpreted to mean. The Legislative restrictions on the law-making powers of the legislature are not here prescribed in detail as in the case of the rights specified in Art. 19. In my opinion, therefore Art. 19 should be read as a separate complete article."

[14] The items in List I, Entry 9 & List III, Entry 3 of Sch. 7, do authorise the Central as well as the State Legislatures to enact laws of preventive detention in relation to maintenance of supplies & services essential to the community & the limits put upon such legislative powers, according to the majority view of the S. C., are to be found out in Arts. 21 & 22 of the Constitution & not in Art. 29 (19?) which are mutually exclusive.

[15] (g) An argument has been advanced to us by way of indicating that by non-disclosure of further facts, the petnr. was prevented from making a defence to which he had a right. It is not, however, made clear to us how he has, if at all, been prejudiced in making an effective representation to the State Govt. which was the only permissible mode of making out his defence under the Act. In this connection too I would quote a passage from the judgment of Kania C. J. in the same report at p. 125:

"A right to lead evidence against facts suspected to exist is also not essential in the case of preventive detention. Article 22 (6) permits the non-disclosure of facts. That is one of the clauses of the Constitution dealing with fundamental rights. If even the non-disclosure of facts is permitted, I fail to see how there can exist a right to contest facts by evidence & the non-inclusion of such procedural right could make this Act invalid."

[16] (h) To meet Mr. Rao's argument, I cannot do better than quote a passage from Willis on Constitutional Law:

"Businesses affected with a public interest may be subject to social control in the exercise of the police power when such social control is not applied to any other members of society. In fact until quite recently at least, there has been some social control which may be applied to businesses affected with a public interest which cannot be applied elsewhere. It is a proper exercise of the police power to apply this social control to this particular class of businesses because of the social interest in general economic progress, although other social interests, like the social interest in the individual life, are also involved."

[17] (i) To the argument of Mr. Rao the learned counsel for the petnr. that for the self-same act of the petnr., as a licensed dealer, could be dealt with in a punitive measure rather than preventive, I would reply that the act, complained of, is not done by him in his jurisdiction as a licensee but stands completely outside it.

[18] (j) Before concluding, I shall point out that the executive action of inspecting his mill-premises & the examination of relevant accounts were undertaken within the petnr's knowledge. The grounds communicated to him contained sufficient information so as to lead him to make out, to the satisfaction of the State Govt. or the Advisory Board, by his representation that the stocks suspected to have been hoarded for the purpose of sale in black-market did really belong to his customers & were beyond his power of disposition. As I have already said, we have had the privilege of looking to the Advisory Board's report & recommendation to the Govt. of Orissa. We do not feel inclined to think that he has at all been prejudiced in his defence by any omission & deficiency in the grounds or particulars supplied to him.

[19] In the premises aforesaid, we hold that the petns. have no merit & be dismissed.

[20] Narasimham J.—I agree.

Sri Jagannath Mahaprabhu and another— Applts. v. Bhagaban Das and others — Resps.

Second Appeal No. 208 of 1947, D/- 6-2-1951.

(a) Hindu Law— Religious endowment—Dedication, partial or absolute—Test —"Amrit Manhi"—Use of—Words & Phrases.

The test to determine whether the dedication is absolute or partial, is whether the dedication amounts only to a charge upon the property to meet the expenses of some religious acts or ceremonies the surplus being left at the disposal of the shebait. [Para 8]

Strong evidence is required to show that the interest of the deity in the properties is only a charge on the income thereof contrary to the prima facie import of the settlement entries. [Para 11]

The word "Amrit Manhi" literally means food offering & there is no warrant for holding that it indicates only a partial dedication. [Para 7]

Nor can the subsequent dealings by the family of the marfatdar with the property belonging to the deity as if it was their own personal property derogate from the completeness of the trust itself in favour of the deity, because persistent abuse of trust cannot furnish the basis of a claim which the Ct. will recognise. [Para 6]

The evidence that the shebaits have been appropriating major portion of the income without utilising it for purposes of the deity, cannot be taken as relevant to show the terms of the original grant, because such appropriation of income might very well be nothing more than misappropriation. [Para 12]

(b) Lim. Act (1908), Arts. 142 & 144 — Shebait — Adverse possession against deity—Possession of a shebait is in accordance with the title of the deity. [Para 9]

Anno: Lim. Act, Arts. 142-144 N. 49.

(c) Lim. Act (1908), Art. 134-A—Starting point.

In order to bring a case within the mischief of Art. 134-A, it is not enough that anyone in the family of the pltf. must have known of the alienation. What the Article contemplates is the actual knowledge of the person himself who goes to Ct. as the pltf. [Para 9]

Anno: Lim. Act, Art. 134-A N. 4a.

P. Mohanty — for Applts.; M. M. Das & D. Sahu —for Resps.

Panigrahi J. — The point debated in this appeal is whether the properties in dispute are the absolute Devottar of the Deity Jagannath Mahaprabhu, pltf. 1 in the suit, or whether they are properties merely charged with service to the said Deity. Pltfs. 2 & 3, defts. 1 & 2, defts. 11, 12, 13 & 14 constitute members of a family whose common ancestor was one Bishnu Charan Das. These descendants of Bishnu Charan are described as marfatdars of the Deity, Sri Jagannath Mahaprabhu, & the suit properties have been described as Amrita Manhi of the said Deity who is pltf. 1. The Settlement Records show that ever since the time of the Provincial settlement the suit properties, along with some other properties, were in the possession of the members of Bishnu Charan's family. They have also been accessively recorded in the three Settlement Registers as Amrita Manhi of Lord Jagannath. In the last Settlement, however, the marfatdars have been recorded as being in possession of seperate plots & it is not denied that the family which consits of three branches is in possession of different plots in three separate shares. The first deft. & the husband of the second deft. executed a permanent lease under Ext. A, dated 4-4-30 of 33 decimals of lands out of these properties in favour of defts. 8 & 9. On 4-4 32 the second deft. executed another permanent lease in favour of the same lessees by a deed, Ext. A-1 in respect of 17 decimals out of these properties. Between 1942 & 1944, again, defts. 1 & 2 executed two more leases, two kebalas & one usufructurry mtge. in favour of defts 3 to 7, 10 & 11. It would thus appear that defts. 3 to 11 are alienees from defts. 1 & 2 of properties which have been admittedly recorded as Amrita Manhi in the name of pltf. 1.

[2] Pltfs. 2 & 3 instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises—claiming a declaration on behalf of pltf. 1 that the several alienations made by defts. 1 & 2 are not binding on the Deity, Jagannath Mahaprabhu, & praying for setting aside the alienations & for possession as a consequential relief. The suit was instituted on 24-4-44. Defts. 3, 8 & 9 are the only alienees who contested the suit, the other alienees having remained ex parte. The substantial contention raised on behalf of the contesting defts. was that the suit properties are not the devottar properties of the first pltf. & that the alienors have been treating them as if they were their own personal properties for over twelve years & that consequently their right to alienate them is not open to challenge.

[3] Both the Cts. below have concurrently found that the suit properties constitute the Devottar properties of pltf. 1. But in view of the fact that the properties were admittedly being used as personal properties by the members of the marfatdar's family, they gave a declaration that they are not absolute Devottar but are merely charged with service to the Deity. The pltfs' prayer for setting aside the alienations made by defts 1 & 2 was rejected on the view that the properties not being absolute Devottar, were alienable subject to the performance of service to the Deity with which they were charged. The pltfs. have come up in appeal to this Ct. against this decision.

[4] In second appeal, it is contended before us by the learned counsel for the resps. that the very use of the word "Amrita Manhi" in the Settlement Records connotes partial dedication & that the view of the Cts. below is supported by the decisions in Basoo Dhul v. Kishen Chunder, 13 W. R. 200 and Parikhit Mohanty v. Dayanidhi, 2 Cut. L.T. 57. Secondly, it is urged that the suit is barred by limitation so far as the claim to set aside the alienations under Exts. A & A-1 is concerned, as these were made more than twelve years prior to the institution of the suit.

[5] It is unnecessary to load this judgment with too many details as the admitted facts are beyond controversy. It appears that in the year 1837, there was an enquiry by Govt. into the character of these properties & one Raghunath Das, grandfather of the first deft., claimed as marfatdar of pltff. 1, these properties as the Amritta Manhi or food offering of that Deity.

That claim was recognised by Govt. & the lands were exempted from payment of any public revenue. In 1860, Bavan Das, father of the shebait deft. made a statement that these properties had been dedicated as the Amrita Manhi of Jagannath Mahaprabhu & that he was utilising the usufructs of the lands for that purpose. This statement was made in March 1860 in a memorandum of appeal to the Dist. Ct. against a judgment obtained by a lessee of these properties from a member of the marfatdar's family. In 1890, pltff. 1 was recorded as the owner of the properties at the Provincial Settlement. In view of these records, the Cts. below were justified in taking the view that the properties belonged to the Deity.

[6] It is not disputed that the properties were dedicated to the Deity as "Amrita Manhi" or food offering. But there is no evidence as to when & in what circumstances the dedication was made. It is, however, pointed out by the contesting defts. that the evidence indicates that only Rs. 15 was being utilised for the "PANGTHI BHOG" of Sri Jagannath by the family members of the marfatdar, although the lands recorded in the name of the Deity covered an extent of as many as one hundred acres. It is next urged that the family of the marfatdars had no other property of their own excepting the property recorded in the name of pltff. 1. Thirdly, it is said that the residential house of the marfatdars stands on a plot of land belonging to pltf. 1. It is accordingly argued that the properties in dispute must have been the family properties of the shebait before they were dedicated to the Deity as "Amrita Manhi" & that what was actually dedicated to the deity was not the property itself but only a portion of the income therefrom such as would be sufficient to meet the expenses of the "PANGTHI BHOG". This argument of the resps. which is conjectural, can only be answered conjecturally. As already pointed out above, it is impossible to decide—on the materials placed before us—how the original endowment had been made. From one of the papers in Ex. 4 series it appears that some of the properties at any rate had been gifted by Makadam Maguni Panda for the Amrita Manhi of Lord Jagannath & that Raghunath Das was the marfatdar in respect of these properties. The resps, therefore, cannot claim the properties to have been their ancestral properties. Nor can their subsequent dealings with the property as if it was their own personal property derogate from the completeness of the trust itself in favour of the deity, because a persistent abuse of trust cannot furnish the basis of a claim which the Ct. will recognise. It may be that the income of the properties is being used by the members of the family for their own maintenance, but this is in perfect accord with usage & custom. Whether they are entitled to appropriate the income of the properties, after making the customary offerings to pltf. 1, & whether they have a beneficial interest in the bhog so offered or in the balance of the income left after such offering, are matters which are wholly outside the scope of the present suit. On the materials placed before us we are bound to hold that no personal claim to the suit properties can be recognised & that the absolute character of the title vesting in pltf. 1 must be upheld.

[7] The word "Amrit Manhi," literally means food offering & there is no warrant for holding that it indicates only a partial dedication. In the case reported in Basoo Dhul v. Kishen Chunder, 13 W. R. 200, it was proved that Budh Gir who had created the endowment had obtained the lands by private purchase & that he had charged them with an annual payment of 300 chhanas of cowries, equivalent to Rs. 80 for the food of Lord Jagannath & it was further directed that the remaining profits from the lands were to be appropriated by one Ballav Ghir, the marfatdar. The Govt. declared in 1794 that the lands were subject to payment of Rs. 80 for Jagannath Mahaprabhu & that the remainder of the income was to be used by the gosain for his own purposes. Having regard to the very clear & express terms of the endowment, the Ct. held that the property could be sold subject to the charge with which it was burdened, but it should be noticed that it was pointed out in that very case that property wholly dedicated to religious purposes could not be sold. I find nothing in that case to warrant the contention that the use of the word "Amrita Manhi" itself indicates partial dedication. That case was followed by Verma J. in Parikhit Mohan v. Dayanidhi, 2 Cut L. T. 57, to which reference has been made above. It does not appear from this report whether the dedication was absolute or whether the property was subject to a charge as in the previous Calcutta case. This case is certainly no authority for the proposition that "Amrita Manhi" itself means that the property is subject only to a charge & does not constitute absolute Devottar. In the absence of the grant itself I can see no legal authority for justifying a conversion of devottar property into secular property & upholding such a singular claim on the part of the marfatdar as against the trust. The onus rested upon the resps. to show, by the clearest & the most unimpeachable evidence, the legitimacy of his personal acquisition.

[8] In Srinivasachariar v. Evalappa Mudaliar, 49 I. A. 237: (A. I. R. (9) 1922 P. C. 325), the Privy Council had to deal with a case where a similar claim was put forward on behalf of a trustee on the strength of a patta granted to an ancestor of the trustees, with no indication that those particular items were temple lands or that the pattadar held them as Dharmakarta. In negativing this contention their Lordships observed:

"It must, of course, be plain that it would require circumstances unique to warrant the . . . transformation of these endowment lands into the private property of the trustee."

The distinction between an absolute dedication & a partial dedication has been pointed out in several cases & the test is whether the dedication amounts only to a charge upon the property to meet the expenses of some religious acts or ceremonies the surplus being left at the disposal of the Shebait. The cases reported in Ashutosh Dutt v. Doorga Churn, 6 I. A. 182 : (5 Cal. 438 P. C.) and Nimai Churn v. Jogendronath, 21 W. R. 365 are cases where it was proved that the shebaits had proprietary interest in the lands & that only portion of the income had been dedicated for religious worship. The contention of the resps. in the case before us cannot get any support from above two decisions on which considerable reliance was placed. The Cts. below were in error in holding that all that was endowed to pltf. 1 was only a portion of the income from the properties for the performance of a particular service & not the entire extent of the suit properties.

[9] The only other point that requires to be considered is whether the two leases Exs. A & A-1 in favour of defts. 8 & 9 are not liable to be set aside on the ground that they were executed within 12 years before the institution of the suit. It is conceded by Mr. M. M. Das, the learned counsel-for the resps., that the only article applicable to the case is Art. 134A, Limitation Act, which prescribes a period of twelve years in suits to set aside transfer of immovable property comprised in a Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist religious or charitable endowment made by the manager thereof for valuable consideration. The period of limitation commences from the date when the transfer becomes known to the pltf. It cannot be, & in fact it was not, contended that the possession of defts. 8 & 9 can by any means be regarded as adverse to pltf. 1. Both these lessees took their leases with full knowledge that the property was Devottar & that the lessors were only the shebait marfatdars of pltf. 1. It is well settled that the possession of a shabait is in accordance with the title of the Deity & the lessors were holding the Deity's lands as his trustees & it is only this right that has been transferred to defts. 8 & 9 & the lands are held by them in that capacity. No question of adverse possession therefore arises. The only article applicable as has been held by the Cts. below is Art. 134-A but in applying the Article to the facts of the case the Cts. below appear to have taken the view that the pltfs. must have known about the alienations ever since the time they were actually made because they belonged to the family of defts. 1 & 2. The pltfs., however, gave evidence in the case that they came to know of the alienations only in 1944. Even if reliance is placed on Ex. 1 (a) a sale deed executed by one of the pltfs. in favour of deft. 8 in 1937 & knowledge of alienation is attributed to him on the strength of that sale deed, the suit would be well within time. There is no material for holding that the pltf. had any means of knowing the alienations earlier. In order to bring the case within the mischief of Art. 134A, it is not enough that any one in the family of the pltf. must have known of the alienation. What that Article contemplates is the actual knowledge of the person himself who goes to Ct. as the pltf. There is no material to show that that was the case here & accordingly there is no bar of limitation to the maintainability of the suit, as regards any of the alienations.

[10] The judgment under appeal is set aside & the pltfs. shall be entitled to a decree as prayed for. The appeal is accordingly allowed with costs.

[11] Jagannadhadas J. — I agree with my learned brother. The suit properties have been admittedly recorded in three successive settlements as the Amritamanhohi property of the first plaintiff Shri Jagannath Maha-prabhu showing the deity as the owner of the properties. Strong evidence is required to show that the interest of the deity in the properties is only a charge on the income thereof contrary to the prima facie import of the settlement entries. I agree with my learned brother that the use of the word "Amritamanhohi" is not sufficient to prove that the deity's interest in the property is only by way of a charge on the income. A perusal of the judgment in Basoo Dhul v. Kishen Chunder, 13 W. R. 200 and Parikhit Mohan v. Dayanidhi, 2 Cut. L. T. 57, does not support any such assumption, as has been pointed out by my learned brother.

[12] I also agree with my learned brother that in cases of this kind the evidence that the Shebaits have been appropriating major portion of the income without utilising it for purposes of the deity, cannot be taken as relevant to show the terms of the original grant, because such appropriation of income might very well be nothing more than misappropriation. It may be that where a grant of this kind otherwise appears to be the grant of a mere interest of the property by way of a charge on the income, evidence of subsequent conduct of the shebaits may be given as evidence of the measure of the charge if that question remains in doubt. I wish to say nothing about it one way or the other. The difficulty in the way of the contesting defts. in this case is not merely that there is no evidence that the dedication was only of a mere charge on the income of the property, but even the evidence of user by the family of the Marfatdars that has been relied on, affords no clear material for decision as to the nature of the services for which the charge is available or the measure of the income which has to be appropriated for the same. It is impossible therefore to uphold the view of the Cts. below that the deity first pltf. has only a charge on the income of the properties. The suit properties must, therefore, be held to be absolutely dedicated to the first pltf. The alienations would accordingly be invalid.

[13] I agree also with my learned brother that the requisite knowledge of the pltfs. under Art. 134 (a), Limitation Act, has not been made out so as to bar the recovery of the properties covered by any of the alienations in the suit.

[14] I accordingly concur in the order proposed.

RAY C. J. AND NARASIMHAM J.

Siba Prasad Moda — Petnr. v. State of Orissa.

Supreme Court Appeal No. 27 of 1950, D/- 21-12 1950.

Constitution of India, Art. 14—Equality—Meaning—Graded punishment if offends rule of equality —Penal Code (1860), S. 53.

Equality intended under Art. 14 is not to be judged by equality of sentence Punishments, graded according to age, gravity of the offence in the context of fact- & attending circumstances that lend colour to the perversity involved in the crime & other circumstances, do not offend the rule of equality that law assumes as to members of the society. The object of punishment is to reform the society by holding out deterrents as precedents. Punishment must be such as would be felt as punishmeut by the offender. It must be commensurate with the degree of shock that it causes to the consience of the society. [Para 4]

Where the H. C. in restoring a sentence of imprisoment passed on a Marwari merchant by the trial Ct. which was commuted to a fine of Rs 200 in appeal, observed in the judgment that the accused being a Marwari merchant, a fine of Rs 200 would amount to absolutely no punishment whatsoever, & that he had to be sentenced with imprisonment & it was urged that it was a departure from the rule of natural justice:

Held* that the implications of the impugned observation in the judgment were that the accused being a monied man of substance, a fine of Rs. 200 would not prove appropriately deterrent so as to prevent him & others from repeating the offence. There was no discrimination on the ground that he was a Marwari or that he was a merchant & the finding did not detract from maintaining equality between man & man in the administration of law. [Para 3]

Anno: Penal Code, S. 53 N. 1.

K. Patnaik & M. Mohanty — for Petnr.; Govt. Advocate —for the State of Orissa.

Ray C. J. — This is an appln. for leave to appeal to the S. C. against our order in Cr. Revn. No. 458 of 1946 enhancing the sentence. It has been, however made clear by the two counsel, who appeared before us & were permitted to argue one after the other, that they did not challenge the conviction. It has also to be noted that in the learned lower appellate Ct. too the applt. did not challenge the conviction but pleaded for reduction of sentence The learned Ses. J. was successfully persuaded to commute the sentence of imprisonment of 6 months (which has since been restored by us) to a fine of Rs. 200.

[2] Mr Patnaik the leading counsel in the case would argue that our judgment violates the principles laid down in Art 14 of the Constitution, inasmuch as, we have said, in our judgment that the accused being a Marwari merchant, a fine of Rs. 200 would amount to absolutely no punishment whatsoever, & that he has to be sentenced with imprisonment; & that accordingly the sentence of imprisonment originally awarded by the trial Ct. should be restored. It is urged that it is a departure from the rule of natural justice.

[3] The implications of the impugned observation in our judgment are that he being a monied man of substance, a fine of Rs. 200 will not prove appropriately deterrent so as to prevent him & others from repeating the offence. There was no discrimination on the ground that he was a Marwari or that he was a merchant. Besides, in the course of hearing we observed that if the sentence of fine be imposed, it was likely that the man on whose behalf he was attempting to bribe the public servant would bear it & the real delinquent would go scot-free. We are, therefore, of opinion that this contention is not maintainable. Our finding does not detract from maintaining equality between man & man in the administration of law.

[4] Equality intended under Art. 14 is not to be judged by equality of sentence. Punishment graded according to age, gravity of the offence in the contxt of facts & attending circumstances that lend colour to the perversity involved in the crime & other circumstances do not offend the rule of equality that law assumes as to members of the society. The object of punishment is to reform the society by holding out deterrents as precedents. Punishment must be such as would be felt as punishment by the offender. It must be commensurate with the degree of shock that it causes to the conscience of the society. However, in such a general observation, we are strongly supported by Sir Iqbal Ahmad C. J., of the Allahabad H. C. in the case of Emperor v. Kesri Chand, A. I. R. (32) 1945 ALL. 207 : (47 Cr. L. J. 132). His Lordship observes :

"The sentence imposed upon an accused must be commensurate with the gravity of the offence & must amount to a punishment. The fine of Rs. 5000 considering that the accused was a substantial contractor was no punishment to him."

[5] True, at the time, the judgment was delivered, the Indian Constitution had not come into force, but I do not think this reasoning would make any difference. Though it was not embodied in any written constitution before, equality of man in the eye of law was always fundamental in administration of justice. It is a rule of natural justice on which all laws are based.

[6] We are also, with great respect, in entire agreement with the decision of his Lordship Sir Iqbal Ahmad C. J. in which he lays down certain principles bearing on the manner of imposing punishment. I would quote the passage :

"The main, indeed the only function of law is the preservation of society. The merits of law or a particular enactment are judged by the contribution it makes to the development of a healthy society. The 'social conscience' is the ultimate forum to pass the final verdict on its value or utility. Every piece of legislation is judged by the above standard. If & in so far as it makes the preservation of solidarity of the society or the State, it receives the approbation of 'social conscience.' If otherwise, it is condemned."

The same thing can be said of administration of justice.

[7] The observations in our judgment to the effect that

"The Allahabad case on which the learned Ses. J. has relied was decided more than 17 years ago & since then conditions have changed considerably. Drastic laws for the prevention of corruption amongst public official have been enacted by the Legislature & provisions have been made for passing deterrent sentences on corrupt officials."

were made by way of reply to the argument put forth by the learned counsel for lighter punishment based on the reasoning adopted by the learned Judges in the reported decision of Emperor v. Dinkarrao, 55 ALL. 654 : (A. I. R. (20) 1933 ALL. 513 : 34 Cr. L. J. 623). We must congratulate Mr. Mohanty that he has left no stone unturned to support his client's case. He has been fair & candid in citing to us the authority of the later Allahabad case which gives ample support to the view that we have taken.

[8] With regard to the decision in the earlier Allahabad case, it is regrettable that it was cited before the Ses. J. & also before us notwithstanding that its roll as a precedent has been considerably shaken. In his judgment, his Lordship Malik J. (as he then was) has observed, with reference to that decision (reported in Emperor v. Dinkarrao, 55 ALL. 654 : (A. I. R. (20) 1933 ALL. 513 : 34 Cr. L. J. 623), that it will not serve as a general rule in the matter of assessment of sentences. I would quote his Lordship :

"The learned Advocate-General has argued that the decision in Emperor v. Dinkar Rao, 55 All. 654 : (A. I. R. (20) 1933 All. 513 : 34 Cr. L. J. 623) is taken by the subordinate Cts. as of general authority & we must lay down that mere fact that trap was laid for the accused should not be any ground for awarding a lighter sentence. I may, however, point out that the question of sentence must in each case depend upon a variety of considerations & is a matter primarily in the discretion of the Ct. which passes the sentence. This Ct. in passing the sentence of a nominal fine in Emperor v. Dinkar Rao, 55 All. 654 : (A. I. R. (20) 1933 All. 513 : 34 Cr. L. J. 623) did so in view of the facts of that case & never intended to lay down any general principles in the matter of awarding sentences in cases of bribery . . . & all that I need say is that this Ct. did not when deciding the case in Emperor v. Dinkar Rao, 55 All. 654 : (A. I. R (20) 1933 All. 513: 34 Cr. L. J. 623) intend to fetter the discretion of the lower Cts. in any manner as to the adequate sentence to be passed in cases of abetment of bribery."

[9] Further argument that has been put forth by Mr. Mohanty is based upon an observation quoted from the authority of the I. P. C. The passage reads :

"The person, who, without any demand express or implied on the part of the public servant, volunteers an offer of a bribe, & induces that public servant to accept it, will be punishable under the general rule (law of abetment) . . . as an instigator. But the person who complies with a demand, however signified, on the part of a public servant, cannot be considered as guilty of instigating that public servant to receive a bribe. We do not propose that such a person shall be liable to any punishment . . . We are strongly of opinion that it would be unjust & cruel to punish the giving of a bribe in any case in which it could not be proved that the giver had really by his instigations corrupted the virtue of a public servant, who, unless temptation had been put in his way, would have acted uprightly."

This passage, however, has absolutely no application to the present case. It is difficult to understand why this passage is cited from time to time which is, if at all, only relevant for the purpose of establishing whether man is guilty or not. Whatever the authors might have intended will not prevent us either from punishing a man or when punishing to sentence him properly if the section itself permits. The Legislature has laid down the quantum of punishment that has to be inflicted for the particular offence. The difference of sentences for the same offence in different cases depends upon the various other considerations which are special to each particular case.

[10] We are, therefore, of opinion that this is not a fit case in which we would grant leave to appeal to the S. C. The petn. is, therefore, rejected.

Supreme Court Appeal No. 12 of 1950, D/- 18-9-1950.

Constitution of India, Art. 134 (1) (c) — Criminal case — Leave to appeal to S. C.—Principles enunciated by S. C. in A. I. R. 1950 S. C. 162 in granting special leave under Art. 136 are equally applicable when leave to appeal is sought under Art. 134 (1) (c)—H. C. will refuse to grant leave unless special circumstances are shown to exist. [Paras 2, 3]

M. Mohanti & V. Pasayat—for Applts; Advocate General—for the State.

Ray C. J.—This is an appln. by the accused persons under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution invoking our jurisdiction to certify that the criminal case in which they have been convicted is a fit one for appeal to the S. C. The learned counsel, in substance argues that the subtleties that once arose for consideration in the matter of special leave to appeal in criminal cases to the P. C. ought not to arise in the case of leave to appeal to the S. C. His contention is that unlike the Judicial Committee of the P. C. the S. C. is a Ct. of Appeal within the meaning of the said Art. 134 (1) (a) & (b). Under the circumstances, he would argue that more liberalised consideration ought to apply.

[2] Bound as we are by the decisions of the S. C. in this matter, we cannot find our way to concede to this contention. We should invite attention to a recent decision of the S. C. in the case of Pritims Singh v. The State, A. I. R. (37) 1950 S. C. 169 : (51 Cr. L. J. 1270). There Fazl Ali J. while agreeing with a similar contention in its broad outlines, has expressed himself in the following passage namely:

"Though the S. C. is not bound to follow the decisions of the P. C. too rigidly since the reasons, constitutional & administrative, which sometimes weighed with the P. C. need not weigh with the S. C. it was necessary that an uniform standard should be laid down in matters of special leave under Art. 136 of the Constitution."

His Lordship has said :

"On a careful examination of Art. 136 along with the preceding Article, it seems clear that the wide discretionary power with which this Ct. is invested under it is to be exercised sparingly & in exceptional cases only, & so far as possible a more or less uniform standard should be adopted in granting special leave in the wide range of matters which can come up before it under this Article. By virtue of this Article, we can grant special leave in civil cases, in criminal cases, in income tax cases, in cases which come up before different kinds of tribunals & in a variety of other cases. The only uniform standard which in our opinion can be laid down in the circumstances is that Ct. should grant special leave to appeal in those cases where special circumstances are shown to exist."

Besides, his Lordship has further said that some of the principles laid down by their Lordships of the P. C. are useful as furnishing in many cases a sound basis for invoking the discretion of this Ct. in granting special leave. He has been very particular to point out that leave should not be granted in a case which when entertained will constitute the S. C. a third Ct. of fact. We have examined the circumstances in this case in the light of these principles as enunciated by his Lordship and we do not find that there is any special feature in this case which will entitle us to certify that this is a fit case for appeal. There is not much dispute about the finding of facts which have been very carefully considered & arrived at. The case does not present either complexity of law or of fact, or, in short, there are no such special features, as are required, according to his Lordship, in the present case.

[3] Mr. Mohanty, learned counsel for the applts. urges that the test laid down by his Lordship applies in case the case comes under Art. 136 of the Constitution, that is to say, in a case where special leave to appeal is prayed for in the S. C. & as such, it is not applicable to the case before us which is one under Art. 134 (1) (c). I do not find any merit in this distinction. His Lordship has said :

"The assumption that once an appeal has been admitted by special leave, the entire case is at large & the applt. is free to contest all the findings of fact & raise every point which could be raised in the H. C. or the trial Ct. is entirely unwarranted. Only those points can be urged at the final hearing of the appeal before the S. C. which are fit to be urged at the preliminary stage when leave to appeal is asked for, & it would be illogical to adopt different standards at two different stages of the same case."

[4] Suppose, we concede to Mr. Mohanty's argument & we apply a different standard & certify the case as fit one for leave to appeal which at the same time does not fit in with the test laid down by his Lordship. The position would necessarily arise that our jurisdiction will be greater than that of the S. C. This is a contention, if accepted, will land us in absurdity. The hearing of the appeal must be confined to those circumstances which could be urged before them at the stage of the preliminary hearing of the case in which special leave had been granted. So far as the final hearing is concerned, two different standards cannot be laid down. In the circumstances, this petn. must be dismissed.

Second Appeal No. 48 of 1949, D/-3-10-1950.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 90 — Old documents, are not necessarily presumed to be correct — Scope of S. 90.

No presumption of correctness need necessarily attach to documents which purport to be 30 years old. All that S. 90 lays down is that a Ct. may presume that such documents have been written or attested by the person who purports to have written or attested them Where the writer of the documents was alive & yet he was not called into the box to prove them, the mere production of them without anything more cannot carry the case of the person relying on them very far. [Para 6]

Anno. Evidence Act, S 90, N. 6.

(b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 35 — Rent realised shown in current settlement — Entry cannot be outweighed by rent receipts purporting to show different amount.

The mere fact that the entry in the rent receipts purported to show that a higher rent was realised cannot outweigh the value to be attached to the Current Settlement entry which definitely shows that a certain sum was being realised as the annual rent on the holding. [Para 6]

Anno. Evid. Act, S. 35, N. 19.

(c) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101-103—Ejectment suit — Nature of tenancy—Burden of proof.

In a suit for ejectment, the burden is heavily upon the pltf. to prove the nature of tenancy of the defts & he cannot make out his title on the failure of the defts. to establish affirmatively that they have been paying rent at a uniform rate though that is no doubt a material element in ascertaining the character of their tenancy especially when they had set up a permanent title. [Para 7]

Anno. Evid. Act, Ss. 101, 103, N. 30, 37; T. P. Act, S. 105, N. 43.

(d) Tenancy Laws —Orissa Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1913) — Lease held agricultural one & governed by Tenancy Law & not by T. P. Act — T. P. Act (1882), S. 117.

A deed evidencing a sale of Mafi Kharidar & Lakhrajbajiaftidari lands recited that the purchaser could cultivate them himself or get them cultivated by others; the holding was agricultural land at the time of the sale & was recorded as agricultural land & the rent for the lands came to be settled as if they were agricultural holdings. The status of the defts. whose house stood on the holding was shown as that of occupancy raiyats while that of the purchaser as an intermediate tenure holder:

Held that the lease to the defts. was agricultural lease, even if it was granted originally for purposes of putting up a building thereon. The way in which such holdings had been treated during Settlement operations showed that the status given to pattadars, dar-pattadars, & dar dar-pattadars, was very much like that of 'chandana' holdings. For the purposes of the Tenancy Act they had been treated as if they were agricultural holdings & the purpose of the lease was agricultural. The fact that the suit land along with other situated in a temporarily settled area was surveyed & the rents settled would show that the relations between the parties were governed by the provisions of the Orissa Tenancy Act; and as the local legislation regulates the relations between landlord & tenant the T. P. Act did not apply. [Para 8]

Anno. T. P Act, S. 105, N. 49; S. 117, N 3.

(e) T. P. Act (1882), S. 106 —Annual rent fixed— Building on land — Tenancy is not from month to month.

It would be anomalous to hold that where the rent fixed is annual the tenancy is from month to month merely because a house stands upon the holding. [Para 9]

Anno. T. P. Act, S. 106, N. 15 & 16.

(f) T. P. Act (1882), S. 106 —Lease on annual rent —No registered document —Tenant is tenant at will —Tenancy commencing from before T. P. Act —Tenancy is not tenancy at will. [Para 9]

Anno. T P. Act, S. 105, N. 32; S. 106, N. 6.

(g) T. P Act (1882), S. 106 — Tenant in possession for 70 years paying uniform rent —Apart from question of nature of tenancy whether agricultural or not, tenancy cannot be terminated without proper & reasonable notice.

Where the tenants have put up a dwelling house & have been proved to have remained in occupation of the land for as long as 70 years, paying a uniform annual rent, the tenancy cannot be terminated without a reasonable notice being served on them, whether the tenancy is agricultural or not. A notice not signed either by the lessor or his agent is of no value. [Para 10]

Anno. T. P. Act, S. 106, N. 19.

(h) Tenancy laws—Orissa Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1913), as amended by Act (X [10] of 1946), S. 236— Section is retrospective.

Section 236, Orissa Tenancy Act, as amended by Act X [10] of 1946 is retrospective in its operation & whatever might have been the position before the Act came into force, the Legislature has clearly conferred the status of permanency in their holdings, on all tenants of homesteads. It does not matter whether the holding was, at its inception, agricultural or otherwise. For the purpose of the Act, all homestead tenancies are put on the same footing as agricultural tenancies & the relations between the landlord & tenant which had formerly been regulated by custom & usage have been declared to be regulated by the law applicable to occupancy raiyats. The tenants will be protected from eviction where they have acquired the status of occupancy raiyats under the Amending Act X [10] of 1946. [Para 11]

S. N. Das Gupta—for Aplts.; S. K. De & D. S. Das —for Resp.

Judgment. — It is not necessary to reserve judgment & keep back my decision from the parties in this case. The facts giving rise to the appeal are simple but the law argued at the Bar is not as simple.

[2] The pltf.-resp. filed a suit in ejectment— out of which this appeal arises—in respect of an extent of 136 cf. an acre in C. S. Plot No. 2007 in Cuttack Town, against the defts. alleging that they were darpattadars under him in respect of this property. The pltf. served a notice to quit on 19-4-46 & filed the suit a month later. His case was that the deft. is a tenant-at-will & is liable to be evicted at any time. The deft. pleaded that he had a house on the suit holding for at least 70 years & had acquired permanent occupancy right in the land, that the notice to quit was neither proper nor duly served upon him, & that he is protected from eviction by virtue of the recent amendment to S. 236, Orissa Tenancy Act, by Act X (10 of 1946. Exhibit A, the Current Settlement Khatian shows that the status of the deft in respect of the suit land is that of a dar-pattadar & that of the pltf. Madhyasatvadhikari.

[3] The learned Munsif found that the origin of the tenancy was not known but that the deft. had been in occupation of the land for over 70 years. He also found that the original lease was for building purposes & that it contained permanent structures, that the defts had been in possession from father to son for three gene rations, paying a uniform rent throughout. He further found that the documents relied on by the pltf. did not prove that there was any variation in the amount of rent paid & also observed that he was not inclined to place much reliance on the genuineness of the rent receipts. The learned Munsif recorded a further finding that the notice to quit (Ex. 3) was invalid as it had not been signed by or on behalf of the pltf. The pltf's suit was accordingly dismissed.

[4] On appeal the Addl. Subordinate Judge differed from the finding of the trial Ct that the defts. had acquired a right of occupancy on a permanent basis. In his view the rent had varied at different times, there was no evidence to prove payment of a uniform rent & no formal notice to quit was necessary He accordingly allowed the pltf's appeal & gave a decree in his favour.

[5] In second appeal it is urged for the defts. firstly, that the lower appellate Ct. erred in appreciating the evidentiary value to be attached to Ex. 2 & 2-a, Exs. 5 series & Ex. 6 & that the correct inference to be drawn from these documents ought to have been that the pltf had failed to prove that there had been a variation in the rent paid; secondly that the holding was an agricultural holding, to start with, & though the lease of a portion of the holding was for residential purposes the lease itself should have been deemed to be a lease of agricultural land only &, as such governed by the provisions of the Orissa Tenancy Act; and thirdly that the recent amendment to S. 236 of the Act, by Act X [10] of 1946 affords protection to all tenants of homesteads irrespective of the nature of the holding.

[6] So far appreciation of the documentary evidence is concerned it is pointed out by Mr. Das, learned counsel for the pltf., that the finding recorded by the Ct. below is conclusive & is not open to challenge in second appeal. The documents relied on by the pltf. are Exs. 2 & 2/a, being counterfoils of certain rent receipts, Exs. 5, 5/c, being wasilbaki papers, & Ex. 6, the rafa book. The trial Ct critically examined these papers & particularly the manner of their production which seemed suspicious, & held that the father of the plts. was realising a rent of Rs. 2 uniformly. With regard to Exs. 5, 5/b & 5/c, the trial Ct. particularly noticed that the rent of Rs. 2/4 shown therein appertained to 15 decimals of land—a fact which appears to have been ignored by the lower appellate Ct The lower appellate Ct appears to have proceeded on an assumption that the entries in all these documents, purporting to be thirty years old, must necessarily be correct. No such presumption need necessarily attach to old documents. All that S. 90, Evidence Act, lays down is that a Ct. may presume that such documents have been written or attested by the person who purports to have written or attested them. In this case, as the trial Ct. has observed, the writer of these papers was alive & yet he was not called into the box to prove these papers. With regard to Exs. 2 & 2/a, which purport to show that a sum of Rs. 2/8/0 was paid by the defts through one Bhagwan Mohanty an agent of pltf., they, too, have not been properly proved as the agent was not examined. Mere production of these documents without anything more cannot therefore carry the case of the pltf. very far. The lower appellate Ct. appears to have ignored this aspect of the matter & assumed that the mere production of these documents, purporting to be thirty years old, is sufficient proof of the correctness of the contents thereof. I am not satisfied that the assessment of the evidentiary value of these documents by the lower appellate Ct. is altogether satisfactory. I have myself gone through documents & find that they are not above suspicion or challenge. In any case, the mere fact that the entry in these papers purported to show that a higher rent was realised cannot outweigh the value to be attached to the Current Settlement entry, as evidenced by Ex. A which definitely shows that a sum of Rs. 2 was being realised as the annual rent on the holding. In the circumstances it must be held that there was no variation in the rent paid as alleged by the pltf. Some argument seems to have been addressed challenging the validity of the entry in Ex. A, on the ground of absence of any entry against the item "Settled Rent" in that document. I can find no difficulty in understanding the reason for the non-mention of the settled rent in this case, because it had already been settled between the parties at Rs. 2 & in the case of such tenancies it was not necessary for the Settlement Office to fix a separate rent unless the parties themselves challenged it & wanted him to fix a fair & equitable rent. The presumption attaching to the correctness of the entry in Ex. A has not been rebutted by such evidence to the contrary as can be accepted as wholly reliable.

[7] The lower appellate Ct. confined itself to a discussion of the rate of rent only as the other points found in favour of the defts. were not seriously challenged in appeal. Mr. De points out that the presumption attaching to the entry in the Court (current ?) Settlement Record cannot apply to a non-agricultural holding. That is a perfectly sound proposition. But it is not admitted in this case that the plot in dispute is a non-agricultural holding. I shall refer to this point later. The lower appellate Ct. did not attach value to Ex. 4, M. O. acknowledgment showing receipt of Rs. 6 from the defts. towards rent of the years 1943 to 1945, on the erroneous impression that only production of rent receipts is proof of payment of rent. Exhibits 2/a & 2/b were accepted at their face value because the defts. called for the rent receipts in the possession of the pltf. Exhibits 5, 5/b & 5/c & 6 were accepted & the entries therein were used in proof of the payment of rent because the documents were thirty years old. But, as I have said earlier, the fact that the entries in Ex. 5 series related to 15 decimals of land was lost sight of. These documents were produced by P. W. 2 although he had not been summoned, & appear to have been almost thrust upon the defts. The learned lower appellate Ct. seems to have laboured under the impression that unless the defts. produced the rent receipts, their case of payment of a uniform rent could not be accepted. This is not the correct way to approach the question. The pltf. having come to Ct. to eject, it was heavily upon him to prove the nature of tenancy of the defts. & he cannot make out his title on the failure of the defts. to establish affirmatively that they have been paying rent at a uniform rate though that is no doubt a material element in ascertaining the character of their tenancy especially when they had set up a permanent title. I am, therefore, unable to accept the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the rent paid in respect of the suit holding was variable, & am inclined to agree with the finding of the learned Munsif that a uniform rent of Rs. 2 per year had been paid by the defts. & their ancestors as shown in Ex. A.

[8] The next point urged is whether this is a lease governed by the provisions of the Orissa Tenancy Act or whether it is governed by those of the T. P. Act. Exhibit 1, dated 14-3-1916 filed by the pltf. shows that he purchased under it 8 & odd acres of Mafi-Kharida lands & 2 acres of Lakhrajbajiaftidari lands. All these were agricultural lands at the time of purchase. The sale deed Ex. 1 recites that the lands were sold & that the purchaser could cultivate them himself or get them cultivated by others. The holding on which the deft.'s house stands was, therefore, agricultural land at the time of the sale in 1916 & was recorded as agricultural land. Accordingly, the rent for the lands came to be settled as if they were agricultural holdings, & the status of the defts. was shown as that of occupancy raiyats while that of the pltf. as an intermediate tenure-holder. The contention put forward on behalf of the pltf. is that if the lease was granted not for agricultural purposes but for other purposes like the putting up of a building on the land, the lease would be governed by the T. P. Act & not by the Orissa Tenancy Act the land having ceased to be agricultural land. There is, however, authority for the contrary view : see Asraf Ali v. Emperor, 27 I. C. 839 : (A.I.R. (2) 1915 Cal. 784 : 16 Cr. L. J. 215), Abdul Karim v. Abdul Rahman, 13 I. C. 364 : (15 Cr. L. J. 672), Babu Ram v. Mahindra Nath, 8 C. W. N. 454 and Ram Pado v. Atore Dome, A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 202 : (84 I. C. 743). The way in which such holdings have been treated during settlement operations makes me think that the status given to pattadars, darpattadars & dar-darpattadars, is very much like that of 'chandna' holdings. For the purposes of the Tenancy Act they have been treated as if they were agricultural holdings & the purpose of the lease is agricultural. The fact that the suit land along with other situated in a temporarily settled area was surveyed & the rents settled would show that the relations between the parties are governed by the provisions of the Orissa Tenancy Act; and as the local legislation regulates the relations between landlord & tenant the T. P. Act would not apply.

[9] Even if the contention of Mr. De were to prevail, the tenancy of the defts. would be a lease from year to year as the rent reserved is annual; and it would be anomalous to hold that though the rent fixed is annual the tenancy is from month to month merely because a house stands upon the holding. Mr. De's contention is that if the lease is held to be governed by the T. P. Act the status of the tenant is no better than that of a tenant-at-will. There is considerable force in this argument because admittedly there is no registered document evidencing the lease; but it is for the pltf. himself who wants to eject, to show that the tenancy commenced after the T. P. Act came into force. On the other side, it is argued that in view of the finding of the learned Munsif that the tenancy has been in existence for at least 70 years the legitimate inference should be that the land was granted for building purposes, prior to the passing of the T. P. Act.

[10] There is, however, yet another difficulty in the way of the pltf. Even if his contention were to be accepted, namely, that the tenancy is not of a permanent character, but is only that of a tenancy-at-will in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the pltf. before terminating the tenancy under the T. P. Act, should serve a proper notice to quit on the deft. It may be that a formal notice may not be necessary if the demand for possession is made & reliance is placed by Mr. De on the case Ramkishun v. Bibi Sohila, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Pat. 561 : (145 I. C. 567) which follows Ramdhani Gope v. C. V. Scott, A. I. R. (12) 1925 Pat. 256 : (85 I. C. 77) for the view that no notice is necessary in the case of a tenant-at-will. The decision in the latter case turned upon the construction of the document which itself stipulated that no notice would be required before termination. That decision must, therefore, be confined to the facts of that particular case & cannot lend support to the view that in every case of a tenant at will the landlord can straightway re-enter without even making a demand for possession. In cases like the present, where the defts. have put up a dwelling house & have been proved to have remained in occupation of the land for as long as 70 years, paying a uniform annual rent, the tenancy cannot, in my opinion, be terminated without a reasonable notice being served on them. Unfortunately for the pltf. though Ex. 3 purporting to be a notice was served on the deft., it was not signed either by the lessor or his agent, & therefore no value can be attached to this document. I looked for evidence on the side of the pltf. to see if any demand for possession was made but Mr. De has been unable to point to any such evidence. Apart from the fact, therefore, whether the tenancy is agricultural or not & whether it is governed by the Orissa Tenancy Act or the T. P. Act, the fact that no valid notice was served on the defts. would be sufficient to dispose of this suit.

[11] Another & more formidable argument has been addressed on behalf of the defts. & this is based on the applicability of S. 236, Orissa Tenancy Act, as amended by Act X [10] of 1946. That section is retrospective in its operation & will govern the facts of this case. It lays down that the incidents of tenancy of any tenant in respect of his homestead shall be regulated by the provisions of the Act applicable to occupancy raiyats. Whatever might have been the position before the Act came into force, the Legistature has clearly conferred the status of permanency in their holdings, on all tenants of homesteads. It does not matter whether the holding was, at its inception, agricultural or otherwise. For the purpose of the Act, all homestead tenancies are put on the same footing as agricultural tenancies & the relations between the landlord & tenant which had formerly been regulated by custom & usage have been declared to be regulated by the law applicable to occupancy raiyats. In this view of the matter, the defts. will be protected from eviction as they have acquired the status of occupancy raiyats under the Amendment Act X [10] of 1946.

[12] My conclusions, therefore, are that the tenancy of the defts. is governed by the provisions of the Orissa Tenancy Act, that they had a permanent tenancy right in the suit holding before the Amendment Act X [10] of 1946 came into force & that they have been given statutory protection subsequently, that the notice to quit purporting to have been served by the pltf. is of no effect & that the pltf. has not made out his case for ejecting the defts. The judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is accordingly set aside & that of the learned Munsif restored & the pltf's suit shall stand dismissed. This appeal is allowed with costs throughout. Leave to appeal is granted.

Court-fees Act (1870), S. 5 — Bench of Judges — Power to decide question of payment of deficit court-fees.

There is no provision in S. 5 for the determination of the question relating to the payment of deficit court-fee on a memorandum of appeal by a bench of the Court. The juxtaposition of the phrase "such Judge" with the phrase "Chief Justice" in that section indicates that single Judge is meant and that it can have no reference to a Bench of Judges. [Para 2]

P. Misra and L. K. Das Gupta — for Applt. (in Nos. 45 & 47 respectively); S. N. Sen Gupta—for Resps. (in both).

Jagannadhadas J.—These appeals have been posted before this Bench for orders in connection with the payment of alleged deficit court-fees payable by the respective appellants in each of the appeals. All these appeals have been made analogous since they are against a common judgment in separate suits tried together. The alleged deficit court-fee payable is only in respect of the appeal memoranda to this Court. There is no question before us now of any deficit payable by any of the appellants in these appeals on their plaints in the trial Court.

[2] The question that has been raised is whether this Bench has the jurisdiction to deal with this matter. The determination of the proper court-fee payable on an appeal memorandum to the High Court is regulated by S. 5, Court-fees Act. Under that section, when a difference arises as to the court-fee payable, the question is to be determined primarily by the taxing officer of the High Court. The taxing officer under the said section may, in a proper case, refer the matter to the taxing Judge. There is no provision for the determination of the question by a Bench of the Court or by any other Judge of the Court, unless the Chief Justice constitutes that Judge as the taxing Judge specially for the particular matter or unless the Chief Justice chooses to deal with the matter himself. In Deoji Goa v. Tricumji Jivandas, A. I. R (22) 1935 Pat. 396 : (14 Pat. 658 S. B.), Wort J appears to have been of the opinion that the taxing officer had jurisdiction to refer a question arising under S. 5, Court-fees Act to a Bench. He relied on the argument that the section when it provides for reference to "such Judge" in the singular, contemplates the plural also. It appears to have been thought that the Chief Justice could appoint a Bench of two Judges "especially in this behalf to hear a particular matter" It appears to me, with great respect, that this argument is not sound as a matter of construction. The wording used in the section

"he shall refer it to the final decision of the Chief Justice or such Judge of the High Court as the Chief Justice shall appoint either generally or specially in this behalf."

It appears to me to be clear that the juxtaposition of the phrase "such Judge." with the phrase "Chief Justice" indicates that a single Judge is meant and that it can have no reference to a Bench of Judges. In the above reported case, the other two learned Judges have not in terms dealt with this point. On the other hand, there are quite a number of cases in which it has been repeatedly held that neither the taxing officer nor the taxing Judge has the power to refer a matter arising under S. 5, Court-fees Act to a Bench of the Court and that on a proper reference such a matter has to be decided only by the taxing Judge. It is sufficient to refer to the cases in Kuldip Sahai v. Harihar Prasad, A. I. R. (11) 1924 Pat. 161 : (3 Pat. 146), Krishna Mohan Sinha v. Raghunandan Pandey, A I. R. (12) 1925 Pat 392 : (4 Pat. 336 F. B), Dhanukdhari Prashad v. Ramadhakari, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Pat. 81 : (12 Pat. 188), Khachera v. Kharag Singh 33 ALL. 20 : (7 I. C. 315) and Gangaram Tillockchand v. Chief Controlling Rev. Authority A I. R (14) 1927 Bom. 643 : (52 Bom. 61) in support of the above view.

[3] We are therefore, of the opinion that this matter cannot be dealt with by us as a Bench. The matter will be placed before the taxing Judge for his decision and it is open to him to treat this as a reference by the taxing officer to the taxing Judge and deal with it accordingly.

Civil Revn. No. 168 of 1948, D/-4-2-1949.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 9, R. 9—Restoration appln. — Notices.

Where all the defts. had filed written statements but only some were contesting the suit, & there was no order for ex parte hearing against those not contesting, & on the date of the hearing the pltfs. not taking any further steps, the suit was dismissed under O. 9 R. 8, the Ct. must issue, upon an appln by the pltfs. under O. 9, R, 9, notices not only to the contesting defts. but also to those who were not contesting. If restoration were ordered after issuing notices only to those defts who were contesting, the order would be one passed in contravention of O. 9. R. 9 (2). [Paras 4 & 5]

Anno. Civil P C., O. 9, R. 9, N. 1.

D. Mohanty —for Petnrs; S. Misra — for Opposite Party.

Ray C. J. — This is a petn. by defts. 4 to 11 for revising an order passed by Munsif of Cuttack restoring a suit which had been dismissed under O. 9 R. 8, C. P. C. The suit was one for specific performance of contract of lease of some waste lands as well as Nijchas lands. The contract had been entered into by defts. 1 to 2, who admittedly are the proprietors. The contract is said to have been entered into on different dates (29-9-44 & 6-2 45) in respect of waste lands & Nijchas lands respectively. The defts. 1 & 2, however, executed a registered permanent lease in respect of the very same lands in favour of deft. 3 on 4-8-45 The latter about two years after his lease sold his lease-hold interest to defts. 4 to 12 of whom defts 4 to 11 are the petnrs. before us. Admittedly, defts 4 to 12 were actively contesting the suit. The position in relation to the other defts. is that defts. 1 to 2 filed a written statement alleging that as the plff. had failed to pay the promised consideration, they were at liberty to grant the subsequent lease in favour of deft. 3. The deft. 3 filed a written statement opposing the pltfs.' case & asserting the validity of his lease free from equity in favour of any contract alleged by the pltfs. & his right to transfer to the defts. 4 to 12. The defts. 1 to 3 did not consider it necessary to take any further steps in support of their defence & what course they were likely to take at the hearing of the suit is difficult to speculate. One thing, however, is certain that the Ct. never considered that these defts. had withdrawn from the contest. It appears to be so from the fact, as it is conceded at the Bar, that the Ct. never set down the suit as ex parte against those defts. In law therefore, anyone of them or all could come & appear at any time in course of the hearing & contest the suit. They might or might not have the necessity for summoning any witnesses or producing any documents. On the date of hearing the pltfs. as well as defts. 4 to 12 filed petns. for adjournments. The Ct. rejected the prayers of both & called upon them to take further steps in the suit. Following this order, defts. 4 to 11 intimated their readiness to go on with their defence & filed Hazira of their witnesses. The pltfs., however, did not take any further steps. Under the circumstances, the Munsif dismissed the suit under O. 9 R. 8, C.P.C. Then followed an appln. under O. 9, R. 9 for restoration of the suit to its orginal file. This petition was registered as Misc Case. No. 24/48. On a date later than it was registered, the 2nd Addl. Munsif, Cuttack, passed this queer & unusual order :

"Requisites filed. Issue notice on the contesting Opp. Parties 4 to 11 fixing 27-4-48 for return."

overriding the earlier order to issue notice to all opposite parties. According to this order, notices of the petn. for restoration were issued & served upon defts. 4 to 11. Accordingly, no notices were issued to defts. 1, 2, 3 & 12. The petn. therefore, was heard in presence of those defts. only & was allowed. As against this, the present revn. has been filed.

[2] The contention of Mr. Mohanti, the learned counsel for the petnrs., is that the proceeding is illegal & the order invalid, in as much as, as required under O. 9 R. 9 (2) that no such order of restoration can be made until notices of the appln. had been served on all the opposite parties. From the petn. for restoration it appears that all the defts. in the suit had been arraigned as opposite parties. It is difficult to understand how could the learned Munsif at that stage discriminate some of the opposite parties as against the others on the ground that some were contesting & others not. It appears that this Order No. 44 dated 6-4-48 in Misc. Case. No. 24/48, is to the order of the pltfs. but not as required by law we take a serious notice of this sort of order which implies nothing but slackness & negligence on the part of the Presiding Officer as well as of the Bench Clerk concerned.

[3] We have now to consider whether this omission invalidates the order. Mr. Misra, appearing for the opposite parties, has invited our attention to two decisions, one of Allahabad H. C. & the other of Bombay H. C., in support of his contention that the order was partly under O. 9, R. 3 & partly under O. 9, R. 8 according as it was against non-appearing defts. & the appearing ones. Those cases do, no doubt, spilt the order in that fashion. The references are Makundi Singh v Prabhu Dayal, A. I. R. (13) 1926 ALL. 169 : (48 ALL. 97) and Damu Diga v Vakrya Nathu, A I R (7) 1920 Bom. 54 : (44 Bom. 767). Those cases, however, do not relate to a proceeding for restoration of the dismissed suit but concern with right to fresh suit on the same cause of action against those defts who did not appear on the date of hearing of the previous suit. As the point as was considered by their Lordships, is not before us, I should reserve my opinion with regard to the correctness of these decisions with great respect for an occasion when it arises.

[4] So far as the present order is concerned, it is clear, however, that there is nothing to show that defts. 1, 2, 3 & 12 did not appear on the date fixed. It is conceded by Mr. Misra frankly enough that very rightly as it appears from the materials that defts. 1, 2, 3 & 12 were not called out by the Ct. at the time when the suit was taken up for hearing. In these circumstances, it is difficult to say that they did not appear. Besides the statement of Mr. Misra we do not find anything on record to show that these defts. had been called upon & that either they did not respond or refused to take any steps in the case or anything of the kind. Appearance does not mean physical appearance by the defts. themselves or their pleader If appearance had any meaning it is this that the party concerned must be in readiness to see to the progress of the suit or the defence in such a manner as he thinks best in his own interest. The defts. may have nothing further to do according to their particular line of defence until the actual hearing of the suit begins which in fact had never begun. As I have already said that to the knowledge of the Ct these defts. had never been set down ex parte. Under the circumstances & on the facts it is not clear that the order of dismissal as against these defts. can be taken to be one under O. 9, R. 3. Conceding that this order was against them as one under O. 9, R. 3, the pltfs. must make it clear whether they want to have the order of restoration effectively passed against them. That they do so want appears from their own petn. in which they implead them as opposite parties. If the suit had not been set down ex parte against them & if they were going to be bound by the order of restoration that had been passed, I do not understand how any order affecting them could be passed in their absence. Some support is prayed in aid from the absence of a provision in the terms or the like of sub-r (2) of R. 9 of the Order from R. 4. But that does not necessarily mean that in any default under O. 9, R. 3 restoration can be had in the absence of the opposite parties. There may be a case in which deft. has not at all appeared or having appeared has not filed any defence. In such cases it is quite possible that the Ct. in its discretion, may say that no notice is necessary to be served upon him in the matter of restoration, as he must be served again after the suit is restored to its file. But what about the case in which the deft. had entered into contest, & had put the pltf. to proof of his case? In these cases certainly the dismissal of the pltf's suit, be it under whatever provision of the Code, gives rise to a valuable right in his favour. It is difficult to conceive that they can be deprived of that right without being heard. It may be said even without restoration the pltf. has a right to fresh suit on the same cause of action. It may be so, but that does not answer the deft's cause. It may be for the purpose of a fresh suit lot of moneys is necessary by way of payment of court-fees and the pltf. may not be able to institute a fresh suit. There is always many a slip between cup & lip. Under the circumstances, the right to prevent restoration of the suit is no doubt a valuable right.

[5] In the circumstances, it is clear that the order under revn. has been passed in contravention of O. 9, R. 9 (2) of the Code & cannot be maintained.

[6] In the result, the civil revn. is allowed with costs. Hearing fee is assessed at one gold mohur.

[7] Under the circumstances, the petn. for restoration should be reheard after notice to all the defts.

Krishna Chandra Gajapati Narayan Deo — Pltf. — Applt. v. Rokkam Venkatapparao Dora—Deft.—Resp.

Second Appeal No. 153 of 1944, D/- 10-1-1949.

Madras Survey & Boundaries Act (VIII [8] of 1923), Ss. 13 & 14 — Rival claims to plot of land—Effect.

The question as to whether the determination of the boundary of a village (whether a boundary dispute existed or not) under S. 13, Madras Survey & Boundaries Act, 1923, will affect title to a piece of land lying within the said boundary, would depend very much on the nature of the claim to that land & the questions that fall for decision before the Survey Officer. For instance, if the claim to a particular plot of land is itself based on the ground that it lies in a particular village belonging to one of the parties & the Survey Officer while determining the boundary holds that the plot lies in the adjacent village, such determination of the boundary, unless set aside by a suit under S. 14 of that Act, would undoubtedly conclude title in respect of that plot. But where the rival claim regarding title to a plot of land is confined to the question whether it is the Inam land of one of the parties or the Jeroyati land of the other, & has nothing to do with the question as to whether the plot lies within the boundary of one village or of the adjacent village, the dispute merely relates to the title of the plot in dispute as distinguished from a dispute as to its boundary. In such a case the decision under S. 13 will not adversely affect the title (if any) or operate as a bar merely because there has been no suit to set aside the decision under S. 14. [Para 12]

M. S. Rao—for Applt.; P. V. B. Rao—for Resp.

Narasimham J.—This is the pltf's second appeal against the order of the Dist. J. of Ganjam Puri reversing the decision of the Special Deputy Collector, Chicacole Division & dismissing the pltf's suit for recovery of arrears of rent for the three Fasli years 1342 to 1344.

[2] This litigation has had a chequered career. The pltf's suit was brought in 1936 & it was first dismissed by the then Deputy Collector on 27-10-1937 in S. S. NO. 752 of 1936. On appeal, the Dist. J. set aside the order of dismissal & remanded the suit for fresh disposal. The suit was then heard by a Special Deputy Collector who decreed the claim. On appeal, the learned Dist. J: revsd. the decision of the Special Deputy Collector & dismissed the suit. Thereupon, the pltf. preferred a second appeal to the Hon'ble H. C. who directed the rehearing of the appeal by the Dist. J. on the ground that the lower appellate Ct. misconcieved the scope of the previous litigation between the parties in the year 1902. After remand, the lower appellate Ct. again dismissed the suit chiefly on the ground that the decision in O. S. NO. 23 of 1902 operated as res judicata between the parties. This appeal is against that order of dismissal of the lower appellate Ct.

[3] In the plaint it was stated that the lands for which the rent was claimed were lying in Gorrebanda village & that they were about 20 acres in extent. The Zamidar (the pltf-applt.) claimed the lands as part of his jeroyati lands in village Gorrebanda. It is the admitted case of both the parties that a major portion of the lands in that village are the inam lands of the resp. for which he was paying Kattubadi of Rs. 55 per annum to the Zamindar. The resp's main defence was that the lands in dispute were also included in his inam lands in that village & that consequently the applt. was not entitled to any jeroyati rent apart from the Kattubadi of Rs. 55 per annum.

[4] Sometime in 1934 the applt. applied to the Revenue authorities for the survey & preparation of record of rights of some jeroyati lands which (according to him) were lying unsurveyed in some villages of the estate. Along with that appln. (Ex. H), he gave a list of the lands (Ex. H-1) proposed to be surveyed, including in that list about 34.50 acres of land which were said to lie near Gurrebanda village. The survey of these lands was sanctioned by Govt. & it has been well proved that the survey authorities included the said lands in village Thammayapetta which is adjacent north of Gurrebanda. A notice under S. 13, Madras Survey & Boundaries Act, 1923 (Ex. H-3) was also issued by the survey authorities on 27-3-1936. It appears that while the survey operations were proceeding the resp. filed an objection urging that the said lands formed part of his inam lands. But on 29-5-1935 an intimation was given to him by the survey authorities (Ex. X-a) to the effect that as the survey would be subsequently followed by a record of rights the question of title would be decided by the Record of Rights Officer. Apparently on receipt of this reassuring letter, the respt. did not pursue his objection & allowed the survey to be completed in the usual course. Subsequently, when the preparation of record of rights was in progress he filed an objection before the Settlement Officer claiming the lands as part of his inam lands in village Gurrebanda. This objection was disallowed by the Settlement Officer on 12-5-1938 (Ex. T). It will be noticed that these proceedings took place while the present suit under appeal was pending. The final publication of the record of rights was, however, posponed pending the disposal of this litigation (vide Ex. XII).

[5] The learned trial Ct. came to a finding to the effect that the lands in dispute were part of the jeroyati lands of the Zamindar & not part of the inam lands of the resp. His finding was mainly based on some documents of the Zamindar showing realisation of jeroyati rent in Gurrebanda village from 1884 & also some documents Exs. E. 2, B-1, R. 2 & E-1) signed by the resp's father himself showing payment of rent for jeroyati lands as distinct from payment of Kattubadi for the inam lands. In setting aside this decision of the trial Ct, the learned Dist. J. has been mainly influenced by the decision of the H. Ct. in Appl. No. 182 of 1903 against the decision of the lower Ct. in O. S. No. 23 of 1902. He further observed that the pltf-applt. had given discrepant statements as regards the area & identity of the lands & that the plaint was liable to be rejected on the ground of indistinctness.

[6] MR. M. S. Rao on behalf of the applt. raised the following two important questions of law: (i) The lower appellate Ct. completely misconceived the effect of the decision in O. S. No. 23 of 1902 & that the decision in that suit would not, in any way, affect the right of the pltf. to claim arrear rent for the lands in dispute. (ii) The lower appellate Ct. further erred in its interpretation of S. 13, Madras Survey & Boundaries Act, 1923 & that the said section operates as a complete bar to the resp's claim of the disputed lands as part of his inam lands of village Gurrebanda.

[7] Point No. (i)—The plaint & the judgment of the H. Ct. in O. S. No. 23 of 1902 have been proved in this case (Exs. VIII, VIII a & XI) & they show unmistakably that in 1902 the then Maharaja of Parlakhimedi instituted a suit against the father of the resp. for resumption of the inam lands in village Gurrebanda. In the sch. attached to the plaint (Ex. VIII-a) it was clearly stated that the whole of village Gurrebanda excluding some Kheta Banjar lands were the inam lands. That suit was dismissed by the H. Ct. in 1907 (Ex. XI), on the ground that the duties of the inamdar were of a public character partaking of the nature of police duties & that consequently the inam was not resumable. It is conceded by the learned advocates for both parties that so far as the inam lands of village Gurrebanda are concerned, this decision of the H. Ct. concludes the matter. The main point of controversy centres round the identity of the lands known as Kheta Banjar lands which were excluded from the scope of that litigation. On behalf of the resp. it is urged that the lands in dispute in the present litigation are part of the inam lands of the village whereas on behalf of the applt, it is urged that the disputed lands form part of the Kheta Banjar lands which were admittedly excluded from the scope of the previous litigation.

[8] When the appeal was remanded by the H. Ct. to the lower appellate Ct. for rehearing, both parties were given adequate opportunities to lead further evidence regarding the identity of the lands in the present suit with special reference to the lands which formed the subject matter of litigation in O. S. No. 23 of 1902. Additional documentary evidence was adduced by both parties. It will, therefore, be of mere academic interest to consider the question of burden of proof when a plea of res judicata is raised by one of the parties to a litigation. The resp. has given evidence on oath & stated that the suit lands formed part of his inam lands in village Gurrebanda. On behalf of the applt. the evidence (both oral & documentary) to show that the suit lands were included in Kheta Banjar lands is wholly unsatisfactory. [After reviewing the evidence the judgment continued:] Judging the evidence as a whole, I think the only reasonable inference is that it is not proved satisfactorily that the lands in dispute in the present litigation formed part of Kheta Banjar lands of village Gurrebanda. The pltf's right to realise rent in respect of the jeroyati lands which formed part of the village Gorrebanda can arise only if it be shown that those lands were not included in the inam lands of the village & his failure to prove this fact must be fatal to the whole suit.

[9] Point No. (ii).—As already pointed out, the disputed lands have now been surveyed as part of village Tammayapetta though there is undoubtedly some confusion as to the exact location or precise area of the disputed lands. The deft. himself clearly admitted in his objection before the Settlement Officer (EX. T) that the disputed lands have now been included in village Tammayapetta.

[10] The next question is whether the decision of the Survey Officer under S. 13, Madras Survey & Boundaries Act, 1923, as notified in EX. H-3, will have the effect of debarring the resp. from claiming the lands as his inam lands in view of his failure to institute a suit within the period prescribed by S. 14 of that Act. The effect of S. 13, Madras Survey & Boundaries Act, 1923 & the corresponding section of the older Act of 1897 have been the subject of several decisions of the Madras H. C. But for the purpose of this appeal, it is unnecessary to discuss them at great length. Mr. M. S. Rao on behalf of the applt. relies mainly on Ponnuswami v. Mariappa Servai, A. I. R. (30) 1943 Mad. 420 : (210 I. C. 282) whereas the learned advocate for the other side relies on the following observations in an F. B. decision reported in Sivaprasad v. Narasimhamurthy, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Mad. 187: (I. L. R. (1940) Mad. 501 F. B.) & a later decision of Byers J. reported in Nagarathnam Pillai v. Guruswami Pillai, A. I. R. (30) 1943 Mad. 727: (211 I. C. 124) :

"When it was a matter of a boundary dispute the survey officer had to decide where the boundary should lie & if he decided that the piece of land in dispute fell within the boundary of one of the opposing parties his order did affect the title to that particular piece of land. Where there was no boundary dispute, but in making the survey the survey officer found that two persons were claiming title to the same holding, he would for the purposes of the register have to decide whose name should be inserted therein as the owner, but this in itself did not mean that the Act empowered the survey officer, or the appellate authority to decide who was in law entitled to the property under survey."

[11] Strictly speaking, the F. B. decision in Sivaprasad v. Narasimhamurthy, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Mad. 187 : (I. L. R. (1940) Mad. 501 F. B.) will not be applicable to the facts of the present case because it dealt with the interpretation of the relevant provisions of the older Act of 1897 in which the existence of a boundary dispute was necessary for giving finality to the decision of the Suvery Officer. But the observations of Leach C. J. quoted above have undoubtedly a wider import.

[12] The question as to whether the determination of the boundary of a village (whether a boundary dispute existed or not) under S. 13, Madras Survey & Boundaries Act, 1923 will affect title to a piece of land lying within the said boundary would depend very much on the nature of the claim to that land & the questions that fell for decision before the Survey Officer. For instance, if the claim to a particular plot of land is itself based on the ground that it lies in a particular village belonging to one of the parties & the Survey Officer while determining the boundary holds that the plot lies in the adjacent village, such determination of the boundary unless set aside by a suit under S. 14 of that Act would undoubtedly conclude title in respect of that plot. But where the rival claim regarding title to a plot of land has nothing to do with the question as to whether the plot lies within the boundary of one village or of the adjacent village, how can it be said that the determination of the boundary under S. 13 would affect title? In fact in the judgment of Abdur Rahman J. Ponnuswami v. Mariappa Servai, A. I. R. (30) 1943 Mad 420 at p. 423 : (210 I. C. 282) this point was specially emphasised by the following observations :

"It may be that if the dispute merely related to the title of the plot in dispute as distinguished from a dispute as to its boundary, the order passed by the survey officer would not have become final."

This observation applies with full force to the present case. Neither the claim of the Zamindar nor the claim of the inamdar resp. to the lands in dispute has anything to do with the question as to whether the said lands lie within Gorrebanda village or within Tammayapetta village. On the other hand, as early as 1881 the Zamindar stated that the lands lay in Gorrebanda village. Similarly in the litigation of 1902 also he clearly described Kheta Bhanjar lands as lying within the ambit of Gorrebanda village. In his appln. for survey in the year 1934 (EX. H-1) he slightly changed his case & stated that the lands lay near Gorrebanda village. His right to realise jer ayati rent from the suit lands (according to him) arose from the fact that they were not included within the inam lands of the resp. & not from the fact that the lands have been surveyed now within the limits of village Tammayapetta. Similarly the resp's claim regarding the lands in dispute has nothing to do with the boundaries of either Gorrebanda village or Tammayapetta village. His case all along has been that the lands were included within his inam lands which in the litigation of 1902 were admitted by both parties to lie in Gorrebanda village. Therefore, I would hold that dispute between the parties regarding their respective title to the lands in dispute has nothing to do with the determination of the boundaries of either Tammayapetta or Gorrebanda & consequently the decision of the survey officer under S. 13 of the Act will not adversely affect the deft's. title (if any) merely because he failed to institute a suit to set aside the decision under S. 14 of that Act. In fact when the deft. objected at the time of survey the survey authorities themselves assured him that the question of title would be left open (vide Ex. X-a).

[13] Therefore, though the lower appellate Ct. seems to have completely overlooked the nature of the objections raised by the pltf as regards the effect of S. 13, Madras Survey & Boundaries Act, I am satisfied that section cannot operate as a bar.

[14] There being no other point of law the second appeal fails & is dismissed with costs.

Explanation (2) of S. 48, conveys nothing more & nothing less than that the Registrar can decide the question as to whether the person joined in the appln. for registration of the society or admitted to membership after registration is in accordance with the rules & bye-laws of such society. Any question as to liability of somebody other than the recorded member is foreign to this Expln. & also to anything as dispute within the meaning of S. 48. The liability may flow from consideration other than membership &, therefore, the salient question which he has to decide & of which only he has the jurisdiction to decide is whether the particular person is a member or not. Ray C. J.—This is pltf's appeal in a suit for a declaration that the award passed by the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, is not binding against them & for the consequential relief of restraining the society from executing the award against them.

[2] The pltfs 2 & 3 are brothers & the pltfs. 1 & 4 to 7 are cousins of one Kali Charan Jena. In this appeal it is not controverted that they were members of a joint Hindu Mitakshara family with Kali Charan (deft. 2) at all material times. Kali Charan is a member of Routmandarini Co-operative Society of which deft. 1 (resp 1) is the Secretary. Kali Charan as a member, took a loan of Rs 500 on 3-9-29 for the purpose of paying off certain debts incurred for purchase of lands—a purpose recognised under the bye laws. In the Loan Register, he got certain persons as sureties who undertook the liability in case Kali Charan did not pay the loan to the Society. Ultimately, Kali Charan not having been able to pay, there was a reference by the Society to the Registrar of Co-operative Societies under S. 48, Bihar & Orissa Co-operative Societies Act. The reference is not before us &, therefore, we have only to infer from the Registrar's award as to what the scope of the reference was. In the earlier part of the award, there is a recital as to what was referred to him; but it does not make clear that the question of membership or otherwise of the present pltfs. was at all before him. On the contrary, he opens his award with the words "Whereas the Routmandarini Co-operative society aforesaid has made a reference in writing to me complaining that the deft. 1 (deft. 2 before us) a member of that society owes Rs. 500 by way of principal, Rs. 200-11-0 by way of interest upto 7-9-1941 on account of ..... & the said member deft. 1 refuses to pay or evades payments of the same."

This negatives the contention of Mr. Mohapatra, the learned counsel for the resp., that there was any reference before him as to whether the present pltfs. here (defts. 5, 6, 7, 9, 10 & 11 before the Registrar) were members of the Society. In his concluding portion of the award, he says:

"I hereby give the following decision, namely, that the said deft. 1 jointly & severally with defts. 2, 3 & 4 the said sureties do pay the Routmandarini Co-operative Society Rs. 500 as principal, Rs. 200-11-0 as interest upto 7-9-41, total Rs. 700-11-0 & further interest on the principal sum of Rs. 500 at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum from 8-9-41 together with all costs till the date of realisation."

[3] On the margin of the para. in which the aforesaid words appear, we find mention of the following words: "defts. 5, 6, 7, 9, 10 & 11."

On fair interpretation, it may be said that these words were intended to be inserted after the words "defts. 2, 3 & 4 the said sureties." Later by way of giving reasons why he held the liability against defts. 5 to 11 before him, he says:

"Because they have been benefited with the loan incurred by deft. 1 as Karta of the joint family.

[4] Mr. Mohapatra relies very much upon the construction of this observation, particularly he lays emphasis on the words "loan incurred by deft. 1 as karta of the joint family." From this, he argues that the award purported to decide that defts. 5 to 11 before the Registrar were members of the Society through deft. 1 as karta of family. I cannot accede to this contention. On the contrary, the observation seems to mean something far from it. What he means to say is that in incurring the loan he acted as Karta of the family because the loan was for the benefit thereof. This is quite different from saying that he was all the while a member of the Society on behalf of the family. In the latter case, all his actions should, generally & ordinarily, be binding on the family as members of the Society. In some particular circumstances, a cause of exoneration may be pleaded by the other members of the family but that does not make him the less a member on behalf of the family. The decision that persons other than members or past members or their legal representatives or their surities are liable for the loan incurred by a member is a question which is not within the jurisdiction of the Registrar of Co operative Societies. In order to demonstrate this, we have to look to the statutory provisions bearing upon the question. To start with, a 'member', as defined in S. 2 (f), Bihar & Orissa Co-operative Societies Act, 1935, includes "a person joining in the appln. for registration of a society & a person admitted to membership after registration in accordance with the rules & bye-laws of such society."

It is urged, as it has been held by the lower appellate Ct., that the question whether a person is or was a member of a registered society or not is a dispute over which the Registrar, within purview of S. 48, may assume jurisdiction. The Expl. (2) of the section, to my mind, conveys nothing more & nothing less than that the Registrar can decide the question as to whether the person joined in the appln. for registration of the society or admitted to membership after registration is in accordance with the rules & bye-laws of such society. Any question as to liability of somebody other than the recorded member is foreign to this Expln. & also to anything as dispute within the meaning of S. 48. The liability may flow from consideration other than membership & therefore the salient question which he has to decide & of which only he has the jurisdiction to decide is whether the particular person is a member or not. This membership may be acquired either individually or in a representative manner. Of course, this point is not free from difficulty but for the purposes of the present case, we assume that a person may constitute, by his act & by the assent given by the members of the society in accordance with the rules & bye-laws himself a member not only as an individual but also a representative of a joint Hindu family. But this is a fact which has to be established before any liability can be fixed upon an outsider on the footing that he is a member through another person. Liability on account of one's being represented through another member & liability on the ground that one is benefited by the loan incurred by a member of the Co-operative Society may, in the particular event of a case, coincide but that is not the question for solution. The Registrar has been given a special jurisdiction which excludes the ordinary jurisdiction of a civil Ct. either to the benefit or to the detriment of the citizens. Such provision, barring the jurisdiction of the civil Ct. which is the ordinary forum for all civil disputes between subjects inter se or between them and others, must be very strictly construed. The distinction that I want to make out is that the liability of the present pltfs. (defts. 4 to 11 before the Registrar) as members of the society, having been such members through their representative, the deft. 2, is distinct & separate from their liability for the debts of deft. 2 on any other grounds of which the member may be legion. With regard to the first, the Registrar has the jurisdiction to determine & with regard to the other he has not. In the facts of the present case, it may be quite permissible that the society may sue in the ordinary civil Ct. for recovery of these debts from Kalicharan & the present pltfs. with success on the ground that the pltfs. are liable as Kalicharan in that particular transaction acted for the benefit of the family as its manager. But this ground of liability, however, can never be the subject of adjudication within the jurisdiction of the Registrar. Therefore, the only reference that can be authoritatively made with regard to the liability of the pltfs. should be on the ground that the joint family, of which they are members, was a member of the society through Kalicharan as Karta or representative, as the case may be. Such a reference, as I have already said, was never before the Registrar nor has he decided such a dispute, namely, whether the pltfs. were members of the society or not. If the Registrar held them liable, it was on a ground other than their membership. In this view, the award, so far as binds the pltfs, is without jurisdiction. Mr. Mohapatra has invited our attention to a decision of the Patna H. C. in the case of Bindeswari Prasad v. Shiva Dutt, 19 P. L. T. 328 : (A. I. R. (25) 1938 Pat. 315 F. B.). This decision is not at all inconsistent with the view that I have expressed above. This decision proceeds to lay down that a Hindu Joint Family may be a member of a Co-operative Society under the Bihar & Orissa Co-operative Societies Act & the rules & bye-laws (which are the same as rules & bye-laws in force in Orissa) through one of its representatives. In the case before them, it had been throughly proved & found that Lachminarayan, the recorded member, was taken in as a member with the consent of all the adult members of the family by a rural society & that with their consent, he had put in a joint family property & not his undivided share therein in the Hasiat Register & besides, his father withdrew his appln. for membership on the ground that his son represented them all. In these facts, it was found that the joint family was a member through Lachminarayan &, therefore, the liquidator's order of contribution as against the family was a binding one. Under the circumstances of the case, however, we are quite clear in our mind that deft. 2 (Kalicharan) has not been proved to have been a member in representative capacity so far as we have been able to gather from the facts & circumstances before us. The award, therefore, will be set aside as against the pltfs. It may be said, however, that it is quite open, subject to law of limitation standing in their way, if at all, to the members of the society to refer the question of pltfs'. membership through deft. 1 over again to the Registrar.

[5] In the result, the appeal is allowed with costs, the judgment of the learned lower appellate Ct. is set aside & that of the learned Munsif restored.

Second Appeals Nos. 108, 138 & 142 of 1944 D/- 11-5-1949.

Tenancy Laws — Orissa Tenancy (Amendment) Act (VIII [8] of 1938), S. 31B — Transfer of occupancy holding in permanently settled estate without consent of landlord.

Usage includes what the people are in the habit of doing in a particular place & evidence as to the trans-ferability (of occupancy holding permanently settled estates) & the other incidents of similar tenures in adjoining villages is admisible as evidence of such usage. If it be one regularly & ordinarily practised by the inhabitants of the place where the tenure exists there will be usage. What is necessary to be proved is that such transfers have been made with the knowledge & without the consent of the landlord & that no successful objection to such transfer has been made by the landlord. [Para 6]

If, therefore, the pltf. landlord succeeds in proving that there was a usage whereby 25 per cent. of the consideration money as mutation fee was paid on the transfer of occupancy holdings in permanently settled estates without the consent of the landlord, S. 237, Orissa Tenancy Act would give him the right to enforce the payment of such fee. [Para 6]

(It was held that such a custom had grown up throughout Orissa). [Para 7]

Consequently such a transfer being valid, the mutation fee payable by the transferee comes within the meaning of "fees lawfully payable by him at the time of the transfer" in S. 31-B. [Para 14]

S. N. Sengupta — for Applts.; P. Mohanty & B. N. Das—for Resp.

Panigrahi J.—The suits out of which these three appeals arise were instituted by the pltf.-resp., who is the proprietor of Darpan Estate, a permanently settled estate in the Dist. of Cuttack, for recovery of mutation fees from the applts. who are transferees of ryoti holdings within the estate. The suits were instituted in the Ct. of the Rent Suit Officer in Rent suits Nos. 729 & 786 of 1941 & 1942 (out of which the S. A. Nos. 108 & 138 of 1944 arise) & were tried with a batch of 68 suits. Rent Suit No. 415 of 1943 out of which the S. A. No. 142 of 1944 arises was tried along with a batch of 111 suits. All these suits were instituted by the proprietor resp. under S. 31-B, Orissa Tenancy Act, for the recovery of mutation fees.

[2] The pltf's case is that the applts in S. A. 108 & S. A. 138 of 1944, who constitute one family & who are common in both the appeals, obtained by registered sale deeds, dated 5-10-1904 & 15-9-1922 respectively, certain occupancy holdings from the recorded ryots & that the applts. in S. A. 142/44, who purchased on 10-9-23 became liable under law & custom or usage to pay transfer fee at the rate of 25% of the consideration money. It is further alleged that the pltf. came to know of the transfers & recognized them on 19-8-41 by mutating the names of the applts in his records, & hence his claim to recover 25% of the consideration money as mutation fee, together with interest & costs of the suit. The defts. denied the alleged custom or usage entitling the pltf. to recover mutation fee at 25% of the consideration money, or at any other rate. They further averred that Killa Darpan being a permanently settled estate, was expressly excluded from the operation of S. 31, Orissa Tenancy Act (old) & the new S. 31-B of the Act was not applicable to the case. The applts.' specific case was that the Ct. of Wards, while managing the estate of the pltf, used to recover at the rate of Re. 1 for each transfer' irrespective of the consideration, & they are willing to pay at this rate.

[3] The Rent Suit Officer, after a careful analysis, of the evidence & in a well reasoned judgment, held that there existed in fact a custom or usage in the plif's estate which enabled him to charge 25% of the consideration money for registering the transfer of occupancy holdings, that for some years when the estate was under the management of the Ct. of Wards the transfer fee was levied at a flat rate of Re. 1 under a mistaken impression, but that in the year 1914 this mistake was rectified by a proceeding of the Board of Revenue & that since that date collection of mutation fee at 25% of the consideration money was enforced. He therefore found that the pltf. had succeeded in establishing the usage & granted a decree to him in terms of the plaint.

[4] The learned Dist. J. who heard the appeals against the decrees of the Rent Suit Officer, agreed with the reasoning & findings of the lower Ct & confirmed the decrees passed by the Rent Ct.

[5] In second appeal, Mr. Sen Gupta appearing for the applts has confined his arguments to two points, viz: (1) That the evidence on the record does not justify the inference that a usage had grown up &, (2) That S.-31B, Orissa Tenancy Act, has no application to the present case as no fee was lawfully payable at the date of the transfer. On the other side, it is pointed out that transfer of occupancy holdings was well recognized & never depended upon the consent of the proprietor. It is also urged that in the neighbouring estates, as well as in the temporarily settled areas, the levy of a transfer fee at 25% of the consideration money had been recognized as a well-established custom.

[6] To support a usage it is not necessary to prove that it is ancient or uniform. Usage may also be in course of growth. It is enough if it appears to be so well known & acquiesced in that it may be reasonably be presumed to have been tacitly accepted by the parties to the transfer. The two essential ingredients are: that it should be well known in the locality & that it should have been acquiesced in. As was laid down in R. Dalglish v. Gwguffer Hussain 23 Cal. 427 usage includes what the people are in the habit of doing in a particular place & evidence as to the transferability & the other incidents of similar tenures in adjoining villages is admissible as evidence of such usage. If it be one regularly & ordinarily practised by the inhabitants of the place where the tenure exists there will be usage. What is necessary to be proved is that such transfers have been made with the knowledge & without the consent of the landlord & that no successful objection to such transfer has made by the landlord. If, therefore, the pltf. succeeds in proving that there was a usage whereby 25% of the consideration money was paid on the transfer of a holding, S. 237, Orissa Tenancy Act, would give him the right to enforce the payment of such fee. Reliance was placed on Para. 321 of the Settlement Report prepared by Mr. Maddox in which after tracing the growth of transferability of occupancy holdings, he says:

"In Cuttack thani rights appear to be commonly sold without the previous sanction of the proprietor & the latter appears in most parts to invariably recognise the new tenant on payment of the customary mutation fees."

He further says:

"In conclusion we may say thani is now-a-days transferred but that the zamindar does not record the transferee in his sherista as thani rayot without a fee."

This was recorded in 1900.

[7] The Survey & Settlement Report of Darpan Estate was undertaken at about the same period & the Final Report on the Settlement of Killa Darpan, prepared in 1901 says:

"These at least show that transfers are allowed in the estate for the above classes of tenures except under Chandna which is rare."

The Report also gives instance of the transfer fee payable to the proprietor varying from 10 to 25% of the purchase money according to the nature of the tenure when mutation is applied for. The average rate of money paid per acre for selling occupancy holdings, as worked out from 20 instances of recorded transfers, is shown to be Rs. 33, & against this rate the remark is made that

"this rate does not seem to be actual. It is usually higher but shown lower in the document for lessening the proprietor's quarter (of transfer fee)."

Mr. James (as he then was) in his Final Report on the Revisional Settlement of Orissa (1906 to 1912) also notes that sales of holding had become common after the Settlement operations undertaken by Mr. Maddox had been completed. He says:

"It is probable that the custom of free transfer would, in many parts, have become established if the Revisional Settlement had not come & brought the question into prominence."

Mr. Macpherson in his Report of the year 1908 wrote on the proposals to allow transfers subject to the payment to the zamindar of a salami of 25% of the purchase money & his opinion is quoted in Para. 72 of Mr. James' Report:

"Had there been no revision or maintenance of records in Orissa before the next land-revenue settlement the rayots would have gone on quietly transferring their lands &, save in isolated cases landlords would have raised no objection & would have gone on quietly receiving the rents from the transferees with or without the express recognition of the latter . . . . . This quiet evolution of custom has been checked by revisional operations & we find that landlords who had winked at or taken no steps to interfere with the numerous transfers that have occurred in the past ten years are now demanding the most exhorbitant price for the purchase of their consent."

Mr. Dalziel, the Settlement Officer, reporting on the Revisional Settlement of 1922-32 also remarks that the status of the occupancy rayot in the permanently settled estates was much the same as in the temporarily settled areas & that a mutation fee of 25% was being charged in case of transfer of occupancy holdings. It cannot, therefore, be seriously disputed that a custom had grown up throughout Orissa, by which occupancy holdings were freely transferred without the consent of the landlord but that, on recognition of such transfer, a proprietor became entitled to levy a transfer fee at the rate of 25% of the purchase-money. In this case the pltf. produced his mutation register maintained in the estate showing that hundreds of applns. were being made to the proprietor & that in the large majority of cases mutation was allowed on receipt of 25% of the consideration money. We see, therefore, no reason to differ from the findings of the Cts. below that the evidence on the record amply justifies the inference that the proprietor was collecting at the rate of 25% of the purchase money at least from the year 1906, with an interruption of only eight years, when, under the orders of the Ct. of Wards, a flat rate of Re. 1 was being charged.

[8] Exhibit 31 dated 12-12-1914 & Ex. 32 dated 12-4-1915, show that the Ct. of Wards finally decided to levy mutation fee at 25% of the purchase money in all cases of transfer by gift or sale, & from that date onwards, according to the evidence, 25% of the consideration money is being charged. There is, therefore, no force in Mr. Sen Gupta's contention that the levy was either not uniform or that the practice had not matured into usage. I have no doubt in my mind that in so far as the period subsequent to the year 1915 is concerned the Ct. of Wards introduced a uniform rule of levying the mutation fee at 25% of the purchase money & it does not appear that this was objected to by the rayots or that payment was made at any other rate.

[9] Apart from any consideration of gradual growth of practice maturing into an usage the order of the Ct. of Wards is definite evidence of a rule that was enforced & was acquiesced in by the people of the locality. This evidence, to my mind, is clear, definite & precise & rules out all considerations based on mere speculation. The contention of Mr. Sen Gupta has, therefore, been rightly negatived.

[10] The next contention raised on behalf of the applts. raises a very important point, but I entertain no doubts about it. The argument is developed on the basis of the reasoning adopted in Gagambehari Das v. Sarabhuj, 13 Cut L. T. p. 1 : (A. I. R (34) 1947 Pat. 412), where the applicability of S. 31-B, Orissa Tenancy Act to a transferee by an execution sale was considered. In that case the pltf's suit was for recovery of mutation fee from the defts. who were the auction-purchasers of an occupancy holding in a temporarily settled area. The pltfs. based their claim on S. 31-B read with S. 250, Orissa Tenancy Act; and the decision in that case turned round the interpretation of the words "fees lawfully payable by him at the date of the transfer" occurring in S. 31 B. Section 31, as it stood before the amendment, provided a machinery for compelling the proprietor to recognize a transfer by private sale. Section 31 (4) provided that:

"save as provided in that section & in Ss. 95 & 96 no transfer of an occupancy holding or a portion of the holding, otherwise than by succession or by a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent shall be valid against the landlord of the holding unless & until he has consented thereto."

And sub s. (5) of S. 31 laid down:

"Nothing in this section shall apply to the transfer of an occupancy holding or a portion of a holding in a permanently settled estate."

The effect of S. 31 (4) is that except in the cases provided in Ss. 31 (1), 31-A, 95 & 96 or in the case of a transfer by succession or sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent, no other transfer by way of an execution sale in a Civil Ct. or in execution of a money decree shall be valid unless & until the landlord has consented thereto. The effect of this is that a transferee at a sale in execution of a money decree acquires no right in the holding unless & until the landlord has consented thereto. The consent of the landlord therefore validates the transfer & until such consent has been obtained the law does not recognize the fact of the transfer so far as the landlord is concerned. Their Lordships therefore held, in the case cited above, rightly, if I may say so with great respect, that there was no fee lawfully payable at the date of the transfer, as such fee became payable only after the transfer, on the landlord's consenting to the transfer. The fee was payable under a contract, arrived at between the parties, namely, the landlord & the transferee, on a date subsequent to the date of the transfer, & consequently S. 31-B had no application to that case. This case, however, has absolutely no application to the facts before us. It has to be noted that S. 31 itself is not applicable to the transfer of an occupancy holding in a permanently settled estate as S 31 (5) expressly excludes its operation. There is, therefore, no question of the transfer remaining invalid "unless & until the landlord consents thereto", in the case of a transfer whether by private sale or by execution sale in a permanently settled estate. The validity or otherwise of such transfer depends on S. 237, Orissa Tenancy Act, which says:

"Nothing in this Act shall affect any usage or customary right not inconsistent with or not expressly or by necessary implication modified or abolished by its provisions."

Illustration (2) to the section, as it stood before the introduction of the Orissa Tenancy Amendment Act of 1938 runs as follows:

"The usage under which a rayot in a permanently settled estate is entitled to sell his holding without the consent of his landlord is not inconsistent with & is not expressly or by necessary implication modified or abolished by, the provisions of the Act. That usage, accordingly, where it may exist, will not be affected by this Act."

If, therefore, there was a custom in this estate that an occupancy holding could be transferred without the consent of the landlord, the liability to pay a mutation fee would be an incident of the transfer & would not be dependent upon the subsequent consent of the landlord validating the transfer.

[11] I have already shown by quotations from the Settlement Reports that the custom of levying 25% of the consideration money had been well-recognized in permanently-settled estates & that such fee was payable on the landlord effecting a change in his register. No single instance has been brought to our notice of a proprietor ejecting a rayot on the ground that he has transferred his holding by private sale or gift. I have no doubts in my mind that the validity of such transfer did not at all depend upon the consent of the landlord. I may here quote the opinions recorded by some of the most experienced Settlement Officers of the District which Mr. Maddox summarises in his report, at p. 218. In the estates of Deogaon, Matkatnagar, Asureswar, Bakhrabad & Jajpur the opinion of the Settlement Officers was that the landlord's consent was not necessary at the time of the sale, but when mutation is recorded in his sherista a mutation fee is charged. Mr. Maddox adds:

"My experience is that thani is freely sold & that it is only in a few parganas that the purchasers are recorded as pahi. Indeed there are many cases in which thani holdings have been sold in civil Cts. in execution of decrees & the new tenants have been perforce recognized by the zamindar. In all cases of voluntary sale, the zamindar, before recognizing the transfer, requires that all arrears of rent should be paid up in full & further demands from the vendee a rusum that may amount to 1/4th of the price .... In conclusion, we may say that a thani is now-a-days transferred but that the zamindar does not record the transferee in his sherista as thani rayot without a fee."

[12] Mr. Dalziel also notes the practice in the several permanently settled estates in his report & in respect of Killa Pattia he says that on the transfer of rayoti rights 25% is charged as mutation fee & the custom prevails of obtaining the consent of the landlord. In the case of Killa Bishnupur "the transfer of land by rayoti holdings is generally allowed on payment of a mutation fee of 25% of the consideration money." In Killa Harishpur "transfers are invariably recognised on payment of 25% of the consideration money." In the case of Killa Aul it is remarked that "the landlord's consent is considered necessary for the transfer of occupancy holdings, but no case of refusal to consent is reported." In Killa Kalkalla which adjoins the Darpan Estate the status of the rayot is not different from that in the other permanently settled areas. I am therefore unable to find in any of the permanently settled areas of the district, except in the single instance of Kanika, any case of a rayot being ejected on the ground that his holding has been transferred whether by private alienation or by sale in execution of a decree. It is also abundantly clear that the previous consent of the landlord was not necessary for the transfer & that the only right that the landlord had was to levy a transfer fee at 25% of the purchase money at the time of effecting a change in his records. I am therefore unable to accede to the contention of Mr. Sen Gupta that no fee was lawfully payable at the date of the transfer in the present case on the ground that the transfer itself was invalid, on the analogy of a sale in execution of a money decree of a holding in a temporarily settled area.

[13] I may also refer, at this stage, to another decision of the Patna H. C. reported in Nilmoni Misra v. Gourmohan De, 5 Cut. L. T. 88 where it was held that S. 31-B applies to all cases of transfer, voluntary or involuntary, & that the fee, if payable at the time of the transfer, could be realised within the time prescribed under S. 31-B. It is not clear from the report whether this case arose in a temporarily settled estate, but S. 31, Orissa Tenancy Act, was considered & it was assumed that the validity of the transfer depended on the consent of the landlord. Their Lordships went to the length of laying down that even in the case of a transfer falling within S. 31 (4) the consent of the landlord would not be required after the passing of S. 31-B. The suit in that case was for ejectment of the transferee & the specific question raised in these appeals, whether any fee was lawfully payable at the date of transfer, was not considered in that case.

[14] I therefore hold, agreeing with the Cts. below, that the transferee were liable to pay a fee at the date of the transfer & that such fee was lawfully payable under well-established usage.

[15] There is, however, one small point yet to be disposed of. In S. A. N. 108/1944 the transfer took place on 5-10-1904. I have held that it is the admitted case of both parties that a flat rate of Re. 1 was being charged as mutation fee from 1906 to 1914 under the orders of the Ct. of Wards & that from 1915, a fee at the rate of 25% of the purchase money was uniformly levied & collected. There is very meagre evidence of what the practice was prior to 1906. I would therefore hold that, in the absence of any positive evidence on the side of the pltf. the applts. in S. A. No. 108/1944 would be liable only to pay at the rate of Re. 1 which was the rate admittedly prevalent in 1906 & that in the other two appeals, viz., S. A. No. 138/1944 & S. A. No. 142/1944 the applts. would be liable to pay at the rate of 25% of the consideration money, together with interest at 6% per annum from the date of recognition of the transfers by the proprietor. The pltf. resp. will also have his costs throughout.

[16] Subject to the above modification, these appeals are dismissed, with costs. Hearing fee is assessed at 10 (Ten) Gold Mohurs.

[17] J. Das J.—I agree that on the evidence & the material placed in these cases before us, the usage of transferability of occupancy holdings in the permanently-settled estate of Darpan, without the consent of the landlord, but subject to the payment of mutation fee at 25% of the consideration for the transfer, has been clearly made out with reference to the period subsequent to the order of the Ct. of Wards as evidenced by Exs. 31 & 32, dated 12-4-1914 & 12-4-1915. There is no such clear evidence of usage for any period prior thereto & the pltf. can, therefore, claim mutation fee for the earlier period only the admission of the deft. that the mutation fee payable was at a flat rate of Re. 1 per kabala.

[18] I agree accordingly with the order proposed by my learned brother.

Out of them, A was not accused of any acts falling within cls. (a), (d), (e) & (f) of S. 110, these being charged specifically against B & C only. The acts of high-handedness charged against A were of extorting payments & rendering persons homeless. Even according to the police report A was 'a leader & employer' of B & C & it was not suggested that he employed them to commit the offences sought to be proved against them. Specific acts alleged against A ranged over a period of 2 years:

Held that under S. 110, Cr. P. C. every person has to be examined separately for the offences enumerated therein. A joint enquiry under S. 117 (5) was out of question when one charge at least was that two persons were so desperate & dangerous as to render their being at large hazardous to the community. There certainly could not be such intimate connection between two individuals in regard to their individual characteristics as to render them liable to joint inquisition. The order for the joint enquiry of A along with B & C was therefore set aside. [Paras 5, 6]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 117, N. 13.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 110 (f) — Desperate character—Proof of.

The characteristic of being a desperate & dangerous character is a personal attribute & should be proved separately against every individual charged with that attribute. [Para 3]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 110, N. 15.

(c) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 112—Order under — Failure to set out substance of 'information'.

An order under S. 112 is not a formal order but is intended to give sufficient notice to the individual against whom the order is made, of the accusation made against him & therefore the order must set forth the substance of the information received. Where the Mag. had not set out the substance of the information before him & had not annexed a copy of the Police report:

Held that it was a grave irregularity which, in the circumstances of the case, vitiated the proceedings. [Para 7]

Anno. Cr. P. C., S. 112, N. 3.

K. Patnaik—for Petnr.; Advocate-General — for Opposite Party.

Order. — The petnr. was served with a notice under S. 112, Cr. P. C., to show cause why he should not be directed to execute a bond to be of good behaviour under S. 110, Cr. P. C. for a period of three years. Along with the petnr. two other persons were also impleaded & served with similar notices & an enquiry M. C. No. 647/47 was started against the three persons by the Subdivisional Mag., Ghumusur. The Police filed a report under S. 110 (d), (e) & (f), Cr. P. C. against these three persons on 24-9-47 & cited 84 instances of acts of misbehaviour & offences alleged to have been committed or threatened to have been committed by one or the other of the persons named in the report covering a period of over twelve years commencing from 1935. The Police also cited 140 witnesses to be examined to prove the various acts of high-handedness alleged to have been committed at different times by these persons. The Mag. drew up proceedings on the 4th November in the following terms :

"Perused the report of the S. I, of Police, Aska & it appears from the Police report that you (1) Krupasindhu Panigrahi (2) Dondia Gowdo, & (3) Bancha Palo of village Horodapadoro, P. S. Aska, within the criminal jurisdiction of this Ct., habitually commit theft, extortion, cheating, & [illegible]led chief & other offences involving a breach of the peace & so are so desperate & dangerous as to render your[illegible]h say at large, without security, hazardous to the com[illegible]ity as detailed in the police report (copy enclosed [illegible]t with [illegible]ll affect[illegible].

You are, therefore, required [illegible]ause or a 110 (a), (d), (e) & (f), Criminal P. C. to show ca[illegible]oy 11-11-1947 why you Krupasindhu Panigrahi [illegible]d not be ordered to execute a bond of Rs. 2000 with [illegible] two sureties for like amount & Dondia Gowdo & Bancha Palo should not be ordered to execute a bond of Rs. 500 etc. . . . etc. . . ."

[2] Although the order recites that a copy of the Police report is enclosed it is asserted by the petnr. & it is not denied by the learned Advocate-General appearing for the Crown—that no such copy has been served upon the petnr. The petnr. appeared in due course & applied to the Deputy Mag. to take up his case separately & not to try him jointly with the two others as he apprehended that prejudice would be caused to him. He also prayed that his personal attendance may be waived & that he may be permitted to appear through a pleader as he was sick & was not able to attend the proceedings which were likely to occupy a long time. The Deputy Mag. dismissed his petn. & rejected both his prayers on the ground that the Police report showed that the petnr. & the two other persons charged with him were his associates & that there would be no prejudice or illegality in a joint trial. He rejected the petnr.'s prayer for exemption from personal attendance on the ground that the petnr. not being an accused person, S. 540A, Criminal P. C. did not apply. It is against this order that the petnr. has now come up in revn. to this Ct. The petnr. also moved the Dist. Mag. before filing his revn. petn. in this Ct., & the Addl. Dist. Mag who heard his applu., has recommended to this Ct. that the order of the Deputy Mag. should be quashed & that a separate trial should be ordered as, in his opinion, a joint enquiry would be prejudicial to the persons proceeded against:

[3] The case against the petnr. as it appears from the Police report, is that he is a rich landholder & money-lender in village Horodopadoro, under the jurisdiction of the Aska Police Station :

"Since about 12 years he started increasing & adding to his landed properties by making clandestine purchases from one party or other having disputes on lands & also made or attempted to make people quit their lands in his favour by putting them in fear of grievous assault & other kinds of mischief such as rendering them homeless, by setting fire to their houses & by assulting them with the help of a set of ruffians maintained by him solely for the purpose & also by damaging & stealing their crops through the help of the same ruffians . . .

Accused 2 & 3 & two mochis who were all persons of the most desperate & dangerous character were the principal henchmen of their leader, accused 1."

It is then alleged that accused 2 & 3 committed "numerous instances of zulums such as setting fire to houses, cutting & carrying away crops from land, committing theft of other properties, assaulting persons, killing & maiming of cattle & of persons with whom their leader & employer had any dispute."

The leader (referring to the petnr. before me) also singly committed high-handedness such as extorting documents, rendering persons homeless, by driving them from their houses, etc. It will be seen from the above that the petnr. himself is not accused of any of the acts falling within cls. (a), (d), (e) & (f) of S. 110. These acts are specifically attributed to the other two accused who are sought to be tried jointly with the petnr. So far as the petnr. himself is concerned, the acts of high-handedness charged against him are

"extorting documents, rendering persons homeless, & by driving them from their houses."

If the Mag. who drew up proceedings against them under S. 110 had only cared to go through this Police Report he would have been able to discriminate the case against the petnr. from that of the rest, & he would not have fallen into the error of holding that joint trial is necessary in the interests of justice. Even according to the Police Report, the petnr. is described as "a leader & employer," & it is not suggested that he employed these persons to commit the offences sought to be proved against them. The specific allegation of being a "desperate & dangerous character" is made only against the other two persons who are roped in along with the petnr. It is well settled that the characteristic of being a desperate & dangerous character is a personal attribute & should be proved separately against every individual charged with that attribute. The Mag. appears to have gone further than even what the Police seek to prove inasmuch as he has drawn up proceedings under S. 110 (a) while the Police restricted their report to cl. (d), (e) & (f) of that section. It is also passing strange that the Deputy Mag. failed to notice that the evidence required to prove 84 instances extending over a period of 12 years is bound to be vague indefinite & conflicting, & that it would be impossible for any person called upon to meet the charge to decide which of the allegations have been made out & to what extent. The number of witnesses cited is equally formidable & the Police Report does not give the least inkling as to which of these allegations is going to be proved and by which bunch of witnesses. If the character of a person cannot be proved to be of the description contemplated under S. 110 by half a dozen witnesses, it cannot be established by 140 witnesses either. If the object of the Police was to overawe the petnr. & his alleged associates this purpose has been served admirably, but I quite fail to see how a Mag. will be able to analyse the evidence which is bound to be of the character merely of hearsay & suspicion & how he will be able to estimate the character of each of the accused persons.

[4] Mr. K. Patnaik, appearing for the petnr. has placed before me a tabular statement of the acts alleged against the petnr. alone & those he is supposed to have been responsible for along with the two other accused persons. The specific acts attributed to the petnr. are Items 1, 12, 16, 18, 45, 47, 52, 63, 69, 70, 79 & 84 of the tabular statement. These acts range over a period of twelve years. (After discussing these items His Lordship proceeded.)

[5] In spite of the fact that an enquiry under S. 110, Cr. P. C. is bound to be wide in its scope, I cannot understand how a person accused of such elastic, sprawling & pervasive charges as those cited against the petnr in this case can ever hope to meet them & convince a Ct. that he is not a threat to the community at large. Time & again the Cts. have registered their protest against a free & indiscrimate use of this section. Reported cases show that the Police appeal to this section for bringing down a person whom they otherwise cannot harass. Instead of investigating into particular offences & bringing the offender to book recourse is had to the security sections in order to humble local dictators or oppressive money-lenders. The growing tendency of trying to humiliate persons who assume the role of local dictators instead of prosecuting them for substantive offences itself suggests that this loose practice constitutes a serious threat to fairness in our administration of justice. The rule of evidence laid down in S. 117 (4) makes it all the more difficult to try persons without prejudice to an innocent man. When the prosecution chooses to array a hotchpotch of acts described as "threats & instigations" it is extremely difficult for a Mag. to control or analyse the evidence & to estimate its effect on each of the persons standing trial in proof of so sprawling a charge as "being a dangerous & desperate character." Evidence of bad reputation is often admissible only on the assumption that the person accused has a bad reputation & that he is an associate of the other persons. The result is that if the other two persons have a local bad reputation or are dangerous & desperate the mere inclusion of the petnr. as an associate of the other two petnrs. makes the entire evidence admissible against the petnr. There generally will be some evidence of wrong-doing by some of the persons but it is extremely difficult for an individual accused to make his own case stand on its own merits as Mags. are only too prone to believe that birds of the same feather flock together. It is therefore imperative to ascertain before permitting a joint trial that the birds belong to the same feather. According to the prosecution report, the petnr. is a rich landlord & owner of bus service & is otherwise highly respectable. According to the petnr. the present proceedings have been initiated by the Police at the instance of his political rivals. If therefore he chooses to dissociate himself from the two other accused jointly with him, & tries to throw the blame on the others, the inevitable consequence will follow that the other two will try to throw the entire blame on the petnr. A Ct. faced thus with mutual accusations & recriminations between persons standing their trial, is apt to hold that all the three are responsible for the acts of each one of them. The result will inevitably be that persons jointly tried often convict each other. If, on the other hand, the petnr. chooses to stand alone & is silent, he will be taken to have admitted the accusations made against him or his associates. In either event, the result will be disastrous to the petnr. & there cannot be a fair trial. I am in entire agreement with the observation of Walsh J., in Angnoo Singh v. Emperor, reported in A.I.R. (10) 1923 ALL. 35 : (24 Cr. L. J. 257) that it seems very hard—almost oppressive—to any set of defts. to charge them together unless the whole of the evidence against all of them is precisely the same. To the same effect is the case reported in Jai Rao v. Emperor, A I.R. (10) 1923 Pat. 104 : (23 Cr. L. J. 100), where it was laid down that a joint trial is not permissible unless there is evidence of something in the nature of a conspiracy. Ordinarily, under S. 110, Cr. P. C. every person has to be tried separately for the offences enumerated therein. Mr. Patnaik relied upon Deodhari v. Emperor, in A.I.R. (12) 1925 Pat. 131 : (26 Cr. L. J. 738) where it was laid down that the evidence to prove a charge under S. 110 should not be vague generally & of a hearsay character & In re Rathinam Pillai, A.I.R. (25) 1938 Mad. 35 : (39 Cr. L. J. 230) where Newsam J., generally laid down that a joint enquiry under S. 117 (5) is out of question when one charge at least is that two persons are so desperate & dangerous as to render their being at large hazardous to the community. There certainly can be no such intimate connection between two individuals in regard to their individual characteristics as to render them liable to joint inquisition. It was further held in that case that to apply S. 110 to local bosses & faction leaders is undoubtedly to abuse it. The section is intended to apply to criminal maniacs & desperados against whom the only weapon to be used is the weapon of public opinion.

[6] I have, therefore, arrived at the conclusion that the reference made by the Addl. Dist. Mag. that the joint enquiry against the petnr. along with the other two persons, cannot proceed, & that the police, if so advised, may initiate separate proceedings against the petnr., alone, should be accepted.

[7] Mr. Patnaik also complained that the order drawn up by the Mag. is all-too-brief, vague & indefinite & does not give any clue to the petnr. as to the acts charged against him. An order under S. 112 is not a formal order but is intended to give sufficient notice to the individual against whom the order is made, of the accusation made against him. The section in specific terms says that the order shall set forth the substance of the information received. The Mag. who drew up the proceedings has entirely ignored that requirements of this section in so far as he has failed to set out the substance of the information before him. The failure to annex a copy of the Police report is itself a grave irregularity which, in the circumstances of this case, must be held to have vitiated the proceedings. The order does not comply with the provisions of the Code & is bad in law. For a similar case, reference may be made to Kutti Goundan v. Emperor, 47 M.L.J. 689: (A.I.R. (12) 1925 Mad. 189: 26 Cr. L.J. 673) and In re Krupasindhu Naik, 8 M.L.W. 416: (A.I.R. (5) 1918 Mad 219), wherein Kumaraswami J., observed that a notice under S. 110, Cri. P. C., must contain something more than a re-production of the clauses of that section. There should be sufficient indication of the time & place of the acts charged & sufficient detail which should enable the accused to know the facts that he has to meet. It should be remembered that the petnr. is put on his trial on information received behind his back, extending over a period of 12 years or more. Had the proceedings started on a private complaint he would have been entitled to copy thereof, but in the case of a police report, such as the one placed before me, the petnr, gets no clue as to the dates when the persons in respect of whom, & the nature of the acts which one alleged to have been committed by him. I have no doubt in my mind that the notice served on the petnr. is bad in law & is of no effect. But whether that would justify the quashing of the proceedings altogether at this stage is a matter on which I am not prepared to hazard an opinion. There is no legal proceeding against the petnr. according to the view I have taken & the question of quashing the proceedings does not arise. Mr. Patnaik has therefore, very adroitly conceded that if & when proper proceedings are drawn up against the petnr. he will take the earliest opportunity of raising this question again & wanted to reserve liberty to move this Ct. for quashing of proceedings later. I think that this is the only reasonable course to adopt at present.

[8] I should, however, like to observe that the Dist. Mag., or the Head of the Police who is responsible for the initiation of these proceedings should very seriously consider the propriety of clubbing together acts, real or imaginary, extending over such a long period & trying to prove them at great expense & waste of time. It is preposterous to suggest that a case cannot be proved except by examining as many as 140 witnesses. I shudder to think how long this enquiry will occupy if all the witnesses are to be examined, having regard to the leisurely way in which the Prosecuting Officers conduct even petty cases in the Cts. below. It will be the duty of the officers in charge of the prosecution to shift the evidence & reduce the number of witnesses to the minimum possible in the interests of fairness of trial & in order to save avoidable waste of time & money. The enquiry will now be confined to the case against Dandi Gowdo & Bancha Palo alone & if the prosecution ultimately decides to take action under S. 110, Cr. P. C. against the petnr. also, they must await the result of the enquiry against Dandia Gowdo & Bancha Palo. It may perhaps be that as a result of the enquiry against these two persons the prosecution may find that the evidence againt the petnr. is too exiguous to sustain an order under S. 110. That however, is a matter for the prosecutor to decide. So far as this revn. petn. is concerned the order will be that the notice under S. 112, Cr. P. C. served on the petnr. is bad in law & the interim bond taken from him should be discharged; that any enquiry under S. 110 against him should be separately undertaken & should await the result of the enquiry against the two principal accused, who, according to the Police, are desperate & dangerous characters. Subject to this modification this revn. is allowed.

P. Venkata Rao*—Petnr. v. *King.

Criminal Revn. No. 207 of 1948, D/-27-10-1948.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 367—Appreciation of evidence — Credibility of witnesses — Fact that a witness comes from same district or belongs to same community as that of accused is not in itself a good ground for discarding his evidence.

[Para 6]

Anno: Cr. P. C. S. 367 N. 6; Evidence Act, S. 1 N. 9.

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 161—Evidence—Tainted evidence of decoy witnesses — Necessity of independent corroboration — Evidence Act (1872), S. 114.

Where in a prosecution under S. 161 against a station master for accepting a bribe for supplying wagons to the complainant the whole prosecution story is based upon the tainted evidence of decoy witnesses who are either accomplices or spies of the police in a trap set up for the accused it is unsafe to convict the accused unless there is some independent evidence, either direct or circumstantial to prove his guilt. Where the accused in his explanation to the charge says that the marked currency notes found in his possession were handed over to him by the complainant for safe custody & there is no independent corroborative evidence of the prosecution story that the money was accepted as a bribe so that the prosecution fails to establish the guilt of the accused beyond all reasonable doubt, the conviction of the accused under S. 161 cannot be sustained: A. I. R. (31) 1944 F. C. 66, Rel. on. [Paras 7 & 8]

S. K. Ray & R. K. Das—for Petnr.; G. B. Mohanty for Advocate-General—for the King.

Ray C. J.— The petnr. P. Venkata Rao, has been convicted under S. 161, I. P. C. & sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for three months & to a fine of Rs. 500 & in default to undergo further rigorous imprisonment for three months.

[2] The complainant, Radhamohan Subudhi (P. W. 8), is a small trader in Dry Fish. He has certain other co sharers & co-partners in the business besides his neighbours & villagers, who also trade in the self-same commodities. It is said that on 19-11-1946, he & one Brahmachari approached the petnr. (who was then the Station Master of Kalupara Railway Station) to settle with him as to what would be the rate per bag of Dried Fish to be paid to him, as inducement or reward, for indenting a waggon for transporting the Dried Fish from Kalupara Rly. Station to various other stations. Their case was that priviously the Station Master had been receiving Rs. 3 per bag but, of late, was making a higher demand. The prosecution story goes on to say that after some higgling & haggling it was settled that he was to receive Rs. 3 per bag. that is a total sum of Rs. 240, for indenting a waggon for 80 bags of Dried Fish to be transported to Sambalpur Railway Station. P. W. 7, Mr. S. Chatterji, the Special Rly. Sectional Officer, deputed on the special duty of detecting corruption, noticed, from a distance, the higgling & haggling between the P. W. 8 & the petnr. After P. W. 8 came out of the Station Master's room, he contacted him & on enquiry, came to learn what had passed between him & the Station Master. He then persuaded him to file with him a complaint addressed to his superior officer, Mr. A. C. Naik, Special Inspector of Police (P. W. 1), Radhamohan, however, did not agree to put in his complaint immediately, but took time to consult his co-partners & other Dried Fish traders before he could embark upon this proceeding. Later, on 20-11-1946, he wrote out a complaint to the dictation of the Sectional Officer (P. W. 7), who carried this to the Special Inspector of Police (Mr. A. C. Naik, P. W. 1). The latter came down to Kalupara Rly. Station. There he, Mr. Chatterji, one Mr. Pal, another Special Anti-corruption Officer, & Radhamohan conferred together, as a result of which it was settled that Radhamohan should receive twenty-four marked ten-rupees currency notes from Mr. A. C. Naik (P. W. 1) & would make over the same to the Station Master, as agreed upon, whereupon the latter should be confronted & searched. Accordingly, Mr. A. C. Naik (P. W. 1) got the services of a First Class Mag. (Mr. U. N. Patnaik) from the Sub-Divisional Mag. of Puri & got permission from him to investigate into this case, which he had no authority to do, it being a non cognizable offence. On 22-11-1946, after the 80 bags of Dried Fish were loaded in a waggon, Radhamohan went to the Station Master to receive R/R on payment of a sum of Rs. 240, as already agreed between them. As soon as he made the payment & came out with the R/R, the Station Master was immediately surrounded by the Deputy Mag. Special Police Inspector & the two Special Sectional Officers & confronted with the question whether he had taken a bribe of Rs. 240. It is said that coming to know that he was being interrogated by a Mag. & a Police Officer, he attempted to throw away the notes underneath the table but was interrupted from doing so. He looked blank & ultimately made a statement which was recorded by the Mag. under S. 164, Cr. P. C. In that he said that the money had been kept with him for the sake of safe custody by Radhamohan, who said that he had to go to his Pentho (seat of collection of Dried Fish) alone in this dark night. After this there was an investigation & the accused was put on trial as a result of which he has been convicted & sentenced as above.

[3] Both the Ots. below have believed the prosecution version of the case & have found guilty.

[4] It is contended on behalf of the petnr. that the entire prosecution story is based upon the tainted evidence of a number of decoy witnesses who are not better than accomplices, which cannot, in law, be held sufficient to bring the charge home to the accused. Looking to the facts of this case, the only part of the prosecution story on which the conviction ought to be based is as to what passed between Radhamohan & the petnr. at the time he delivered the currency notes & secondly, the episode of conversation that had taken place between them on the 19th as a result of which it is said that it was settled between them that Radhamohan should pay Rs. 240 for the waggon. With regard to the rest of the prosecution case, there is no controversy as the Station Master admits receipt of money. The only question to be decided is whether this receipt of money was the result of a previous arrangment & as a reward for the supply of waggon or it was merely for the purpose of safe keeping. True, much can be said against the defence story, but assuming that that story is not established, still the prosecution is not relieved of the burden of establishing the charge against him by independent evidence. No doubt, there is a number of Govt. Officials, including the Deputy Mag. who have figured as prosecution witnesses; but none of them is either competent to speak or has spoken on the essence of the prosecution version which I have already indicated above. Mr. Das, in support of his argument, has invited our attention to two decisions which are in point. One is the decision in the case of Lt. Hector Thomas Huntly v. Emperor, A. I. R. (31) 1944 F. C. 66 : (45 Cr. L. J. 753) in which Zafrulla Khan J , observes as follows :

"A charge under S 161, Penal Code, is one which is easily & may often be lightly made, but is in the very nature of things difficult to establish, as direct evidence must in most cases be meagre & of a tainted nature. These considerations cannot however be suffered to relieve the prosecution of any part of the burden which rests upon it to establish the charge beyond reasonable doubt. If after every thing that can legitimately be considered has been given its due weight, room still exists for taking the view that however strong the suspicion raised against the accused every reasonable possibility of innocence has not been excluded, he is entitled to an acquittal.

In this case, as in all cases of this kind, the direct evidence of the guilt of the applt. is that of an accomplice, namely that of P. W. 1."

[5] And the other is the decision in the case of Emperor v. Anwar Ali, 48 Cr. L. J. 964 at p. 965 (A. I. R. (35) 1948 Lah. 27). The passage relied upon reads :

"Naturally, the decoy witness will be extremely keen that his trap should not fail & having in the forefront of his mind that the central thing is that the marked money should be passed to the intended victim, & assuming a certain elasticity of moral character in the decoy witness there is a real danger that he may pass on the money under some pretext which may perhaps not be guilty in the relevant sense or which may even be wholly innocent, but in giving his evidence may represent that he gave the money for the purpose relevant in the case, feeling confident that having taken care that the money was passed with as little publicity as possible: the case on this particular point will resolve itself into a conflict between his evidence on solemn affirmation & the statement of the accused person which must necessarily be made without an oath."

[6] Besides the general principles, enunciated above, which go a great way to retract the independence of the evidence, adduced in the case, there is a very important piece of evidence, in support of the defence, namely, that of P. W. 5. (After stating the evidence the judgment proceeds:) The question that immediately confronts us is whether there is anything on record on which it can be declared without any reasonable doubt this evidence is to be discarded as false & unreliable. The learned Cts. below have not seriously applied their minds to this aspect of the case which supports the defence case in its entirety. They have said that P. W. 5 could not be believed as he came from the same district & belonged to the same community as the accused. We find from record that at the time when P. W. 5 was giving his evidence, he was not a subordinate to the petnr. who had been for a long while transferred from Kalupara to another station. That they came from the same district or belonged to the same community could not be good reasons for discarding his evidence. The very fact that the prosecution did not take opportunity to declare him hostile in order to cross-examine him as well leads to the inference that they had no materials in their possession either to establish that the witness was hostile to the prosecution or intimately connected with the welfare of the accused. He is a public servant & has some position in the society. In the absence of establishing any intimacy between him & the accused & in the absence of any motive as to why he should perjure himself, it would be difficult not to act upon his evidence as totally unworthy of credit. Besides, I have noticed certain suspicious features in the surrounding facts & circumstances of the case. The fact that Radhamohan took time to file the complaint bespeaks that he was not such an aggrieved person as he now poses to be. At present he says that he has been the victim of the Station Master's corrupt habit of taking bribe. Under the circumstances, when he finds before him a person in authority asking him to file a complaint, there should be no good reason for him to hesitate & defer. Secondly, one who takes a bribe never defers actual payment until after he has done all in his official capacity in order to show favour to the party. It is said that in this particular case it was agreed that after the goods are loaded the payment should be made

& R/R should be taken. What is the favour that was sought to be purchased at a price from the Station Master ? It was supplying him a waggon for the purpose of transporting his commodity. After that had been done, suppose Radhamohan refused to pay, could he have prevented him from enjoying the favour that had already been shown to him? Thirdly, what is more remarkable is that there is not a word in the written complaint to tell us of the conversation that took place between the Station Master & Radhamohan on the 19th. The complaint is a general complaint & made not with reference to any specific incident. Lastly, it appears from the cross-examination of Radhamohan that he has got his Penthas for procuring Dried Fish at places, such as Parikud, Soran & Gangadharpur. Out of the three places, Gangadharpur itself is a Rly. Station & according to him the other two places are nearer to Gangadharpur than to Kaluparaghat. As a business man, it is not probable that he should incur greater expenses on cartage in order to bring his goods to a distant Railway Station in preference to a nearer one.

[7] It further appears that he maintains accounts of his Fish business of which the total value is Rs.4000 or so in a year. He did not produce these accounts at the trial. As against this it is difficult to believe that he should have in his possession 80 bags of Dried Fish worth about Rs. 3000 to be indented on that single occasion. These circumstances can be reconciled only if it is viewed in the light that the whole thing was stage-managed for the purpose of the police trap. Under the circumstances it becomes very essential that there should be independent evidence as to the talk between Radhamohan & the Station Master on the 19th during the course of which according to Radhamohan it was settled that he was to pay Rs. 240 for getting the R/R after the loading & of the conversation at the time of his delivery of the money to the Station Master. I have already said that these two are the essential facts that could establish the accused's guilt As at present, this has been sought to be established by the tainted evidence of Radhamohan & Brahmachari. They are either accomplices or spies of the police. One cannot be sure to preclude the idea that they were set up by the police to make out a case against the Station Master who had probably earned the reputation of corruption, from the beginning to the end. There must be some independent evidence, either direct or circumstantial, to prove the Station Master's guilt. If Radhamohan had accounts, these accounts must contain entries as to payments made to the Station Master as part of the expenditure incurred for transporting the goods to the various stations. These accounts, if produced, could have, at least, established that he has on previous occasion to pay some bribe to the Station Master or to incur some sort of expenditure otherwise unexplained. Such evidence may not be a direct evidence as to the guilt of this particular Station Master, but it would go a great way to establish that in this particular Station, during this Station Master's tenure of office, such illicit expenses used to be incurred for the purpose of transporting of goods. It would have been a circumstance capable of corroborating the prosecution story. Besides, as has been pointed out by a learned Judge of the Lahore H. C. in the cited case, the police, in contriving to catch the Station Master red-handed, should have posted somebody with an independent status to remain in ambush to hear the conversation that passed between Radhamohan & the Station Master at the time when he delivered the notes. Under the circumstances, the effect of the exculpatory statement of P. W 5 which goes to establish the defence case, cannot be completely ignored. In the result, we are of opinion that the order of conviction & sentence cannot be upheld & must be set aside.

[8] We shall not, however, be understood to say that no prosecution can be based upon police traps of the kind. I should agree, with great respect with the observation of Lord Alverstone, C. J. of England, in the case of The King v. Mortimer, (1911) 1 K. B. 70 : (80 L. J. K. B. 76).

"The particular transaction of which evidence is given was the result of a police trap, & though I do not like police traps, any more than any one else, still it is only fair to remember that it is almost impossible to detect this class of offence in any other way."

But at the same time that should not lighten the task of the prosecution that lies upon it under the general principles of Criminal Jurisprudence that the accused's guilt must be established beyond all reasonable doubts. This case, as I have shown, stands on its own facts. Besides the statement of P. W. 5, which we could not persuade ourselves to ignore as unworthy of credit, there were various other suspicious features. It is always to be borne in mind that anybody may be easily taken unawares by the police trap. It may not be completely unfounded that this Station Master was not in the habit of receiving brites, but what we have to investigate & settle as a fact is whether on this particular occasion he had received the notes as a bribe after having agreed to do so. As we are not satisfied that the evidence is free from suspicion lacking corroboration, as it does, we are bound to quash the conviction & sentence.

[9] Narasimham J.—I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice.

Govt. Appeal No. 4 of 1947, D/- 16-10-1948.

(a) Government of India Act (1935), S. 297—Object of section.

The object of the section is to make interprovincial trade & commerce free from discrimination by any of the Province's attempt to support its own trade & commerce or to avail of the opportunity of holding or producing certain commodities to the impoverishment & deprivation of neighbouring province & to encourage, as far as practicable, freedom of commercial intercourse between the provinces. [Para 9]

(b) Orissa Essential Articles Control & Requisitioning (Temporary Powers) Act (I [1] of 1947)—Act, if ultra vires as being contrary to S. 297, Government of India Act — Government of India Act (1935), S. 297 (1).

The Provincial Legislature can be charged with contravening S. 297, only if it contravenes by a legislation relating to trade & commerce within the Province or production, supply & distribution of commodities. It is manifest, therefore, the Provincial Legislature's power to legislate on subjects, relating to any other entry, is not in the least, affected by S. 297. The object of the Act was to regulate & control movement of commodities essential for the life of the society so as to allow their complete depletion. As the Act can be justified by reference to Entries Nos. 14 & 20 of the Provincial Legislative List, it is not ultra vires. [Paras 7 & 10]

(c) Orissa Live Stock (Control of Movement & Transactions) Order (1947), Cl. 3 — Preparation & attempt—Distinction — What constitutes attempt to commit offence under Cl. 3 — Orissa Essential Articles Control & Requisitioning (Temporary Powers) Act (I [1] of 1947), S. 10—Penal Code (1860), S. 511.

The dividing line between preparation & attempt is real though fine. So long as the offender is at the stage of preparation, he is not held punishable as it is still open to him to change his mind. The test, therefore, is whether the overt acts already done are such that if the offender changes his mind & does not proceed further in its progress, the act already done would be completely harmless. But where the thing done is such as, if not prevented by any extraneous cause, would fructify into commission of the offence, it would amount to an attempt to commit an offence. Cl. 3 makes an attempt to move or transport without a permit as good an offence as the completed acts of movement or transport from inside the Province to a place outside. The least movement from one terminus towards the other must constitute an attempt & will be punishable under S. 10 of the Act. [Para 11]

(d) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 41 & 42—Orissa Essential Articles Control & Requisitioning (Temporary Powers) Act (I [1] of 1947) & Orissa Livestock (Control) of Movement & Transactions Order (1947) are covered by sections. [Para 18]

Anno. Penal Code, S. 41, N. 1.

(e) Penal Code (1860), S. 79 — Mistake of law—Meaning — Mistake of fact— Mens rea —Error of mixed question of law & fact.

Mistake of law ordinarily means mistake as to existence or otherwise of any law on a relevant subject as well as mistake as to what the law is. [Para 20]

In holding a citizen guilty of any offence, the existence of mens rea in him is fundamental. It is only when the mind is at fault that a man can be held guilty of an offence. It is fundamental too that whenever & wherever there is a mistake of fact on which is founded a belief in good faith of justification by law of an act, the requisite state of mind that would make the author of the act guilty is absent. Considered in this aspect there is hardly any difference between mistake of fact & mistake of law; but it has been the policy of criminal jurisprudence of civilised countries that every individual shall be presumed to know the law & shall be debarred from pleading ignorance of law as an excuse. [Para 20]

An error of mixed question of law & fact is treated as a mistake of fact. [Para 23]

Anno. Penal Cede, S. 79, N. 1.

(f) Penal Code (1860), S. 79—Question of justification of offence—Guiding rules.

Where the question of justification of an offence either due to mistake of fact or mistake of law, arises, the guiding rules are :

(i) That when an act is in itself plainly criminal & is more severely punishable if certain circumstances co-exist, ignorance of the existence of such circumstances is no answer to a charge for the aggravated offence.

(ii) That where an act is prima facie innocent & proper, unless certain circumstances co-exist, the ignorance of such circumstances is an answer to the charge.

(iii) That the state of the deft.'s mind must amount to absolute ignorance of the existence of the circumstance which alters the character of the act, or to a belief in its non-existence.

(iv) Where an act which is in itself wrong, is under certain circumstances, criminal, a person who does the wrong act cannot set up as a defence that he was ignorant of the fact which turned the wrong into a crime.

(v) Where a statute makes it penal to do an act under certain circumstances, it is a question upon the wording & object of the particular state, whether the responsibility of ascertaining that the circumstances exist is thrown upon the person who does the act or not. In the former case his knowledge is immaterial. [Para 24]

Advocate-General — for the King ; D. Sahu — for Resps.

Ray C. J. — This appeal is directed against an order of acquittal recorded by Rai Bahadur Charu Chandra Coari, Ses. J. Cuttack, in Cri. App. No. 70-C of 1947, reversing the order of conviction passed by the Sub-Divisional Mag. Jajpur, in the case of Emperor v. Tustipada Mandal & 5 others, under S. 10, Orissa Essential Articles Control & Requisitioning (Temporary Powers) Act (I [1] of 1947).

[2] The resps. six in number, belong to the dist. of Burdwan in the Province of Bengal. They were prosecuted for attempting to transport 21 bullocks from the Province of Orissa in contravention of Cl. 3, Orissa Livestock (Control of Movement & Transactions) Order 1947, made & promulgated in exercise of the powers conferred by S. 3, Orissa Essential Articles Control & Requisitioning (Temporary Powers) Act 1947, in supersession of all existing orders on the subject, by the Govt. of Orissa. On 2-6-1947, the resps. were found passing through Dharmasala (in the dist. of Cuttack) en-route Bhadrak with 21 heads of cattle (bullocks), purchased on different dates by one or other of them in different districts of Orissa. They were avowedly moving & transporting cattle to the dist. of Burdwan beyond the provincial boundaries of Orissa. It is admitted that the resps. held no permit nor licence from the Govt. of Orissa as enjoined in Cl. 3 of the Order aforesaid. Under these circumstances they were prosecuted under S. 10 of the Orissa Act I [1] of 1947, & sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 51 each, & the 21 bullocks seized were forfeited to the Govt. of Orissa.

[3] In appeal, the learned Ses. J. of Cuttack gave them benefit of doubt & set aside their conviction & recalled the order of forfeiture of the bullocks seized.

[4] The points, that were canvassed before him & have been reiterated here, were: (i) if the Act of the Orissa Legislature, referred to above, & the Order, passed thereunder, were ultra vires the Provincial Legislature, (ii) that whatever the resps. did in furtherance of movement & transport of the cattle amounted in law to preparation, as distinguished from attempt, to commit the offence. Two other points were raised in this Ct. by the learned counsel for the resps namely, (iii) the trial was vitiated by misjoinder of charges & parties, & lastly (iv) that in view of the Govt. of India's letter addressed to all Provincial Govts., the resps. had reasons to believe bona fide that under the laws, then prevailing, there was no imposition of any ban on the movement & transport of cattle from Orissa across its borders. I shall proceed to deal with the points in the order in which they have been stated above:

[5] Point (i):—If Orissa Act I [1] of 1947 is ultra vires the Provincial Legislature. The Act is impugned, as being contrary to the provisions of S. 297, Govt. of India Act, which reads:

"297. — (1) No Provincial Legislature of Govt. shall—

(a) By virtue of the entry in the Provincial Legislature List relating to trade & commerce within the Province, or the entry in that List relating to the production, supply, & distribution of commodities, have power to pass any law or take any executive action prohibiting or restricting the entry into, or export from the Province of goods of any class or description or,

(b) by virtue of anything in the Act, have power to impose any tax, cess, toll, or due which, as between goods manufactured or produced in the province & similar goods not so manufactured or produced, discriminates in favour of the former, or which, in the case of goods manufactured or produced outside the Province, discriminates between goods manufactured or produced in one locality & similar goods manufactured or produced in another locality.

(2) Any law passed in contravention of this section shall, to the extent of the contravention, be invalid."

[6] It is submitted that this section must operate so as to completely neutralize the Provincial Legislature's powers to make laws offending it under any of the entries in the Provincial Legislative List. Reliance is placed in support of this contention on James v. Cowan, 1932 A. C. 542 : (101 L. J. P. C. 149) and James v. Commonwealth of Australia (No. 2), 1936 A. C. 578: (105 L. J. P. C. 115). Of the above two, the last named case is completely beside the point as it concerns the party's right to appeal to His Majesty's P. C. Before dealing with the case of James v. Cowan, 1932 A. C. 542 : (101 L. J. P. C. 149) so strongly relied upon by Mr. D. Sahu, I shall place side by side S. 92, Commonwealth Constitution to which the Australian case related & S. 297, Indian Constitution, against which the impugned Act is said to offend. The material portion of the section of the Commonwealth Constitution, which reads:

"trade, commerce & intercourse among the States whether by means of internal carriage or ocean navigation, shall be absolutely free".

The relevant portion of S. 297 reads:

"297.—(1) No Provincial Legislature or Govt. shall by—

(a) by virtue of the entry in the Provincial Legislative List relating to trade & commerce within the Province, or the entry in that list relating to the production, supply & distribution of the commodities, have power to pass any law or take any executive action prohibiting or restricting the entry into, or export from the province of goods off any class or description;

(2) Any law passed in contravention of this section shall, to the extent of the contravention, be invalid."

[7] The contrast of the sections, as expressed, should make it clear that while one amounts to absolute prohibition the other is a conditional one. The Provincial Legislature can be charged with contravening S. 297, only if it contravenes by a legislation relating to trade & commerce within the Province or production, supply & distribution of commodities. It is manifest therefore, the Provincial Legislature's power to legislate on subjects, relating to any other entry is not, in the least affected by S. 297. This has also been so held by their Lordships of the F. C. in the case of Bhola Prasad v. Emperor, A. I. R. (29) 1942 F. C. 17: (43 Or. L. J. 481). It would be sufficient, in this connexion, to quote a passage from the judgment of Gwyer C. J. After quoting S. 297 (1) (a), his Lordship proceeds to say:

"It is plain beyond words, that this provision only refers to legislation with respect to entry No. 27 & entry No. 29 in the Provincial Legislative List: it has no application to legislation with respect to anything in entry No. 31. A Provincial Legislature if it desired to pass a law prohibiting export from or import into the Province must therefore seek for legislative authority to do so in entries other than entry No. 27 or entry No. 29. If it can point to legislative powers for the purpose derived from any other entry in the Provincial Legislative List, then its legislation cannot be challenged under S. 297 (1) (a)."

[8] The impugned Act, it has been urged with some force by Mr. D. Sahu, is relatable to entries Nos. 27 & 29, Provincial Legislative List, which entries deal with trade & commerce, & production supply & distribution of commodities respectively—subjects referred to in S. 297 (1) (a). He takes us to the preamble of the impugned Act, which reads:

"Whereas it is expedient to provide for the continuance during a limited period of powers to control the production, processing supply, distribution, transport & prices of essential articles & of trade & commerce therein & for requisitioning of property;

It is hereby enacted as follows:"

& urges that the Act directly impinges upon the bounderies of S. 297 (1) (a). It is contended for the Province of Orissa that the Act is relatable to entry No. 20 of the Provincial Legislative List which refers to:

"Agriculture, including agricultural education & research protection against pests & prevention of plant diseases; improvement of stock & prevention of animal diseases; veterinary training & practice; pounds & prevention of cattle trespass."

[9] The question, that in this context, arises for consideration, is whether the scope of the Act is to be limited to what is stated in the preamble as contradistinguished from what is provided in the text. The key sections of the Act are 3 & 4. According to both of these sections, the Provincial Govt's power under the Act is to be exercised only when it appears to them to be necessary or expedient that certain measures should be taken only to maintain increase or secure supply, distribution & availability at fair prices or production of any essential article. Essentiality of the aricle should be determined according to the existing resource of such articles & their necessity for the life of the society. It would be denying the Provincial Legislature & the Provincial Govt. their bare existence, if by virtue of S. 297, Govt. of India Act, they are made powerless for, or in other words, prohibited from passing such legislation & taking such measures as will be thought expedient & necessary by them to prevent complete depletion of such commodities of the Province without which the members of society in the Province are bound to perish. To provide for the agriculture of the Province is a necessity which cannot be ignored without grave danger & risk to its existence. As at present situated, no agricultural operation can be carried on without proper supply of cattle. Accordingly, "improvement of stock" is intimately & inextricably connected with the Province's agriculture. Under the circumstances, the scope & purpose or pith & substance of the Act are directly, if not solely referable to legislative powers, derivable from the entry No. 20 Provincial Legislative List II. I have read the whole Act & I find absolutely no provisions therein of which the object can be held to come within the mischief of S. 297. The object of the section is to make inter-provincial trade & commerce free from discrimination by any of the Provinces' attempt to support its own trade & commerce or to avail of the opportunity of holding or producing certain commodities to the impoverishment & deprivation of neighbouring province & to encourage, as far as practicable, freedom of commercial intercourse between the Provinces. It would be pertinent here to advert to the construction put upon S. 92 of the Australian Commonwealth Constitution by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. In spite of the terms of absolute prohibition in the section directed against, any barrier being put to the absolute freedom of inter state commerce, their Lordships observe:

"Thus the only question in this case appears to be whether the Minister did exercise his powers so as to restrict the absolute freedom of inter-state trade. It may be conceded that even if the Minister exercised them for a primary object which was not directed to trade or commerce but to such matters as defence against the enemy, prevention of famine, disease & the like, he would not be open to attack because incidentally inter-state trade was affected."

(In the case before them, their Lordships, however, came to a finding that the direct object of the exercise of powers was to interfere with inter-state trade & in that view held that the impugned section was ultra vires.)

[10] In the instant case, however, it is not only not the direct object but even not ancillary nor collateral object of the impugned Act to interefere with inter-provincial trade. The object of the Act was to regulate & control movement of commodities essential for the life of the society so as to allow their complete depletion. There is no word of prohibition of transport under all circumstances across the Provincial borders. Any such transport or trade was to be controlled for the purpose of its regulation so far as such regulation was needed for preserving the barest minimum of the essential goods for the bare existence of the society. Suppose under this Act, the Provincial authorities allowed free transport of livestock other than plough cattle & milch cows which were essential in view of the then ecomonic condition of the society, greatly shaken by the devastating World War No. II, could it not be said that it was a measure not intended to prevent or prohibit inter-provincial trade or commerce, but meant to prevent famine in the Province by preserving plough cattle, so necessary for carrying on agricultural operations (Entry No 20) the mainstay of the life of the society & to maintain health by preserving milch cows (Entry No. 14) of the Province. There objects could not be achieved except by way of regulating movement & transport of livestock through measures, such as, this Act provides. In my judgment, therefore, as the Act can be justified by reference to entries Nos. 14 & 20 of the Provincial Legislative List, it is not ultra vires.

[11] Point (ii):—To appreciate Mr. D. Sahu's submissions, it would be necessary to read Cl. (3), Orissa Livestock (Control of Movement & Transactions) Order 1947. Its material portion reads:

"No person shall move or transport or attempt to transport any livestock .... to any place outside it except under & in accordance with a permit .... issued in this behalf."

The submission is that the offence is committed only when the Provincial boundaries are crossed & not before that. To accede to this contention would amount to virtual abrogation of the law. This is not a case in which there was any dispute as to whereto the cattle were being moved or transported, it being admitted by the accused that they were taking them to the district of Burdwan. The movement & transport being contrary to law the offence must commence as soon after their purchase of the cattle as they begin to move them even a step. The act of movement or transport is to be accomplished between two termini, one is terminus a quo & the other is terminus ad quem. Any slightest movement from the former towards the latter amounts to movement of transport within the mischief of the clause. The argument can prevail if the accused persons did nothing beyond purchase of the cattle for the purpose of moving or transporting. The dividing line between preparation & attempt is real though fine. So long as the offender is at the stage of preparation, he is not held punishable as it is still open to him to change his mind. The test, therefore, is whether the overt acts, already done, are such that if the offender changes his mind & does not proceed further in its progress, the act already done would be completely harmless. But where the thing done is such as, if not prevented by any extranous cause, would justify into commission of the offence, it would amount to an attempt to commit an offence. In the present case, Cl. (3) makes an attempt to move or transport without a permit as good an offence as the completed acts of movement or transport from inside the Province to a place outside. As I have said the least movement from one terminus towards the other must constitute an attempt & will be punishable under S. 10 of the Act. This contention must fail.

[12] Point (iii):—As to misjoinder of charges & parties, this ought not to detain us for any length of time. The fact that all the resps. came together to purchase cattle, though the purchase was made in the name of either one or the other of them & were going back together driving the entire flock collected by them & admittedly one of them had gone ahead to arrange for a waggon for transport, makes it quite plain that they were acting in concert & the attempts to move or transport were part & parcel of one continuous transaction with which each one of the resps. was connected & in which one was helping the other. It cannot, therefore, be ruled that there was any such deficiency in trial as misjoinder of charges & or of persons.

[13] Point 4:—The fourth and the last point is fraught with difficulties. The facts relevant to elucidation of this branch of contention, are admitted beyond any controversy & they are set out herein below :

[14] That, with the lapse of Defence of India Act, the various orders, passed by the Provincial Govts. controlling the movement & transport of livestocks, made as they had been under the Defence of India Rules; deriving their force from the Defence of India Act, automatically exhausted themselves. The Govt. of Orissa, however, considered that it was expedient in the interest of the life of the community in Orissa that power to control movement & transport & of certain essential articles & trade & commerce therein & requisitioning thereof should continue for a limited period. Propelled by this decision, the Legislature of Orissa passed Act I [1] of 1947, which received the assent of the Governor-General on 28-2-1947, & was published in the Orissa Gazette on 12-3-1947. In pursuance of this Act, livestock, including poultry, constituted, inter alia essential commodities for the purposes of the Act. According to the provisions of Ss. 3 & 4, the Provincial Govt. were empowered to make & notify necessary orders for regulating of prohibiting production, processing, supply, distribution, transport & prices of essential articles & trade & commerce therein. The powers, thus conferred, without any prejudice to the generality, were specified in sub s. (2) of the section. In fulfilment of this power in order to meet the exigencies of the circumstances flowing from the then condition of the community at large in the Province of Orissa, the relevant order was made which was notified on 23-4 1947. This order was mainly, if not solely, concerned with providing a machinery for grant of licenses or permits as condition precedent to movements & transports of & trade & commerce in essential commodities. In cl. (3) of this order, it was prescribed :

"No person shall move or transport or attempt to move or transport any livestock . . . from any place in the Province . . . . to any place outside it except under & in accordance with permit issued by . . . ."

[15] The offence, which is the subject of this trial, is contravention of this clause which is made punishable under S. 10 of the Act. I have already said that the order containing the clause was notified on 23-4-1947. It appears from the documents, printed at pp. 10 & 11 of the Paper Book that K. P. W. Marar, Esq., Joint Secretary to the Govt. of India, addressed to all Provincial Govts. on 19-3-1947 (a few days after the publication of the concerned Act of Orissa) in the following terms:

"Sir, I am directed to say that with the lapse of the Defence of India Act, various orders passed by the Provincial Govts. controlling the movement of livestock cease to be operative. Their orders were not, however, formally withdrawn & instances have co ne to the notice of the Govt. of India where the public are still under the impression that the movement of livestock is not free. The Provincial Govts. are no doubt aware that under S. 297, Govt. of India Act, no order can be passed by them affecting inter-provincial movement of cattle & any restrictions either by order or by executive action will be ultra vires. I am, therefore, to request you to remove any wrong impression that might exist & issue a formal notice intimating that these respective orders are no longer in force. The Rly. Board is also being requested to inform all Rly. Administrations that lapsed orders of the Govt. of India should be ignored & free movement of livestock permitted. I have etc."

Following this letter the Director of Agriculture, Bengal wrote a Memo No. 7464 dated 18-4-47 to the Deputy Director of Agriculture, Burdwan Circle informing :

"Now-a-days there is no restriction on the inter-provincial movement of cattle. A copy of the Govt. of India, letter issued in this connexion is enclosed herewith."

[16] The Deputy Director in his turn forwarded a copy together with the enclosure (Govt. of India's letter) to one Rai Hari Kali Pan Bahadur. It appears that in course of investigation, the resps. produced this letter before the investigating Sub-Inspector (P. W. 1), who deposed:

"The accused all belonged to Bengal. During enquiry they produced a letter from the Director of Agriculture, Bengal to the Deputy Director of Agriculture, Burdwan Circle (Memo No. 7464 dated 18-4 47) regarding import of cattle from Orissa. The letter is marked Ex. 2. This letter contained as an enclosure a copy of a letter purported to have been issued from the Joint Secretary to the Govt. of India to all Provincial Govts. stating that all orders affecting inter-provincial movement of cattle passed by the Provincial Govts. will be ultra vires."

It may be noted that the enquiry, referred to, took place on 2-6-1947. From such receipts, printed at pp. 11 to 15, as are relevant to the present case, the resps commenced purchasing bullocks, in question, from the second week of may & completed the same on 1st of June. They started moving on the 2nd of June & were arrested on that day.

[17] On these facts, it is contended by Mr. Sahu, that the actions of the accused were fully justified as they, in good faith & reasonably, believed that they were entitled to move or transport cattle from Orissa to a place beyond its borders & to trade or commerce in livestock inter-provincially. The facts, proved, do not sufficiently make out the defence plea with reference to the material time of commission of the offence. The commission of the offence must, in this case, be held to have commenced from the date of the purchase, that is. from the second week of may though the actual movement or transport, as the case may be, commenced on 2nd of June. This is so in view of S. 11 of the Act, which says:

"Any person . . . . . does any act preparatory to a contravention of an order made under the provisions of this Act, shall be deemed to have contravened the order . . . . . ."

[18] The learned Advocate-General, in counter argumenting the contention of Mr. Sahu, says that the principles underlying the "general exceptions" in Chap. IV, I. P. C., are not applicable to a special or local law offence as the present one. This contention cannot be entertained in view of S. 40 of the Code, wherein it is provided:

"In Chap. IV . . . . . word 'offence' denotes a thing punishable . . . . . under any special or local law as hereinafter defined."

"Special law" is defined in S. 41 & "Local laws" in S. 42. These definitions will, by all means, cover the relevant laws with which we are concerned in this case.

[19] The contention of Mr. Sahu, therefore, deserves consideration in view of the provisions, contained in Chap. IV, I. P. C. under the head "General Exceptions." The section, on which

Mr. Sahu lays his finger in support of his contention, is 79, which reads:

"Nothing is an offence which is done by any person who is justified by law, or who by reason of a mistake of fact & and not by reason of a mistake of law in good faith, believes himself to be justified by law, in doing it."

[20] The next question, that then arises, is whether the resp's case comes within the purview of aforesaid section, that is, whether they, by reason of mistake of fact & not by reason of mistake of law, in good faith, believed themselves to be justified by law, in moving or transporting the 21 heads of bullocks from inside Orissa to a place outside. True that, but for the Act restricting such movement, they would be justified by law to move them. But the question, that falls to be considered, is whether the mistake, which led them to believe in their justification, was a mistake of fact & not a mistake of law. I shall deal with the question of their 'good faith' presently. (Before doing so I shall assume 'good-faith' in their favour). It is contended, on behalf of the Province, that it was a mistake of law rather than a mistake of fact. Mistake of law ordinarily means mistake as to existence or otherwise of any law on a relevant subject as well as mistake as to what the law is. The difficulty, involved in this case, arises out of a discordant note, struck by the Govt of India, as to the competence of a Provincial Legislature or a Provincial Govt. either to legislate or to take any executive action having the purport as well as the effect of prohibiting inter-provincial movement & transport of commercial goods, including livestock. In holding a citizen guilty of any offence, the existence of mense rea in him is fundamental. It is only when the mind is at fault, that a man can be held guilty of an offence. It is fundamental, too, that whenever & wherever there is a mistake of fact on which is founded a belief in good faith of justification by law of an act, the requisite state of mind that would make the author of the act guilty is absent. Considered in this aspect, there is hardly any difference between mistake of fact & mistake of law, but it has been the policy of criminal jurisprudence of civilised countries that every individual shall be presumed to know the law & shall be debarred from pleading ignorance of law as an excuse. If the accused's plea in this case amounted to plea of ignorance of the relevant Act & the relevant order, it must have been summarily ruled out as not sustainable in law; but the plea, before us, is that the mental state of the presumed knowledge of law of the alleged offenders is neutralised by what can be called a knowledge, imparted by an authoritative governmental source to the effect that any law, prohibiting such movement or transport or any executive action taken in that behalf by provincial authorities either legislative or otherwise, is beyond their competence. The real controversy reduces itself to this whether the latter knowledge derived from the source, as it is, produces or leads to "mistake of fact or mistake of law" within the meaning of S 79 of the Code. If the latter, the contention, however much it may evoke sympathy in us for the accused, must fail.

[21] Mr. Sahu's contention is that the knowledge, imparted by the Government of India, is substantially to the effect that there is no law prohibiting the movement or the transport, in question. As such, it is contended, it is a question of fact. This contention leads one to think of an apt analogy. Suppose, for instance, the Official Gazette of Orissa published a list of temporary Acts, that have either exhausted or been repealed, & in the list, Orissa Act I [1] of 1947 & the order, published there under, are included ; later, however, this mistake was rectified in subsequent Gazette. A question arises whether any offence in contravention of the Act can be said to have been committed during this interval. The only answer, that is admissible, is that no such offence can be said to have been committed. Pushing the analogy to its logical conclusion in its application to the present case, it can, as well, be said, in favour of the accused, that they were given to understand that any law prohibiting movement or transport of livestock from Orissa to outside had lapsed & they had no reason either to disbelieve or to discredit the source, from which it came nor had they any reason to doubt its authority. Under the circumstances, can it be said that the mental state, under which one is capable of committing an offence, was in existence in the accused. I am fully alive to the counter contention that the responsibility of the accused in such a case, is to ascertain the validity of the provincial law & is not to be led away by an official letter which cannot occupy the place of law. But I, on my part, should not fall in line with this contention, particularly as the nature of the act, impugned, is not in itself either wrongful or unlawful. On the contrary, it is a lawful act until it is made unlawful. There are circumstances which make out cases of exception to the general rule that ignorance is no excuse. If I can understand any reason behind this exception it is this that there may arise circumstances neutralising the presumption of knowledge of law in every individual. I shall here quote a passage from the judgment of Baggally L. J., (in a case of which the facts are somewhat dissimilar) in the case of Burns v. Nowell, (1880) 5 Q. B. D. 444 at. p. 454 (49 L. J. Q B. 468) :

"Before a continuous act or proceeding not originally unlawful, can be treated as unlawful by reason of the passing of an Act of Parliament by which it is in terms made so, reasonable time must be allowed for its discontinuance; & though ignorance of the law may, of itself, be no excuse for the master of a vessel who may act in contravention of it, such ignorance may nevertheless be taken into account when it becomes necessary to consider the circumstances under which the act or proceeding alleged to be unlawful was continued, & when & how it was discontinued, with a view to determine whether a reasonable time had elapsed without its being discontinued."

[22] I shall not be understood to use this decision, in view of the quoted passage occurring therein, as an apt precedent, but, merely, as showing that in view of particular circumstances of a case, an exception, to the universally recognised rule that ignorance of law is no excuse, may come into being. Next, I shall advert to a passage in Mayne's Law of India at pp. 136-137 which, I think, is more pertinent to the question, that, at the moment, has engaged my attention :

"Suppose, for instance, that an Act of Parliament was passed in England, applicable to India, which came into operation as soon as the royal assent was given, & that an offence against it was commit'ed in India a week after it came into operation, before the Act could have arrived, or been promulgated in India; I do not think it could be contended that the law was in force in India at the time the act was committed."

[23] It is, however, settled that an error on mixed question of law & fact is treated as a mistake of fact. In this connexion, I shall quote the remarks of Bishop in his commentary on Criminal Law. Art. 378 :

". . . . . So, in criminal jurisprudence, the guilt or the innocence of the prisoner depends on the fact . . . . that he honestly believed it through his misapprehension of law."

In England, the view has unanimously been taken that if the accused is misled into the error of fact on account of an error of law, his mistake shall be treated as a mistake of fact rather than of law. (Vide R v. Reed, Car. & M. 306 : (174 E. R. 519); R. v. Hall, 3 C. & P. 409). This sort of conclusion to my mind appears to be more a matter of policy of criminal jurisprudence rather than of strict logical deduction.

[24] For the purpose of elucidation, I shall quote the five invaluable rules, laid down by 15 Judges, in the case of R. v. Prince, (1683) 2 Ch. C. 154, which has been the guiding star in England & elsewhere whenever the question of justification of an offence either due to mistake of fact or mistake of law has arisen :

"(i) That when an act is in itself plainly criminal, & is more severely punishable if certain circumstances co-exist, ignorance of the existence of such circumstances is no answer to a charge for the aggravated offence.

(ii) That where an act is prima facie innocent & proper, unless certian circumstances co-exist, then ignorance of such circumstances is an answer to the charge.

(iii) That the state of the deft's mind must amount to absolute ignorance of the existence of the circumstance which alters the character of the act, or to a belief in its non-existence.

(iv) Where an act which is in itself wrong is, under certain circumstances, criminal, a person who does the wrong act cannot set up as a defence that he was ignorant of the facts which turned the wrong into a crime.

(v) Where a statute makes it penal to do an act under certain circumatances, it is a question upon the wording & object of the particular statute, whether the responsibility of ascertaining that the circumstances exist is thrown upon the person who does the act or not. In the former case his knowledge is immaterial."

[25] The present act of movement & transport of livestock from one Province to another comes within R. (ii) above being an act which is prima facie innocent. It is made penal on account of certain circumstances co-existing, namely, the prohibitory orders & laws passed by a Province. Of course, I shall not be taken to be confusing questions of fact with questions of law, as in this rule, no doubt, 'the circumstances' referred to are in relation to "circumstances" relating to facts; but such circumstances will not be different in character in cases of circumstances of mixed question of law & fact. Rule (ii) above must attract the application of R. (iii). Applying R. (iii) in the present case, it may be argued with force that the fact of some public officers of Bengal canvassing the validity of Provincial laws on the subject with the Govt. of India presupposes the fact of the Provincial law & that their authorisation of the accused persons to come & transport cattle from this Province amounts to flying in the face of the Provincial law. The argument, standing by itself, will, no doubt, commend itself very strongly to me to the prejudice of the accused; but keeping the gist of the law of general exception in mind, the bare possibility of the accused's innocence cannot be completely ruled out. In view of their misconception of law, they fell victim to a mistake of fact that the Provincial laws on the subject had lapsed. Lapsing of a particular statutory law & order must always be a question of fact.

[26] Under the circumstances of the present case, however, the accused persons cannot be held "not guilty". The burden was on them to satisfy that the conditions that could exonerate them, existed at the time, when the offence was committed. The only evidence, that is before us, is that on 2nd of June, they were in possession of the letter of the Govt. of India. There is hardly any reason to believe that the mental state of absolute ignorance, advocated in R. (iii) above, existed at the material time, namely, at the time of the purchase, which itself constitutes & completes the offence as stated above.

[27] In this view of the matter, however, the appellate order of acquittal must be set aside & the resps. must be convicted of the offence charged against them. In consideration of the circumstances, set out above, the punishment to be inflicted must be of a nominal character, that is, each of them is sentenced to pay a fine of Re. 1 & in default to undergo R. I. of one week each.

[28] Mr. D. Sahu contended that the order of conviction need not attract any sentence whatever. In this connexion, he relied upon the case of Sitaram v. Emperor, A. I. R. (15) 1928 Nag. 188 : (29 Cr. L. J. 506). With great respect, I do not agree with the view taken by the learned Judge, Hallifax, A. J. C., in that case. To my mind, it is imperative that every conviction of an offence shall be followed by the prescribed punishment while, in case no minimum is prescribed, to reduce it to something nominal is completely within the discretion of the Ct. In the ends of justice, we shall also direct that the order of forfeiture of the cattle, seized, to the Govt. of Orissa, should be set aside & the sale-proceeds, in deposit, must be made over to the resps.

[29] The appeal is, therefore, allowed.

[30] Narasimham J.—I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice.

(a) Contract Act (1872), S. 29 —Contract void for uncertainty—Contract Act (1872), Ss. 46 & 49.

Where a written contract for sale of land is silent about the price & the time for performance, the contract is not void for uncertainty, if it is one that can be made certain within the meaning of S. 29. If on evidence it is found that the parties agreed to the payment of a reasonable & fair price & complete the contract within reasonable time the Ct. can imply such terms in the contract & determine what is reasonable price & what is reasonable time. (b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 100 — Appreciation of evidence by trial Ct.

The greatest weight should be attached to the trial Ct.'s opinion because he saw & heard the witnesses. It is not open to a Ct. of Appeal to set aside the finding of a Ct. unless it appears unmistakably from the evidence that in reaching his conclusions the trial Ct. has not taken proper advantage of having seen & heard the witnesses or has failed to appreciate the weight & bearing of the circumstances admitted or proved. The appellate Ct is free to reverse his conclusions if the grounds given by him are unsatisfactory by reason of material inconsistencies or inaccurracies or if he has misdirected himself in law. B. Mohapatra & P. Misra—for Applts ; H. Mohapatra—for Resps.

Panigrahi J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for specific performance of a contract to sell a plot of homestead land bearing plot No. 1051 within Jemmabandi 98 of Cuttack Khasamahal. Four annas share in the suit plot belonged to Raikrishna Mohanty, deft. 2 & the rest belonged to applt. 1, Rajakishor Mohanty. Deft. 2 also owned in his own right the adjoining plot of land bearing No. 1052 within Jammabandi 97. Deft. 2 wanted to sell plot No. 1052 applied to the Khasamahal authorities for permission to sell. Among the objectors were deft. 1 (Dr. Banabehari Patnaik), pltf. 2 (Sachidananda Mohanty) son of pltf. 1 & some other persons. The Khasamahal enquiry was posted to 6-4-1941 when deft. 2 filed Ex. 5, which is a petn. of compromise alleged to have been arrived at between the parties. The main clauses of this compromise are that pltf. 2, Sachidananda should withdraw his objection to the sale of plot No. 1052 & allow deft. 1 to purchase it from deft. 2 and that deft. 2 should sell to Sachidananda (pltf. 2) his four annas share in plot No. 1052. It is said that deft. 2 went back upon this compromise & sold plot No 1051 to deft. 1 on 27-6-41 for a sum of Rs. 500. The pltfs. sued for specific performance of the agreement for sale made by deft. 2 in favour of pltf. 2.

[2] The learned Munsif who tried the suit decreed the suit in pltfs' favour & held that the deft. 1 was not a bona fide purchaser for value. On appeal to the Ct. of the Dist. J. by deft. 1 the judgment of the learned Munsif was reversed on the ground that there was no completed contract on 5.4-1941 which could be specifically enforced & that it was void for uncertainty as there was no stipulation about the price to be paid. Specific performance of the contract was, therefore, refused.

[3] In second appeal two contentions have been raised on behalf of the pltf. applts. firstly, that the lower appellate Ct. committed errors of record which vitiated its judgment which cannot consequently be upheld; & secondly that the price for the sale of the plot had been settled prior to 5-4-1941 the day on which Ex. 5 was actually drafted & that even otherwise the Ct. can imply a term in the contract to the effect that a reasonable price should be paid.

[4] The pltfs' case is that the preliminary negotiations for a compromise were started on the 27th or 28th March 1941 at the house of Sri Bichitrananda Mohanty, viz., D.W. 3 who is the father-in-law of deft. 2 & that the price was settled at that time Pltf. 2 who was then at Jaipur was intimated of the agreement & was asked to confirm the same. Pltf. 2 it is said came to Cuttack on the 5th April & confirmed the same. The pltf. relied upon the evidence of P. W. 5 a clerk of Sri Bichitrananda Mohanty. The appellate Ct. rejected this witness's evidence on the ground that the evidence did not disclose that he was an eye-witness to the discussion said to have taken place on 27th & 28th of March. The witness clearly stated that the compromise petn. was drafted 7 or 8 days after the compromise talk took place & that he was present when Ex. 5 was drafted. From this statement made in cross examination the learned Dist. J. inferred that the witness was not present at the compromise talk which took place 7 or 8 days before the petn. was actually drafted & observed :

"He has nowhere stated affirmatively that he was present when the preliminary negotiation for compromise took place."

The witness said in the course of his chief examination that the consideration was fixed at Rs. 500 or a little more than that & that it was settled at the house of Bichitrananda Babu & that he was present there at the time. The witness was positive that he was present at the meeting where the compromise was settled & in cross examination he stated that this talk took place 7 or 8 days before Ex. 5 was drafted. In cross-examination he was specifically asked about his presence on the day Ex. 5 was drafted & he answered accordingly. It should be remembered that in cross-examination a witness answers only such questions as are put to him & a logical sequence of events cannot be expected in his narrative. The learned Dist. J. refused to attach any weight to the evidence of the first pltf. on the ground that "his past record as a dismissed clerk of the civil Ct. does not add to his reputation." There is also the evidence of P. W. 6 who corroborates the pltf's version that Rs. 500 had been settled as the consideration for the sale for sometime prior to 5-4 41 but his evidence was not accepted by the learned Dist. J. on the ground that he is a typist in the civil Ct. & that as the pltf. is also a clerk in the civil Ct. his evidence was that of a biased witness The learned Dist. J. also relied wholly on the evidence of D W. 3 (father-in law of deft 2) according to whom there was no talk of any sale price when Ex. 5 was drafted. From this statement the lower appellate Ct. drew the inference that there could not have been earlier negotiation or settlement of the price as D. W.-3 was silent on the point. In accepting the evidence of D. W. 3 in its entirety the lower Ct. was very much influenced by the fact that deft. 2 was a pro forma deft. only & that he was not interested in deft. 1. This is another error of record which has been pointed out to us. Deft. 2 was examined as D. W. 2 & admitted in his deposition: "My brother Gourkrishna is related to Dr. Patnaik". It is also clear that deft. 2 chose on the advice of his father-in-law to remain ex parte in the suit but that surprisingly enough he appeared on the day of trial to be examined on behalf of deft. 1 although he was not summoned to appear & that he went to Ct. on his own admission "at the request of 'Dr. Patanaik". It is obvious from this evidence that throughout the negotiations & the trial of the suit he was acting according to the instructions of his father-in-law, D. W. 3. The learned Dist. J's observation that D. W. 3 is a disinterested witness therefore leaves me unconvinced. The learned Munsif who had the opportunity of seeing these witnesses has, in a minute analysis of their evidence, accepted the evidence of the pltf. as being the more probable & consistent with the proved facts of the case. In doing so he observed:

"In cases like these, where the difference is on a vital point it is safe to see which story fits in with the admitted facts of the case."

I am in entire agreement with this observation It is, therefore, not open to a Ct. of Appeal to set aside the finding of a trial Ct. unless it appears unmistakably from the evidence that in reaching his conclusions the trial Ct. has not proper advantage of having seen & heard the witnesses or has failed to appreciate the weight & bearing of the circumstances admitted or proved. The appellate Ct. is free to reverse his conclusions if the grounds given by him are unsatisfactory by reason of material inconsistencies or inaccuracies or if he has misdirected himself in law. The greatest weight should be attached to his opinion because he saw & heard the witnesses As was observed by Lord Shaw in Clarke v. Edinburgh District Tramway Co., Ltd, 1919 S. C. (H. L.) 35, it is the duty of an appellate Ct. to put himself the question:

"Am I—who sit here without those advantages, sometimes broad & sometimes subtle, which are the privileges of the Judge who heard & tried the case—in a position, not having those privileges, to come to a clear conclusion that the Judge who had them was plainly wrong? If I cannot be satisfied in my own mind that the Judge with those privileges was plainly wrong, then it appears to me to be my duty to defer to his judgment."

The privileges pointed out by Lord Shaw involve more than questions of credibility. He said:

"Witnesses without conscious bias towards a conclusion may have, in their demeanour, in their manner, in their hesitation, in the nuance of their expression, in even the turns of the eye-lid left an impression upon the man who saw & heard them which can never be reproduced in the printed page."

See also Watt v. Thomas, (1947) A. C. 484: (1947-1 ALL. E. R. 582). That this is also the law in India has been repeatedly laid down by the Judicial Committee whose latest pronouncement on the subject is to be found in Veeraswami v. Naryya (1949) (1) M. L. J. 97 (A.I.R. (36) 1949 P. C. 32). It is impossible that the appellate Ct. should take upon itself to say, by simply reading printed & written evidence, which is right when it had not that decisive advantage of hearing verbal evidence & seeing witnesses which the Judge had who had to determine quesitons of fact & to determine which story to believe. I am, therefore, unable to agree with the finding of the learned Dist. J. & would unhesitatingly accept this appeal & restore the judgment of the Munsif.

[5] But the applts stand on even stronger ground as the decision of the points of law raised at the Bar must be in their favour. I am obliged to my learned brother who pointed out during arguments that on the findings recorded by the learned Dist. J., there arises an implied term in the contract that a fair & reasonable price was stipulated to be paid. We have heard Council for both sides at great length & have come to the conclusion that this contention must be upheld. A contract can only be implied when it is obvious that the parties must have intended it. The rule is that the Ct. has no right to imply in a written contract any stipulation unless, on considering the terms of the contract in a reasonable manner, the implication necessarily arises, that the parties must have intended that the suggested stipulation should exist (Hamlyan Co. v. Wood & Co) (1891) 2 Q. B. 488: (60 L. J. Q B. 734).) It is not enough to say that it would be a reasonable thing to make such an implication. The principle was laid down by Bowen L. J. in The Moorcock, (1889) 14 P. D. 64 (60 L. T. 654) as follows:

"An implied warranty, or, as it is called a covenant in law, as distinct from an express contract or express warranty. really is, in all cases, founded on the presumed intention of the parties & upon reason. The implication which the law draws from what must obviously have been the intention of the parties, the law draws with the object of giving efficacy to the transaction & preventing such failure of consideration as cannot have been within the contemplation of either side."

The law, therefore, raises an implication from the presumed intention of the parties with the object of giving to the transaction such efficacy as both parties must have intended that at all events it should have. The stipulation that we are asked to imply in this case is whether the parties agreed to a reasonable price being paid. It is contended that no question of price was at all mooted on 5-4-1941 at the residence of D. W. 3 either it had already been settled, as the learned Munsif held, or because, having regard to the relationship of the parties, the parties tacitly understood that whatever price was considered reasonable would be paid as consideration money. It is, therefore, contended & pressed on us that the Ct. should import a term into the contract that a reasonable & fair price was intended to be paid, in order to give effect to the contract. As a corrollary to this proposition it is also urged that a contract which is otherwise good but omits to mention some term explicitly, does not become void or uncertain for that reason if the uncertainty can otherwise be made certain id certum est quod certum reddi potest. There may be difficulties in arriving at what is a reasonable price, but as was observed by the Judicial Committee in New Birthoom Coal Co., Ltd. v. Balaram, 7 I A. 107: (5 Cal. 932 P. C) these are difficulties which the Ct. is bound to overcome. It has uniformly been the law in England that where the act to be done is not purely personal & can be supplied without the intervention of the mind & act of the party a Ct. can intervene & substitute a reasonable & fair valuation into the contract. Two principles are well settled, viz., (1) where the parties have prescribed a mode in which the value is to be ascertained by reference to an umpire or nominated arbitrators, it is the valuation of the arbitrators, that will give efficacy to the contract & (2) where the agreement is to sell at a fair valuation the Ct. can adopt means adapted to the purpose. The Ct. never proposes to bind a person to any agreement except that which he has made, but sometimes holds the agreement which it executes & that which he has made to be substantially the same: Milnes v. Gery (1807) 14 Ves. 400: (33 E. R. 574). Where the term, however, appears to be non-essential as was the case in Gourlay v. The Duke of Somerset (1815) 19. Ves. 429: (34 E. R. 576) but stipulates that the conditions of the leases shall be settled " as shall be judged proper by one J. G.", it was held that the Agency of J. G. was not of the essence of the contract. Where the Ct. finds that the agreement is binding & concluded, it does not require foreign aid to carry the details into execution. Our attention was invited to Secretary of State v. Volkart Brothers, 50 Mad. 595: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Mad. 513) where the stipulation in the contract was that the settled lease might be renewed for a further term of 99 years "upon such conditions as may be judged reasonable". Venkatasubbarao J. observed in this case that it is an ordinary function of the Ct. to decide what is reasonable & that questions such as what is reasonable care & what is reasonable enquiry are questions which the Ct. is often invited to decide:

"I find no difficulty in regard to a contract which leaves the parties to fix a reasonable rent. If they will not agree upon a reasonable rent then the Ct. will intervene & fix it."

In Harichand v. Govind, 50 I. A. 25: (A. I. R. (10) 1923 P. C. 47), the contract provided for the preparation of a contract by a Vakil, & it was urged that there was no concluded contract until the Vakil had prepared it. The Judicial Committee held that the question whether the agreement is a completed bargain or is merely a provisional agreement depends upon the intention of the parties as deducible from the language used by the parties when the negotiations took a concrete shape, & concurred in the view of the H. C. that the stipulation to have a contract prepared by a Vakil was not a condition to which the bargain was subject, but that it was one of the terms of the contract. We have no doubt in our mind, & it is not disputed by the resp. that the Ex. 5 records the settlement of a dispute between pltf. 2, on the one hand & defts. 1 & 2 on the other with regard to the sale of plots Nos. 1051 & 1052 by which the pltf. withdrew his objection to the sale of plot

NO. 1052 to deft. 1 & agreed to purchase plot NO. 1051. The defts. having had the benefit of the contract in respect of plot NO. 1052 cannot be allowed to escape from the subsidiary contract to sell plot NO. 1051 on the ground of difficulty as to valuation. For a similar case see Dinham v. Bradford, (1877) 5 Ch. 519.

[6] Having regard to the antecedent negotiations the final draft prepared by D. W. 3 the relationship between the parties & the subsequent conduct of deft 2 in closing the bargain with deft. 1 six weeks after the contract no doubt is left in my mind that the intention of the parties was that plot NO. 1051 should be sold to pltf. 2, either at a price already settled according to the pltf. or at a price to be settled by the parties, as is now suggested by the deft. at a future date. If the parties have not been able to come to a settlement with regard to the price, the Ct. is not helpless & is bound to fix a price. This, in our opinion, is only a subsidiary matter & does not affect the enforceability of the contract to sell. Even in a case where there is no intention to make a complete contract at the time of making it, the Ct. will enforce it if the circumstances so justify—See Thomas v. Derring, (1937) 1 Keen 729: (6 L. J. (N. S.) Ch. 25). The Ct. is bound to carry into effect a contract framed in general terms where the law will supply the details. If such an inference that the parties must have intended the stipulation in question is legitimate & the Ct. is necessarily driven to that conclusion, it must be implied in the contract—See Fry on Specific Performance, 6th Edn., para. 378:

"The material term may well be supplied by construction or inference where the circumstances justify it. If the price is not legitimately ascertainable, the contract is obviously incapable of enforcement."

The question, therefore, is whether such is the case here. I am considerably assisted in coming to a conclusion in this case by the decision of the Ct. of Appeal in Folley v. Classiqus Coaches Ltd., (1934) 2 K. B 1: (103 L. J. K. B. 550). In this case the pltf. sold a piece of land to the deft. who, in turn, agreed to purchase from the pltf. all the petrol required by him for running his business "at a price to be agreed between the parties in writing & from time to time." It was held by the Ct. of Appeal, distinguishing an earlier decision of the House of Lords in May & Butcher v. The King, (1934) 2 K. B. 17n: (103 L. J. K. B. 556n) & following Hillas & Co. v. Arcos, Ltd, a later decision of the House of Lords reported in (1932) 147 L. T. 503, that a term must be implied in the agreement that the petrol supplied by the pltf. should be of reasonable quality & sold at a reasonable price. Lord Hewart L. C. J., who delivered the judgment in the trial Ct. held that as the parties intended to make a binding contract & thought that they had done so, that was a circumstance which, according to the judgment in Hillas & Co. v. Arcos Ltd., (1932-147 L. T. 503) ought to be taken into consideration in deciding whether there is a concluded contract or not. If nothing had been said or if the parties had failed to agree on the price of the petrol, the law would imply that a reasonable price should be paid. In Hillas & Co. v. Arcos Ltd., (1932-147 L. T. 503) the House of Lords held that if the parties believed that they had a contract, the Ct. would imply a term in the contract that a reasonable price shall be paid. The old maxim that the document should, if possible, be so interpreted as to operate rather than be inefficient—ut res magis valeat quam pereat—should apply. In Ex. 5 no price was fixed for either of the plots agreed to be sold by deft. 2. Nonetheless the parties had no doubt as to what they were bargaining for & intended that it should be a good & binding contract. My construction of the document, therefore, is that they stipulated for a fair & reasonable price. Having regard to the sum of Rs. 500 actually paid by deft. 1, six weeks after the contract for the purchase of the suit plot & the price paid by him for the adjoining plot, I am satisfied that Rs. 500 represents the true value of the plot in dispute. The applts. are, therefore, entitled to succeed & the judgment under appeal should be reversed.

[7] Another contention that was raised by the resps. is that the contract is void for uncertainty & is incapable of specific performance as the permission of the Khasmahal authorities sanctioning transfer has not been obtained. Reliance was placed by Mr. H. Mohapatra counsel for the resps. on the expression in Ex. 5 "for which separate appln. for permission shall be presented in due course" & it was argued that this was a condition precedent to the contract coming into force. The language used does not warrant this inference, viz., that the contract was of the class known as contingent contracts which come into force only on the happening of a certain event. It was suggested that the failure to obtain sanction would invalidate the alienation as the lease under which deft. holds lands from the Khasmahal prohibits an alienation without such prior sanction. Our attention was drawn to the form of the lease printed in the Khasmahal Manual. The provisions of this lease lay down that no alienation of Khasmahal shall be made except with the sanction of the district authorities & that any alienation is made the District Collector has the option to terminate the lease & take possession of the land or levy a penalty. On a plain reading of the provisions of the lease deed we are satisfied that there is no legal bar to the alienation so as to render an alienation void ab initio. It is admitted that the Collector has not taken any steps to eject deft. 1 although eight years have expired. The alienation is, therefore, valid until terminated by the Collector. This contention is accordingly overruled.

[8] In the result this appeal succeeds, the judgment of the learned Dist. J. is set aside & that of the Munsif restored. The applts. will have their costs throughout. Period for execution is three months from to-day as proposed by my learned brother.

[9] Das J.—I agree with my learned brother that the appeal should be allowed & that the decree of the Munsif should be restored. The learned Dist. J. disagreeing with the Munsif has found as a fact that there was no completed contract between the parties. The only reason for his so holding is that in his view the price was not fixed nor the time when the Kabala was to be executed. The question before us is that accepting his view on the facts, namely, that the price had not been fixed & the time for execution of the Katala had not been specified, does it follow on the evidence which he has accepted, that there is no completed contract. The attention of the learned Judge has not been drawn to the principle that there can be a binding contract without fixation of the price. A contract may fix the manner in which the price is to be determined or it may stipulate for a fair price being fixed & it is nevertheless binding, though the price is not specifically ascertained in the contract itself. (See Fry on Specific Performance, p. 165, 6th Edn.) Of course it is not within the province of a Ct. to make a contract for the parties. If the parties have no consensus ad idem with reference to any essential term of the contract, then there is no binding contract at all. But if the parties, having agreed that there should be a binding engagement between them for sale & purchase, which is definite in every other respect relegate the question of price to a secondary position & if they agree to this extent, namely, that the sale shall be at a reasonable price, such a contract is valid & binding since the reasonableness of the price is one that can be determined by the Ct. if the parties themselves do not ultimately agree about it. Under S 29, Contract Act, it is only agreements the meaning of which is not certain or is not capable of being made certain that are void. A contract to sell at a reasonable price is one that can be made certain within the meaning of this section, that is by fixation of the price by the Ct. on the standard of reasonableness in case the parties do not ultimately agree. This principle has been laid down by the House of Lords in Hillas & Co., v. Arcos, Ltd. (1932) 147 L. T. 503 followed in Folley v. Classique Coaches Ltd., (1934)-2 K. B. 1 : (103 L. J. K. B. 550). Also vide (1941) A. C. 251. This last case shows where the line is to be drawn. As observed by Lord Wright at p. 272 of (1941) A. C. 251 :

> "The Ct. could not indeed make a contract for the parties or go outside the words they had used, except in so far as there were appropriate implications of law, as for instance, the implications of what was just & reasonable, where the contractual intention was clear, but the contract was silent in some detail which the Ct. could thus fill in."

It is also well-settled that such a binding contract for sale at a fair price is capable of specific performance. (See Secy. of State v. Volkart Bros, 50 Mad. 595 : (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Mad. 519).) Similar considerations apply to the non-fixing of the time of performance.

[10] The question, therefore, in this case is whether on the evidence as accepted by the lower appellate Ct., a reasonable inference can be drawn as a fact that the parties agreed finally between themselves that there should be a sale & that, at a reasonable price or at least whether such a term "for sale at a reasonable price" can be implied as a matter of law. For this purpose it is enough to notice the following undisputed facts :

[11] On the appln. filed by deft. 2 on 20-1-1941 Ex. II, before the Khasmahal Officer for permission to sell the plot No. 1052, pltf. 1 & deft. 1 had both filed objection petns. Exs. II & VI. Thereafter deft. 2 filed a petn., Ex. IV as an amendment to Ex. II whereunder he intimated his willingness to sell the land to deft. 1. Subsequent to it on 17-3-1941, deft. 2 filed another petn., Ex. III in supersession of his previous applns. Exs. II & IV, whereby he requested the Khasmahal Officer for permission to sell plot No. 1052 to pltf. 2 for a consideration of Rs. 400. This was the last petn. of the vendor, deft. 2 pending on the date of Ex. V. There were thus two competitors for the plot No. 1052 belonging to deft. 2, namely, deft. 1 & pltf. 2 & the latest preference indicated by the vendor' deft. 2 was in favour of pltf. 2. Then a settlement was brought about. D. W. 3, the father-in-law of deft. 2 who is a lawyer & whose evidence has been totally accepted by the learned appellate Judge says as follows in his evidence:

> "Ex. V was written in accordance with the terms of my decision which was made in the presence of Raikrishna Babu (D-2), Rajkishore (P 1), Bonu Babu (D-1). None else was present. The parties tacitly agreed to terms. This decision was made between 7 & 8 P. M. on 5-4-1942. The fixing of consideration was then not deemed to be necessary."

Ex. V itself states as follows :

> "The petnr. is the owner in possession of plot Nos. 1051, 1052 in Mouza Ramgarh Samil Hasnabad Jamabandi No. 97."

[12] On the petnr's appln. for permission to transfer the property to the objectors, namely, Dr. Banbehari Patnaik & S. N. Mohanty, putting their objections, have alternatively pressed their claims. Both of them happen to be the petnr's friend. Under the circumstances the petnr. has settled in their presence to the effect that Dr. Banbehari Patnaik will purchase the disputed plot (No. 1052) which is contiguous to his land. The objector S. N. Mohanty will purchase the other plot adjacent to the disputed plot on its south belonging to the petnr. & his brothers, "for which a separate appln. for permission will be presented in due course."

[13] This is obviously a tripartite arrangement under which out of the two plots belonging to deft. 2, plot No. 1052 was to be purchased by deft. 1, & pltf. 2 was to give up his claim to it & purchase plot No. 1051. It is as a result of this arrangement (vide the order of the Khasmahal Officer dated 6-4-1941, marked as Ex. 1) that the permission for sale in favour of deft. 1 was granted. Deft. 1 who has had the advantage of this compromise cannot now be heard to say that there was no binding contract for sale of plot No. 1052 to pltf-2. Even otherwise, the intention of the parties is quite clear that there was a binding contract for the sale of plot No. 1051 as a result of which pltf.2 did not any further pursue his objection to the sale of plot No. 1052 in favour of deft.1. It is obvious that the parties intended that the tripartite arrangement would be binding between themselves notwithstanding that the price was not settled for sale of plot No. 1051. In the circumstances it is proper to infer as a fact that the parties agreed that the sale should be for a reasonable price; or at any rate, the law will imply such a term in order to give effect to the true intention of the parties that there should be a binding contract for the sale. It has been urged that the evidence of D.W. 3 itself shows that on 5-4-41 there was absolutely no talk about the consideration. But this does not negative the implication that the parties have agreed that the sale should be for a fair price. Unless it positively appears that the parties deliberately left the question of price for further agreement between themselves & contemplated that only on such agreement being reached the contract was to be treated as binding, there is nothing in law to prevent a Ct. implying a term that the sale must be for a reasonable price in order to give effect to the main intention of the parties which it finds, namely, that there is to be a binding arrangement between them for sale of the specified item of land. It is just in such situations that the principle in Hillas & Co. v. Arcos, Ltd. (1932) 147 L. T. P. 503 applies, viz. that where the contractual intention is clear the Ct. will fill details by appropriate implication to give effect to the intention. As pointed out by my learned brother there is no dispute in this case that the sum of Rs. 500 is a reasonable price. It is also clear that the sale to deft. was before the expiry of any reasonable time. It must, therefore, be held that there is a binding contract between the parties to sell the plot for Rs. 500 & that the same can be specifically enforced.

[14] My learned brother has reached the same conclusion. In this view of the facts & the evidence, there was an agreement about the quantum of the price also between the parties by the date of Ex. V & the conclusion of the learned appellate Judge negativing this & differing from that of the trial Ct. was unwarranted. I do not, however, feel myself free to disregard the estimate of the evidence on this matter, which the learned appellate Judge has found, sitting as we do in second appeal. I would also like to reserve my views as to the limitation under which the first appellate Ct. can disregard the estimate of the evidence found by the trial Ct, while I agree that considerable weight is to be attached to the view of the trial Ct. on the evidence.

[15] The further question that has been urged by the resp. & the point on which the learned Dist. J. also has negatived the pltf's. claim is that inasmuch as Ex. V shows that the permission of the Khasmahal Officer is to be obtained before the sale-deed is to be executed, the contract is a contingent one & that, therefore, there can be no specific performance. I agree with my learned brother that on a construction of Ex. V, the contract cannot be treated as a contingent one. The contract undoubtedly contemplates an appln. to be made to the Khasmahal Officer but the obligation under the contract is not made dependant on the obtaining of the permission & it rather assumes that the permission is a matter of course. It may be that if the Khasmahal Officer does not ultimately grant the permission the sale may become infructuous. But that is a matter on which if the pltfs. are prepared to take the risk neither the first nor the second deft. can have any reason to demur. Deft. himself admittedly had taken the sale-deed without obtaining the permission of the Khasmahal Officer & he cannot complain if the pltfs. are equally prepared to take the chance.

[16] It has been urged that the property itself is a lease hold from the Khasmahal authorities in favour of deft. 2 & that under terms of such lease the lease-hold is not transferable & that therefore the Court will not direct the execution of the sale-deed which is invalid in law & conveys no title. This argument would be sound if it is correct to say that on transfer the vendee gets no kind of interest or title. This, however, does not appear to be the position. The particular lease under which the suit property has been held by deft. 2 has not been exhibited & is not on record. But the form for the lease of the town Khasmahal property (the suit property is a piece of building site in Cuttack town) is given in Appen. "A" to the Bihar & Orissa Govt. Estates Manual which states as follows:

"No. 2. Except with the previous sanction of the Collector in writing & on payment of a fee, the lessee shall not transfer, assign, subjet or part with the possession of the said demised land or premises or any part thereof.

No. 10. On breach of any of the conditions aforesaid, the Collector may re-enter upon the said demised premises & may determine the lease.

No. 13. In the event of any breach or infringement of the conditions aforesaid the lessee shall be liable to a fine etc."

[17] It is clear from the above terms taken together that while no doubt the lease cannot be transferred without the permission of the Collector, the lease is not ipso facto determined by the transfer without permission. The transfer only renders the lease liable to forfeiture & the lease is determined only by the exercise of the power to re-enter. It, therefore, follows that even after the transfer & until the re-entery is made there is still a subsisting though defeasible interest in the leasehold. There is no reason why that defeasible interest cannot be the subject-matter of a sale. I can, therefore, see no objection to the decree for specific performance being granted in this case on the ground that the leasehold is not transferable without the permission of the Khasmahal authorities. Of course the actual sale deed executed by deft. 2 either in favour of deft. 1 or in favour of pltf. 2 cannot by itself fetter the discretion of the Khasmahal authorities though it will undoubtedly form a legitimate circumstance for their consideration.

[18] It, therefore, follows that the appeal must be allowed with costs throughout. The decree for specific performance to be passed afresh by this Ct. on the lines of the decree of the trial Ct. will provide for a period of three months from the date of the decree for the execution of the sale-deed.

 (a) Penal Code (1860), S. 161 — Bribe giver whether accomplice—Evidence Act (1872), Ss 114, 133.

The very fundamental distinction that goes to the root of the matter is that an accomplice is one who was a participant of the second degree or abettor in the matter of commission of the crime & did not extend any aid to the prosecution for its discovery till after its commission. In the case of a bribe giver, he is an accomplice only when he gives it with the intention of gaining some undue official favour, but not one who gives it in order to aid the detection of a crime. He has not the necessary mens rea. [Para 12]

 (b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 114 — Accomplice & spy witness — Corroboration — Evidence Act (1872), S. 133.

The evidence of a spy does not stand in need of corroboration either as a principle of law or as a fundamental rule of practice necessary for safe administration of justice. It is always for the Judge of fact in each particular case to decide whether it is safe to rely & act upon a decoy witness. Each case depends upon its own merits. This much has to be borne in mind, that he has entered into a design with the police to entrap the prisoner & as such his partiality for the prosecution is a factor which can hardly be ignored. The character, position in life & social standing of the witness would go a great way in helping the Judge to appreciate his evidence. [Para 14]

G. B. Mohanty for A. G.—for the King; P. C. Chatterji—for Resp.

Ray C. J.—This is an appeal by the State against an order of acquittal in a bribery case. The resp., S. N. Singh Ray, the accused, was the Station Master of Meramundeli Rly. Station (B. N. Rly.) on 2-2-1947, the date of occurrence. The informant, P. W. 3 (Waiz Mohammad) is an agent of Khan Sahib Muhammad Khan, a merchant dealing in timbers & Kendu leaves with headquarters at Sambalpur. The agent had his headquarters at Angul. P. W. 4, Luxmidhar Sahu, is another agent of Khan Sahib, stationed at Meramundeli Rly. Station, who owes subordination to Waiz Mohammad. The latter supplies money to the former for loading & unloading expenses of the goods. Luxmidhar keeps accounts separately relating to transactions in timber Ex. 10, & transactions relating to Kendu leaves, Ex. 10 (1). It is said by both of them that the accused Station Master was in the habit of demanding & receiving bribe @ Rs. 20 for indent & supply of one rly. wagon for consignment of the aforesaid goods.

[2] On 28-1-1947, P. W. 3 filed a petn. of complaint before the Police Inspector of Delhi Special Police Establishment Branch (Govt. of India), Orissa, Sri A. N. Nayak (P. W. 1), complaining against the conduct of the Station Master & informing that he had been asked to pay Rs. 100 on 30-1-1947, being the amount of Rs. 80 towards his arrear dues for having supplied wagons on four previous occasions & Rs. 20, the amount to be paid for the supply of a wagon on that date. The Inspector took up investigation & requisitioned the presence of the Mag., Sri R. Sarangi, with him at Meramundeli Station at the material time. After due consultations between the Inspector & P W. 3, it was settled that the bribe amount of Rs. 100 should be paid in ten ten-rupee G. C. notes of which the denominations were noted by the Inspector & later by the Mag. before they were handed over to the Station Master. The Inspector & the Mag. lay in ambush at a little distance from the Station Master's Office on the morning hours of 2-2-1947 near about the appointed time for payment. P. Ws. 3 & 4, it is said, went into the Station Master's office & handed over the notes. On their coming out & signalling to the Inspector & the Mag. they immediately rushed into the Station Master's room & on the Inspectors demand, the Station Master produced ten ten-rupee notes from the left pocket of his trouser, being the notes delivered to him by the prosecution witness 3. On comparison, the notes were found to bear the same denominations as had been taken note of by the Inspector & the Mag. Due formalities of preparing the seizure list were gone through & the Station Master was charge-sheeted.

[3] He was tried by the Addl. Dist. Mag. at Cuttack, who, disbelieved the Station Master's defence which was to the effect that the ten ten-rupee notes had been delivered to him by P. W. 3 as he wanted to have one hundred-rupee note in exchange, but left the Station Master's office without waiting for the delivery of the hundred-rupee note. It may be noted here that the Station Master, at first, produced at the spot a hundred-rupee note from the office iron chest on Inspector's demand for the sum received from P. W. 3. I shall deal with the significance of this conduct of his presently.

[4] The prosecution, in support of the charge, examined, besides the Inspector & the Mag. 4 witnesses testifying to the occurrence of "payment by P. W. 3 & receipt by the resp. of the amount as bribe". The learned Mag., in a well-considered judgment has found that the proof, adduced by the prosecution, except raising a grave suspicion against the Station Master, is hardly sufficient to bring the charge home to him. He has, therefore, given him the benefit of doubt. The task before us is whether there are materials enough on record which would enable us to come to a different finding. I would profitably quote from the learned Mag.'s judgment a passage embodying his finding, namely,

"There is no other evidence on the side of the prosecution to show what was the conversation between Waiz Mohammad the Station Master when the former passed the ten ten-rupee notes to the latter. Money may be passed from one hand to another on various pretexts. The prosecution evidence throws a good deal of doubt on the guilt of the accused & does not preclude every reasonable possibilities of his innocence. I give the benefit of doubt to the Station Master accused & acquit him under S. 258, Cr. P. C."

[5] As against this, it has been seriously contended by the learned counsel appearing for the State that the learned Mag. having discarded, in clearest possible terms, the story of exchange set up by the accused & the latter having given no other expln. of his possession of the specified ten ten-rupee notes, the inference of guilt is inevitable. It has, further, been argued that the evidence of P. Ws. 3 & 4, not being evidence of accomplices, does not require any corroboration. It is thus argued that the Mag.'s finding of benefit of doubt for the accused is wrong & should be set aside.

[6] I am not at one with the learned Mag. relating to the discarding of the defence theory of exchange. The learned Mag.'s view is based upon the Station Master's conduct in response to the Inspector demand of the money received from P. W. 3. He says that the Station Master wanted to evade detection by first producing the 100-rupee note from the iron chest & not asserting immediately the story of exchange & citing witnesses in support thereof. This, in my view, may or may not be sufficient to rule out the story of exchange from the area of bare possibility. The Station Master was confronted with the presence of an Inspector of Police & a Mag. who immediately on their appearance had disclosed their identities. He must have certainly been reminded of the conduct of the prosecution witnesses in rushing out of the office room without taking the 100-rupee note & the previous hostile relationship that existed between him & the P. W. 3. Placed in this position, he would as a matter of right, take recourse to such subterfuge as may strike him. It is a question of one's grit & wit.

[7] The rest of the prosecution case depends upon the credibility of the prosecution witnesses. Leaving aside those whose evidence bear on the recovery of the specified G. C. notes from the Station Master, the witnesses on the point are P. Ws. 3, 4, 5, 6. Besides, P. Ws. 3 & 4, the other witnesses do not speak about what conversation took place between P. W. 3 & the Station Master. Their evidence, therefore, does not go farther than proving the admitted fact that ten ten-rupee notes had been made over to the Station Master. The mere handing over the notes will not adequately prove that they were paid as bribe. Prosecution either fails or succeeds according as it is proved that the notes were paid as bribe or not. On this point, there is no other evidence except that of P. Ws. 3 & 4. Both these witnesses are hostile on account of the enmity that exists between their master & the Station Master. On the point of hostility, I would do no more than to quote from the learned Mag's. judgment, a passage set out hereinbelow:

"As to the payment of ten ten-rupee notes by Waiz Muhammad to the Station Master (accused) on 2-2-47 it will be seen from letter dated 20-9-47 (Ex. C) that Khan Sahib Muhammad Khan made a complaint to the Rly. authorities against the Station Master, Meramundeli for not supplying him wagons according to his indent. The enquiry report dated 30-12-46 (Ex. D) of the Traffic Inspector, Khurda Road, will show that the enquiring officer found the complaint of Khan Sahib unwarranted & observed that the real difficulties in getting supply of wagons were being misrepresented to Khan Sahib by his servants. It is in the evidence of D. W. 6 Shadeb Prasad Panda that sometime before the occurrence the accused Station Master had a quarrel with P. W. 8 Waiz Muhammad for stocking timbers near Meramundeli Rly. Station in such a way as to obstruct motor traffic. From these incidents occurring within a month or two prior to the date of entraping the Station Master (accused) one had to accept with caution the versions of the Khan Sahib's agent (P. Ws. 3 & 4) against the Station Master."

[8] The further defect from which the prosecution suffers is the total absence of any reliable evidence in support of P. W 3's assertion that the Station Master is in the habit of demanding & his master is in the habit of paying Rs. 20 on each & every occasion of delivery of on Railway Receipt for a wagon load of goods. How the two agents (P. Ws. 3 & 4) shift the responsibility on this matter from one another has been dealt with carefully by the learned Mag. in his judgment. The accounts produced do not lend an iota of support to this story.

[9] Besides, there are certain improbabilities attached to the prosecution story. After Khan Sahib's complaint against the Station Master & enquiry that followed it, it would be too daring on the part of the Station Master to demand money from his agent. Secondly, even if the Station Master was in the habit of demanding money, he should not ordinarily be expected to leave them in arrear so as to accumulate just in the manner one would do in supply of merchantable commodities. Lastly, according to P. W. 6, Ibrahim Mulla there were three or four persons in front of the office of the Station Master when this payment was made & it would be difficult to believe that the Station Master should receive a bribe so openly in broad day light.

[10] In the premises aforesaid, it is difficult for me to differ from the learned Addl. Dist. Mag. in his finding that "Every reasonable possibility of innocence has not been excluded & that he is entitled to an acquittal."

[11] As the learned counsel of both sides have addressed us at length on certain legal aspects & have cited authorities, in fairness to them, before concluding this judgment, I shall dispose of them briefly.

[12] It is contended by the applt's learned counsel that witnesses (P. Ws. 3 & 4) are not accomplices & their evidence does not require corroboration. The resp's counsel contends to the contrary & further urges that the evidence of one accomplice is not available as corroboration of another. He cites the decision of Mahadeo v. The King, A. I. R. (23) 1936 P. C. 242 : (37 Cr. L. J. 914). The point does not require any further elucidation. The only question that presents some nicety is whether, in the circumstances disclosed in the case, P. Ws. 3 & 4 are accomplices. The very fundamental distinction that goes to the root of the matter is that an accomplice is one who was a participant of the second degree or abettor in the matter of commission of the crime & did not extend any aid to the prosecution for its discovery till after its commission. In the case of a bribe giver, he is an accomplice only when he gives it with the intention of gaining some undue official favour, but not one who gives it in order to aid the detection of a crime. He has not the mens rea. It has been held in the case of Emperor v. Chatturbhuj Sahu, 38 Cal. 96 : (8 I. C. 119) :

"A person who makes himself an agent for the prosecution with the purpose of discovering & disclosing the commission of an offence, either before associating with wrongdoers or before the actual preparation of the offence, is not an accomplice but a spy, detective or decoy whose evidence does not require corroboration, though the weight to be attached to it depends on the character of each individual witness in each case. But a person who is associated with an offence with a criminal design, & extends no aid to the prosecution till after its commission is an accomplice requiring corroboration."

[13] Accordingly, P. Ws. 3 & 4 do not require corroboration as accomplice witnesses do. Such witnesses are known as spy or decoy-witnesses. There is a view supported by authority that:

"To establish a case of bribery against the accused for having accepted marked currency notes from a decoy witness employed by the police in furtherance of a trap against the accused, it is not sufficient to prove that marked notes passed from the decoy witness to the accused. It is of the utmost importance in cases of this kind that there should be independent corroboration of the statement of the decoy witness, that the money was received by the accused person for an illegal purpose."

(See Emperor v. Anwar Ali, A. I. R. (35) 1948 Lah. 27 : (48 Cr. L. J. 964).)

[14] I cannot, however, go so far as that. I should, however, lay down a golden mean. The evidence of a spy does not stand in need of corroboration either as a principle of law or as a fundamental rule of practice necessary for safe administration of justice. It is always for the Judge of fact in each particular case to decide whether it is safe to rely & act upon a decoy witness. Each case depends upon its own merits. This much has to be borne in mind, that he has entered into a design with the police to entrap the prisoner & as such his partiality for the prosecution is a factor which can hardly be ignored. The character, position in life & social standing of the witness would go a great way in helping the Judge to appreciate his evidence. Bearing these principles in mind & for reasons already stated, I cannot place reliance on the evidence of P. Ws. 3 & 4 in the absence of corroboration coming from the source of independent witnesses.

[15] In the result, the appeal fails & is dismissed.

[16] Narasimham J. — I agree that the appeal should be dismissed. The only witnesses to directly connect the resp. with the crime are P. Ws. 3 & 4. The unsatisfactory features in their evidence have been fully discussed by the learned lower Ct. & by my Lord the Chief Justice. In view of these unsatisfactory features it will be unsafe to act upon their evidence & the resp. is thus, in any case, entitled to the benefit of doubt. In this view of the case I do not think it necessary to say whether P. Ws. 3 & 4, on their own statements, are 'spies' or else 'accomplices' who after associating with the resp. for some time in the criminal design, subsequently for some reason or other turned against him & gave information to the authorities.

A. F. A. D. No. 172 of 1945, D/- 17-1-9149.

Tenancy Laws—Orissa Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1913), S. 225 — Mortgagee in possession under S. 225—Liability of—T.P. Act (1882), S. 76—Trusts Act (1881), Ss. 90 & 95.

A person depositing the arrears of rent under S. 225 becomes the mtgee. of the tenant by operation of law & is subject to the same liabilities as those of a mtgee. in possession as provided for in S. 76 (c), T. P. Act. Hence he is liable to pay rents not only as they accrue due & fall into arrears but also such as had already been due & in default of payment whereof the property is liable to be sold. [Paras 3 & 4]

Such a mtgee. holds the position of a quasi trustee as against the tenant under S. 90 read with S. 95 of the Trusts Act. [Paras 7 & 17]

A mtgee, in possession under S. 225 is liable to account on the footing of wilful default, that is, he is liable to account not only for the amounts actually received by him but also for the sums which but for his own default, he might have received. [Para 10]

Where a simple mtgee of a tenancy land who has entered into possession of the holding under S. 225 & who has allowed the rent to fall in arrears while in possession, purchases the holding himself at the rent sale, he cannot be allowed to reap the benefits of his own wrong & resist a suit for redemption by the tenant mtgor. on the ground that the equity of redemption has been lost by his purchase at the rent sale. [Paras 4, 11 & 17]

R. N. Sinha & S. N. Sengupta—for Applts.; P. C. Chatterji—for Resp.

Ray C. J.—This is a pltf's appeal in a suit for recovery of possession or in the alternative for redemption of the disputed properties which have been mortgaged as a simple mtge. on 13-9-1913. The disputed lands are 19.37 acres of which 15.44 are tenanted & the rest are Khasdakhali lands. During the subsistence of the mtge. the deft. came into possession of the disputed lands under the provisions of S. 225, Orissa Tenancy Act, since 27-11-1934. The present suit was instituted on 19.11-1943 with the prayer that the debt with interest at 12½ p.c. p.a. that accrued due under S. 225 & the mtge. dues under the simple mtge. had been discharged by the date of the institution of the suit & that the pltf. was entitled to recover the properties from the deft. free of previous simple mtge. as well as of the charge created under S. 225. The alternative relief of the pltf. was that in case the mtge. still existed & the mtge. money or any part of it was still due he may be allowed to redeem on payment of such amount as the Ct. deems fit & proper. Before the suit, however, while the deft. was in possession, there was default in payment of rent. The landlord sued for recovery as against the pltf. as recorded tenant. He obtained a decree & put the disputed properties to sale. The deft. mtgee. purchased them on 24 6 1937 for a sum of Rs. 129. The deft. resisted the suit on the ground that the pltf. had lost his equity of redemption, the same having been sold away at the rent decree execution sale.

[2] The points that arise for consideration are whether the deft. was a mtgee. within the meaning of S. 76, T. P. Act or, at any rate, what were his rights & liabilities as a mtgee. under S. 225, or, in other words, whether he had the liabilities of a quasi trustee within the meaning of S. 90 read with S. 95, Trust Act. Lastly, the question further arises whether his purchase will enure to the benefit of the mtgor. (pltf.) or the title acquired thereby can be retained by him, & besides whether he is liable to render accounts for the rents & profits that he might have received during the time of his possession.

[3] Both the Cts. below, relying upon a decision of the Patna H. C. reported in Fekua Mahto v. Lal Sahu, A.I.R. (26) 1939 Pat. 382 : (18 Pat. 133) had overruled the pltf's. case. The proposition on which they placed reliance as quoted in a passage quoted therein is to the effect that where the mtgee in possession of a tenancy is bound to pay rent & in default the holding is brought to sale by the landlord in execution of a rent decree & purchased by him & later comes into the hands of the mtgee. the mtgor. loses his right of redemption. Quite apart from other considerations, the mtgor. no doubt, will lose his right of redemption if, in such a contingency, the property is sold in execution of a rent decree & purchase either by a landlord, who is not a party to the mtge. or by any other person other than the mtgee. The mtgee's subsequent acquisition of the same property from the hands of the auction-purchaser, whosoever he may be, can hardly be connected with any of his liabilities or rights as a mtgee. except under certain circumstances. In the case cited, there was nothing to show that the mtgee. secured the property back from the landlord auction-purchaser by using the advantageous position that he was occupying in respect of the property as a mtgee. The decision, therefore, has no application to the facts of the present case in which the mtgee. is himself the auction-purchaser. Mr. Rao strenuously contends that not only is he not liable to pay rent during his occupation of the property which he got under S. 225, but also his purchase is free of the equity of redemption inasmuch as he does not hold the position of a mtgee. within the meaning of the Transfer of Property Act nor the position of a quasi trustee within the meaning of the Indian Trusts Act. A large number of authorities have been cited by the counsel for both sides. Before dealing with them, I should pay attention to S. 225, Orissa Tenancy Act. The section says that when any person having, in a tenure or holding advertised for sale, an interest which would be voidable upon the sale, pays into the Ct. the amount requisite to prevent the sale, that deposit 'shall be deemed' to be a debt bearing interest at 12 p. c. p. a. & secured by a mtge. of the tenure or holding to him. I lay emphasis upon the words "shall be deemed" which necessarily means "shall be deemed as if created by the parties in the manner provided by the law," though, in fact, it has not been so created. The word 'mortgage' occurring in the section has not been separately defined in the Orissa Tenancy Act so as to bear any meaning other than what the word, in its technical & legal connotations would mean. 'Mortgage' is defined in the T. P. Act & the rights & liabilities of the mtgees. & mtgors. are also defined. If Mr. Rao wants to contend that the relationship of the mtgor. & the mtgee. & the position of a mtge. as created or provided for by S. 225 of the Act bear any other meaning, he must have invited our attention to some such provisions either within the purview of this Act or any where else, nor has he been able to cite any authority to that effect. Sub-s. (c) provides that he shall be entitled to possession of the holding or tenure as mtgee. of the tenant that is carry with it the incidents of 'mtgee. in possession.' This, with all certainty, means that by the provisions of the Statute & by operation of law, he becomes a mtgee, of the tenant in the same sense & to the same extent as he would be if the relationship were created in the manner provided in the T. P. Act. It is also provided that he shall retain the possession of it as such (as mtgee.) until the debt with the interest due thereon has been discharged. The words "has been discharged" occurring as a condition determining the continuance of possession must have a connexion with it & the meaning conveyed is that the possession is co-relative to discharge of the debt. This leaves no doubt in my mind that there will arise two positions namely that with the profits & rents derived & derivable from the said property he should pay himself up & that he will continue in possession till the debts with interest thereon are completely wiped out. Of course, it will be open to the tenant to pay the debts earlier & recover the property. Mr. Rao wants us to accept that the incumbrancer making deposit & acquiring the status of a mtgee. shall be entitled to retain the property without the liability to account for the rents & profits received by him, without liability to pay the public charges due in respect thereof till when he is paid in cash by the defaulting tenant, the amount deposited plus the interest payable according to the terms of the section at 12½ p. c. p. a. which means that the defaulting tenant for the time being forfeits the property & even though the mtgee, recovers more than 100 times the deposit with interest thereon he would still hold it on. This sort of proposition appears to me to be monstrous. It throws to the wind any idea of equity & common sense which must be presumed to be in the minds of the Legislature in enacting the provision. He goes still further to say that if the landlord sues for the arrear of rent accruing due during the time of his possession & brings the property to sale & either purchases it himself or some stranger purchases it, the auction purchaser shall either not be entitled to get possession from him or, if at all, shall be entitled to get possession only after he pays him up or, to use his own language, redeems him. This he argues in the face of cl. (b) of sub s. (1) of the section which reads:

"his mtge. shall take priority of every other charge on the tenure or holding other than the charge for arrear of rent."

[4] If this sub-clause has not the meaning that the rents as they accrue, always become a first charge even prevailing over the deposits made, I do not know what else it means. Under the circumstances, the contention of Mr. Rao, if accepted, will land us not only in an anomalous position but also in grotesquely absued position. Section 225 must be read with the provisions applying to 'mortgages', defining various rights & liabilities as between mtgor. & m'gee under the T. P. Act. The section of the Act which is relevant is S. 76, T. P. Act which defines liabilities of mtgee. in possession. According to sub-s. (c) of this section he (mtgee in-possession) must, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, out of the income of the property, pay the Govt. revenue, all other charges of a public nature & all rents accrued due in respect thereof during such possession & any arrears of rent in default of payment of which the property may be similarly sold. This cl. (c) means that he is liable to pay rent not only as they accrued due & fell into arrears but also such as had already been due & in default of payment whereof the property is liable to be sold. In this view the deft had the liability to pay the arrears of rent as they accrued due. His default amounted to civil wrong. If he is allowed to keep the property to himself it will amount to allowing him to reap the benefits of his own wrong. If any doctrine of equity is well settled beyond any controversy, it is that no one shall be permitted to gain by his own wrong.

[5] There is another reason inherent in the language of the section itself which must lead unmistakably to the conclusion that the liability to pay rent accruing due during the possession of the mtgee. within the meaning of S. 225 must be his. Clause (c) of sub s. (1) of the section delimits the duration of his possession & provides that his retention of possession shall continue until the debt (the amount deposited to save the holding or the tenure from sale) with interest throughout has been discharged. Suppose, the said mtgee. was not liable to pay the rents as they accrued due from time to time during his occupation, but in order to protect his interest he paid all such rents which, as I have already said, constituted a charge even as against him according to cl. (b) of the sub section, but, in fact, the liability to pay such rent was in law with the recorded tenant, the Legislature must have said that he shall be entitled to retain possession until these rent charges, paid by him but not payable by him, had also been with due interest throughout, discharged. Besides, liability to pay public charges in respect of any immoveable property must, in the absence of any contract or covenant to the contrary, lie on the man in possession. This has been so laid down in the case of Abid Hussain Khan v. Kaniz Fatima, 46 ALL. 269 at p. 273: (A. I. R. (11) 1924 P. C. 102). This was a case which required investigation of the law as it stood in relation to mtgee's liability when he came into possession of the mortgaged property before the passing of the T. P. Act. Their Lordships said:

"In British India a mtgee, in possession of immoveable property under a mtge. made before the T. P. Act of 1882 came into force was under the ordinary law then in force bound to manage it as a person with ordinary prudence would manage it if it were his own, & unless there was an agreement to the contrary with the mtgor, he was bound to pay out of the income of the property the Govt. land revenue which might during his possession be assessed upon it & such charges of a public nature as might accrue due in respect of the property & be payable by the person in possession of the rents & profits, & was not entitled to charge such payments against his mtgor. in the accounts."

[6] What I understand the section to mean is "his right to retain possession until completely reimbursed of the debt with interest due throughout will entitle him to pay the public charges and to deduct the same from the rents & profits that accrued from the holding or tenure in his possession & to adjust the balance only against the debts & interest due to him. To me it appears that it is futile to contend that while such statutory or equitable mtgee. would continue in possession, the mtgor. namely, the tenant would remain liable to pay the rents.

[7] Apart from the section, the very position that the depositor of the amount is constituted by the section a mortgagee is entitled to hold (sic) makes him liable for such liabilities as any other mtgee. should be under the T. P. Act. The strongest possible argument against this view as urged from the Bar was that the mtge. contemplated in the section was not a mtge. constituted by a transanction inter vivos between the parties & as such the principles of the T. P. Act were inapplicable. The virtual position of a mtgee. though not actually so, has come up for consideration in several decisions in the P. C. & it has been held that though not a mtgee. under a contract yet he was liable as mtgee. at least on the principle which is applicable in regulating the relation between the principal & the managing agent. The cases are Papamma Rao v. Ramachandra Rozu, 19 Mad. 249 at p. 254 : (23 I. A. 32 P. C.) and Kamlapat Motilal v. Union Indian Sugar Mills Co. Ltd., A. I. R. (16) 1929 P. C. 256 : (119 I. C. 631). The latter case was followed by their Lordships of the Calcutta H. C. in the case of Shib Dass Dass v. Kali Kumar Roy, 30 Cal. 463 : (7 C. W. N. 532). That was a case in which the mtgee. purchased the right of redemption & that wrongfully & then got into possession. Their Lordships held though S. 76 did not strictly apply he was under liability of a mtgee. as under S. 76, T. P. Act. There can be no doubt that the mtgee. either contractual or statutory or equitable holds the position of a trustee as against the mtgor. (see S. 90, Trust Act). Section 95 of the said Act enumerates & defines the liabilities of a mtgee, qua trustee & his liabilities to pay the public charges & to protect the property in a state of prudent management has been clearly provided for. In the case of Kshetra Nath v. Durgapada, 52 I. C. 902 at pp. 905 & 906 : (A. I. R. (6) 1919 Cal. 309), a mtgee, by operation of law has been held to be a trustee under a resulting trust & it has been laid down that the liabilities provided for in S. 76, cl. (c), T. P. Act did attach to his position as such. Similar view has been taken in cases of Bombay & Madras H. Cs. of which references would be made to Kalappa v. Shivaya, 20 Bom 492 & Jayanti Lakskmaya v. Pedda Appadu. 7 Mad. 711. Relying upon the earliest P. C case on the point, the case of Nuzur Ally Khan v. Ojoodhyaram Khan, 10 M. I. A. 540 : (2 Sar 198 P. C.) it has been held that the mtgee. who wilfully let the revenue payable in respect of the estate fall into arrears & ultimately purchases the property himself, is estopped from saying that the equity of redemption did not subsist for the benefit of the mtgor. Under the circumstances, it is clear that the contention that the equity of redemption has been lost, having been acquired by the deft. is not maintainable.

[8] The case of Chandi Maher Mander v. Sitabi Bhagat, 21 P.L.T. 699, though not a case of purchase at auction sale but of acquisition by settlement from landlord by a mtgee. the same equitable view has been taken, namely, that the mtgee. cannot acquire the property & deprive the mtgor. of his rights by his own acts of default. The facts of that case were that the mtgee. committed default in payment of rent; the landlord took possession treating the holding as abandoned & later settled it with the mtgee ; that the holding was treated as abandoned by landlord was due to the default on the part of the mtgee in payment of rent as the mtgee's possession could not be considered to be a possession of the recorded tenant or one authorised by the landlord. The mtgee. thus utilised his possession in order to gain an advantage over the mtgor. with a view to acquire his right.

[9] The next question that has been discussed at the Bar & does directly arise out of the arguments joined by the parties is the liability of the deft. to account. That the liability is there is clear from the language of cl. (c) of sub-s. (1) of S. 225. Unless he accounts for the rents & profits, how else is it going to be established whether his debt with interest has been discharged or not. While urging that in taking the view, that we are taking, we are reading something into the language of s. 225, Mr. Rao, counsel for the resp. himself reads into the section's language which will favour his contention, but with no justification either in the rules of equity or in the rules of law. He virtually contends that he holds the possession as a matter of penalty or forfeiture of tenant's rights; that so long as he holds, he holds it for himself for his benefit without liability to account for the rents & profits & without the liability of public charges as they accrue due from time to time. In other words. he, the recorded tenant of land, goes on making payment of such charges & also continues to be liable to pay the deposited amount constituted the debt within the section & its interest but for the very charitable & beneficial act of making the deposit, he (the depositor) will enjoy the lands free from any liability whatsoever. Such a construction would amount to hold that once the tenant fails to pay the rent & somebody, in order to protect his own interest, pays it up, acquires the property to complete deprivation of the recorded tenant. This amounts to forfeiture & it is a fundamental canon of construction that such forfeiture should not be inferentially construed to have been intended nor is there any clear & explicit language warranting such a construction.

[10] Legal mtge. has been defined as a transfer of a legal estate or interest in land or in other property for the purpose of securing the repayment of a debt. But where the creditor obtains an equitable estate or interest in land or in other properties, the mtge, is called an equitable mtge. In the present case, the deposit made by the mtgee. is constituted a debt within the meaning of the section. In respect of that the mtgee. is the creditor & the tenant is the debtor & an equitable estate in the holding is created by statute in his favour. Under the circumstances. this equitable estate must carry with it all the equitable rights & incidents thereof. It has been ever stated to be the well. settled principle of law & equity, that a mtgee in possession is liable to account on the footing of wilful default. that is, he will account not only for the amounts actually received by him but also for the sums which but for his own default, he might have received (Snell's Principles of Equity, 1930 Edn., p. 305). Mr. Sengupta, appearing for the applt. has invited our attention to a decision reported in Nilkant v. Jaenoddeen, 7 W. R. 30.

[11] In consideration of what I have said above, I hold that (the contention that?) the equity of redemption has been lost by the auction sale in which the deft. purchased the property is not maintainable, & that the deft. is liable to account for the rents & profits in the same manner as indicated in the passage above based on Snell on Equity. If on rendition of accounts of the rents & profits it is found that after the disbursement of the debt with interest under S. 225 & the mtge. money under the simple mtge, any amount is still due in the hands of the deft he will have to pay the same to the pltf. with interest at 12 P.C.P.A. till the date of realisation. In case the rent & profits are insufficient to liquidate the aforesaid dues, the pltf. will have to pay the same before he is allowed to redeem Accordingly, a decree shall be prepared by the Ct. below in the preliminary form & after settlement of accounts the decree shall be made final in terms according as there are sums due from the deft. or from the pltf.

[13] Panigrahi J.—I have arrived at the same conclusion but would like to give my reasons for the same. Nothing can be simpler than the facts giving rise to this litigation. Nothing is more far reaching than the discussion of the fundamental legal principles which it has given rise to. The admitted facts are that the deft. entered into possession of the properties over which he held a simple mtge on payment of the arrear rent due on the land when the property was about to be sold at Ct. auction at the instance of the landlord. While in possession he allowed the rent to fall into arrears & the property was again put up to sale & actually sold on 26-4-37 the deft. himself being the purchaser. The pltf. 1 who was the tenant mtgor. having sold the equity of redemption to pltf. 2 the pltfs.-applts. now sue seeking redemption of the mtge. & recovery of possession of the property.

[14] The decision of this appeal rests upon the correct interpretation of the language used in S. 225, Orissa Tenancy Act, which enables a person having an interest in a holding to deposit the arrear rent due in respect thereof & prevent the sale. The section declares in Cl. (1) (a) of S 225, that the amounts so paid shall be deemed to be a debt & secured by a mtge. of the holding. Sub-section (c) provides that the person so paying shall be entitled to possession of the holding as mtgee. of the tenant & to retain possession of it as such until the debt has been discharged. The applt's contention both in the Cts. below & in this Ct. is that the deft. having entered into possession while the relationship between him & the pltf. was that of a mtgor. & mtgee. "became a mtgee. in possession" within the meaning of S. 76, T. P. Act & made himself liable to pay the rents due on the holding & maintain accounts under sub-ss. (c) & (g) of S. 76. The Cts. below declined to give effect to this contention on the ground that the T. P. Act contemplates transfers by acts of parties & the provisions of Ss. 72 & 76 must be strictly limited to mtges. created by act of parties. On behalf of the resp. it has been contended that the expression 'mtgee. in possession' must be interpreted to mean that under the contract of mtge. the mtgee. should be entitled to enter into possession & cannot be extended to a case like the present one where the deft no doubt, is a mtgee. but gets into possession not as qua mtgee. but under a specific provision of the Tenancy Act. This argument does not appeal to me for the reason that the expression "mtgee. in possession" applies to a mtgee who takes over the control & management of the property from the mtgor. whether by agreement or otherwise. The case of a mtgee. who merely collects rents & profits of the mortgaged premises, either under a lease or some other arrangement may stand on a different footing, but where the mtgor. is deprived of the entire control, direction & management of the mortgaged properties, the person having such dominion is & must be regarded to be in possession of the estate. My second reason is that the T. P. Act is not exhaustive of all kinds of transfers of property nor of all kinds of charges that may be created over immoveable property. Even before the T. P. Act was passed, the principles embodied in the Act were applied in this country to such transactions on the principle of equity, justice & good conscience. I am, therefore, of opinion that whether the T. P. Act in terms applies to this transaction or not, the liability to account of a person in possession of another's property is beyond question. The case in point which justifies this conclusion is the one reported in Papamma Rao v. Ramachandra Razu, 19 Mad. 249: (23 I. A. 32 P. C.) where under an invalid decree a simple mtgee. entered into possession of a mortgaged property. In a suit for redemption the Judicial Committee of the P. C. laid down that the decree for possession in favour of the mtgee. did not preclude redemption, the possession of the decree-holder having only been as mtgee. & having involved liability to account to the mtgor. To borrow the language of the Judicial Committee "the mtgee. thereupon became mtgee. in possession & as such he must submit to be redeemed". Similar cases, where the mtgee. gets into possession otherwise than under the terms of the contract, are to be found reported in Shib Dass v. Kali Kumar Roy, 30 Cal. 463: (7 C. W. N 532) & Nilkant v. Jaenoddeen, 7 W. R. 30. The latest case cited on the point is reported in Kamalpat Moti Lal v. Union Indian Sugar Mills Co. Ltd, A. I. R. (16) 1929 P. C. 256 (119 O. C. 631). In this case the creditor was put in possession of certain properties which had been proposed to be mortgaged to him. The proposed mtge. having fallen through, the question arose as to what the status of the creditor in possession was. Their Lordships of the P. C. in applying S. 76, T. P. Act held

"that no further duty of care could be imposed upon the mtgees. than arises out of the statutory duties imposed upon mtgees. in possession under S. 76, T. P. Act on the one hand, or of the ordinary legal duties of managing agents on the other. They cannot see that any advantage is gained by seeking expressly to define these."

The last observation is significant because wehther the person in possession is to be regarded as mtgee. in possession or merely as a managing agent, his liability to account for the rent & profits received or which in the natural course of events should have been received by him as a prudent manager is beyond question. On behalf of the resp. Mr. Rao has drawn our attention to the case reported in Kishendutt Ram v. Mumtaz Ali Khan, 6 I. A. 145: (5 Cal. 198 P. C.); Sorabjee v. Dwarkadas Ranchhoddas, 59 I. A. 365: (A. I. R. (19) 1932 P. C. 199); Gobindarajam Pillai v. Alagapa Chettiar, I. L. R. (1943) Mad. 418: (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Mad. 202); Kameshwar Singh v. Jhalak Singh, A. I. R (36) 1949 Pat. 16: (29 P. L. T. 323). In the earliest P. C. case a usufructuary mtgee. purchased a Birt tenure while the mtge. was in force & the Board held that it amounted to an acquisition & enured for the benefit of the mtgor. following the rule of law laid down in some English cases. Their Lordships observed:

"It is difficult to see why, as in the case of a renewable lease, the same equity should not attach to the mtgee., particularly if by reason of his position as mtgee. in possession he has had peculiar facilities for obtaining the surrenders."

In the case reported in Sorabjee v. Dwarkadas Ranchhoddas, 59 I. A. 366 : (A. I. R. (19) 1932 P. C. 199), the Board again pointed out that S. 63, T. P. Act, embodied the same principle as indicated in s. 90, Trusts Act. A reference was made to the earlier case of the Board, which I have referred to just now. It was pointed out that the equitable principle applied by their Lordships in that case to acquisition by a mtgee. has now been embodied by S. 90, Trusts Act, 1882, in a wider rule dealing with acquisition by tenants for life, co-owners, mtgees & other qualified owners. It was argued before the Board that S. 63, T. P. Act, goes further than S. 90, Trusts Act, & that the mtgor, would be entitled to treat subordinate tenures acquired by the mtgee. for his own benefit as accessions to the mortgaged property without regard to the question whether the mtgee had special advantage by reason of his position as mtgee. in acquiring them. In the Madras Case, it was pointed out that S. 90, Trusts Act, affords protection against the mortgaged properties being sold at a disadvantage & prevents certain persons from taking advantage of their position to secure a benefit to themselves in derogation of the rights of those others. In this particular case, it was held that there was no such duty cast upon the mtgee. to pay the revenue & so it was held, on the facts, that he was not a party to any scheme to bring about a default in payment; accordingly, his purchase was upheld. In the latest decision of the Patna H. C, reported in Kameshwar Singh v. Jhalak Singh, A. I. R. (36) 1949 Pat. 16 : (29 P. L. T. 323), the same principle was applied. It was argued that the tenancy which is transferable by custom or statute & is put up for sale could be purchased by a stranger. There is no reason why a mtgee. should at all be prevented as being in a worse position so as to disentitle him from purchasing the property. It was also argued that in such circumstances, he could not be said to have taken an advantage & derived benefit to himself to the disadvantage of the mtgor. Bennett J. in repelling this contention, held that the rule prohibiting a purchase by a person who holds an advantageous position over the property applies to a mtgee as well. None of these cases in my opinion helps the resp.

[15] The provision embodied in S. 225 was borrowed from S. 177 (1), Bengal Tenancy Act, & was incorporated to provide a special measure of protection to a mtgee. of an occupancy holding as most of them were non-transferable. Under the general law, a person who makes payment for another is entitled to a lien or a charge on the property unless of course he pays voluntarily. This is founded on the well known doctrine of salvage lien & there was a controversy in the Calcutta H. C. as to whether a lien was a personal remedy or could be enforced against a property that is saved from sale. Similar provision is to be found in Madras Revenue Recovery Act & the Bengal Revenue Sale Act, 1859 & the point came to a head in what is known as the famous case of Kinu Ram v. Kamaruddin, 14 Cal. 809 (F. B), where the majority constituting the Bench declined to give effect to a charge binding on the property & declared that the person who made the payment was entitled only to a personal remedy against the person for whom the payment was made. It is in view of this that the Legislature appears to have incorporated this provision which guarantees repayment of the money deposited by a person having an interest in the said holding such as a mtge. by declaring the amount paid to be a debt & by securing the property by way of mtge. I can, therefore, see no difference between a mtge. created by the statute such as the one contemplated in S. 225 of the Tenancy Act & a mtge. created by act of parties. Mr. Rao for the resp. wanted us to hold that this section was in the nature of a penalty sought to be imposed on the defaulting tenant & that he could not claim any account of the receipts while the mtgee was in possession. Secondly, it was urged that if during the period he was in possession the occupancy right is purchased by the mtgee, the tenant cannot question or seek to recover the land relying upon his title at the time of the mtge. It is not for us to guess what the intention of the Legislature was in enacting this provision. Our duty is to interpret not the meaning of the Legislature but the meaning of the language used by the Legislature. At the time this provision was incorporated, the expressions "mtgee. & mtgee. in possession" had been crystallised into specific provision embodied in the statute. There is no reason why it should be held that these words were used in the Tenancy Act in a sense other than in which they were generally understood. But apart from this being decided as a matter of construction, there is authority for the proposition that, even before the T. P. Act came into force, the mtgee. in possession of immoveable property was, under the ordinary law then in force, bound to manage it as a person with ordinary prudence would manage it as if it were his own, & unless there was an agreement to the contrary with the mtgor. he was bound to pay out of the income of the property the Govt. land revenue which might during his possession be assessed upon it & such charges of a public nature as might accrue due in respect of the property & be payable by the person in possession of the rents & profits. (See Abid Husain Khan v. Mt. Kaniz Fatima, A. I. R. (11) 1924 P. C. 102 : (46 ALL. 269).

[16] It is worthwhile to note that when the T. P. Act was amended in 1929, the words "and all rent" were for the first time introduced into

S. 76 (c) removing all doubts whether the rent payable by the tenant to his landlord was a charge of a public nature. It is, therefore, clear that the deft. while he held the character of a mtgee. entered into possession & wae as such bound, whether under the T. P. Act or otherwise, to pay all rent accruing due in respect thereof during such possession.

[17] As I have said, either S. 76, T. P. Act, applies or it does not. If it applies, the liability of the resp. to account is created by the provision of the statute itself; if it does not, the applt's contention is that he would be liable even otherwise to account & cannot take advantage of the auction sale as the right of the mtgor. is protected under the provisions of the T. P. Act. It may be noticed that a mtgee. is not a trustee for the mtgor, but the Indian Trust Act imposes certain obligations upon the mtgee. which are in the nature of a trust. Chapter IX of the Indian Trust Act deals with certain obligations in the nature of a trust & S. 90 provides against any advantage gained by qualified owners such as, tenant for life, co-owner, mtgee. & the like. The conditions under which the advantage gained by such qualified owner will be deemed to have been held on behalf of the beneficiary are laid down in the section. Similarly, S. 88 provides against such acts committed by a person holding a fiduciary character & the residuary S. 94 provides for cases not directly coming within the scope of any of the preceding sections. Section 94 says that in any case not coming under the scope of any of the preceding sections where there is no trust, but the person having possession of property has not the whole beneficial interest therein, he must hold the property for the benefit of the persons having such interest. Section 95 makes applicable all the sections of the Trusts Act defining the duties, liabilities & disabilities of the trustee to such persons. If the case covered by S. 90 Illus. (c) is a complete answer to the resp's contention, & if S. 94 is the section applicable, then the liabilities of the trustee defined in Ss. 15 & 19 of the Act will apply to the case under S. 95 of the Act. In either view of the case, I am led to the conclusion that the resp. was a mtgee in possession & as such was liable to be redeemed & liable to render account of his receipts during the period of his possession. I have, therefore, no hesitation in concurring with the judgment delivered by my Lord just now & the order regarding interest & accounting proposed by him. The result is the appeal shall be allowed with costs throughout & the mtgee. deft. shall be called upon to render accounts of his receipts either actual or such as he should have received & to make over the excess collections after taking the accounts with interest at 12 p. c. p. a.

Misc. Appeal No. 10 of 1946, D/- 31-3-1949.

(a) Hindu law — Wife — Maintenance—Charge decree for maintenance against husband — Execution.

Where a Hindu wife obtains a charge decree for maintenance against her husband, she has a right to proceed against any item of the property charged and therefore a purchaser of the property subject to the charge will not be entitled to resist the execution of the decree on the ground that there is other property available which is sufficient to meet the claim. [Para 7]

(b) Hindu law — Wife — Maintenance—Nature of — Charge decree for maintenance—Execution—Civil P. C. (1908), S. 38—Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act (XVII [17] of 1937).

Per Narasimham J. — The right of a wife to claim maintenance from the estate of her husband is essentially different from that of a widow to claim maintenance from the estate of her deceased husband. The former is based on the relationship between the two and the personal obligation arising out of it. The latter is, however, limited to those instances where she cannot succeed to her husband's estate as his heir. The Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937 may have the effect of extinguishing such rights of a widow but it has left the rights of the wife unaffected. When those rights have been embodied in a decree and a charge has been created in respect of several items of her husband's property, and there is nothing in the decree to indicate that its life is limited to the life of the husband, the executing Court has no other option except to execute the decree as it stands. So long as the charge remains and the decree stands unmodified it will not be open to the executing Court to say that the decree is unexecutable because after the death of the husband the widow as his heir has inherited his properties. All that can be reasonably urged on behalf of persons who have purchased the property from the husband subject to the charge is that in view of the improved financial position of the wife caused by her inheriting her husband's property, the maintenance allowance may be substantially reduced or (if the evidence justifies it) may be cancelled altogether. But this can be done only by a separate suit and not by way of an objection in an execution proceeding. [Paras 9 & 12]

Per Jagannadhadas J.—In the case of a charge decree for maintenance the fact of the death of the husband by itself does not in any way alter the foundation of the decree and does not make the decree inexecutable prima facie the decree enures for the lifetime of the decree-holder as against the charged property. No doubt where a widow succeeds to her husband's property she has no longer any right to maintenance, because her right to a share is in lieu of her maintanance and she cannot obviously be a maintenance-holder in respect of the very property which she owns for her life. But where some of the properties of her husband which have been charged for her maintenance, have passed away from the husband's estate by the date of his death, she obviously cannot succeed as an heir to those properties and there can be no question of her being entitled to those items as owner and, at the same time of getting maintenance out of them. There is no scope for the operation of the principle of merger. There is, therefore, no reason why her right to maintenance out of those properties should be held to have vanished. Those properties continue to be her husband's assets by virtue of the charge, for purposes of obtaining satisfaction of the decree, but have ceased to be her husband's property for purposes of any succession on account of their having been alienated away. Her right to maintenance out of them may, therefore, be held on principle to have remained intact on the analogy of A.I.R. (31) 1944 Mad. 401, subject, of course, to any modification on the question of quantum by any separate proceedings. [Paras 18 & 19]

(c) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 52 — Charge decree for maintenance — Decree remaining unsatisfied — Purchaser of property charged is bound by decree by virtue of S. 52.

Per Jagannadhadas J.—Where a charge decree for maintenance continues to remain unsatisfied, purchasers of some of the items charged would be bound by the decree by virtue of S. 52, T. P. Act and are in the position of judgment-debtors under the decree in respect of execution against those items of property. They may also be regarded as persons in possession of the assets of the original judgment-debtors whose property they have purchased subject to the charge, to the extent required for satisfaction of the decree out of the items so purchased and in that sense his legal representatives. Anno. T. P. Act, S. 52, N. 11, 40.

B. K. Pal — for Appellants; A. B. Ray and M. S. Rao — for Respondent.

Narasimham J.—This is an appeal by some of the judgment-debtors against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack dismissing in part their objection under S. 47, C. P. C. to the execution of a maintenance decree obtained by the respondent Bhuyani Trinayani Dasi against her late husband Srichandan Bhuyan Brundaban Chandra Roy in O. S. NO. 484 of 1908. The maintenance decree (EX. F) was passed on 16-8-1909 and several items of zamindari properties of Srichandan Bhuyan Brundaban Chandra Roy were charged with liability for the maintenance of the respondent. Two of those items are touzi NOS. 1453 and 1463 appertaining to Balasore Collectorate. The maintenance decree was slightly modified when the litigation was taken up to the High Court in 1917. But for the purpose of the present appeal it is unnecessary to discuss in detail the history of that litigation. It is sufficient to note that the aforesaid two touzis and several other properties of Srichandan Bhuyan Brundaban Chandra Roy were made subject to the maintenance charge of the respondent. Touzi NO. 1463 was purchased by one Pitambar Ghose through his authorised agent in a court-sale on 23-9-1916 and in the sale certificate (EX. E) it was expressly stated that the sale in favour of the auction-purchaser was subject to the charge created by the aforesaid maintenance decree. Touzi NO. 1453 was also purchased on 4-7-1923 by the said Pitambar Ghose from one Jadunath Panda who had acquired the said touzi from Srichandan Bhuyan Brundaban Chandra Roy by purchasing the same in a court sale in execution of his mortgage decree. The said Srichandan Bhuyan Brundaban Chandra Roy died on 4-2-1943. During his life-time his wife (the respondent) had executed the maintenance decree on several occasions. The present application for execution (Execution case NO. 125 of 1944) out of which this appeal arose was filed on 28-7-1944 and it related to the maintenance due to her for three years from August 1941 to the end of July 1944. It will be noticed that a portion of the claim refers to the period after the death of her husband Srichandan Bhuyan Brundaban Chandra Roy. The decree-holder's case was that the aforesaid two touzis were subject to the maintenance charge decreed in her favour and that the appellants having acquired the said touzis with full knowledge of the existence of the charge decree in her favour were bound by the same. The appellants are all the descendants of Pitambar Ghose.

[2] The learned Subordinate Judge disallowed the respondent's claim in respect of touzi NO. 1453 on the ground that in a previous litigation (O. S. NO. 522 of 1913, EX. 5 and MISC. CASE NO. 95 of 1931) to which the respondent was a party it was decided that the said touzi was not liable to sale in execution of her decree for maintenance. As regards touzi NO. 1463, however, he held that the said Pitambar Ghose acquired it subject to the maintenance charge of the respondent and that consequently the execution should be allowed to continue in respect of that property.

[3] Several objections had been taken in the lower Court by the appellants-judgment-debtors one of them being that the respondent was the sole heir of Srichandan Bhuyan Brundaban Chandra Roy and that there was a merger of her maintenance decree with her right as heir. The respondent on the other hand contended that her husband had adopted one Gourhari Saha some time before his death. The learned lower Court believed the story of adoption. It is, however, unnecessary in this litigation to come to any decision as to whether the said Gourhari Saha was validly adopted by Srichandan Bhuyan Brundaban Chandra Roy. Even if it be held that he was validly adopted the respondent as a widow would also have a substantial interest in her husband's property by virtue of the provisions of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937.

[4] The main point urged by Mr. Pal on behalf of the appellants is that the aforesaid maintenance decree became unexecutable on the death of Srichandan Bhuyan Brundaban Chandra Roy because after that date the respondent being his widow became an heir to this property by virtue of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937 and that an heir under the Hindu law was not entitled to any maintenance. He further urged that the other properties left by the said Srichandan Bhuyan Brundaban Chandra Roy to his widow were considerable and that she has adequate means to maintain herself out of those properties.

[5] There is, however, no clear evidence about the exact value of the property left by Srichandan Bhuyan Brundaban Chandra Roy. Undoubtedly in 1909 he was a very substantial Zamindar as will be clear from the list of the zamindari properties that were made subject to the maintenance charge of his wife in the decree in O. S. NO. 484 of 1908 (EX. F). But from a perusal of the case reported in Debendra Nath v. Trinayani Dasi, (1945) 24 Pat. 245 : (A.I.R. (32) 1945 Pat. 278) (which also arose out of the execution of the same maintenance decree) it appears that most of the properties charged with the payment of maintenance to the respondent had passed out of the hands of her husband even during his life-time. The evidence in the present case merely shows that the husband left about 80 acres of chas lands and some other properties. But there is absolutely no evidence as to the amount of income derived from those properties and how much will fall to the share of the respondent even if the story of adoption be taken as true.

[6] The essential facts are practically admitted. Touzi NO. 1463 was made subject to the maintenance charge of the respondent decree-holder in the decree dated 16 8 1909 (EX. F). That touzi was purchased by the ancestor of the appellants on 23-9-1916 in a court-sale and in the sale certificate (EX. E) the existence of the charge on the basis of the aforesaid maintenance decree was clearly mentioned. The purchaser purchased the property with the full knowledge of the existence of the charge. In this case therefore it will be of mere academic interest to discuss the various conflicting decisions regarding the effect of ss. 52 and 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, when a property is purchased during the pendency of a litigation regarding the creation of a charge on the said property by a maintenance decree (See Gangabai Pandurang v. Pagubai Narayan, I. L. R. (1941) Bom. 1 : (A.I.R. (27) 1940 Bom. 395), Ramchandra Gururao v. Kamala Bai, A.I.R. (31) 1944 Bom. 191 : (I. L. R. (1944) Bom. 274) and Kulandaivelu Pillai v. Sowbagyammal, A.I.R. (32) 1945 Mad. 350 : (1945-1 M.L.J. 261).

[7] It cannot be seriously disputed that the respondent decree-holder has the right to proceed against any item of property charged. As early as 1867, it was pointed out by the Bombay High Court in Ramchandra v. Savitribai (4 Bom. H.C.A.C. 73) that :

"By Hindu law the maintenance of a widow is a charge upon the whole estate, and, therefore, upon every part thereof."

Similarly in Sham Lal v Banna, 4 ALL. 296 : (1882 A.W.N. 42 F.B.), the Full Bench declared :

"When the maintenance has been expressly charged on the purchased property, it will be liable, although it be shown that there is property in the hands of the heirs sufficient to meet the claim . . . ."

In Thimmanayanim Bahadur v. Venkatappa Nayanim Bahadur, A. I. R. (15) 1928 Mad. 713 at p. 716 : (109 I.C. 872 F. B.), the right of the maintenance decree-holder to choose the property against which she may proceed was clearly recognised. Again in Debendranath v. Trinayanidasi, I.L.R. (1945) 24 Pat. 245 : (A. I. R. (32) 1945 Pat. 278) it was pointed out that "every part of the property charged is liable for the payment of the decretal debt". Therefore the fact that the respondent has chosen one of the several items of the charged property for this execution proceeding will not be a ground for resisting her claim.

[8] The main question for consideration is whether the death of the respondent's husband in 1943 has had the effect of making the maintenance decree unexecutable. It is doubtless true that from the date of his death the respondent as his widow became entitled to a share of his property (if the story of adoption be believed) or the whole of his property (if there was no adoption) by virtue of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937. There is sufficient authority to support the view that a Hindu widow who has become an heir of her husband's property cannot claim maintenance out of that property, Venkata Subbarattamma v. Krishniah, A. I. R. (30) 1943 Mad. 417 : (208 I. C. 638) and T. Sarojini Devi v. T. Sri Kristne, I.L.R. (1945) Mad. 61 at p. 69 : (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Mad. 401). In the latter Madras decision Patanjali J. pointed out :

"It may well be that, if the Act (referring to the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937) conferred upon the widow a right of succession in respect of all her husband's property, the right of maintenance allowed to her under the ordinary Hindu law as compensation for her exclusion from inheritance would no longer be available, although nothing is said in the Act about rights of maintenance."

This point has been fully discussed in a recent decision of the Oudh Chief Court reported in Misri Lal v. Mst. Simatra, (23 Luck. 277) where after an exhaustive discussion of all the authorities on the subject it was pointed out that the right of a Hindu widow to claim maintenance out of the joint family property of her husband was extinguished after the passing of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937. In the aforesaid Madras decisions, however, the right of maintenance of a Hindu widow from the agricultural lands left by her husband was recognised because till then the said Act had not been applied to agricultural lands left by her husband was recognised because till then the said Act had not been applied to agricultural lands by the Provincial Legislature. But this argument is no longer available in the Province of Orissa because by Orissa Act V of 1944 the provisions of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937 were applied to agricultural lands in the Province with retrospective effect from the date of the commencement of the latter Act.

[9] But the main difficulty against the appellants' case arises from the fact that the lower Court was acting merely as an executing Court and had, therefore, no jurisdiction to go behind the decree. It may be that in a properly constituted suit the appellants may be able to succeed in establishing that the respondent had no right to claim maintenance from the date of the death of her husband and thus extinguish the effect of the maintenance decree in O. S. No. 484 of 1908. It is also not unlikely that even if they are unable to completely extinguish the said decree they may be able to get the maintenance allowance reduced to a substantial extent after taking into consideration the exact value of the assets of Srichandan Bhuyan Brundaban Chandra Roy that were inherited by his widow. Even before the passing of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937, it was fully recognised that a maintenance decree itself may be varied due to change in circumstances: Ruka Bai v. Ganda Bai, 1 ALL. 594, Venkanna v. Aitamma, 12 Mad. 183; Bangaru Ammal v. Vijayamachi Reddiar, 22 Mad. 175; Gopika Bai v. Dattatraya, 24 Bom. 386 : (2 Bom. L. R. 191); Kewalmal v. Isri Bai, 93 I. C. 353: (A.I.R. (13) 1926 Sind 135), Sheo Mangal v. Boahikuar, A. I. R. (23) 1936 Oudh 60 : (11 Luck 607) and Sundari Ammal v. Venkat Rama, 66 M. L. J. 680 : (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Mad. 384). But in all these cases the question arose not in an execution proceeding but in a separate suit. In the present case, however, there is a decree in favour of the respondent and that decree does not say in any way that it shall cease to be operative after the death of the respondent's husband. On the other hand, the very fact that it is a maintenance decree reasonably indicates that it would be operative during the life-time of the decree-holder. The Court took special care to specify various items of property of the husband which should be subject to the maintenance charge and this safeguard was specially adopted with a view to prevent the husband from defeating the maintenance of his wife by alienating his properties. Therefore, so long as the charge remains and the decree stands unmodified I do not think it will be open to the executing Court to say that the decree is unexecutable because after the death of the husband the widow as his heir has inherited his properties.

[10] In Gopikabai v. Dattatraya, 24 Bom. 386 : (2 Bom. L. R. 191), Parsons J. pointed out the desirability of inserting suitable words in the maintenance decree so as to enable the Courts, on application, to set aside or modify their orders as circumstances might require. If in the present maintenance decree also such words had been inserted it would have been open for the appellants to apply in the execution proceeding itself for reduction of the rate of maintenance due to change of circumstances but unfortunately for them there are no such words in the decree and it must be executed as it stands. In Ranmalsangji v. Bai Kundankuvar, 26 Bom. 707: (4 Bom. L. R. 531) it was observed:

"But here the claim is under the special provisions of a decree expressly dealing with the circumstances of this particular case. And that decree, passed in relation to those circumstances, contained no provision whatever that the rights thereby conferred on the respondent should be dependent upon her place of residence or upon any other matter whatsoever. It conferred in terms an unconditional and absolute right to the maintenance specified therein. There is neither necessity nor justification for any conjecture as to the reasons for that decision or as to the propriety thereof. It is binding in execution on the parties thereto, and neither of them could go behind it or add to it a condition which it does not contain. A decree for maintenance right may be so framed as to admit of modification of its terms with reference to post decretal changes in the circumstances or in the relations of the parties. No authority has, however, been cited to show that such modifications could be made on application in execution when the decree contains no provision in that behalf."

Though the aforesaid case is distinguishable on facts from the present case the principle laid down therein is applicable with equal force and with respect I would agree entirely with those observations.

[11] In Muttia v. Virammall, (10 Mad 283 F. B.) it was held that a decree for maintenance obtained by a widow in a suit against her husband's brother could not be executed after his death against the joint family property in the hands of other members of the family. But it was expressly observed that the decision would have been different if the defendant had been sued as representing the family or if the maintenance had been charged on the joint family property. Following this decision, in Subbanna Bhatta v. Subbanna, 30 Mad. 324 : (17 M. L. J. 180) it was held that a maintenance decree obtained by an illegitimate son against his father such maintenance being charged on the joint family property of the father and his legitimate sons, could be enforced against the sons after the father's death The present case is of a similar type. Though the maintenance decree was against the husband such maintenance was charged on his property. So long as the charge remains, the decree is enforceable against the successor-in-interest of the husband even after his death. To hold otherwise would be to defeat the very purpose for which the charge was created.

[12] Mr. Pal has relied on Chinna Goundan v. Kalyana Sundaram, A. I. R. (28) 1941 Mad. 126 : (1940-2 M. L. J. 881) and Venkayya v. Raghavamma, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Mad. 1: (I. L. R. (1942) Mad. 24) for the view that where the basis on which a decree is passed has disappeared, such a decree becomes unenforceable. Chinna Goundan v. Kalyana, A. I. R. (28) 1941 Mad.

126 : (1940) 2 M. L. J. 881) is, however, clearly distinguishable because there the decree ceased to be executable by the operation of a statute. This position admits of no doubt. For example there are some provisions in the Orissa Money-lenders Act (see sections 11 and 17) which say that some decrees shall be deemed to have been satisfied under certain circumstances. No executing Court can execute a decree against the express provisions of an Act. In the present case, however, this analogy will not apply because the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937, does not expressly say anything about the enforcibility or otherwise of maintenance decrees obtained prior to the date of the commencement of that Act. In Venkayya v. Raghavamma, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Mad. 1 : (I. L. R. (1942) Mad. 24), the principles of English law regarding divorce and alimony were applied and it was held that a decree obtained by a Hindu wife against her husband for maintenance ceased to be enforceable if subsequent to the decree the wife resumes cohabitation with her husband. Therein it was pointed out that the basis on which a decree for maintenance was passed in favour of the wife namely the living of the wife separately from her husband for good reasons had disappeared by the act of the parties. By returning to her husband, she became disentitled to claim maintenance and therefore it was held that the previous decree became ineffective and the parties were restored to the position which they occupied when they were married. I do not think it will be proper to apply the principle of this decision to the present case. The basis on which the decree was obtained by the respondent against her husband cannot be said to have disappeared. The decree was based on the relationship of husband and wife and the fact that the husband by his own conduct compelled his wife to live apart from him. Till his death the conditions remained as they were at the time of the passing of the decree and the only change that has been brought about is the change in her status from a wife to that of a widow and the consequent right to inherit his property under the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937. The right of a wife to claim maintenance from the estate of her husband is essentially different from that of a widow to claim maintenance from the estate of her deceased husband (see Sham Devi v. Mohan Lal, A.I.R. (21) 1934 Lah. 167). The former is based on the relationship between the two and the personal obligation arising out of it. The latter is, however, limited to those instances where she cannot succeed to her husband's estate as his heir. The Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937, may have the effect of extinguishing such rights of a widow but it has left the rights of the wife unaffected. When those rights have been embodied in a decree and a charge has been created in respect of several items of her husband's property, and there is nothing in the decree to indicate that its life is limited to the life of the husband, the executing Court has no other option except to execute the decree as it stands. All that can be reasonably urged on behalf of the appellants is that in view of the improved financial position of the respondent caused by her inheriting her husband's property, the maintenance allowance may be substantially reduced or (if the evidence justifies it) may be cancelled altogether. But I think this can be done only by a separate suit and not by way of an objection in an execution proceeding.

[13] I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

[14] Jagannadhadas J. — I agree with my learned brother that the appeal is to be dismissed with costs.

[15] The facts out of which this appeal arises have been fully set out in the judgment of my learned brother. The argument for the appellant is that since by the date of the application for execution, the husband of decree-holder had died, the decree is no longer executable as against the appellants. Various grounds are alleged in support of this position. (a) The decree is eo nomine against the deceased husband of the respondent and there is no decree against the appellants. They cannot be said to be the legal representatives of the original judgment-debtor and the decree cannot be executed against them. (b) The decree has become inoperative and is no longer executable because, (i) It is based on the personal obligation of the husband which ceases with his death. (ii) After the husband's death, she has become an heir to her husband's property and has no longer any subsisting right of maintenance.

[16] As regards the contention (a), the appellants who have purchased some items of the property charged, while the decree continues to remain unsatisfied, are clearly persons bound by the decree by virtue of S. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act and are in the position of judgment-debtors under the decree in respect of execution against the said items of property. They may also be considered to be persons in possession of the assets of the original judgment-debtor whose property they have purchased subject to the charge, to the extent required for satisfaction of the decree out of the items so purchased and in that sense his legal representatives. As regards contention (b), learned counsel for appellants has cited authorities to show that where the basis or foundation of a decree vanishes, the decree itself becomes inoperative and inexecutable and that this objection can be raised in execution under S. 47, C. P. C. without a separate suit having to be filed to set aside the decree. Syam Mandal v. Satinath Banerjee, 44 Cal. 954 : (A. I. R. (4) 1917 Cal. 728) and Venkayya v. Raghavamma, I. L. R. (1942) Mad. 24 : (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Mad. 1) and Narayan Chitko v. Vithal Parshotam, 12 Bom. 23, and a number of other cases have been brought to our notice. Assuming this proposition to be correct, the question is whether it can be said that the basis of the charge-decree for maintenance obtained by a wife against her husband necessarily vanishes with the death of the husband.

[17] It is no doubt true that the obligation of the husband to maintain his wife is personal. But it does not follow that it does not survive. The right of the wife to get maintenance from her husband is one that can also be enforced against the property of the husband or the share of the husband in the family property. All that is meant when it is said that the husband's obligation in this behalf is personal is merely to emphasize that irrespective of having any property the husband is bound to maintain the wife. When, however, the obligation is charged on the property, it is no longer a mere personal liability, but is also a property liability. That this is so appeared from the fact that the charged property can be proceeded against irrespective of the possession of other property in the hands of the debtor and independent of whether the personal remedy is pursued in the first instance or not, Sham Lal v. Banna, 4 ALL. 296 (F. B). It is, therefore, erroneous to say, as has been contended, that the obligation is merely personal and that the charge is an accessory liability, which falls to the ground with the death of the husband. The right of the wife to obtain maintenance is prima facie for her life and hence the property charged can be followed during her life time into the hands of every person to whom it passes. This has been recognised in Subbanna Bhatta v. Subbanna, 30 Mad. 324 : (1) M.L.J. 180) following Muttia v. Virammal, 10 Mad. 283 (F. B.) which has pointed out the distinction in this respect between a maintenance decree which has been obtained against a person individually and a maintenance decree which has been obtained against a representative of the family or which has been charged on the property. Those were, no doubt, cases of decrees obtained by a widow against another member of the family, but the principle would appear equally to apply to the case of a decree obtained by a wife against her husband. There is nothing in Sham Devi v. Mohan Lal, 15 Lah. 591: (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Lah. 167) which has been cited to militate against this view.

[18] Prima facie, the object of obtaining the charge for maintenance in respect of certain items of the property is that so long as the decree-holder's right to be maintained out of the property continues, the property charged is to be treated as the husband's assets in the hands of any successor or alienee, for purposes of satisfaction of the liability charged. It appears to me, therefore, that in the case of a charge decree for maintenance, like the one under consideration in the present case, the fact of the death of the husband by itself does not in any way alter the foundation of the decree and does not make the decree inexecutable and that prima facie the decree enures for the lifetime of the decree-holder as against the charged property. Any other view would result in compelling the wife who has become a widow to sue afresh for her maintenance, the heirs or the coparceners of her husband. In a case where the husband has left no property at his death or has not left sufficient property to provide for her reasonable maintenance, she would be without any remedy and the purchaser of the charged property would be getting a release from the liability which he has not bargained for. We have been shown no authority compelling us to accede to any such view.

[19] The only further question that remains is whether the fact of the respondent having succeeded to some property of her husband in this case, makes any difference. It has, no doubt, been held that where a widow succeeds to her husband's property she has no longer any right to maintenance because her right to a share is in lieu of her maintenance and she cannot obviously be a maintenance-holder in respect of the very property which she owns for her life; vide Misrilal v. Mst. Simatra, 23 Luck. 277. It has been held on the other hand that where the widow succeeds only to some of the properties of her husband as heir, her right to maintenance out of the other properties of the husband does not disappear, though the fact of her being the owner of some properties may be a ground for variation of the quantum of maintenance. Sarojini Devi v. Srikristna, I. L. R. (1945) Mad. 61 : (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Mad. 401). In a case like the present one, where some of the properties of her husband which have been charged for her maintenance have passed away from the husband's estate by the date of his death, she obviously cannot succeed as an heir to those properties and there can be no question of her being entitled to those items as owner and, at the same time of getting maintenance out of them. There is no scope for the operation of the principle of merger. There is, therefore no reason why her right to maintenance out of those properties should be held to have vanished. Those properties continue to be her husband's assets by virtue of the charge, for purposes of obtaining satisfaction of the decree, but have ceased to be her husband's property for purposes of any succession on account of their having been alienated away. Her right to maintenance out of them may, therefore, be held on principle to have remained intact on the analogy of Sarojini Devi v Srikistna, I.L.R. (1945) Mad. 61: (A.I.R (31) 1944 Mad. 401) subject, of course, to any modification on the question of quantum by any separate proceedings.

[20] In the result, therefore, I agree with the order of my learned brother.

R. K. Das — for Applt.; B. N. Mohanty — for Resp.

Ray C. J. — This appeal is directed against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack refusing to set aside an ex parte decree. The suit was a Money Suit by the resp. against more than four defts. of whom deft. 2 is the applt. before us. Deft. 1 is the elder brother & is stated to be the Manager of the joint family of defts. 1, 2 & 3. Deft. 4 is a Muhammadan gentleman who was impleaded on the ground that he was one of the patnrs of the partnership business in relation whereto the liability in favour of the pltf. is said to have arisen. Defts. 5 & 6 were some of the servants of the partnership concern. The suit was contested by deft. 4 & he was released from the liability on the finding that he was not a patnr. of the concern. Deft. 1, while residing at Puri, the place where he ordinarily resides now-a-days away from the family house at Cuttack, was personally served with summons which he acknowledged. Deft. 3 is the son of deft. 1. The two defts. (defts. 2 & 3) could not be personally served with the regular summonses accompanied with copies of plaint addressed to them. The report of the Serving Officer was that the copies of summonses had been tendered to them; but they having understood the purport thereof refused to acknowledge & thereupon they were hung at the sidr door of their residence. I could not quite understand how could deft. 3's ordinary residence be at Cuttack when his father deft. 1 was ordinary residing at Puri. Deft. 3 was admittedly at the time a student of Jadavpur Engineering College. Under the circumstances, as is expected, the learned Subordinate Judge did not accept the report as to the mode of service of the Serving Officer & declared the same to be unsatisfactory calling upon the pltf. to take further steps for fresh service. The fresh service that was ordered by the Ct. was a registered Post Card. This Post Card is said to have been tendered to the applt. before us & refused. Thereafter, the suit was set down ex parte against defts. 1, 2 & 3. The suit travelled through a long course on account of contest by deft. 4 & was finally disposed of about a year after. The decree was ex parte as against defts. 1, 2 & 3 & one of dismissal as against defts. 4, 5 & 6. The defts. 1, 2 & 3 by separate applns. filed, sought to have the ex parte decree set aside under O. 9, R. 13 which met with refusal by the Subordinate Judge. Hence this appeal by the deft. 2.

[2] The learned Subordinate Judge, after considering the evidence of the Postal Peon (witness 2 for the opp. party), has come to the finding that the post card was tendered personally to Narendra Kishore Das. I have gone through the evidence of this witness & there is much to be said against his testimony. He is a peon under suspension regarding delivery of an Insured Parcel for about nine months by the time when he deposed. The point, however, that has to be considered in this appeal is whether the post card, in question, is an effectual substitute for the regular service of summons. O. 5, R. 17 lays down the various alternatives that have to be adopted for effecting personal or other service of summons accompanied with copy of plaint on a deft. the validity of which depends upon the Ct's. pronouncement of its genuineness & credibility. As I have said in this case, the Ct. pronounced the Serving Officer's report as unsatisfactory. Then comes R. 20 of the Order into operation which provides:

"Where the Ct. is satisfied that there is reason to believe that the deft. is keeping out of the way for the purpose of avoiding service, or that for any other reason the summons cannot be served in the ordinary way, the Ct. shall order the summons to be served by affixing a copy thereof in some conspicuous place in the Court-house & also upon some conspicuous part of the house (if any) in which the deft. is known to have last resided or carried on business or personally worked for gain, or in such other manner as the Ct. thinks fit."

[3] The last mode of service, namely, "or in such other manner as the Ct. thinks fit", no doubt, gives the Ct. the jurisdiction to have the service of summons through registered post. But the question reduces itself to this what that summons should be? Should it be anything different from what it ought to be within the meaning of R. 1, O. 5 of the Code & the Form prescribed in App. B (NO. 1)? Sub-r. (3) of R. 1, O. 5, provides:

"Every such summons shall be signed by the Judge or such officer as he appoints, & shall be sealed with the seal of the Ct."

According to App B (NO. 1), the summons besides giving adequate particulars of the suit & the date fixed for either disposal or for settlement of issues, will purport to be one addressed by the Ct. or under the authority of the Ct. The latter requirement is to be fulfilled by insertion of the following words or their equivalent: "Given under my hand & the seal of the Ct., this day of 19 Judge." Until this is done it cannot be a summons within the meaning of law. This post card, though it contains some particulars about the date fixed for the suit & the nature of the suit, including by whom & against whom it is brought, bears nothing to say that it is signed by the Judge or under his authority. In the first summons, which could not be satisfactorily served, but which is on a printed form, the words are "Ambhar Swakshyar O Adalatar Mohar Krame Sana 1946 Masiha 9 Masar Ta 11 Rikhe Diagala". Underneath, there is a signature of the Sheristadar indicating that he is the person appointed by the Ct. to sign. Such indication is made by words: "By Order Sheristadar". Besides on the very face of it, it contains a seal, the impression from which reads "Seal of the Ct. of the Subordinate Cuttack". Mr. B. N. Mohanti, appearing for the opp. party, invites our attention to a seal on the reverse of the post card (the side in which the address is written) which is to the effect "Sub-Judge's Ct. Cuttack Filed 19-11-1946". This, however, cannot take the place of the Seal of the Ct. This is only a date-stamp of the Office indicating the date when any particular document or paper is filed in Ct. Besides, this is not a part of the summons too. The entire summons is on the front page of the post card, which as I have said, does not either contain the signature of the Judge or that of any other Officer appointed by him in that behalf nor the seal of the Ct. Even if one is there, namely, the seal of the Ct. if the other is not there, it does not amount to a summons. The rule requires both.

[4] It is well settled in principle that a party's knowledge of the institution of a suit is not sufficient so long as he is not effectively served with summons of the suit. He may from various circumstances or after his own enquiry come to know that a suit has been filed against him, but he is entitled to expect service of summons from Ct. Till that is done, you cannot fix him with the liability of ex parte decree & cannot refuse his appln. to set aside the said decree on the ground that there is good reason to believe that he knew of the suit. Therefore, even if we believe that this post card was tendered to the applt. (Narendra Kishore Das) & he refused it, yet there was nothing in it to show that it was a summons addressed by a Judge of the Ct. commanding him to appear in Ct. & answer to a cause against him.

[5] Under the circumstances, we are of opinion that in this case, it cannot be held that the summons has been served upon him in accordance with law. It should be proper to state here that service by post may be adopted as a supplementary mode of service, but it shall not, by itself, take the place of service of summons, particularly, in a case where there was no attempt to serve the defts. with summons personally as in this case in which the peon's report was not believed by the Ct.

[6] In consideration of what I have said above, I should set aside the ex parte decree in the suit, as a whole, & restore the suit to its file as against defts 1, 2 & 3. The appeal is allowed. The applt. however, in the special circumstances of the case, shall pay costs of this Ct. to the pltf. resp.

Pratap Kishore & another — Pltfs.-Applts. v. Gyanendranath — Deft.-Resp.

Second Appeal No. 208 of 1947, D/- 26-2-1951.

(a) Bengal, Agra & Assam Civil Courts Act (1887), S. 38 (2)—Appeal against decree on judgment written by predecessor—Civil P. C. (1908), O. 20, Rr. 2, 8.

Panigrahi J.—The judgment read out in open Ct. by a Judge written out by his predecessor does not become his own judgment so as to render him incompetent to hear an appeal against the decree passed on it under S. 38 (2). [Para 13]

Anno. C. P. C., O. 20 R. 2 N. 2; R. 8 N. 1.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 20, R. 2—Judgment written by Judge on leave.

The use of the word "predecessor" in O. 20, R. 2, is unqualified & would, therefore, apply to any officer who had tried the case. Whether he is still in service, or has been transferred, or has gone on leave. Hence a judgment written by a Judge who has gone on leave is a valid judgment. [Para 15]

Anno. C. P. C., O. 20 R. 2 N. 2.

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 20, R. 2—Scope of.

Panigrahi J.—The language of the rule does not warrant the assumption that the succeeding Judge, who merely pronounces in open Ct. a judgment prepared by his predecessor, necessarily expresses himself as being in agreement with the views contained in that judgment; or that when he does not pronounce that judgment & orders a retrial he necessarily expresses himself as being in doubt as to the correctness of that judgment. [Para 16]

Anno. C. P. C., O. 20 R. 2 N. 2, 3.

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 20, Rr. 2, 8 — Decree by successor — Effect — Bengal, Agra & Assam Civil Courts Act (1887), S. 38 (2).

Panigrahi J.—A decree is passed by the predecessor, who writes the judgment in the ordering portion of his judgment though it is actually drawn up & signed by the successor. [Para 17]

Das J.—The phrase "the Judge who passed the decree" in S. 38, sub-s. (2), Bengal, Agra & Assam Civil Courts Act should be construed as applicable only to the Judge who prepares the judgment & in the normal course pronounces it & thereby passes decree & not to the Judge who merely pronounces the judgment under the provisions of O. 20, R. 2, without having himself prepared it. The successor Judge pronounces the judgment of the predecessor Judge as his statutory proxy, & the judgment so pronounced is to all intents & purposes the determination of the predecessor Judge. It is, therefore, as though the pronouncing of the judgment, which undoubtedly constitutes the passing of the decree is to be taken in law to be the pronouncement by the predecessor Judge. [Paras 39, 40]

Anno. C. P. C., O. 20 R. 2 N. 2; R. 8 N. 1.

(e) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 9—Contravention of rule of procedure.

A mere deviation from a rule of procedure cannot be more than an irregularity & need not necessarily affect jurisdiction. [Para 18]

Anno. C. P. C., S. 9 N. 3, 4, 5.

(f) Hindu Law — Joint family — Self-acquired property—Use by others—Presumption.

A member of the joint family who acquires property may allow other members of that joint family to manage it & to enjoy the income arising out of it. But this circumstance alone cannot militate against the presumption that such property acquired by a member out of his own earnings, constitutes his self-acquisition. It is not unusual in a joint family, for its members to utilise the income so long as they are joint. The real test in such cases is the intention behind the act. Does that act indicate that the acquirer intended to throw it into the common stock & not to claim separate title thereto ? It certainly cannot be said that the moment a member acquires property with his own earnings he should immediately separate himself from the other members in order that he might treat his acquisition as separate; & that failure to do so should necessarily lead to a presumption that the property would be a part of the joint family property. In the absence of any evidence of a positive character to show that the acquirer intended that his acquisition should be treated as a part of the family stock, the presumption would be that it must remain his self acquisition. [Para 22]

(g) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 17, 31— Admissions — Value of.

What a party himself admits to be true may reasonably be presumed to be so. The party making the admission may give evidence to rebut this presumption. The express admissions of a party to the suit or admissions implied from his conduct are evidence—indeed strong evidence—against him unless he can prove that such admissions were mistaken or were untrue & he is not estopped or concluded by them unless another person has been induced by them to alter his condition. [Para 26]

Anno. Evidence Act, S. 17 N. 5; S. 31 N. 1, 2.

(h) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 2, R. 1—Frame of suit.

When a pltf. comes to Ct. to set aside an adoption on the foot of which there is a partition, the obligation lies on him to so constitute his suit as to enable the Ct. to deal with the whole subject-matter & dispose of all the rights & interests of the parties to the deed. He cannot seek to set aside the adoption without also repudiating the deed of partition. [Para 26]

Anno. C. P. C., O. 2 R. 1 N. 2, 3.

(i) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101 to 103—Adoption.

The onus is heavy against the person setting up an adoption especially when there is no contemporaneous deed of adoption. [Para 29]

Anno. Evidence Act, Ss. 101 to 103 N. 13.

(j) Evidence Act (1872), S. 21—Admission by Hindu father.

Admission made by father would be admissible as against the son, the father being the representative in interest of the son in dealing with ancestral property. [Para 30]

(k) Evidence Act (1872), S. 64—Document—Proof.

Where certain documents have been marked as exhibits in a case without objection but the contents thereof have not been put to the persons connected with them either in their chief examination or cross-examination it is not possible to make use of the statements made therein for the purpose of drawing inferences one way or the other. Words or phrases in a statute, having larger import can, having regard to the purpose & object intended, be understood in a limited sense. [Para 39]

(m) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 20, R. 2 — "May pronounce."

Obiter (Das J.)—The word "may" in O. 20, R. 2 must be construed not as involving a discretion, but as conferring an authority which it is the duty of the successor to exercise, if there is on record a prepared & signed judgment of his predecessor, who heard the suit. [Para 41]

D. Mohanty & Muralidhar Mohanty — for Applts.; M. S. Rao—for Resp.

Panigrahi J. — This is a pltf.'s second appeal against the judgemnt of Sri C. C. Coari, Dist. J., Cuttack, affirming the judgment of Sri G. C. De, Addl. Subordinate Judge, Cuttack, in O. S. No. 25 of 1938.

[2] Pltf. 1 is the son of one Bhagat Charan Mohanty who was impleaded as deft. 2 in the suit but was transposed as pltf. 2 on 9-5-40 when the trial was opened. The first pltf. — who was a minor — raised the suit through his next friend, Suriyamoni Dei, said to be his father's sister, for a declaration that deft. 1 Gyanendranath Mohanty, is not the adopted son of Nrusingho Charan Mohanty, the deceased uncle of pltf. 2. He alleged that Nrusingho Charan Mohanty had married Pramila Sundari the sister of Gyanendrana h in 1921; that on account of this relationship pltf. 2 was looking upon Babu Lakshmimdhar Mohanty, the natural father of deft. 1 as 'Murabi' & that Lakshmidhar Babu had a commanding influence over pltf. 2. It was further alleged that pltf. 2, Bhagat Charan, was subject to a sort of sentimental weakness and weakness of mind in the presence of deft. 1's sister the widow of Nrusirgho Charan. It is said that taking advantage of his dominating position, Lakshmidhar Babu induced pltf. 2 to execute certain documents purporting to admit the adoption of deft. 1 by Nrusingho, that there had, in fact, been no such adoption, & that consequently those documents were void. The pltf. accordingly claimed a declaration that the alleged adoption of deft. 1 by Nrusingho Charan is not true. The case of deft. 1, on the other hand, is that there had, in fact, been a regular adoption by Nrusingho Charan on 13 7-1934, followed by the due observance of all the necessary rites & ceremonies, in the presence of pltf. 2 at the house of Babu Lakshmidhar Mohanty & that he (deft. 1) performed the funeral & Sradh ceremonies of Nrusingho Charan, that the documents speaking to the adoption having taken place were genuine & narrated what actually took place & were not brought about, as alleged by the pltf., at the instance of his natural father due to his dominating position. Pltf. 2, Bhagat Charan Mohanty, filed a lengthy statement denying the adoption & alleged that in a weak moment he agreed to set apart some property in the name of deft. 1 Gyanendranath so that his sister, the widow of Nrusingho, may live in comfort with her brother.

[3] The main issue on which the decision of the suit rested was issue 7: "Is deft. the duly adopted son of the late Nrusingho Charan Mohanty?" Another issue of no less importance but which appears to have been raised only incidentally, was issue 6: "Were the pltfs., members of a joint Mitakshara family with the deft. or with the late Nrusingho Charan?"

[4] The case was tried by Mr. Gopal Chandra De, Addl., Subordinate Judge, Cuttack, who held that the adoption of deft. 1 by Nrusingho Charan had been duly proved & directed the dismissal of the pltf's suit. On the issue regarding the jointness or separateness of the family his finding was that there was no separation between Nrusingho Charan & Bhagat Charan & that they were in joint possession of the entire family properties.

[5] On appeal by the pl fs. the Dist. J., Mr. Maher, held that the evidence on the question of adoption was evenly balanced, so much so that "a feather on either scale would tip the balance." As the burden of proof rested on the party alleging the adoption, the learned Dist. J. held that the party on whom this burden rested must be held to have failed to discharge it. He accordingly allowed the appeal & set aside the finding of the Addl. Subordinate Judge.

[6] Against this decision of the Dist J. there was a second appeal by deft. 1 to the H. C. The H. C. held that the learned Dist. J. if he was unable to make up his mind as to which set of witnesses should be preferred against the other set, ought to have affirmed the decision of the Addl. Subordinate Judge. The learned Dist. Judge also did not go into the question of the joint status of the family & disposed of the appeal purely on the question of adoption. Nor was the point raised in second appeal before the H. C. The H. C., however, allowed the second appeal set aside the judgment of the learned Dist. J., & remanded the appeal to his Ct. for a re hearing.

[7] After remand the appeal was re-heard by Mr. Coari who had meanwhile succeeded Mr. Maher as Dist. J. Mr. Coari affirmed the finding of the trial Ct. on the issue of adoption but on the other issue he differed & held that the family of Bhagat & Nrusingho Charan had been divided. He dismissed the appeal & upheld the judgment & decree of the learned Addl. Subordinate Judge. It is against this judgment of Mr. Coari that this second appeal by the pltfs. is directed.

[8] Several points were raised by learned counsel for the applts. & were not only ably but fairly placed before the Ct.

[9] The first point which appeared to me at one time attractively subtle raises the question of the jurisdiction of Mr. Coari to hear the appeal after its remand by the H. C.

[10] To appreciate this point a few facts require to be stated. Mr. Gopal Chandra De the Addl. Subordinate Judge who tried the suit recorded evidence & heard arguments. Hearing was concluded on 17.6 40 & judgment was reserved. On 10.7-40 Mr. De recorded the following order in the order sheet:

"The trial of this suit which involves some complicated questions of law & fact continued for one month & eight days & was closed on 17-6 40. On 21 6-40 I fell seriously ill & remained practically confined to bed till 10.7-40. On account of this illness I became extremely weak & in spite of my best attempts I could not write out the judgment. I will proceed on leave preparatory to retirement with effect from tomorrow."

The next order, numbered as 121 & bearing the same date, reads as follows: "Re-transferred to the file of the Subordinate Judge under orders of the Dist. J." This order was written out by Mr. De & on the very same day Mr. Coari who was then the Subordinate Judge recorded an order in the following terms:

"Received by transfer from the Addl. Subordinate Judge's Ct. Put up on 12-7-40 for hearing arguments. Inform Advocates of both parties."

The advocates of both parties were duly informed on 12-7 40. The case underwent two adjournments for hearing arguments afresh. But in the meanwhile the case was sent back to Mr. De, who had gone on leave, under orders of the Dist J.; & thereafter Mr. De recorded the following orders: 'Received the record under orders of the Dist. J. for writing the judgment." On 9 8 40 Mr. G. C De signed the judgment which he had prepared & sent it to the Subordinate Judge Mr. Coari for pronouncement in Ct. On the very same day Mr. Coari gave notice to the parties that the judgment would be delivered. After delivery of judgment the following order was recorded in the order sheet by Mr. Coari:

"The judgment written by Mr. G. C. De Addl. Subordinate Judge on leave, is delivered by me today. The suit is dismissed with costs."

On 22 8-40 the decree was drawn up in accordance with the judgment delivered on 9-8-40 & was signed by Mr. Coari.

[11] On these facts it is urged by Mr. Mohanty, learned counsel for the applts, that Mr. Coari was not competent to hear the appeal after remand by the H C. inasmuch as he had pronounced the judgment of the trial Ct. on 9-8-40 & signed the decree as Subordinate Judge on 22-8 40. This argument is founded on the language of S. 38 (2) Bengal, Agra & Assam Civil Courts Act (Act XII [12] of 1887) which is in the following terms:

"The Presiding officer of an appellate civil Ct. under this Act shall not try an appeal against a decree or order passed by himself in another capacity."

It is argued that the decree of the trial Ct. was passed by Mr. Coari, as Subordinate Judge, & that the judgment delivered on 9 8-1940 was his judgment. It should be noticed that this point was not taken before Mr. Coari when the appeal was reheard by him as Dist. J. after its remand by the H. C. & the applts. proceeded throughout on the basis that the judgment appealed against was that of Mr. G. C. De, Addl. Subordinate Judge, Cuttack. This is also clear from the fact that the decree drawn up in accordance with the judgment pronounced on 9 8.1940, is specifically mentioned, in the title, as the "decree passed in the Ct. of the Addl. Subordinate Judge" & the decretal portion itself says:

"This suit coming on from 10-5-1940 to 17-6-1940 for final disposal before Sri G. C. De, Addl. Subordinate Judge, in the presence of ...& it is ordered &,decreed that the suit be dismissed with costs."

The decree was, as mentioned already, drawn up later, on 22 8-1940, & was signed by Mr. Coari as Mr. De had gone on leave preparatory to retirement. In the memorandum of appeal filed before the Dist J. in the first instance (Mr. Maher) the applts. described themselves as "being aggrieved by the judgment & decree in O. S. NO 25 of 1938 by Sri G. C. De Addl. Subordinate Judge, Cuttack, on 9-8-1940. In the grounds of appeal also "the decree of the learned Addl. Subordinate Judge" is referred to throughout as the judgment against which the appeal had been preferred. But quite independently of these considerations, what is required to be examined is whether S. 38 (2), Bengal, Agra & Assam Civil Courts Act of 1887, would operate as a bar to the hearing of the appeal by Mr. Coari as Dist. J. on the ground that the judgment delivered by him on 9-8-1940 & the decree drawn up later on 22-8-1940 in pursuance of that judgment can be deemed to be a decree or order passed "by himself in another capacity."

[12] The ordering portion of the judgment is as follows:

"ORDER

Hence it is ordered that the suit be dismissed with costs & future interest at 6 per cent. per annum. Pleader's fee 5 per cent.

Sd. Gopal Chandra De,
Addl. Subordinate Judge,
9 8-1940.

Delivered by me,
Sd. C. C. Coari,
Sub-Judge,
9-8-1940."

[13] Section 33, Civil P. C., lays down that the Court, after the case has been heard, shall pronounce judgment & on such judgment decree shall follow. Order 20 Rr. 1 to 3 lay down when & in what manner a judgment is to be pronounced. Rule 2 says that a "Judge may pronounce a judgment written but not pronounced by his predecessor". Rule 8 of O. 20 says:

"Where a Judge has vacated office after pronouncing judgment, but without signing the decree, the decree drawn up in accordance with such judgment may be signed by his successor, or if the Ct. has ceased to exist, by the Judge of any Ct. to which such Ct. was subordinate."

It is significant that in S. 33 & O. 20 R. 1, the word used is "Court" while in Rr. 2 to 8 the word used is "Judge". The use of the different words is deliberate & not accidental. It is the function of the Ct. which tries a case to pronounce judgment on it in open Ct. after notice has been given to the parties or to their pleaders. The actual delivery of the judgment may be done by a Judge who succeeded the Judge who heard the case or wrote the judgment. Such a procedure is absolutely necessary for the convenience of the litigants as, indeed, it frequently happens that a Judge who has heard arguments & written out his judgment is prevented by illness or other cause from attending Ct. to pronounce it. It is doubtless true that in such cases the judgment so prepared, until it is pronounced in open Ct. merely remains a memorandum prepared by the Judge & does not take the effect of a judgment, & that it comes into effect as a judgment only after it has been pronounced in open Ct. in the manner prescribed. It is also clear from the language of R. 2 that the Successor Judge is not bound to pronounce the judgment prepared by his predecessor—it is left to his option either to deliver the judgment prepared by his predecessor Judge who does no more than read in open Ct. a judgment prepared by his predecessor, adopts that judgment as his own, & can it be said by any stretch of language that the judgment so pronounced becomes the judgment of the successor Judge himself? A judgment is defined as "a statement given by the Judge of the grounds of a decree or order". How can a judge, who has not heard the evidence or the arguments in a case, give a statement of the grounds for the decree in that case? The statement of the grounds of the decree is given by the Judge who writes out the judgment after hearing arguments & taking evidence. It is a judicial act of a Ct. But the mere reading of that judgment in open Ct. by his successor is an official act in his capacity as Judge. There is a fundamental distinction between the two acts. It follows, therefore, that the judgment read out in open Ct. on 9-8-1940 by Mr. Coari is the judgment of the Ct. of the Addl. Subordinate Judge, Mr. G. C. De, who wrote it, though it was pronounced by his successor under O. 20, R 2, C. P. C. I am accordingly not disposed to accede to the argument raised at the bar that the judgment read out by Mr Coari on that date became, by a fiction of law, his own judgment so as to render him incompetent to hear an appeal against (sic) within the meaning of S. 38 (2) of the Act XII [12] of 1887. The ordering portion of the judgment, quoted above, makes it absolutely clear that the judgment pronounced was that of Sri G. C. De, Addl. Subordinate Judge, & that Mr. Coari did no more than pronounce it in open Ct.

[14] There can also be no dispute that the judgment pronounced by Mr. Coari on 9-8-1940 was that of his "predecessor". It is obvious from the order sheet that the case was transferred to the file of Mr. Goari, who was then the Subordinate Judge, on 10-7-1940 & that he posted it for hearing to 12-7 1940. Thereafter, however, under orders of the Dist. J. the case was re-transferred to Mr. De for writing out the judgment as he had held the trial. It is true that at the time the judgment was pronounced the case was on the file of the Subordinate Judge Mr. Coari. But this does not detract from the fact that, so far as the suit itself is concerned Mr. De was the predecessor as he had recorded the evidence & heard the arguments & that

Mr. Coari was his successor in the sense that the suit was transferred to Mr. Coari's file pending delivery of judgment. It does not appear to me to be correct to say that Mr. Coari intended to adopt the judgment of his predecessor as his own. This is very clear from the order passed by him on 10-7-40—immediately after the transfer of the case from the file of Mr. De—to the effect that it should be put up on 12-7-40 for re-hearing arguments. And but for the fact that the case was once again re-transferred to Mr. De, who had gone on leave, for writing out the judgment, Mr. Coari would have proceeded to hear the case afresh. By 9-8-40 the judgment prepared by Mr. De was ready. It was signed & sent to Mr. Coari on that day, who did nothing more than pronounce it in open Ct. after giving notice to the parties; in other words, Mr. Coari, as Subordinate Judge, delivered the judgment written by the Addl. Subordinate Judge while on leave.

[15] It is also beyond dispute that, a judgment written by a Judge who has gone on leave is a valid judgment though at one time there was some difference of opinion on the point prior to the enactment of Civil P. C. (Act XIV [14] of 1882) which, by S. 199, corresponding to O. 20 R. 2 of the present Code, enabled a Judge to pronounce a judgment written by his predecessor. In Parbati v. Higgin, 17 W. R. 475, the judgment was written by the Subordinate Judge who had been relieved of his office, but it was held that the judgment could not be impeached on that ground. Jackson, J. observed:

"He heard, & to all intents & purposes determined, the suit & gave judgment; but this tenure of that particular judicial office having expired before judgment could be pronounced, that judgment which was the judgment of the Judge who heard the case was pronounced as a matter of form by his successor in open Ct.."

The argument that the judgment should be written by a Judge when he is actually holding the office & before he has gone on leave or left his office otherwise, was negatived in Sunder Kuer v. Chandreshwar, 34 Cal. 293: (11 C. W. N. 501). Even when a Judge ceases to exercise jurisdiction in the place where the cause of action in that suit arose & goes to another place by transfer, he can write out his judgment & send it to his successor for delivery: Satyendra v. Kashura, 35 Cal. 756: (12 C. W. N. 682 F. B.). This case was followed in Basant Bihari v. Secretary of State, 35 ALL. 368: (19 I. C. 785), where the Dist. J. had ceased to hold the office at the time of his writing the judgment. In Mt. Lilavati v. Chhotey Singh, 42 ALL. 362: (A. I. R. (7) 1920 ALL. 332) an officiating Subordinate Judge had reverted to his substantive appointment of Munsif when he wrote the judgment in the case which he had heard as Officiating Subordinate Judge. The use of the word "predecessor" in O. 20, R. 2, is unqualified & would, therefore, apply to any officer who had tried the case, whether he is still in service, or has been transferred, or has gone on leave: See Baram Deb v. Debi Dutt, 53 ALL. 133: (A. I. R. (18) 1931 ALL. 90) & Lakhiama v. Loke Nath Das, 5 Pat, L. J. 147: (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Pat. 578).

[16] Considerable stress was, however, laid on the observations of Page C. J. in Hargulal v. Abdul Gani, 14 Rang. 136: (A. I. R. (23) 1936 Rang. 147 F. B.) where it has been suggested that if the succeeding Judge is in doubt as to the correctness of the judgment written by his predecessor he ought either to act in accordance with the provisions of O. 18, R. 15, C. P. C. or to hear the case de novo. Mr. Mohanty argues that before pronouncing judgment on 9-8-40 Mr. Coari must have used his discretion & agreed with the correctness of his predecessor's judgment & to that extent that judgment should be deemed to be his own. I can find no material to warrant this presumption, nor does the language of the Code necessarily lead to such a presumption. All that O. 20, R. 2 says is that it is optional with the succeeding Judge to pronounce his predecessor's judgment; he may either pronounce that judgment or order a re-trial & hear the case afresh. The language of the rule does not warrant the assumption that the succeeding Judge, who merely pronounces in open Ct. a judgment prepared by his predecessor, necessarily expresses himself as being in agreement with the views contained in that judgment; or that when he does not pronounce that judgment & orders a re trial he necessarily expresses himself as being in doubt as to the correctness of that judgment. Nor does the Code say anywhere that the judgment, prepared by the predecessor & pronounced by the successor should be deemed to be that of the Judge who reads it & not of the Judge who has written it. The observations in the Rangoon case relied on by Mr. Mohanty appear to me to be rather loosely worded & in any view were not necessary for the decision of that case.

[17] The foundation of Mr. Mohanty's contention is the language used in S. 38 (2), Bengal, Agra & Assam Civil Courts Act, which prohibits the hearing of an appeal by a presiding officer against "a decree or order passed by himself in another capacity". It is argued that the decree drawn up on 22-8-40 by Mr. Coari amounts to a decree passed by him in his capacity as Subordinate Judge & that as such he had no jurisdiction to hear an appeal against that decree. It is true that Mr. Coari signed the decree, but can it be said that he himself passed it when all that he did was to draw up a decree in accordance with the ordering portion of the judgment of his predecessor that he pronounced? The ordering portion of the judgment which says that "the pltf.'s suit shall be dismissed" was passed by the Addl. Subordinate Judge & only read out by Mr. Coari on 9-8-40; & the decree drawn up by Mr. Coari on 22-8-40 was in pursuance of this order. The expression 'passing the decree' occurs at several places in Civil P. C. Order 20, R. 11 says that "The Ct. may for sufficient reason at the time of passing the decree order that payment of the amount decreed shall be postponed etc. etc.".

Rule 12 says that

"The Ct. may pass a decree for possession of the property in a suit for recovery of immovable property."

The use of the expression 'passing a decree" in the several rules of the Code leads me to think that "passing a decree" is a judicial act of the Ct. which tries the suit & that the suit itself terminates with the passing of the decree which according to the definition section

"conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to the matters in controversy."

The decree is the formal expression of the final adjudication. The Judge who writes out the judgment makes a formal expression of what the result of his judgment should be. On a plain reading of the Code it is apparent that the Judge who merely signs the decree, as indeed was done in this case by Mr. Coari, cannot be said to have passed it unless he himself had written the judgment after taking evidence & hearing arguments, because the decree must conform to the judgment of the Ct. which delivers it. Mr. Coari who signed the decree in this case did nothing more than see to it that it was drawn up in accordance with the judgment of the Addl. Subordinate Judge which he read out in Ct. The word "pass" has several meanings, but used with reference to processes of law it means "to decide or adjudicate between the parties." Thus a verdict or a sentence, or a judgment is said to be "passed" which means 'given' or 'pronounced.' It has accordingly been held that a Judge who passes a decree or makes an order within the meaning of O. 47, R. 2, Civil P. C., is the Judge who expresses in his judgment what the decree is & is responsible for its substance, while the Judge who signs the decree, if he is a different man, is responsible only for its verbal accuracy. See Tamijuddi v. Satyashanker, 32 I. C. 101 : (A.I.R. (4) 1917 Cal 673). It is also well settled that a decree comes into existence from the moment the judgment itself that constitutes the decree. As was observed by the Judicial Committee in Mungni Ram v. Guru Sahay, 16 I. A. 195 at p. 200 : (17 Cal. 347 P. C)

"when a person has the judgment of the Ct. that he shall have a decree in his suit, it may be said that he then obtains his decree. The decree, when it is drawn up afterwards, relates back to the time of the judgment."

The decree is therefore, in existence from the moment the judgment is pronounced. I have, therefore, no hesitation in arriving at the conclusion that the decree against the pltf. was passed by Mr. De, the addl. Subordinate Judge, in the ordering portion of his judgment dated 9 8-40 though it was actually drawn up & signed by Mr. Coari on 22-8-40.

[18] The argument of Mr. Mohanty, based on the language of S. 38 (2), Bengal, Agra & Assam Civil Courts Act, is therefore, untenable. The rule laid down in that section is no doubt based on public policy & affects the jurisdiction of the Judge who hears an appeal but that has no application in this case. If I were convinced that the decree passed by the trial Ct. is the decree of Mr. Coari himself I would hold that the hearing of the appeal by Mr. Coari was without jurisdiction. If the case came within the strict meaning of S. 38 (2) the proceedings would be without foundation & would be of no avail or effect. But I should also like to point out that a mere deviation from a rule of procedure cannot be more than an irregularity & need not necessarily affect jurisdiction. Jurisdiction is the power of a Ct. to hear & determine a cause, to adjudicate or exercise judicial power in relation thereto. A rule of procedure is for the benefit of the litigant public or for the speedy despatch of judicial work. A contravention of a rule of procedure would be curable by consent or waiver but an inherent lack of jurisdiction cannot be cured by consent because consent cannot give jurisdiction. Bearing these principles in mind I have arrived at the conclusion that Mr. Coari at the time he pronounced the judgment of Mr. De, did not apply his judicial mind nor did he decide the case himself & that, accordingly, it cannot be contended that he passed the decree in the suit & thereby made himself ineligible to hear the appeal

[19] It was next argued that Mr. Coari had developed a bias against the pltfs. & was, therefore, incompetent to hear the appeal. This contention is sought to be rested on an order passed by Mr. Coari, while Subordinate Judge, disposing of an appln. filed by the pltfs. to amend the issue regarding the joint or separate status of the two brothers, Bhagat & Nrusingho. The order in question is No. 28 of 15-8-39. On a perusal of the order, however, it appears clear to me that Mr. Coari never went into the merits of this point at all, nor did he record evidence thereon with a view to come to a decision one way or the other. All that appears from the order is that he left it open to the pltfs. to make up their minds as to whether they would lead evidence on the point. The order was entirely non committal in its effect. This argument, therefore, rests on tenuous material. Even if there were any substance in the contention it was open to the pltfs. to raise the point before Mr. Coari when he took up the appeal for hearing. The appeal, it should be remembered, was pending before Mr. Coari for over two years & was argued by no less eminent a counsel than Dr. P. K. Sen. The point—if it had any force in it—was never raised & must be taken to have been waived by the applts. I am, therefore, not impressed by the argument that Mr. Coari had developed any leaning in favour of one party or the other by reason of his one time contact with the suit in disposing of an interlocutory appln.

[21] The two other questions that were raised are issues of fact on which the Ct. below has held against the pltfs. These relate to (1) the jointness or separateness of the two brothers Bhagat Charan & Nrusingho Charan & (2) the fact whether the adoption had taken place.

[21] It was suggested by Mr. Mohanty that it was not open to the lower appellate Ct to go into the question of the joint status of the pltfs. family as the remand order of the H. C. did not specifically direct the lower appellate Ct. during re-hearing, to record a finding on that issue. I am unable to appreciate this argument. As I have said earlier, the question of jointness was not gone into by Mr. Maher nor was it argued before the H. C. Mr. Maher did not think it necessary to canvass the question of separateness as, in his opinion, that point was not very material for the disposal of the appeal as according to him the appeal could be disposed of solely by recording a finding on the issue whether the party on whom lay the onus of establishing the adoption set up by him, discharged that burden or not. In his opinion, the deft. failed to discharge the onus cast on him & accordingly the pltfs were entitled to a decree. That was the only question on which he recorded a finding & that finding was reversed by the H C. in second appeal. It is clear from the above that the entire matter (including a determination of the question of separateness or jointness of the pltfs.' family on which the trial Ct. had recorded a finding) was at large before Mr. Coari when he took up the appeal for re-hearing & it was perfectly open to him to go into that question & arrive at his own finding. In this Ct. Mr. Mohanty was asked whether this question might be left open by us but he appeared to be in two minds & the parties did not agree that the matter should be left open by us, particularly as evidence had been let in & findings recorded on it by the Cts. of fact below.

[22] The trial Ct. held that in the absence of evidence that Achyutananda, father of Bhagat & Nrusingho, treated the properties said to have been acquired by him as his separate & exclusive properties the presumption would be that those properties were thrown into the ancestral stock & formed a part of the joint family property. It was suggested in evidence that Achyutananda had only about two acres of ancestral property & that the rest of the enormous property that he had acquired were purchased out of his own earnings in the names of different persons. There is, however, no evidence as to what the income from the two acres & odd of family property was & whether the income would have been sufficient to constitute the nucleus for the later acquisitions by Achyutananda. A member of the joint family who acquires property may allow other members of that joint family to manage it or to enjoy the income arising out of it. This may be due to a variety of reasons. But this circumstance alone cannot militate against the presumption that such property acquired by a member out of his own earnings, constitutes his self-acquisition. It is not unusual in joint family, for its members to utilise the income so long as they are joint. The real test in such cases is the intention behind the act. Does that act indicate that the acquirer intended to throw it into the common stock & not to claim separate title thereto ? It certainly cannot be said that the moment a member acquires property with his own earnings he should immediately separate himself from the other members in order that he might treat his acquisition as separate; & that failure to do so should necessarily lead to a presumption that the property would be a part of the joint family property. In the absence of any evidence of a positive character to show that the acquirer intended that his acquisition should be treated as a part of the family stock, the presumption would be that it must remain his self-acquisition. It was neither alleged, nor attempted to be proved, that Achyutananda had manifested any intention to waive his separate rights to his self-acquired property at any time. All the evidence, on the other hand, points to the contrary. The intention to benefit the family by spending the income accruing out of his self acquisition is quite different & distinguishable from an intention to transfer the property itself to the joint family. The trial Ct. presumed, from the absence of evidence pointing to separate dealings in regard to the self-acquired property, that Achyutananda's self acquisitions had been blended with the ancestral properties. In taking this view he appears to have fallen into an error. There is no such presumption in law & it is always a question of fact—to be determined by evidence—whether Achyutananda did, in fact, surrender his self-acquired properties for being merged with the common family stock. In my opinion the learned Dist. J. took the correct view of the position. He found from the recitals in Exs C, D & E followed by mutation of names in accordance with the dispositions made in these documents that Achyutananda did not waive his separate rights to the properties that he had purchased & that they remained, till the very end, his separate properties. Exhibit C is a deed of endowment, executed by Achyutananda & his wife in 1909 dedicating some properties in favour of two deities Radhamohan & Patitapaban, installed by them. The deed recites that on the death of the donors their youngest son, Nrusingho, should be the marfatdar of the said deities. This was followed up by an appln. by Achyutananda for registration of his name in respect of these properties as marfatdar, in the year 1910. Exhibit D is a registered will executed by Achyutananda in 1926 disposing of his separate properties in favour of Bhagat Charan, Nrusingho Charan & Sachchidananda. In 1917 Achyutananda got himself registered as the guardian of Bhagat (who was then a minor) in respect of the properties given to him in accordance with the will. Similarly, he got Nrusingho's name registered in respect of the properties given to him in accordance with the will. Exhibit E is a deed of settlement executed by Indramoni, mother of Bhagat, under which Bhagat was to receive a share of 8 annas 6 pies while Nrusingho was to receive the remaining 7 annas 6 pies, of the properties settled by the deed. On the death of Achyutananda, Bhagat Charan applied as guardian of Nrusingho for registration of Nrusingho's name as marfatdar in respect of the deities. On the very same day he applied for registration of his own name in respect of some other properties which had devolved on him. These applns. are marked as EXS A to A 10 of the years 1910 to 1921. The learned Dist. J. was, therefore, right in drawing an inference from these documents that the severance of status was effected by Achyutananda himself during his life time & that it was followed up by Bhagat Charan on the death of Achyutananda. The properties were never in fact divided by metes & bounds & the management was all the time in the hands of Bhagat. It is also obvious that though the bulk of the properties had been separately recorded in the names of the two brothers some of the properties had been promiscuously registered at the last settlement. It is, however, clear that the agents who were actually in charge of the management of the properties were appointed by both the brothers by a joint power of attorney, Ex. J, which was executed in the year 1927 jointly by both the brothers. Furthermore, in Ex. K, which is a copy of a deposition made by Bhagat Charan in 1929, when he was examined as a witness in a suit brought by Nrusingho Charan, Bhagat stated as follows: 'I am the uterine brother of the pltf. (Nrusingho Charan). I am separate in mess & property since 1916." It should be noted that both the will & the deed of settlement referred to above were executed in the year 1916. Bhagat also said "I look after the joint property for the pltf. & myself. Plaintiff (Nrusingho) is not Ismali tenant." These facts constitute clear evidence of the separate status of the brothers. Their shares had been defined & were being managed on behalf of Nrusingho by Bhagat. The lower appellate Ct. was, therefore, justified in holding that there was no coparcenary between Bhagat & Nrusingho—a fact which goes against the case set up by the pltfs.

[23] It now remains to consider the only other question of fact, regarding the adoption, on which the Cts. below have recorded concurrent findings. It is necessary to state here that functions of a second appellate Ct. are limited & we would be slow to interfere with a finding of fact, even if we were inclined to take a different view from the Cts. below. But after hearing counsel who have taken considerable pains to place the evidence before us, I am satisfied that if I were to discuss the evidence independently I would have come to the same conclusion as the learned Dist. J. has done.

[24] A curious feature of the case is that every single fact having some bearing on the question of adoption is contested & rival versions are given by the both parties. To improbabilise the adoption pltfs. sought to establish (1) that Nrusingho Charan himself was not present at the time & at the place where the adoption is alleged to have taken place, (2) that Bhagat Charan was not present at that time, (3) that Sri Lakshmidhar Mohanty was away at Puri at that time, (4) that the adoptee himself was not present at the time & that Nrusingho Charan's wife was then enciente. Except the second point which was argued before us with some zeal the others were very properly passed over by learned counsel for the applts. The learned Dist. J. has referred to the evidence of P. Ws. 16 & P. W. 40 & agreeing with the trial Ct. declined to place any reliance on their statement that Nrusingho Charan was then at the house of Nabakrushna Choudhury. The evidence of P. Ws. 29 & 39 to the effect that Lakshmidhar Babu was at Puri at the time is far too clumsy & artificial to be believed & the remark of the learned Dist. J. that these two witnesses are unreliable appears to be justified. A few other circumstances suggesting the improbability of the adoption were brought to our attention, such as for instance the suggestion that Nrusingho Charan being an England-returned man would not think of adopting, but these are too trivial in nature to deserve notice. Nor would the disparity in age between the adoptee & his sister Pramila affect a decision on the issue of adoption one way or the other. [After discussing evidence his Lordship proceeded:]

[25] On the whole the evidence appears to show that from 1-8-1934, that is six days after the death of Nrusingho, Gyanendranath had been described as the adopted son of Nrusingho by Bhagat himself & that in numerous documents Gyanendranath's right to succeed to the properties of Nrusingho has been admitted and enforced by Bhagat himself. These admissions may not by themselves be enough to support the allegation of adoption if, in fact, there was no other evidence of such adoption. But, as the learned Dist. J. has rightly pointed out, these admissions, coupled with the subsequent conduct of the parties & the direct evidence of witnesses examined by the deft. undoubtedly support the case of adoption. The learned Judge has made the correct approach to the question in attaching no greater importance to the admissions than as probabilising the statements made by the witnesses on oath & not as creating an estoppel against Bhagat.

[26] It is well established that what a party himself admits to be true may reasonably be presumed to be so, Slatterie v. Pooley, (1840) 6 M. & W. 664: (10 L. J. Ex. 8). In Chandra Kunwar v. Narput Singh, 34 I. A. 27. (29 ALL. 184 P. C.), the Judicial Committee had to deal with the admission made by pltfs. in some deeds to which the defendant was not a party. Their Lordships observed that the party making the admission may give evidence to rebut this presumption & that there was no estoppel but unless & until that is done the fact admitted must be taken to be established. It is well settled that the express admissions of a party to the suit or admissions implied from his conduct are evidence — indeed strong evidence — against him unless he can prove that such admissions were mistaken or were untrue & he is not estopped or concluded by them unless another person has been induced by them to alter his condition. In the written statement filed by Bhagat as deft. 2 he alleged that the father of deft. 1 (Gyanendarnath), viz., Lakshidhar Babu, proposed to him two days after Nrusingho's death to set apart a portion of his properties for the maintenance of his widow & the daughter of Nrusingho, to relieve himself of the burden of maintaining & looking after them for all time to come, & that in a very weak moment Bhagat agreed to the same. It is further averred that sometime later Lakshmidhar Babu approached Bhagat again with a further proposal that deft. 1 should be treated as the adopted son of Nrusingho as he would be of help to Bhagat & a good substitute for Nrusingho. When this second proposal was made is not clear from the evidence. But so far as the first proposal is concerned there is a difference between the version given about it by Bhagat in his written statement & the version given about it by him in the witness box. What Bhagat said in his evidence as P. W. 42 was:

"On the 27th July she was sent to our house. I was sent for by Lakshmidhar Babu. He then enquired what property I would give to the widow. I agreed to give some property for her maintenance. Lakshmidhar's wife proposed that I should give some property to Mantu (Gyanendra) as the son of Nrusingho. Lakshmidar Babu said that Gyanendranath would help me in many ways. Ultimately I agreed as Bijayram said that there might be litigation."

This shows that Lakshmidhar Babu's wife proposed on the 27th of July that Gyanendranath should be taken as the adopted son of Nrusingho & that Bhagat agreed to the same. The case as set out in Bhagat's written statement that deft. 1's father

"again approached this deft. with a further proposal that insted of setting apart a portion of the property for the maintenance of his sister-in-law it could be more to the satisfaction & consolation of his sister-in-law that her brother, deft. 1, should be treated as her adopted son," has been altogether abandoned. I am not satisfied that this point which was argued with great vigour has been established. It is difficult to believe that Bhaghat Charan was not depressed by the death of his brother or that he had developed such softness of mind that he readily agreed to part with his property & introduce Gyanedranath as the adopted son of Nrusingho merely on a suggestion from Lakshmidhar Babu to do so. It seems to me that Bhagat Charan had to resort to this plea as no other was conceivable in order to get out of the numerous admissions made by him in the various documents almost from the moment of Nrusingho's death. It was argued that Bhagat executed the partition deed at the instance of Lakshmidhar Babu who was anxious to obtain an admission from Bhagat about the status of deft. 1, & that consequently it must be held void & no reliance would be placed upon it. Even if the partition deed were to be ruled out of the evidence there is a mass of equally reliable document's case. The onus was upon the pltf.-appt. & they have failed to discharge it by showing that the admissions were made either through a mistake or under the influence of fraud practised upon Bhagat. In the absence of such evidence the pltf's. case must fail. When an applt. comes to Ct. to set aside an adoption on the foot of which there is a partition, the obligation lies on him to so constitute his suit as to enable the Ct. to deal with the whole subject-matter & dispose of all the rights & interests of the parties to the deed. But in this case the suit is expressly so constituted that no relief is asked for to get rid of the partition deed under which Gyanendranath is given a share in the family property. That is so because of the fact that Bhagat was anxious to cut off Gyanendranath with only the limited amount of property allotted to him under the deed of partition. His attitude is at least equivocal & I have not been able to make out how he can seek to set aside the adoption without also repudiating the deed of partition.

[27] On the whole I am convinced that the case set up by the deft. has been established & that the findings of the Ct. below have been correctly arrived at. The appeal fails & is dismissed with costs throughout.

[28] Jagannadhadas J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my learned brother with whose conclusions I agree.

[29] The only question in this case on the merits is as to whether the alleged adoption of the deft. Gyanendra by Nrusingho Charan, the brother of pltf. 2 has been satisfactorily established. Both the trial Ct. & the lower appellate Ct. after remand have concurrently found that it has been so established. It would require exceptional reasons for a second appellate Ct not to accept that concurrent finding. It is true that the onus is heavy against the person setting up an adoption especially when there is no contemporaneous deed of adoption, as in this case. But both the Cts. below have considered the case fairly in all its aspects keeping this onus in view & we are unable to find that any material evidence or circumstances have been omitted to be considered or that the Cts. below have come to the conclusion adopting any perverse reasoning. In view, however, of the very strenuous arguments by the learned counsel for the applt. suggesting that there were lacuna in the judgmens which entitled a second appellate Ct. to interfere, we have heard the appeal for a number of days virtually as a first appeal on the evidence. I agree with my learned brother in thinking that even on the footing of this being a first appeal we should have found no reason for coming to any conclusion other than what has been arrived at by the Cts. below. Since my learned brother has dealt with the merits of this question fully it is not necessary that I should cover the same grounds. I shall content myself with indicating broadly the lines on which we have considered the matter & come to our conclusion. The decision ultimately turns upon the choice between two sets of witnesses & the weight to be attached to certain alleged admissions on either side based on their respective documents. Learned counsel for the applt has very strenuously urged that the decision has to be reached mainly, if not solely, on a consideration of the oral evidence & its intrinsic reliability or otherwise & should not be deflected by a consideration of the alleged admissions in favour of the adoption. I cannot agree with this contention. In a case of this kind, it is legitimate to accept oral evidence, on a consideration of the documentary evidence & the probabilities, unless such oral evidence is intrinsically unreliable & worthless. That is the approach to the assessment of evidence of adoption in a similar case by the P. C in Arjuno Naiko v. Modano Mohono, A. I. R. (27) 1940 P. C. 153 at pp. 154, 155: (I. L. R. (1940) Kar. P C. 349).

[30] On the pltf's side have been exhibited various applns, Exs. 1, 2 & 3 series in which it does appear that the deft, after the date of the alleged adoption, did not describe himself as the son of his adoptive father, but as the son of his natural father. He has given some reasonable explanation for this which the Cts. below have accepted. As against this the deft. relies upon a whole series of documents to which pltf. 2 or his agents are parties starting from within a week of death of Nrusingho Charan & continuing right up to the date when the suit was filed & also for some short time thereafter. These documents contain unequivocal admissions by pltf 2 relating to the adoption of the deft & furnish also evidence regarding the conduct of himself & his agents during that period on that footing. Of these admissions, the most important are a joint power of attorney Ex. J. executed by Bhagat Charan & Gyanendra on 1-8-1934 (Nrusingho Charan having died on 25-7-1934) & Ex. CC. a partition deed executed on 28-5-1935 jointly by the second pltf. & the deft. The various documents have been noticed by the learned Dist. J. Sri Coari in his judgment at pp. 62 & 63 of the paper book. There can be no doubt that if the admissions of pltf. 2 contained in & his conduct evidenced by, these documents are to be given their full weight, the pltfs. have an extremely up hill task. It has not been suggested that these admissions & conduct of pltf. 2 cannot be used as against pltf. 1 also. It appears likely, that feeling the weight & force of this documentary evidence the suit was filed in the first instance only by pltf. 1 making pltf. 2 a party deft; & it was alleged in the plaint that pltf. 1 was born in April 1935, just prior to the deed of partition Ex. CC in order that an argument may be advanced that the admissions of pltf. 2 in Ex. CC. do not bind pltf. 1 who had an independent right by birth in the family property already by then. But it has been almost conclusively shown by the evidence, as in fact, was found by the Cts. below that pltf. 1 was born in 1936. But even if it were otherwise, the admissions made by the father in the power of attorney Ex. J. & the partition deed Ex. CC. would be clearly admissible as against pltf. 1 the father being the representative in interest of the son in dealing with ancestral property.

[31] In order, therefore, to get over the weight & effect of these admissions & conduct the substantial explanation which has been attempted on behalf of the pltfs. is that these admissions were the result of an arrangement entered into between pltf. 2 & the natural father of deft. 1 Lakshmidhar Mohanty, within two days after the death of Nrusingho Charan whereby it was arranged that in order to give solace to the bereaved widow of Nrusingho Charan deft. 1 was to be treated as her adopted son though not in fact adopted & that he should be given the property which pltf. 2 out of his generosity & consideration for her would probably have given to her by way of a liberal maintenance in any case, & that the sentimental depression of pltf. 2 on the death of his only brother & on the consequent deplorable condition of his brother's widow was exploited to the full by the shrewd & wordly-wise Lakshmidhar Mohanty. (See para 14 of deft's. 2 written statement). Not only is this case somewhat at variance with the case of fraud in execution & registration of Ex. CC. put forward by pltf 2, then deft. 2, in his written statement, para 17, filed on 6-5-39 after he had the advantage of seeing the written statement of deft. 1 filed on 22-1-39, but we are satisfied that there is nothing at all in the evidence & the probabilities to substantiate this explanation. We are satisfied that neither is pltf. 2 so gullible nor is the natural father of deft. 1 proved on the evidence to be of such a scheming nature as to probabilise the truth of any such explanation. Further whatever may be said if the partition deed Ex. CC stood alone, it is almost incomprehensible how the joint power of attorney containing unequivocal admission about adoption came to be executed within a week of Nrusingho Charan's death & how various other steps were taken on the footing of deft. 1's adoption long before the partition deed, Ex. CC was executed & without any written evidence or acknowledgment at that time of the alleged arrangement said to have been partially or fraudulently embodied later in Ex. CC. We have attempted to scrutinise whether there is anything in the manner in which the properties have been divided under the partition deed, Ex. CC, having regard to the probable values of the respective allotments & the pre-existing state of the apparent title indicated by Exs. C, D, & E, as between the two brothers Bhagat Charan & Nrusingho Charan in respect of the various items comprised in the two allotments, to throw any light as to the probable springs of action of either side when entering into this partition deed, Ex. CC & to see whether the explanation now put forward by pltf. 2 is reasonably likely. Without any elaboration of this aspect, it is sufficient to say that this line of approach gave us nothing which would probabilise the pltf's. explanation, but if any, it would confirm the case as to circumstances under which according to the deft. the partition deed came into existence.

[32] Learned counsel for the applt. has taken us through a good deal of correspondence relating to a period subsequent to the death of Nrusingho Charan to substantiate the probability & truth of the explanation put forward on the pltf's side for the admissions & conduct of pltf. 2 above noticed. He has also referred us to some correspondence at about the time of the alleged adoption to show that the adoption must be untrue as a fact. Learned counsel for the resp. has also in his turn invited our attention to a number of other letters which according to him support his case. All these letters have been merely marked as exhibits without objection. but the contents thereof have in most cases not been put to the persons connected with them when they were in the box, either in their chief examination or cross-examination. It appears to me, therefore, that it is not permissible to use the contents of such letters as proving the statements therein made & to make use of the statements made therein for the purpose of drawing inferences one way or the other with reference to the disputed questions arising in the case. I would, therefore, keep out of consideration the use of those letters on either side for the purposes for which they were sought to be used. But even if we were prepared to attach any value to them, & take them into consideration, one cannot help feeling that there is more in them in favour of the deft's. case. Here again, I need not enter into the details. It is enough to notice Ex. B-25, dated 25-4-37 containing instructions from Bhagat to his clerk Bhajaram to make use of Ex. CC the partition deed for getting his name registered as the sole owner in respect of 4 touzis on the strength of the said Ex. CC quickly & quietly & with special instructions to tear away the letter.

[33] I am, therefore, definitely of the view that the admissions & the conduct of pltf. 2 relating to the adoption remain without any satisfactory explanation & must tell heavily against the case of the pltfs. Of course, it is clear that mere admissions & conduct cannot create the status of adoption, but if the Cts. below, in viewing the positive evidence for & against the adoption, have accepted the evidence of witnesses in favour of the adoption & that is also fully corroborated by the later admissions & conduct of the most interested person pltf. 2, it is obvious that there can be no reason for not accepting the findings of the Cts. below. Learned counsel for the applts. has taken us through the entire oral evidence for both sides & has made his comments on the credibility or otherwise of the witnesses & has attempted to argue that the oral evidence on the pltf's side has been rejected, & on the deft's. side accepted by the Cts. below for untenable reasons. He has also pointed out that almost all the witnesses that speak to the positive case of deft. 1 as regards the factum of adoption are either persons who are in some way under the influence of deft. 1's father or persons who may be called chance witnesses, & who are said to have been there casually without any kind of previous intimation or invitation. These circumstances, however, are not by themselves sufficient reasons for rejecting the evidence of the witnesses, especially having regard to the fact that Nrusingho Charan was at the time in a condition of health which resulted in his death a few days thereafter & which may account for absence of publicity or of a formal deed of adoption. Apart from the fact that the evidence of these witnesses has been accepted by the trial Ct. which saw them & also by the appellate Ct. on remand, I have been impressed, speaking for myself, with the evidence of Rai Sahib Gopal Chandra Patnaik & Adasi Somasekharm, D. Ws. 9 & 5 respectively on a perusal of their depositions. The evidence of P. W. 30, the widow of Nrusingho Charan is also particularly impressive & there is no reason suggested why she would have come forward to support the adoption, though of her own brother, depriving herself of the right to succeed to property of her husband & of the right to pass it on to her daughter & later to her prospective daughter's sons. It is necessary to remember in this connection, as has been found by the lower appellate Ct. that her husband Nrusingho Charan was separated from pltf 2. It has been suggested that having regard to the admitted fact of jointness in mess between Bhagat Charan & her husband he may not have been aware of their separation in status. But it is unlikely that neither she nor her father who was a lawyer, were unaware of the legal status of Nrusingho Charan & were altogether unacquainted with the existence of documents like Exs. C, D, E, A series & J series, which show that the properties were held in separate title. I am, therefore, satisfied that the adoption of deft. 1 by the late Nrusingho Charan is amply borne out by the evidence & the probabilities & that the concurrent finding in the Cts. below in this behalf must be confirmed.

[34] A question has also been raised in this suit as to whether pltf. 2 & Nrusingho Charan were separated or joint in status. This question arises only incidentally in this litigation as having a bearing on the maintainability of the suit by pltf. 1 alone, as it was originally constituted, & as having also a bearing on the probability or otherwise of the factum of adoption & the truth or otherwise of some aspects of the evidence relating thereto. It is enough to say that I agree with the finding of the lower appellate Ct. after remand on this point. The finding to the contrary by the trial Ct is clearly vitiated by its wrong assumption that because Achutananda had two acres of ancestral property, all his subsequent earnings must be presumed to have been thrown into the common stock & enjoyed jointly by all the members of the family. The documents, EXS. C, D, & E, A series & J series furnish clear & unequivocal evidence of the fact that the properties were being held by the two brothers Bhagat & Nrusingho as separate. The argument that documents were all nominal has no substance & no merit. I agree, therefore, that Bhagat & Nrusingho were separate in status.

[35] On the merits of the second appeal the judgment of the learned Dist. J. on appeal has therefore to be affirmed.

[36] There remains the point relating to the validity of the hearing of the appeal by Sri Coari as Dist. J.

[37] At the hearing of this appeal, a question was raised, at the outset, on behalf of the applt. based on S. 38 (2), Bengal, Agra & Assam Civil Courts Act of 1887 (which is in force in this province). The point involved does not appear to be covered by any direct authority & requires careful consideration.

[38] The facts giving rise to the point have been set out in the judgment of my learned brother & it is unnecessary to reiterate them. The judgment of the trial Ct. in this case was prepared by the then Addl. subordinate Judge Sri Gopal Chandra De, but was actually pronounced by the principal subordinate Judge Sri C. C. Coari on 9-8 40. The appeal against that judgment lay to the Dist. Ct. & by the time it came up for hearing, on remand by the H. C. the same Sri Coari was the Dist. J. He heard the appeal, without any objection, & disposed of the same by his judgment dated 10-3 47. The present second appeal is against that judgment. The point raised is that Sri Coari was incompetent to hear the appeal & that his judgment is a nullity, by virtue of S. 38, Bengal, Agra & Assam Civil Courts Act of 1887 which is in the following terms:

"The presiding officer of an appellate Civil Ct. under this Act shall not try an appeal against the decree or order passed by himself in another capacity."

It is argued that the decree in the suit was passed by Sri Coari & that therefore he was prohibited from hearing the appeal. In this case not only was the judgment pronounced by Sri Coari on 9-8-40, but the decree that was thereafter prepared was in fact also signed by Sri Coari on 22-8-40. The decision of the point raised depends on the question whether Sri Coari can be said to be "the Judge who passed the decree in the suit" within the meaning of the above provision of the Civil Courts Act. There is no indication in that Act itself as to what is meant by "the Judge who passed the decree". If one turns to the scheme of the Civil P. C. the provisions therein clearly indicate that in an ordinary case where a judgment has been reserved after hearing, there are three stages : (1) the writing of the judgment; (2) the pronouncement of the judgment followed by dating & signing & (3) the preparation & the signing of the decree. It is conceded in argument that the mere preparation & signing of the decree under the provisions of O. 20, Rr. 6, 7, & 8 do not constitute "the passing of the decree". This is also clear from the fact that various provisions of the Code show that the rights & obligations under a decree arise not from the date when the decree is drafted & signed but from the very moment that the judgment is pronounced. This has been pointed out in the judgment in Ramchandra v. Bhalu Patnaik, I. L. R. 1950 Cut. 253 at pp. 270 & 271 : (A. I. R. (37) 1950 Ori. 125, F. B.). It is also indisputable that the mere writing of the judgment does not constitute the passing of the decree, though in fact it has been later on pronounced. Order 20, R. 3 shows that a judgment becomes final & unalterable only when it is pronounced & not before it, & O. 20, R. 7 shows that the judgment becomes operative only from the date of the pronouncement. There can, therefore, be no doubt that a decree cannot be said to have been passed before the judgment has been pronounced. According to S. 33, C. P. C. the Ct. after the case has been heard, shall pronounce the judgment & on such pronouncement a decree shall follow. This provision as well as the provision under O. 20, R. 7 clearly indicate that the judgment & the decree are simultaneous. Therefore in one sense a decree is passed when the judgment is pronounced, especially where the judgment contains not merely the grounds of the decision, but the formal expression of the adjudication inclusive of the reliefs granted: See Ramchandra v. Bhalu Patnaik, I. L. R. (1950) Cut. 253 at p. 271: (A. I. R. (37) 1950 Ori 125 F.B.). It appears, therefore, clear that the Judge who pronounced the judgment also "passes the decree" at the same time according to the scheme of the Civil P. C. & in that sense he is the Judge who passes the decree, & especially for purposes of S. 38 (2), Civil Courts Act. Under the Civil P. C., the Judge may pronounce a judgment prepared by himself under O. 20, R. 1 or by a predecessor under O. 20, R. 2. It is not very clear at the outset that even for purposes of Civil P. C., in the latter case, he is to be treated as the Judge who passed the decree for all purposes. For instance, under O. 47, Rr. 1 & 2, an appln. for review of judgment is to be made to the Ct. which passed the decree, but where the appln. is on a ground other than discovery of new & important matter, or an error apparent on the face of the decree, the appln. is to be made only to the Judge who passed the decree & it cannot be heard by any succeeding Judge unless he issues notice on it. It is clear that the object of this provision is that the prima facie decision as to whether the judgment requires reconsideration on merits is left to the very Judge who had previously applied his mind & given his decision, just as for instance leave to appeal against the judgment of a single Judge in the H. C. can be given only by that very Judge. Having regard to the intention & purposes of this provision, the phrase "the Judge who passed the decree" in O. 47, R. 2, has been construed in Tamijuddin v. Satyashanker, A I R. (4) 1917 Cal. 673: (32 I. C. 101), as referring to the Judge who delivered the judgment & thereby expressed what the decree is & is responsible for its substance & not merely to the Judge who formally signed the decree.

[39] In construing, therefore, what is indicated by the phrase "Judge who passed the decree" in S. 38 (2), Civil Courts Act, it appears to me to be equally permissible to consider what is the intention & object of the provision. That intention & object is one that is unmistakably gathered from S. 38 itself. Sub-s. (1) of S. 38 provides that:

"the presiding officer of a civil Ct. shall not try any suit or other proceeding to which he is a party or in which he is personally interested."

Sub-s. (2) provides that:

"the presiding officer of an appellate civil Ct. shall not try an appeal against a decree or order passed by himself in another capacity."

Sub s. (1) apparently is intended to provide against the judgment of Ct. being perverted by the personal interest of the judicial officer. Sub-s. (2) is meant to provide a safeguard against the bias in favour of his own previous judgment operating to deflect the right decision on appeal. If the phrase 'the Judge who passed the decree' is to be taken to mean 'the Judge who pronounced the judgment' irrespective of whether he prepared the judgment or not, the prohibition would apply to a person who performed the mere mechanical & official act of pronouncing the judgment prepared by another, but would exclude the very person who had prepared the judgment, but not pronounced it, if per chance he happens to have become later the presiding officer of the appellate Ct. before whom the appeal comes up for hearing. It would be unreasonable to construe the phrase the "Judge who passed the decree" so as to produce these anomalous results. The phrase "the Judge who passed the decree" in S. 38, sub s. (2), should, therefore, I think be construed as applicable only to the Judge who prepares the judgment & in the normal course pronounces it & thereby passes decree & not to the Judge who merely pronounces the judgment under the provisions of O. 20, R. 2, without having himself prepared it. That, words or phrases in a Statute having larger import can, having regard to the purpose & object intended, be understood in a limited sense, is a well-known rule of construction. See Macleod v. Attorney-General, 1891 A. C. 455: (60 L. J. P. C. 55). That this limitation is reasonable is confirmed by a consideration of the history of the provision in the Civil P. C. relating to the power of a successor Judge to pronounce the judgment of a predecessor. That provision was not to be found in the Civil P. C. of 1859, but was first introduced in the Civil Procedure Codes of 1877 & 1882 as S. 199 thereof & repeated in 1909 Civil P. C. as O. 20 R 2. So far as the Civil Courts Act is concerned, it is to be noticed that the provision prohibiting a Judge to hear an appeal against a decree passed by himself in another capacity, was one that was enacted prior to the introduction in the Civil P. C of the provision authorising a successor to pronounce a predecessor's judgment. The present Bengal, Agra & Assam Civil Courts Act of 1887 which is a Central Act, was preceded by the Bengal Civil Courts Act (Act IV [6] of 1871) which was also a Central Act. Corresponding to sub-s. (2) of S. 38 of the present Act, there was in the prior Act, the following provision in S 25 (2) thereof: "No subordinate Judge, Addl. Judge or Dist. J., shall try any appeal against a decree or order passed by himself in another capacity." It is interesting to note that there is a similar provision in S. 17, Madras Civil Courts Act of 1873, which is also a Central Act. It cannot be doubted that the phrase "passing the decree" in these Central Civil Courts Act of that date, must be construed with reference to the procedure authorised by the then Civil P. C. of 1859 & must therefore refer to the Judge who having prepared the judgment pronounced it himself. It appears to me, therefore, permissible to construe the same phrase in the Civil Courts Act of 1887 in the same way, unless it can be said that the Civil P. C. of 1877 & 1882 by enacting S. 199 deliberately intended to bring about or necessarily brought about, a change in the meaning of the phrase "Judge who passed a decree."

[40] The question then is whether the provision in the later Civil Procedure Codes of 1877 & 1882 authorising a successor Judge to pronounce the judgment of a predecessor Judge, renders the judgment & the decree so pronounced that of the pronouncing Judge. The principle underlying this provision has been fully explained in a very (sic) case in Parbati v. Higgin, 17 W. R. 475, the judgment in which is dated 3 4-1872, before S. 199, C. P. C. of 1877 was enacted. That judgment recognised the validity of the practice which probably had grown up by that time & which received legislative recognition later in 1877. In that judgment Jackson J. says as follows:

"Then as to the other question, it appears to me that there is really nothing in it. Babu Bolak Chand, when he heard the suit, apparently when he made up his mind as to the judgment which he would give, was actually subordinate Judge of the District & the circumstance that he had no time to write out as required by the Code the judgment which has to be delivered in Ct. before he was relieved in his office, does not, I think, affect the validity of that judgment. He heard & to all intents & purposes determined the suit & gave judgment; but his tenure of that particular judicial office having expired before judgment could be pronounced, that judgment which was the judgment of the Judge who heard the case, was pronounced as a matter of form by his successor in open Ct. That judgment therefore appears to me unimpeachable on any such ground."

This passage explains very clearly the theory underlying the provision in S. 199, C. P. C. of 1877 & 1882 & the corresponding provision in O. 20,

R. 2 of the present Civil P. C. That theory, it seems to me, is that the successor Judge pronounces the judgment of the predecessor Judge as his statutory proxy, & the judgment so pronounced is "to all intents & purposes the determination of the predecessor Judge". It is, therefore, as though the pronouncing of the judgment, which undoubtedly constitutes the passing of the decree is to be taken in law to be the pronouncement by the predecessor Judge. If this is the correct view of the legal effect of O. 20, R. 2, the connotation of the phrase "the Judge who passed the decree" in the civil Courts Act, need not be taken to have undergone any change after 1877. But it still continues to mean as it originally did in 1877. The Judge, who having heard the suit & prepared the judgment, pronounces the judgment & thereby passes the decree; pronouncement by the successor in any case where it becomes necessary being tantamount to pronouncement by the predecessor himself. I venture to submit that this construction of the relevant phrase in S. 38 (2) does no violence to the language & avoids the anomaly, already pointed out arising from equating "passing of the decree" to a "mere mechanical pronouncement of the judgment."

[41] The only serious objection to this construction is the view pressed by learned counsel for the applt. relying on certain authorities that under O. 20, R. 2, the successor Judge has the discretion either to pronounce or not to pronounce the judgment of the predecessor Judge. It is argued that if the statutory provision gives the discretion, the judgment pronounced in exercise of the discretion must be taken to be the judgment of the successor Judge by his adopting it It is, therefore, suggested that the theory underlying O 20. R. 2 is to be taken to be not that the pronouncement by the successor is to be treated as the pronouncement by the predecessor; but that the judgment of the predecessor is to be treated as the judgment of the successor, if he chooses to pronounce it. That O. 20, R. 2 gives a discretion is maintained on the authority of the cases in Lachman Prasad v Ram Kishan, 33 ALL. 236 : (8 I. C. 1096), Fort Gloster Jute Mfg. Co. v. Chandra Kumar, 46 Cal. 978 : (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Cal. 537) & Hargulal v. Abdul Gani, A. I. R. (23) 1936 Rang. 147 : (14 Rang. 136 F. B.). Out of these cases it may be noticed that the pronouncements in Fort Gloster Jute Mfg. Co. v. Chandra Kumar, 46 Cal. 978 : (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Cal. 537) & Hargulal v. Abdul Gani, A. I. R. (23) 1936 Rang. 147 : (14 Rang. 136 F. B), are obiter. The only case which specifically decides that the word "may" in O. 20, R. 2 is to be construed as involving a discretion is the case in Lachman Prasad v. Ram Kishan, 33 ALL. 236 : (8 I. C. 1096). I venture to doubt the correctness of the view that the word "may" in O. 20, R. 2 is to be construed as involving a discretion. Such a construction fails to take note of the fact that the Code provides no indication to guide the exercise of the discretion, which if it exists, must be judicial discretion & not arbitrary caprice. It is to be noticed that O. 20, R. 2 while it authorises the pronouncement of the judgment, does not authorise the reconsideration thereof by the successor & it would not be reasonable to construe it as giving, by implication, a power to the successor, virtually by way of an appeal or review. It is no doubt true that the word 'may' in a statute does not necessarily mean "must" as pointed out in Julius v. Bishop of Oxford, (1880) 5 A. C. 214 : (49 L. J. Q. B. 577). But as pointed out in In re Baker, Nichols v. Baker, (1890) 44 Ch. D. 262 : (59 L. J. Ch. 661), there is always another question also to be decided in construing the word "may" namely, whether there is anything in the Statute which makes it the duty of the person on whom the power is conferred to exercise that power. Cases have held that where a statutory provision confers an authority to do a judicial act in a certain case, it is imperative on those who are authorised to exercise that authority, when the case arises. & the exercise depends not on the discretion of the Cts. or Judges, but on the proof of the particular case out of which the power arises. See Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, 9th Edn., p. 250; also, Queen v. Tithe Comrs. (1850) 117 E. R. 179 : (14 Q. B. 459) & Macdougall v. Paterson, (1851) 138 E. R. 672 : (11 C. B. 755). It appears to me therefore that the word "may" in O. 20, R. 2 must be construed not as involving a discretion, but as conferring an authority which it is the duty of the successor to exercise, if there is on record a prepared & signed judgment of his predecessor, who heard the suit. To say that the successor has the discretion not to pronounce it, is to deprive the parties concerned, of the benefit of the trial itself or at least of the impressions & opinions formed by the Judge, who actually tried the case & saw the witnesses. It appears to me not to be right to imply from a mere authority given to pronounce a predecessor's judgment, a power also to ignore the same or to sit virtually in appeal against that judgment. I venture therefore to submit, with all respect, that as at present advised, I do not agree with the view that O. 20, R. 2, involves a discretion. But I do not wish to express my final opinion on the question since it has not been fully argued on either side before us in all its bearings.

[42] Even, however, if the rulings laying down that the word "may" in O. 20, R. 2 is to be construed as involving a discretion, are to be held as authoritative & laying down the correct law, there is no reason to import into the construction of O. 20, R. 2, a legal fiction in every case that a predecessor's judgment when pronounced by a successor, becomes his judgment. As already pointed out O. 20, R. 2 does not enjoin reconsideration of the judgment by successor & the pronouncement therefore, might well be a mechanical act. Whether therefore a successor by pronouncing a predecessor's judgment adopts it as his own, must depend on the facts of the situation. There is no reason, on the facts of this case, to import the motion that the judgment of Sri G. C. De which Sri Coari has pronounced, has been adopted by him as his own, & that therefore the decree must be taken to have been passed by him. The order-sheet of the suit clearly shows that the prepared judgment of Sri G. C. De which was of considerable size was received from that Judge on 9-8-40 & on that very day notice was issued to the parties & the judgment was delivered by Sri C. C Coari, vide orders 126, 127 & 128. It is impossible that the learned Judge Sri Coari would have perused & considered the judgment of Sri G. C. De & accepted it as his own within so short a time. I am, therefore, clearly of the opinion that Sri Coari cannot be taken to be the Judge who passed the decree within the meaning of S. 38 (2), Bengal, Agra & Assam Civil Courts Act of 1877, having regard to the construction thereof, which I have adopted above, & having regard to the view I take of O. 20, R 2 as operating in law to render the pronouncement by the successor as the pronouncement by the predecessor.

[43] A question might also well arise, whether even if there has been a violation of the prohibition in S. 38 (2), Bengal, Agra & Assam Civil Courts Act, the judgment is thereby rendered a nullity. It is not in every case where a statutory prohibition is disregarded that it results in a nullity. It is well settled that neither mere negative words nor peremptoriness of the language are by themselves conclusive. See Liverpool Borough Bank v. Turner, (1860) 45 E. R. 715 : (2 De G. F. & J. 502), Mayor of London v. R. (1848) 13 Q. B. 33, N. (d), Craies on Statute Law, p. 234, footnote (g). That must depend upon a careful consideration of the scope & purpose of the prohibition. The question in this case turns on whether the prohibition relates to the foundation of jurisdiction or relates only to the manner in which jurisdiction is to be exercised & also whether it is in the nature of a personal disqualification of the individual Judge in a particular case for benefit of the concerned litigant or is based on a larger & fundamental public policy. See Margate Fire Co. v. Hannam, (1819) 106 E. R. 661 : (3 B. & Ald. 266), Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrikah, 5 C. L. J. 611 : (36 Cal. 193) & Ashutosh v. Beharilal, 35 Cal. 61 : (6 C. L. J. 320 F. B.). It is relevant to note in this connection that in English law, a distinction is drawn between the pecuniary interest of the Judge & the prejudice or bias of the Judge. While the former is considered as an absolute bar, the latter does not appear to be treated as such & is considered as capable of being waived. See Venkatapathi v. Mahomed Sahib, 38 Mad. 531 : (A. I. R. (3) 1916 Mad. 187), & Halsbury's Laws of England, II Edn. Vol. XXI, paras 952-953 at pp. 535-536). It is unnecessary, however, to pursue the matter & pronounce any final opinion in this matter also, since in my view, the present case is not hit by the prohibition in S. 38 (2), Civil Courts Act. It is, however, worthwhile noticing that in this case the order-sheet in the appeal before the Dist. Ct shows that Sri Coari received the appeal on his file after remand on 3-8 45. He took up the hearing of the appeal on 28-1-47 more than six years after he pronounced the judgment. During the pendency of the appeal before him for hearing for a period of about a year & half, before it was taken up, not only was no objection taken by the applt. for the hearing of the appeal by him, but the applt. himself had applied by petns. for adjournment of the appeal at least on four occasions. (See O. Nos. 27, 31, 36 & 37).

[44] Learned counsel for the applt. attempted to persuade us that there was likelihood of such bias in this case & to substantiate it has relied on two circumstances. He points out that Sri Coari as Subordinate Judge & when this suit was pending before him, in its early stages, had occasion to pass an order on an appln. to delete a certain issue (vide O. No. 28 dated 15-8 39) & also certain orders on an appln. for appointment of receiver which however was ultimately not pressed. (Vide orders dated 2 3-40 & 21-3 40). There is nothing, however, in these orders which indicates that he was called upon to apply his mind to the merits of the case & there is no scope for the suggestion of bias. It is only fair to say, having gone carefully through the judgment of Sri Coari now under appeal, & having given full opportunity to the counsel before us, on either side to argue the case almost as if it is a first appeal, that we have absolutely no reason to think that Sri Coari's judgment indicates any bias. Nor is there any reason to think that the applt. has been in any way prejudiced. There is therefore no merit at all in the objection raised on behalf of the applt. based on S. 38 (2), Civil Courts Act.

[45] In the result, therefore, I agree that the second appeal must be dismissed with costs.

The presumption does not apply to the genuineness of a seal. It cannot, therefore, avail a document which purports to bear only a seal without any signature.

Reports of public officials made in discharge of their official duties are admissible under S. 35 with reference to statements therein of relevant facts or facts in issue. (d) Evidence Act (1872), S. 35—Distinction between judicial & revenue enquiries pointed out.

(e) Evidence Act (1872), S. 35—Official reports—Probative value—Revenue report—Distinction between statements & opinions as to relevant facts.

Official reports are valuable & in many cases that is the only best evidence of facts stated therein. Hence a report of a revenue enquiry relating to jungle rights definitely recognizing the rights of certain persons to take minor forest produce for certain purposes based on personal information received from competent witnesses, is admissible in evidence in a case where such rights are in question. But a distinction has to be made between the statements contained therein relating to relevant facts & the opinions expressed therein as to such relevant facts. So far as mere opinions are concerned, while they are admissible, the value to be attached is comparatively less. [Para 15]

(h) Custom—Customary right—Profit a prendre—Customary right in nature of profit a prendre—Acquisition of in India—Easements Act (1882), S. 18.

Profit a prendre is a right to take certain profit or produce arising from the property of another. If the exercise of such a right is acquired for the beneficial enjoyment of another tenement, that amounts to an easement as defined in the Indian law. But where the exercise of such a right is not required for the beneficial enjoyment of another tenement, but is merely for the benefit of certain individuals or well-defined class of individuals, it is a profit a prendre in gross. The evidence required for establishing the acquisition of a profit a prendre which is an easement & of a profit a prendre in gross, is the same. [Para 22]

In India, such customary rights can exist & can be acquired. With reference to customary right of this kind, the principles of English law cannot be strictly applied. [Para 22]

Anno: Easements Act, S. 18, N. 1.

(i) Custom—Proof of — Reasonableness — Profit a prendre in gross—Right to remove forest produce by headloads by aboriginals of particular village for sale in particular village—Custom not invalid on ground of unreasonableness.

The question of reasonableness has to be judged with reference to conditions at the time of the possible inception of the custom. [Para 24]

It cannot be laid down as an absolute proposition of law that wherever a customary right to take forest produce from another man's land with a view to profit by sale of it is claimed, it must necessarily be held to be unreasonable. The decision of the question whether or not it is unreasonable must depend upon the circumstances & facts of each case. [Para 23]

Certain aboriginal residents of a particular village near a forest claimed a customary right to remove minor forest produce from the unreserved portion of the forest for purposes of sale as a means of their livelihood. The right was limited by three considerations, namely, (1) the method of removal was personal & by headloads, (2) the persons to whom it could be sold were only the villagers of particular village & (3) the sale was within the precincts of the village:

Held that it could be said that it was a right exercisable by a large & growing class of persons liable to heavy increase in course of time so as to seriously destroy the right of the proprietor itself in the property. A. I. R. (5) 1918 Mad. 169, Refd. [Para 23]

The fact that it might not be possible for the proprietor of the village to check & control whether the sale was made to the bona fide residents of the village & was made within the limits of the village could not be held to make out that the custom alleged was unreasonable. [Para 25]

Nor was it unreasonable on the ground that the right was not claimed in respect of the entire inhabitants of the village. [Para 25]

The fact that the proprietor had the right to constitute reserves in the forest was no valid objection in law to the recognition of the customary right. [Para 26]

(j) Custom—Customary right—Right to forest produce—Sahars of Patia & Chandrasekharpur.

Held that the Sahar-residents (the aboriginals) of Patia & Chandrasekharpur had a right to remove the minor forest produce of annual growth, from the unreserved portion of the Patia jungle, without any payment of fees, for their own domestic consumption & for sale, in small quantities, within the limits of Patia & Chandrasekharpur, to the residents thereof, by removal on head-loads. [Para 28]

The rights of the Sahars are without prejudice to the proprietary rights of the pltf. as the proprietors of the suit forest to the forest so long as there is sufficient unreserved forest left for the legitimate exercise of the rights of the Sahars & is also without prejudice to the right of the pltf. to make such reasonable arrangements as may be required to prevent any gross abuse of the rights. L. N. Das & S. N. Sengupta—for Applts; P. Mohanti K. N. Das & P. Misra—for Resps.

Jagannadhadas J. — Defendants 1 to 15 are the applts. in this second appeal. The pltf. is the Tikayet of Kanika. The defts. are the Sahar residents of the Mouza called Chandrasekharpur. The suit has been brought for an injunction restraining the defts. from entering into a forest belonging to the pltf. which may for convenience be called Patia forest & from cutting & appropriating any of the jungle produce therein. The trial Ct. dismissed the suit, but the lower appellate Ct. reversed it & granted the injunction & damages asked for by the pltf.

[2] Killa Patia in which the suit forest is situated belonged to Raja Dibyasingh Deb. On his death his brother Raghunath Deb succeeded to the Estate & on his death Madan Mohan Deb. There was litigation relating to succession of the property between Madan Mohan & Achyutananda. During the pendency of the litigation Madan Mohan died & Achyutanarda succeeded to the property. The estate was sold in execution of a mtge. decree during Achyutananda's time & was purchased by the Raja of Kanika in ct. auction. Independently of this, Mouzas Patia & Chandrasekharapur comprised within Patia estate were brought to sale by the Govt to realise certain Govt. dues from the estate in 1932 & the Raja of Kanika purchased these two villages in the certificate sale also & obtained possession. Thus the entire Patia estate as well as the two villages of Patia & Chandrasekharpur therein became the property of the Raja of Kanika who duly obtained possession thereof. He thereupon executed a gift deed in 1935 in respect of the whole of the Patia estate including these villages in favour of his son, the pltf. The estate therefore with the Patia forest therein belongs to the pltf. Though this was questioned at the trial, it is now no longer disputed in the lower appellate Ct. & here.

[3] In this estate there is forest of very considerable extent of about 3,000 acres. The forest adjoining the village Patia goes by the name of Patia forest. The original village Patia has in the revn. settlement been divided into two villages called Patia & Chandrasekharpur. But for all purposes relevant to this litigation the two villages are treated as one & the suit Patia forest as the one connected with these two villages. It would appear from the evidence that the Sahars of this place reside almost entirely in Chandrasekharpur, there being only three or four families of Sabars in Patia (vide evidence of P. W. 10). It may be mentioned that Sahars belong to the primitive aboriginal class.

[4] The case as brought, was against 16 defts of which only defts. 1 to 15 are Sahars. Defendants 1 to 15 claimed rights in the forest on the footing that they belong to the Sahar class & deft. 16 on the footing that he was a villager of Mouza Chandrasekharpur. The trial Ct. which found in favour of defts. 1 to 15, as Sahars of the village, found against the rights claimed by deft. 16 as a villager. There has been no appeal by deft. 16 either in the lower appellate Ct. or here & therefore the appeal is now concerned only with the alleged rights of defts 1 to 15 of the Sahar-residents of Mouza Chandrasekharpur. The pltf. is the proprietor of the suit forest & claims that nobody has got any right to remove forest produce without his permission & without payment of the fees prescribed therefor. The case of the Sahar-defts. as set out in para. 11 of the written statement is as follows :

"These defts. are the aboriginals of Patia & Chandrasekharpur. From time immemorial these defts.' forefathers, their successors & these defts. themselves have been cutting wood from the said jungle & carrying them on head & they have been using the same. From time immemorial also they have been selling the products of that jungle in small quantities in Killa Patia & have been earning their livelihood thereby. These Sahars have the right of selling & using in this manner from time immemorial."

In the said para. 11 as also in para 10, they make it clear that this right is claimed in respect of "ordinary thorns, bamboos & wood that grow in the jungle year after year," that is only the minor jungle produce of annual growth & not for any of the valuable classes of timber or bamboo or the like.

[5] The actual incident which is stated to be the cause of action in the plaint is the alleged removal of twenty bundles of prickly thorns costing Rs. 5 from the disputed forest. It may also be noticed that according to the evidence of usage, one portion of the suit forest is being treated as reserve forest & the rest as unreserved. The pltf's. case is that this alleged removal of prickly thorns was from the reserved forest. The learned trial Ct. under issue 1, found that there is no reliable evidence that the removal was from the reserved forest. The lower appellate Ct. did not give any finding on this matter, but merely contended itself with the statement that there is no denial of the fact that the prickly thorns were removed from the reserved portion. Though the defts. in the written statement do not, in terms recognise the distinction between reserved portion of the forest & unreserved & do not limit their alleged rights to the unreserved portion, it is specifically stated before us that the deft's. claim is confined only to the unreserved portion of the forest & it is on that footing that the Cts. below have dealt with the case. The finding of the trial Ct, that the incident which is alleged to have furnished the cause of action is one that has occurred with reference to the unreserved portion of the forest appears to be correct, in view of the fact that the alleged removal was only of some prickly thorns of annual growth which are more likely to have been found in the unreserved portion of the forest than the reserved. It must be taken therefore that the suit raises the question only of the alleged rights of the defts. in the unreserved portion of the forest & that the absolute right of the pltf. as proprietor in the reserved portion of the forest is undisputed. It is also further necessary to state that though the claim of the defts. as set out in the written statement is asserted for the purpose of sale in Killa Patia, it is now stated that the claim is confined to sell in mouza Patia (including Chandrasekharpur) that is to sell in small quantities within the limits of villages Patia & Chandrasekharpur & to the normal residents of Patia & Chandrasekharpur. This limitation of claim is justified by the evidence of deft. 1 as D. W. 2 wherein he says "The villagers of Patia purchase fuel from us. We sell fuel, prickly thorns & bamboos in Patia." It must be further noticed that the claim of the defts. is to take the forest produce for their own consumption as also for sale as above stated in order to earn their livelihood, but the claim is confined to the taking of small quantities by carrying them on head by themselves. As already stated the claim is also only in respect of minor forest produce of annual growth.

[6] The dispute relating to forest rights in this forest has been going on from about the year 1932 when the Raja of Kanika purchased this Estate. The dispute, however, appears to have been mainly with reference to the alleged rights of the entire villagers of mouza Patia, who claimed that they had the right to take the minor forest produce without any permit & without any payment. That has been negatived on a number of occasions in the course of the history of this dispute & has now been negatived also by the trial Ct. in this suit. But the dispute now before us is limited to the Sahar residents of mouza Patia & that is the only question with which we are concerned in the present appeal. Both the Cts. below have found as a fact that the Sahars have been accustomed to remove the forest produce from the forest for the purposes above-mentioned, but have come to different conclusions on the question whether the said removal is as of right free of payment or with the permission of the proprietor & on payment of fees. As the question involved, is one regarding the proof of custom which is a mixed question of law & fact, we have gone into the entire evidence while keeping in mind that the question of credibility of the evidence is one for the Cts. below.

[7] There can be no reasonable doubt in this case about the fact that the Sahar residents of mouza Patia including Chandrasekharpur have been habitually removing the minor forest produce as stated above for long time past. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal has stated that it is common ground that the Sahars & other low class people of Patia take the forest produce from Patia jungle for their own domestic consumption & for small sale within the Killa Patia & that the material point for consideration is whether the removal of the forest produce is without the permission of the proprietor & free of any charge. The only question therefore is whether the removal is as of right & free of payment.

[8] The case for the pltf. is that the removal is on permits which are issued on payment of fees. Since permits & fees go together, the question has therefore further reduced itself virtually to determination as to whether or not the removal is on payment of fees. On this both the Cts. below have held that on the oral evidence the collection of forest fees from the Sahar-residents of mouza Patia (Chandrasekharpur) has not been made out on the evidence on the pltf.'s side. The learned Subordinate Judge says as follows :

"So far as collection of fees from the Sahar defts. of Chandrasekharpur, the oral evidence led on the pltf.'s side cannot but lead to the conclusion arrived at by the learned Munsif (that the Sahars had not been proved to have paid any tax to the proprietor)."

This view of the oral evidence is amply justified. Witness after witness on the side of the pltf. comes forward & admits in cross-examination that the Sahars take the forest produce, but they have not seen them paying any royalty to the proprietor, while some of them admit having seen non-Sahar residents paying fees. P. W. 1 says : "I have seen the Sahars & other tenants of Patia & Chandrasekharpur taking fuel, rough wood, roots etc. since my boyhood" & he admits that he has not seen any of the defts. ever paying royalty to the proprietor. P. W. 2 says :

"The Sahars of Chandrasekharpur go to Patia jungle to get roots & plums. Some-times they also sell plums. Sahars of Chandrasekharpur also get fuel, rough wood, from jungle for their own use & also for sale."

He does not say that he saw the Sahars paying any fees at any time. P. W. 3, who is related to the original Zamindar of Patia estate says :

'Chandrasekharpur Sahars get fuel, roots etc. from Patia Jungle & that is their means of livelihood. They sell the fuel in the village."

He admits that he has not seen Chandrasekharpur Sahars ever paying royalty during the Tikayet's time or Achyutananda's time; though he has seen some others like Raghu Patro, Kuso Moharana etc. paying royalty for removal of forest produce from the forest. P. W. 4 is an important witness aged about 60 years. He served under Raghunath Deb as a Mohurir & under Madan Mohan Deb as his Tahasildar & has also worked under the pltf. He has produced a number of documents to support the pltf.'s case & in particular, counterfoils of permits, Shibas or account books relating to the period subsequent to the acquisition of the estate by the Raja of Kanika in 1932. While he asserts that the Sahars have no right to take the forest produce without permission & without payment of fees & that royalty was being collected during Kanika's regime also from the Sahars, no counterfoil of any permits issued to any Sahar of this village has been produced & he admits that the Shibas (account books) relating to the collection of fees, which show collection of fees from other residents do not show the names of any Sahars of Chandrasekharpur Mouza. He also admits that the collections from forest tax did not find place in the estate account during the time of Raghunath Deb & says that this was so then as the estate was being managed by the receiver.

[9] On his evidence apart from Ex. 1, which will be noticed later, there can be no reasonable doubt that the collection of fees from the Sahars of Patia & Chandrasekharpur at any time is not at all made out. It is significant that even after 1932, the accounts which show collection of fees from others do not show any collections from the Sahars. P. W. 6 in his cross-examination says that he had seen Sahars removing thorns from unreserved portion of the forest, but has not seen any permits with them & had not reported the same to the forest officials though he had reported when the Sahars removed forest produce from the reserved portion of the forest which according to him is demarcated by a line. P. W. 10 is the only Sahar of Mouza Patia who gives evidence on the side of the pltf. & supports him by saying that the Sahars obtained fuel from Patia jungle on payment of forest tax. He says that even in Kanika's time, he has been getting fuel from the forest by taking permits which are returned to the office on his return from the forest. But none of these permits have been produced & filed for the pltf. He admits in his evidence that he is a tenant under the pltf. & that he returned his settlement Patta to the estate which shows clearly that he is under the control of the pltf. P. W. 11 was a forest guard, 76 years old during Dibyasingh Deb's time & states that the Sahars have no right to bring fuel, bamboo etc. from the Patia forest without permission & without payment of fees, but admits in cross-examination that he cannot say whether the Chandrasekharpur Sahars pay any tax or not. The inability of this witness who was a forest guard & who must have personally known about the payment of fees by Sahars, if true, to assert positively that the Sahars were paying fees is a significant & weighty circumstance P. W. 13 is a forester under the pltf. & was serving under Achyutananda. He is unable to assert that he collected fees from Sahars at any time for removal of forest produce.

[10] On the defence side five witnesses have been examined of whom D. Ws. 2 to 4 are witnesses for the applt. They, of course, support the defts.' case. On the oral evidence adduced on behalf of the pltf. himself, it is clear that there is no proof that the Sahars had ever paid any fees for removal of forest produce. Mere non collection of fees may not by itself be any proof of the right of Sahars but this fact assumes significance & importance in view of the positive proof adduced on the side of the pltf. that fees were being collected from others. As already stated, both the Cts. below have agreed in their estimate of oral evidence to the above effect. In their estimate of documentary evidence, however, relating to this matter they have differed & that must now be considered.

[11] The earliest document put in evidence on behalf of the pltf. is a Hukumnama, Ex. 13 dated 1254 B. S. purporting to have been issued by the Patia Raj to one Muli Patra stating that as the Sahars of Patia & another village had paid the tax, they may be permitted to remove wood from the forest without obstruction. This does not purport to have been signed by anybody nor does it purport to have been written by anybody. It only purports to bear a seal. Though the document appears to be an old one & from the date it bears, must have been more than 30 years old, the presumption available under S. 90, Evidence Act, does not apply to this document. The trial Ct. has not accepted this document on the ground that it was not produced from appropriate custody as it was filed into the Ct., by P. W. 5, the grandson of the said Muli Patra who could not satisfactorily explain why the document was not available at any earlier stage. The appellate Ct. however was not willing to accept this criticism & was inclined to accept it as genuine. But it failed to notice that the presumption under S. 90 cannot apply to this document, because in terms of that section, the presumption will apply only if the document purports to have been "signed" by somebody or if it purports to be in the handwriting of somebody. The presumption does not apply to the genuineness of a seal. It cannot therefore avail a document, like Ex. 13, which purports to bear only a seal without any signature. This is clear from the meaning of the word "sign" as defined in S. 3, sub-s. (52), General Clauses Act, which includes only a mark with reference to a person who is unable to write his name. Even if the seal is to be treated as a mark, there is no presumption that the seal is of a person who is unable to write his name. Therefore this document which purports to bear only a seal cannot be taken to have been proved. This view of S. 90, Evidence Act has also been taken in Special Manager, Court of Wards, Balrampur v. Tribeni Prasad A.I.R. (22) 1935 Oudh 289 : (11 Luck. 35), Sri Prasad v. Special Manager, Court of Wards, Balrampur, A.I.R (24) 1937 Oudh 194 : (12 Luck. 400) and Bhairo Singh v. Ambika Baksh Singh, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Oudh 374 : (17 Luck. 805). From the Ex. list we find that this document is noted as having been marked without objection but since the very Munsif who has marked it has felt himself free to reject it, it must be taken that he has marked it subject to its being held to be proved under S. 90, Evidence Act. Ex. 13 therefore must be ruled out of consideration.

[12] The next document is Ex. 1, an assessment list dated 13.5-1916. P.W. 4 Swapneswar Misra produces it & gives evidence in support of it. He says that it is a list showing the assessment of forest tax against individuals noted therein prepared in 1916 during the time of Madan Mohan Deb. He speaks to its being in his handwriting & bearing the signature of the Dewan at the time, one Dayanidhi Tripathi. This list was apparently also produced before Mr. Datta, Deputy Mag. who held an inquiry relating to forest rights in respect of which he submitted a report, Ex. B, which will be noticed later. There can, therefore, be no doubt about the genuineness of this Ex. 1. The list bears certain cross marks against some names & in his report Ex. B, Mr. Datta seems to have thought that these marks are against the names of Sahars & that they indicate exemption from payment of assessment. P. W. 4 however in his evidence states that it is not so & that numbers 192 to 210 against which there are no cross marks represent the Sahars & that the cross marks indicate the names of persons from whom he actually made collections at the time. According to him, he has not personally collected the taxes as indicated in the assessment list from persons other than those against whose names cross marks are made. Therefore even if his evidence, that numbers 192 to 210 in Ex. 1 refer only to Sahars, is accepted, it is clear that he has not collected any assessment from the Sahars. His statement that the Guard collected from the rest cannot be accepted because he himself admits that there is no record to show it & the Guard has not been called to substantiate it. In any case in the absence of any evidence to show the actual collections from the Sahars, a mere assessment list like Ex. 1 to which the Sahars are not parties is not admissible against them to show their liability to pay the assessment. It must also be noticed that P. W. 4 says that assessment lists of this kind were being prepared from year to year during the time of Raghunath Deb. No other list of the kind is produced. There is a very significant admission in P. W. 4's evidence that the collections from forest tax did not find place in estate accounts during the time of Raghunath Deb, & that during Madan Mohan's time the total collections from jungle taxes found place in estate accounts. This would mean that those accounts would not prove any collection from the Sahars as such.

[13] The next important document Ex. 26 dated 15-12-23 which is an award by certain arbitrators. It would appear from this award that in connection with the dispute between the then Zamindar Mouza Patia, there were certain proceedings which came up before the Mag. Mr. E. R. Cousins. The dispute related among other things to the right of the tenants to take forest produce. It was referred to arbitrators & the arbitrators passed an award dated 15-12-23 wherein the arbitrators recognise the right of the proprietor to realise royalty on fuel & prickly thorns taken from Patia jungle by the tenants according to rates prevalent in Khurda Khasmahal. The pltf. strongly relies upon this & it is contended on the other side that this was never acted upon. But whether this is so or not, it has no bearing on the present dispute, because the right claimed by the defts. in this case is not in their capacity as tenants of the village, but because they are the aboriginal inhabitants of the place. That may conceivably stand on a different footing.

[14] The next & most important document in the case is Ex. B. It is a report by one Mr. N. N. Datta, Deputy Mag. relating to jungle rights of Killa Patia dated 5-12-32. It definitely recognises the right of the Sahar residents of Mouza Patia including Chandrasekharpur to take the minor forest produce from the unreserved portion of Patia forest for purposes of domestic consumption & for sale in small quantities of headloads. Strong objection has been taken on behalf of the pltf. to the admissibility of this report. This report appears to have arisen on account of a complaint made by the Patia tenant against the Raja of Kanika regarding their forest rights. This complaint was registered as Misc. Case No. 67 of 1932 & was in the nature of revenue proceedings before the Revenue Comr. as appears from the Order Sheets, in the said Misc. Case, Exs. F, F-1 & F-2. By order dated 10-11-32, in Ex. F-1, it would appear that Mr. N. N Datta was directed to hold an inquiry & report & Ex. B dated 5-12-32 is the report thereupon. Mr. Datta himself has not been called & there is nothing to show whether or not he is available. The document has been marked on admission on the side of the defts. & therefore its admissibility or the value to be attached to it cannot be impugned on that account if otherwise it is admissible. There can be no doubt, that reports of public officials made in discharge of their official duties are admissible under S. 35, Evidence Act with reference to statements therein of relevant facts or facts in issue. This is well established by a number of P. C. cases, Vide Muttu Ramalinga v. Perta Nayagam, 1 I. A. 209: (3 Sar. 341 P. C.), Martand Rao v. Malharao, 55 Cal. 403 : (A. I. R. (15) 1928 P. C. 10). It has however been argued on the strength of Mallikarjuna v. Secy. of State, 35 Mad 21 : (14 I. C. 401) and Subhaq Singh v. Raghunath Singh, 36 ALL. 282 : (A. I. R. (1) 1914 ALL. 474) that the report of a public official which has been merely submitted to higher authorities for the latter's information or guidance & which itself does not bear the stamp of finality on it, is not admissible in evidence. The cases cited do not lay down any such broad proposition. In Mallikarjuna v. Secy. of State, 35 Mad. 21: (14 I. C. 401) a report was called for from the Tahasildar who asked the village Munsif to report. The Tahasildar's report was sought to be put in evidence to show that the village Munsif had reported that certain charities were not commenced on a particular date. It was held that the Tahasildar's report was not admissible in evidence of the fact that the charities had not been commenced by that date: Subhag Singh v. Raghunath Singh, 36 ALL. 282: (A. I. R. (1) 1914 ALL. 474) the Dist. J. asked the Collector to report which of the three persons suggested was the fittest to be appointed as the guardian & the Collector called for a report from the Kanungo. The report of the Kanungo was not admitted in evidence. This is intelligible on the ground that the Dist. J. had to decide the matter judicially & according to law by taking evidence himself & not on the report of the Kanungo. These cases do not help the pltf. in his contention that Ex. B is not admissible. I have been referred to no authority for the position that the report of a public official is inadmissible in evidence, merely because it was made in compliance with the orders of the higher authorities & was submitted to them.

[15] The case in Ghanaya v. Mehtab, A. I. R. (21) 1934 Lah. 890: (16 Lah. 377) is cited to show that S. 35, Evidence Act, is not intended to apply to the opinions of public officials based on or inferences drawn from the allegations made before them in course of inquiries conducted by them. In particular case the inquiry was one under S. 202, Cr. P. C. & different considerations may apply to judicial inquiry as distinct from revenue inquiry. While a judicial inquiry is to be based merely on evidence adduced before the officer, a revenue inquiry is not so limited & is to a substantial extent based on personal observation & information. The case in Ghulam Mahomed v. Samundar Khan, A.I.R. (23) 1936 Lah. 37: (165 I.C. 626) is referred to for the position that the statements in mere official correspondences which have no finality are not admissible in evidence. The report Ex. B, however, in this case is not of that category. On the other hand, in 35 ALL. 161 (sic), the ownership of a particular temple was in question & the report of a Kotwal who made an inquiry into the ownership at the instance of the Political Agent was held admissible. It appears to me therefore that the report Ex. B is admissible in evidence. The P. C. Case reported in Martand Rao v. Malharao, 55 Cal. 403 at p. 406: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 P C 10) shows that such official reports are valuable & in many cases that is the only best available evidence of facts stated therein, but that the opinions expressed therein should not be treated as conclusive in respect of matters requiring judicial determination, however eminent the authors of such report may be. While therefore a report like Ex. B, is admissible, a distinction has to be made between the statements contained therein relating to relevant facts & the opinions expressed therein as to such relevant facts. So far as mere opinions are concerned, while they are admissible, the value to be attached is comparatively less. Now with reference to these principles the statements in Ex. B may be made use of in the present case. It may be noticed that the Order Sheets, Ex. H, H-1 & H-2 show that the report was accepted by the Revenue Comr. & that on that basis he attempted to bring about an amicable arrangement between the parties. But he does not appear to have succeeded in doing so. It may be mentioned at the outset that the report was concerned only with the question of the forest rights of the Patia tenants as such, as appears from the fact that the report arose out of a complaint by the Patia tenants. The report was not directly concerned with the rights of Sahar-residents of Mouza Patia as such, but the report contains the following valuable statements relating to forest rights of Sahar-residents of Patia:

"The next point of importance is that the Sahars, Bouris & other low class people who render some service by way of preserving the jungles, supplying fuels to the proprietor & his deity & helping the proprietor in shooting etc., not only take the fuel free of charges for their own use, but also for sale in small scale." Later on the report states "While going to other villages for recording evidence I came across some low class men & on inquiry from them, I was satisfied that they had never to pay any fees for taking fuel for their own use & also for sale in small scale." Later in the report he records his view that the inhabitants of the Killa Patia had a right to take fuel & prickly thorns from the Patia jungle & that the proprietor had the right of realising royalty from them, but states that the right to realise royalty was subject to certain exemptions & he proceeds to state "That there were exemptions is now admitted in so far as the Sahars are concerned." These statements extracted from the report, are not mere statements about his opinion, but are statements about the disputed right based on the actual information before him & are clearly admissible in evidence.

[16] It has been argued that the statements relate to certain admissions said to have been made before him & therefore the same cannot be acted upon unless the persons said to have made the statements are called as witnesses & the entire admissions are put on record & the witnesses are examined with reference to it. Cases in Ram Parkash v. Anand Das, A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 256 : (43 Cal. 707); Radha Kishan v. Hari Singh, A. I. R, (14) 1927 Lah. 337 : (100 I. C. 800), have been cited in support of it. In Ram Parkash v. Anand Das, A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 256. (43 Cal. 707) the admission referred to is the statement of a witness before a Mag. in a criminal case & what was rejected as inadmissible was the note relating to that statement as proof thereof. In Molar v. Ram Parshad, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Lah. 377 : (102 I. C. 198), also the position was similar. The position here is different. What is sought to be used here is not the supposed admission itself, but the statement of the officer about the right of the Sahars based on the personal information he has received from competent persons, who if at all were not interested in supporting the right & which information is therefore characterised by him as an admission. I have no doubt therefore that the above statements in Ex. B, are admissible in evidence & furnish strong proof, taken with the oral evidence, that as a matter of fact the Sahars were at the time of the report enjoying exemption from payment of any forest fees. This is fully in accord with the estimate of the oral evidence above noticed.

[17] It has been argued that this report shows that the taking of forest produce by the Sahars is connected with the services which they were rendering to the proprietor. The report does not show that as a fact that the right was conditioned by the service. The portions of the report relating to the connection of the right with the service are merely his opinion & his proposals for the future. The pltf. has put forward no case that the right of the Sahars if any was one conditioned by service. The question then would have arisen for consideration whether the right was one in lieu of services or burdened with services on the well-known distinction laid down in Forbes v. Meer Mahomed, 13 M. I. A. 438: (5 Beng. L. R. 529 P. C.) and Lakhamgonda v. Baswantrao, 35 C. W. N. 721: (A.I.R. (18) 1931 P. C. 157). No such alternative case having been raised in the pleadings, it is enough to say that taking the report Ex. B, as a whole & acting on the admissible portions thereof, it does not appear that the right of the Sahars was either permissible or conditioned by service.

[18] The next document to be considered is the village note relating to Patia village, Ex. (1) dated 8-4-1934, in current settlement relating to village Patia. The village note states that from time immemorial, the ryots used fuel, prickly plants for fencing & thatching material etc. from the estate jungles on payment of royalty the rate of which varied in different types. As pointed out in A. I. R. 1925, Pat. 754, this is only a piece of evidence & no presumption of correctness attaches to it. It would also appear from Dalziel's settlement report that the portion of the work relating to record of forest rights was not carefully done at that settlement. He remarks as follows at p. 45:

"The customs relating to jungle in this estate were only treated in some selected villages. I think that this work would have been of greater value if regular procedure had been adopted with issue of notice to interested parties."

In any case the village note refers only to the rights of tenants of the village & is based upon the award Ex. 26, already mentioned, which also relates only to the tenants. It has no reference to the rights of the Sahar-residents of the village. Of the other documents filed in the case there are a number of which relate to criminal cases between the proprietor & the villagers relating to forest rights. On the side of the pltf., Exs. 22, 22 A, 23 & 23-A, have been filed. In Exs. 22 & 22 A, certain Sahars were convicted for theft on account of having removed some wood on head loads, but it appears from the facts in that case that the removal was from the reserved portion of the forest. Exhibits 23 & 23-A, show that certain villagers were convicted for removal of wood from the forest, but it does not appear that the persons concerned were the Sahars. On the other hand in Ex. J, certain Sahars who were complained against by the Estate for unauthorised removal of forest produce were acquitted. Exhibits D & D.1 show similarly that some other Sahars against whom complaints were lodged for clandestine removal of fuel from Chandrsekharpur forest were finally acquitted, Exhibit K, shows that the Dist. Mag. who was moved to file an appeal against the acquittal, refused to do so on an elaborate consideration of the rights of the parties. These criminal proceedings above noticed, all relate to the period subsequent to the purchase of the estate by the Raja of Kanika & it is noticeable that these show that the Sahar-residents of Patia were acquitted on the few occasions when they were sought to be proceeded against & there is no clear instance in which they were convicted. Most of the other documents filed in this case relating to this question are counter-foils & account books produced by the estate relating to the periods subsequent to 1932. There is practically no documentary evidence relating to the prior period, but this is only to be expected, because the present proprietor was not likely to have had access to the records of the prior proprietor, whose estate he purchased in Ct. auction hostilely to him. None of the documents that have been filed on behalf of the pltf. of the dates subsequent to 1932, from which date, the new proprietor started vigorous steps for asserting his right to collect fees for the whole of forest produce, show any such collection with the Sahar-residents of Patia.

[19] The position therefore on the evidence is that while it is well established that the Sahar-residents of Patia have been accustomed to take the forest produce, there is no proof that any fee has ever been collected from them. No doubt the burden of establishing the customary right to take the forest produce in derogation of the proprietor's right to the forest is upon the defts. but where, as in this case, the practice of removal of forest produce is established & an attempt has been made to prove by evidence that fees have been collected for such removal & that attempt fails & it further appears that such fees were never collected from the Sahars while the evidence shows that the fees were in fact collected from others, it is reasonable to attribute the non collection as due to not mere lack of proof but to the existence of the right. The evidence therefore in my opinion to the extent that it goes clearly establishes that the Sahar-residents of village Patia including Chandrasekharapur were in fact exercising the right of collecting minor forest produce, as above stated, as of right & free of payment of any charges.

[20] It has been argued that even if this be found, this is not enough in law to establish the customary right on account of the following considerations—(1) There is no proof that the exercise of the right is from the time immemorial; (2) Such customary right which amounts to a right of profit-a prendre in gross cannot be acquired in law by prescriptive user; (3) The custom alleged being also for removing forest produce for purposes of sale is unreasonable; (4) The custom is claimed in respect of a particular class of residents of a village & not of the entire village & is not recognised in law; (5) The custom as now alleged is with reference to what is now said to be the unreserved portion of the forest & is inconsistent with the proprietor's right to reserve such other portions of the forest as he thinks fit. It is contended on all the above grounds that the custom is not established & cannot be held to be validly made out.

[21] As regards the first objection, the evidence adduced is sufficient to make out the exercise of this customary right for the period of living memory of the witnesses. In the case in Mt. Sukhani v. Nawab, A. I. R. (28) 1941 P. C. 21 : I. L. R. (1941) Kar P. C. 22) at p 32, their Lordships referring to local customs doubted the applicability of English Rule that a custom in order to be binding should be proved to have been used beyond living memory & stated as follows :

"It is undoubted that a custom observed in a particular district derives its force from the fact that it has from long usage obtained the strict forces of law, which must be ancient. But it is not the essence of the rule that its antiquity in every case be carried back to a period beyond memory of the man, still less that it is ancient in the English technical sense. It will depend upon the circumstances of each case what antiquity must be established before the custom can be accepted. What is necessary to be proved is that the usage has been acted upon in practice for such a long period & with such invariability as to show that it has by common consent been submitted to as the established governing rule of a particular district."

Judged in this light, the evidence in this case relating to the length of time of the exercise of the custom is sufficient to make it out. With reference to proof of customs by immemorial user, it has been pointed out in Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Haldar, 20 C. L. J. p. 183 : (A. I. R. (2) 1915 Cal. 161) that the proof of existence of the custom cannot be carried back beyond living memory by direct evidence & it is held that if evidence showing the exercise of a right in accordance with the alleged custom as far back as living memory can go is given, it raises the presumption though only a rebuttable one as to the immemorial existence of the custom. This view is also supported by Rajendra Narain v. Gangananda Singh, A. I. R. (12) 1925 P. C. 213 at p. 216 : (52 I. A. 279). Therefore even according to this standard there is no difficulty in this case in holding that the custom alleged by the defts is made out on the evidence.

[22] The next point urged is that the customary right alleged is in the nature of a profit-a-prendre in gross. That is a right to take certain profit or produce arising from the property of another. If the exercise of such a right is acquired for the beneficial enjoyment of another tenement, that amounts to an easement as defined in the Indian Law. But where the exercise of such a right is not required for the beneficial enjoyment of another tenement, but is merely for the benefit of certain individuals or well-defined class of individuals, it is a profit a prendre in gross. It is well-settled that the evidence required for establishing, the acquisition of a profit-a-prendre which is an easement, & of a profit-a-prendre, in gross, is the same. (See Chundee Churn v. Shib Chunder, 5 Cal. 945 & Arjun Kaikanta v. Manoranjan De, A. I. R. (21) 1934 Cal. 461 : (149 I. C. 1213)). But it is urged that a customary right in the nature of profit-a-prendre in gross cannot be established by evidence of long user giving rise to the presumption of a lost grant & the case in Rivers (Lord) v. Adams, (1878) 3 Ex. D. 361 : (48 L. J. Ex. 47) & A. I. R. (17) 1930 ALL. p. 238 and Brajendra Kishore v Iswar Kaibatra, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Cal. 539 : (146 I. C. 427) and Arjun v. Manoranjan A. I. R. (21) 1934 Cal. 461 : (61 Cal. 45) are cited in support of this proposition. These cases are distinguishable on facts & it is unnecessary to notice them at length. It will be found on investigation of the facts in each of the Indian cases that the point considered was whether the exercise of the right claimed is reasonable or unreasonable & with that aspect I shall deal presently. But in so far as the principle laid down in the leading English cases Lord Rivers v. Adams, (1878) 3 Ex. D., p. 361: (48 L. J. Ex. 47) it is enough to say that the decision turns partly on technical considerations peculiar to English Property Law & that in the latter case in (1911) Appeal Cases P. 623, there was considerable difference of opinion in the House of Lords about the applicability of the principles of that case. In Harries v. Earl of Chesterfield, (1911) A. C. 623: (80 L. J. Ch. 626), the House of Lords decided against the acquisition of such a right by a majority of 4 against 3, Lord Chancellor Loreburn being in the dissenting minority. With reference to the principles relating to customary rights of this kind, the P. C. in Abdul Hussain v. Mt. Bibi Sonadero, A.I.R. (4) 1917 P. C. 181 : (12 S.L.R. 104) ; & Mt. Subhani v. Nawab, A. I. R. (28) 1941 P. C. 21 at P. 32 : (I. L. R. (1941) Kar. P. C. 22) have clearly pointed out that the principles of English law cannot be strictly applied. (See also Bholanath v. Midnapore Zamindary Co., 31 Cal. 503 at p. 509 : (31 I A. 75 P. C.)) with reference to similar rights, the Madras H. C. in two cases in Subramanian v Raghunatha Pillai, A. I. R. (5) 1918 Mad. 169 : (44 I. C. 419) ; K Kudumban v. Venkata Subramania, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Mad 645 : (101 I. C 59) & the former relied on the dissenting view of the Lord Chancellor in Harris v. Chesterfield, 1911 A. C. 623 : (80 L. J. Ch. 626) in recognising similar customary rights. The provisions of the Forest Act providing for an inquiry into compensation for rights to forest produce when constituting a Govt. reserve forest clearly recognise that in India such customary rights can exist & can be acquired. It may be mentioned that the Forest Manual of Bihar & Orissa shows that such customary rights in respect of protected forests of Khurda Khasmahal which are contiguous to the suit forest are recognised by Govt. Therefore there is no valid ground for this objection.

[23] The next question that has been raised is that since the alleged custom is also for removing forest produce for purposes of sale, it is an unreasonable custom & reliance is placed on the well-known principle in English Law that a right in an undefined number of people to take a profit-a-prendre without stint & for sale must lead to the entire destruction of the property & is unreasonable (See (1918) 2 Ex. D. p. 397 at P. 310 (Sic)). The cases in Brajendra Kishore v. Iswar Kaibarta, A.I.R. (20) 1933 Cal. 539 : (146 I. C. 427) & Arjun Kaibarta v. Monoranjan De, A. I. R. (21) 1934 Cal. 461 : (61 Cal. 45) appear to some extent to support this contention. But it appears to me that this cannot be laid down as in absolute proposition of law that wherever a customary right to take forest produce from another man's land with a view to profit by sale of it is claimed, it must necessarily be held to be unreasonable. The decision of the question whether or not it is unreasonable must depend upon the circumstances & facts of each case. That is the view taken in Subramanian v. Raghunath Pillai, A. I. R. (5) 1918 Mad. 169 : (44 I. C. 419). In this case the right claimed though it is a right for purposes of sale, is not a right to take without stint & in unlimited quantities. It is a right to sell not in the open market, but only to the villagers of Patia & Chandrasekharpur. It is also a right to take in small quantities by head-loads by the very persons who are entitled to the right. Thus the right is limited by three considerations, namely, (1) the method of removal is personal & by head-loads, (2) the persons to whom it could be sold are only the villagers of the place, & (3) the sale is within the precincts of the village. It cannot be said that it is a right exercisable by a large & growing class of persons liable to heavy increase in course of time so as to seriously destroy the right of the proprietor itself in the property. The right is claimed only in favour of the aboriginal residents of the particular village who are themselves not large in number & whose rapid multiplication in numbers is not to be assumed to be a matter of course. With reference to a similar contention in Subramanian v. Raghunath Pillai, A. I. R. (5) 1918 Mad. 169 at P. 171: (44 I. C. 419). Their Lordships say as follows:

"Such an exercise of the right has not hitherto led to the destruction of the fish in the tank nor apparently even to its diminution in numbers. There is no reason to assume a different result in the future. If there is excessive fishing the zamindar may have a right to restrain it, but that is not the question here."

[24] It must also be remembered that the question of reasonableness has to be judged with reference to conditions at the time of the possible inception of the custom (See Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Haldar, 20 C. L. J. 183 at p. 192: (A. I. R. (2) 1915 Cal 161)). In this case the practice of an aboriginal inhabitant near the forest, eking out his livelihood by sale of minor forest produce was not only reasonable but probably inevitable in the olden times. The custom therefore cannot be held to be unreasonable. It is however desirable to observe that the right of the defts. in this behalf must be exercised consistently with the right of the proprietor to make reasonable arrangements to prevent any gross abuse of the right having regard to the limitations above set out.
